priety of laws that touch economic problems, business affairs, or social conditions." Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 482 (1965). The Supreme Court failed to observe this standard in Roe v. Wade, and, in essence, violated the federal separation of powers, when the Court created a federal abortion "statute" after, in effect, declaring all state anti-abortion statutes unconstitutional.

The regulation of abortion demands the resolution of conflicts of value, and assessments of the competing worth of the lives of the unborn human being and of the mother, all very sensitive issues that involve differences of feeling. As Mr. Justice Frankfurter wrote, "Obviously the proper forum for mediating a clash of feelings and rendering a prophetic judgment is the body chosen for these persons by the people," the legislature. American Federation of Labor v. American Sash and Door Co., 335 U.S. 538, 557 (1949). In further support of this principle, Justice White has stated: "Abortion is a hotly contested moral and political issue. Such issues, in our society, are to be resolved by the will of the people, either as expressed through legislation or through the general principles they have already incorporated into the Constitution they have adopted." Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747, 796 (1986) (White, J., dissenting).

The majority in Roe v. Wade ignored other precedent that guides the Court in its limited review of the police power. In Dandridge v. Williams, 397 U.S. 471 (1970), the Court held that Maryland's method of administering a public welfare program was a valid exercise of the police power. Rather than intrude on the province of the legislature, the Court stated that it is not the Court's role to determine whether a state statute is wise, whether it best fulfills the relevant social and economic objectives that a state might ideally espouse, or whether a more just and humane system could be devised. Id. at 487. The Supreme Court acted impermissibly under its own guidelines when, in Roe v. Wade, it determined that the Texas abortion statute was unwise, that states must permit abortions, and that the Court could devise a better system.

When the Supreme Court concluded that the state abortion statute in Roe v. Wade was unconstitutional, it intruded not only on the sovereignty of the state legislature to determine state interests, but also upon the power and right of citizens to voice their opinions by electing state officials who respond to their needs. We should not forget that "legislatures are ultimate guardians of the liberties and welfare of the people in quite as great a degree as the courts." Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. May, 194 U.S. 267, 270 (1904) (Holmes, J.). "We should be ever mindful of the contradictions that would arise if a democracy were to permit general oversight of the elected branches of government by a nonrepresentative, and in large measure insulated, judicial branch" United States v. Richardson, 418 U.S. 166, 188 (1974) (Powell, J., concurring).

Chief Justice Waite said, in Munn v. Illinois, 94 U.S. 113, 134 (1877), "For protection against abuses by legislatures the people must resort to the polls, not to the courts." If a state legislature passes an abortion statute that is based on state interests not held by a majority of the people, it is the province of the citizens to elect new representatives. The Supreme Court is to permit the regulation to stand until legislatively repealed, rather than to determine that the state interest is not proper. As Mr. Justice Stewart said in his dissent in Griswold, "That is the constitutional way to take this law off the books." Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 531 (1965) (Stewart, J., dissenting).

The Supreme Court should not second-guess state officials charged with the responsibility of exercising the police power. Dandridge v. Williams, 397 U.S. 471, 487 (1970). As the Court has said: "The Court is most vulnerable and comes nearest to illegitimacy when it deals with judge-made constitutional law having little or no cognizable roots in the language or design of the Constitution." Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186, 194 (1986). The Court also stated that it should resist the temptation "to expand the substantive reach of those Clauses, particularly if it requires redefining the category of rights deemed to be fundamental. Otherwise, the Judiciary necessarily takes to itself further authority to govern the country without express constitutional authority." Id. at 195.

The Supreme Court in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), justified its ruling on the Texas statute by stating that the statute implicated a fundamental right. However, contrary to the conclusions on which the Court relied in Roe v. Wade, no fundamental right to an abortion or to choose an abortion exists in the Constitution, expressly or in the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. The Roe court based the right to an abortion on the right of privacy established in its prior opinions. While we acknowledge the right of privacy, we submit that no "privacy" right supports the abortion of an unborn human being, unless the lives of other persons are endangered.

The Supreme Court's analysis in Roe of the right to an abortion is inconsistent with the Court's most recent opinion dealing with a fundamental right of privacy. The Supreme Court, in Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986), upheld a Georgia statute prohibiting sodomy, based on the Court's test that any fundamental right, including the right of privacy, must be a right "deeply rooted in this nation's history and tradition" or "implicit in the concept of ordered liberty." Id. at 194. Applying this test, the Court held that the right of privacy does not protect homosexual sodomy. It is doubtful that the Bowers definition would extend the right of privacy to include abortion for the same reason this Court held that it did not extend to sodomy: because aborting an unborn human being at any stage in a pregnancy is not "deeply rooted in this nation's history and tradition" or "implicit in the concept of ordered liberty." For the Court to hold otherwise creates an incongruity unsupported by this most recent Supreme Court precedent regarding the right of privacy.

Based on the foregoing discussion, we believe that under correct constitutional standards the state legislature is the body constitutionally empowered to decide when life begins and thereafter to act to protect that life.

B. Roe v. Wade Is in Error in Holding That a State's Interest in Protecting Human Life Does Not Become Compelling Until a Fetus Attains Viability.

This section of the brief focuses on that portion of the Roe opinion that addresses the issue of whether the state has a compelling interest in regulating abortion from conception as a result of its interest in protecting prenatal human life. It does not address those portions of the Roe opinion that deal with whether a fetus has a right to life under the Fourteenth Amendment, or whether the interest of the state in protecting the health and well-being of the mother is sufficiently compelling to permit it to prohibit abortion. Instead we address, in the setting of the Missouri statute at issue in this case, the issue of whether the state's interest in preserving prenatal human life permits it to prohibit abortion from the earliest stages of life.

The majority opinion in Roe, without analytic support and reason, concludes that a compelling state interest in prenatal human life does not arise until the fetus attains viability. 410 U.S. at 163. The opinion, as it applies to the question of the interest of the state in protecting human life prior to birth, proceeds along the following line of thought:

> 1. Every woman has a right of privacy derived from the Fourteenth Amendment concept of personal liberty and restrictions upon state action. Id. at 153.
>
> 2. The right of privacy of the pregnant mother is a "fundamental" right that includes the abortion decision. Id.
>
> 3. State regulation limiting the pregnant mother's decision to abort the fetus is a limitation on a "fundamental" constitutional right and, therefore, is justified only by a "compelling interest" of the state. Id. at 155.
>
> 4. The state has an interest in protecting the "potential" of human life during pregnancy. That interest grows in "substantiality" during the term of the pregnancy and, "at a point during pregnancy, . . . becomes 'compelling.'" Id. at 162-163.
>
> 5. The compelling point of interest of the state is at viability of the fetus, because, "the fetus then presumably has the capacity of meaningful life outside the mother's womb." Id. at 163.

The point must be made, when discussing the portion of the Roe opinion that deals with the state's interest in the "potential" for human life, that the Court could not reach an opinion based upon precedent, or analogy to precedent, from other areas of the law. Roe was a case that could not be decided by such traditional methods and necessarily depended upon an analysis of the issue by reasoning through the difficult facts surrounding the question of state protection of human life prior to birth. This difficulty is acknowledged in the opinion itself. Id. at 159-161.

The Roe opinion states at several points that the state has an interest not only in protecting human life after birth but in protecting prenatal human life, referred to by the Court as "potential" human life. Id. at 150, 154, 159, 162. The Court then concludes that the state's interest does not rise to the constitutionally "compelling" point until the prenatal life it seeks to protect has attained viability. Id. at 162-163.

The conclusion reached by the opinion unfortunately is reached without logical analysis and support other than to state that at viability "the fetus then presumably has the capability of meaningful life outside the mother's womb." Id. at 163. The conclusion is not tied to any logical premise that capability for meaningful life outside the womb is the point during the pregnancy at which the state's interest becomes "compelling." The lack of reasoning on the critical point of when the state's interest becomes compelling means that the conclusion is arbitrary, without reasonable support and, therefore, in error.

Why the point of viability is determined in Roe as the point of compelling interest of the state may only be inferred from one other statement rendered in the opinion: that the state's interest in protecting the "potentiality" of human life "grows" to a point at which it becomes "compelling" during the pregnancy. Id. at 162-163.

Thus, it appears that viability of the fetus was held to be the point at which the state's interest in protecting human life becomes compelling, because the opinion assumes without question that the state's interest "grows" to a point of compelling interest during the pregnancy. No answer is related in the opinion to the question of why it is assumed that the state's interest in protecting human life could not be "compelling" at the very earliest point of pregnancy, i.e. fertilization of the human egg.

No reasonable foundation exists for the Roe majority's sole stated reason—capability of life outside the womb—for choosing viability of a fetus as the earliest point of compelling state interest. By using viability as the earliest point of compelling state interest, the Court implies that the state's interest in prenatal life first must have attained a certain degree of probability of actually reaching live birth. Such an inference must be drawn, because the only measurement of the degree of "potentiality" of human life must be the likelihood of prenatal life attaining childbirth. Accordingly, the difference in degree between the "potential" for human life represented by the fetus at viability and the "potential" for human life represented by the fertilized human egg may be expressed only in terms of the likelihood that either will result in a childbirth.

If we are to assume, as the majority in Roe apparently did, that the interest of the state becomes compelling as a certain degree of likelihood of live birth is reached, a well-reasoned approach, not taken by the majority in Roe, cannot avoid the following statistical data: out of every 1000 pregnancies verified following the first missed menses, 885, or 88.5%, normally (if not terminated by abortion) will come to full term and reach childbirth.[1] Out of every 1000 pregnancies that reach the point of fetal viability, 985, or 98.5% will come to full term and result in actual childbirth.[2] From these statistics one concludes that the Court's judgment in Roe is that the state does not have a compelling interest in protecting the lives of 885 out of every 1,000 "potential" individuals, but does have a compelling interest in protecting the lives of 985 out of every 1000 "potential" individuals. Stated another way, a state may not constitutionally pass a law prohibiting the abortion of a prenatal human life that has an 88.5% chance of realizing childbirth, but may constitutionally prohibit the abortion of prenatal life that has a 98.5% chance of reaching childbirth. Such a holding, based upon a difference of a 10% likelihood of childbirth, is without basis in reason or common sense.

[1] Total "pregnancy wastage" per 1,000 known conceptions in the United States is derived from data reported in D. Danforth & J. Scott, Obstetrics & Gynecology 291-292 (5th ed. 1986), which reported a known spontaneous abortion rate of 10 percent of all pregnancies, a neonatal death ratio of 6.9 per 1000 live births, a stillbirth ratio of 8.9 per 1000 live births, and a ratio of 358 legal abortions per 1000 live births.

[2] This statistic was based on a stillbirth ratio of 8.9 per 1000 live births and a neonatal mortality ratio of 6.9 per 1000 live births, the source and support for which are described in footnote 1, above. We have used the beginning of the 21st week as the point of viability in deriving these rates. Support for this point in the pregnancy as the point of viability may be found in Brief of The American Association of Pro-Life Obstetricians and Gynecologists in Support of Appellants, passim, Webster v. Reproductive Health Services, No. 88-605.

The probability, or likelihood of a human birth, based upon known medical or scientific data, resulting from a typical pregnancy or human egg fertilization should form the basis for a state determining that it has a protectable interest in that pregnancy or fertilization and for it to be able to act constitutionally to prohibit the termination of the pregnancy or fertilization. That is, state protection, or preservation, of a single human life from its earliest stages is justified if it can be shown it is likely that a human being will develop from that stage and be born in the normal course of events. The test should be whether a postnatal human life reasonably may be expected to be preserved by a state enactment of a law preventing termination of prenatal human life at any given stage of development.

The basic logic of showing the state's interest in protecting human life to be compelling at the earliest stages of human life is as follows:

> 1. The state has a compelling interest in protecting human life at its earliest stage if it can be shown that such protection is reasonably likely to result in the birth of a human being.

2. Pregnancies, including those at the earliest stages, are reasonably likely to result in human birth.

3. Therefore, the state has a compelling interest in protecting and preserving human life from its earliest stages.

We believe this logic should be considered by the Court as the basis for reconsidering the holding in Roe v. Wade that the state does not have a compelling interest in protecting prenatal human life until the point in time that a fetus attains viability. This Court should reverse the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals holding that the Missouri legislature may not legislate when human life begins.

C. The State's Interest in Protecting Human Life from Its Earliest Stages Does Not Unconstitutionally Infringe Upon the Mother's Right of Privacy.

The state's interest in protecting human life from its earliest stages is not absolute and must be balanced against the rights of the pregnant woman. However, because the state's interest is in the preservation or protection of a human life, only the protection of another human life, i.e. the mother's, may outbalance the interest of the state in prohibiting abortion. The right of privacy of the mother should not be considered sufficient, absent the need to save the life of the mother, to outweigh the state's interest in protecting life from its early stages through laws prohibiting abortion.

The termination of human life, even in its earliest stages, is unnecessary and unfair when balanced against reasonable alternatives available to the mother who chooses abortion for reasons other than the preservation of her own life. Such reasons under the present status of the law can, for example, include the inconvenience of pregnancy, financial incapability of supporting a child, or lack of financial means to provide for the prenatal care or safe delivery of the baby. Reasonable alternatives presently existing for meeting those needs, on balance, render such reasons for abortion insufficient to outweigh the interest of the state in protecting human life.

The interest of the state is emphasized further as outweighing the mother's right of privacy when the defenseless nature of the fetus and the complete lack of choice available to it are considered. The fetus has no choice: it either reaches birth as a human being or does not, depending upon the decision of the mother. The mother, on the other hand, has alternatives to abortion which, if utilized, can eliminate all negative consequences of her unwanted pregnancy except the inconvenience and discomfort of carrying a baby to term and delivering that baby.

No level of inconvenience or discomfort of a human being should be a justification for terminating human life, even at its earliest stages, as is now permitted in the first and second trimesters of pregnancy. However, as church organizations, we are fully aware, through our own agencies established to counsel and assist pregnant women currently facing the abortion decision, of the burden it places upon them and society in general to decide not to abort their pregnancies. Many women cannot afford to support themselves during their pregnancies. Some may be unable, because of age or emotional maturity, to be adequate mothers. Many are without financial support and are too poor to pay for proper prenatal and postnatal care and to support a family. It has been asserted that some women, out of a sense of resentment for the child following birth, may even engage in physical abuse of the child.

Reasonable alternatives are presently available to deal with the severe societal problems that might be expected to increase if a state is constitutionally permitted to prohibit abortion in the first and second trimesters of pregnancy. It is our position that through private and public funding such alternatives can be expanded to alleviate the burdens placed upon all of society as a result of prohibiting abortions.

A multitude of organizations, agencies, and facilities are presently available, and could be expanded, to meet the need for services and facilities for women facing unwanted pregnancies. These services and facilities generally fall into the categories of counseling, housing, financial support during pregnancy, financial support for prenatal care, and for hospital delivery and recovery, providing maternity clothing, baby furnishings, child care, temporary foster care, adoption, legal services, programs for the completion of high school, vocational training, and job placement for those in need of employment either during or after pregnancy. While the exact number of such agencies and facilities is not known, one association of such organizations presently lists over two thousand agencies providing such services and facilities nationwide. ALTERNATIVES TO ABORTION INTERNATIONAL, 1988/89 WORLD-WIDE DIRECTORY OF PRO-LIFE EMERGENCY PREGNANCY SERVICES (1988). Some of the more common types of such organizations are as follows:

1. Counseling Services. These services range from telephone hotlines (usually the first link a woman has to advice on her pregnancy) that are immediate sources of information for alternatives to abortion, to agencies providing financial and other assistance to pregnant women who need help. Counseling services provide assistance to single pregnant women who do not have the support of the fathers of their children and who feel they cannot go through their pregnancies alone. Such programs provide female volunteers who serve as partners to single pregnant women in need of assistance and guide them through their pregnancies. They assist them in arranging for doctors' visits, for childbirth classes, delivery room assistance and assistance in the weeks immediately following delivery.

2. Housing Services. Organizations, including church organizations throughout the country, provide housing for pregnant women, particularly single pregnant women who need a safe and clean environment in which to live during and immediately following their pregnancies. Often these services are tied to organizations that arrange for the foster care or adoption of the infant following delivery.

3. Foster Care and Adoption Services. Many public and private organizations presently arrange for foster care and adoption of babies whose mothers, for any reason, cannot, or do not want to, keep their children.

4. Financial Assistance. Organizations are available to meet the costs and burdens of prenatal care, hospital deliveries and hospitalization before delivery and during recovery following delivery. Many agencies provide free or low-cost maternity clothes, infant clothing and baby furnishings.

The state's interest in prohibiting abortion may be outweighed when confronted with an actual threat to the life of the mother. The state's interest must be balanced, on a case by case basis, against the need to save the mother's life. The mother's medical condition and risk to her life without an abortion must be considered and balanced against the likelihood of survival of the fetus without the abortion. Under most such situations an abortion becomes necessary, on balance, and must be regarded as a tragically unavoidable consequence, if medical procedures necessary to prevent the death of the mother include or result in an abortion.

D. State Laws Prohibiting Abortions Are Not Unconstitutional Establishments of Religion Under the First Amendment to the Constitution.

It has been argued that state laws prohibiting abortion unconstitutionally impose the religious beliefs and views of one religion upon persons not adhering to those views, thereby constituting an "establishment" of religion prohibited by the First Amendment.

The sanctity of human life from conception and opposition to abortion are, in fact, sincere and deeply held religious beliefs of The Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod, The Southern Baptist Convention, and of the other forty-seven church denominations represented in this brief. The Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod has, throughout its history, opposed abortion and has adopted official positions in its conventions since 1971 condemning willful abortion as contrary to the will of God. Its convention resolution "To State Position on Abortion" adopted in 1979, states that based upon Scripture, "the living but unborn are persons in the sight of God from the time of conception;" that "as persons, the unborn stand under the full protection of God's own prohibition against murder;" and that abortion is not a moral option, except as tragically necessitated by medical procedures applied to prevent the death of the mother. See 1979 Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod Resolution 3-02A "To State Position on Abortion," Appendix 1a.

The Southern Baptist Convention has passed numerous resolutions opposing abortion in its annual meetings in the last two decades. Such resolutions are the principal means of expressing collectively the Convention's convictions about moral issues. Both the 1982 and 1984 annual meetings of The Southern Baptist Convention adopted resolutions specifically opposing abortion except as necessary to save the physical life of the mother. See 1984 Southern Baptist Convention Resolution No. 8, "On Abortion," and 1982 Southern Baptist Convention, Resolution No. 11, "On Abortion and Infanticide," Appendix 3a.

The foregoing statements opposing abortion except as necessary to save the life of the mother indicate that the positions of the Synod and other churches represented in this brief and the aforementioned resolutions of The Southern Baptist Convention express profoundly held religious beliefs. However, we do not advocate the imposition of our religious views by law in order to impose upon others our religious beliefs. Rather, those religious beliefs are also deeply seated in the moral and ethical system that forms the basis of much of the civil and criminal law of this nation and, therefore, if the state legislatures so decide, may coincidentally be expressed in legislation.

The fact that a state's law coincides with a deeply held religious belief does not render that law unconstitutional under the First Amendment. The Judeo-Christian ethic continues to be the foundation for many criminal statutes in every state in the United States. Criminal statutes against homidice and larceny coincide with the Fifth and Seventh Commandments, and probably are, in fact, based upon them as a result of the ethical heritage of this nation. It is not reasonable to suggest that such laws violate the establishment clause. Equally unfounded is the suggestion that the coincidence of the religious beliefs of The Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod and the other church organizations who have joined in this brief are imposed upon the general public of a state by its passage of a law prohibiting abortion.

The principle that abortion legislation does not violate the First Amendment establishment clause was squarely addressed in the case of Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980). In that case this Court held that a statute that coincides with the tenets of some or all religions does not violate the establishment clause. Id. at 319-320. It held that legislative funding restrictions upon abortions did not contravene the establishment clause of the First Amendment simply because the legislation coincided with the religious tenets of the Roman Catholic Church. Id. at 320. Based upon the holding in Harris and for the reasons above set forth, it is submitted that while the views stated herein relative to the right and interest of the state in prohibiting abortion are motivated by deeply-held religious beliefs, such laws do not violate the First Amendment prohibitions on the establishment of religion.

CONCLUSION

The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals should be reversed in its holding that a state legislatively may not determine when its interest in prenatal human life begins. This Court should defer to the legislatures that question and, to the extent necessary to permit the states legislatively to determine when their protectable interests in human life begin and to protect that life accordingly, overturn the decision of Roe v. Wade.

Respectfully submitted,

LEONARD J. PRANSCHKE
ANN T. STILLMAN
SIBYL C. BOGARDUS
PHILIP E. DRAHEIM *
DRAHEIM & PRANSCHKE
1633 Des Peres Road
Suite 302
St. Louis, Missouri 63131
(314) 965-6455
Attorneys for Amici Curiae

* Counsel of Record

APPENDIX

TO STATE POSITION ON ABORTION

RESOLUTION 3-02A

Overtures 3-20A—3-23 (CW, pp. 97-99)

WHEREAS, The Lutheran Church—Missouri Synod throughout its history has opposed abortion and since 1971 has spoken in convention to condemn "willful abortion as contrary to the will of God"; and

WHEREAS, We as members of Christian congregations have the obligation to protest this heinous crime against the will of God legally sanctioned in the United States and other lands; and

WHEREAS, The practice of abortion, its promotion, and legal acceptance are destructive of the moral consciousness and character of the people of any nation; therefore be it

Resolved, That The Lutheran Church—Missouri Synod in convention urgently call upon Christians—

1. To hold firmly to the clear Biblical truths that (a) the living but unborn are persons in the sight of God from the time of conception (Job 10:9-11; Ps. 51:5; 139:13-17; Jer. 1:5; Luke 1:41-44); (b) as persons the unborn stand under the full protection of God's own prohibition against murder (Gen. 9:6; Ex. 20:13; Num. 35:33; Acts 7:19; I John 3:15); and (c) since abortion takes a human life, abortion is not a moral option, except as a tragically unavoidable byproduct of medical procedures necessary to prevent the death of another human being, viz., the mother; and

2. To speak and act as responsible citizens on behalf of the living but unborn in the civic and political arena to secure for these defenseless persons due protection under the law; and

3. To offer as an alternative to abortion supportive understanding, compassion, and help to the expectant parent(s) and family, and to foster concern for unwanted babies, encouraging Lutheran agencies and families to open hearts and homes to their need for life in a family; and be it further

Resolved, That the Synod earnestly encourage its pastors, teachers, officers, and boards—

1. To warn publicly and privately (Prov. 31:8-9) against the sin of abortion;

2. To instruct the community of God that abortion is not in the realm of Christian liberty, private choice, personal opinion, or political preference;

3. To nurture a deep reverence and gratitude for God's gracious gift of human life;

4. To oppose in a responsible way attitudes and policies in congregations, schools, hospitals, Lutheran social service agencies, and other institutions within their sphere of influence and work which suggest that abortion is a matter of personal choice;

5. To support the efforts of responsible pro-life groups in their communities, e.g., "Lutherans for Life" (CTCR Report, CW, p. 74);

6. To promote clear instruction of Christian morality in homes, schools, and churches of the Synod, showing the blessings and safeguards inherent in God's will for sexual chastity before marriage and faithfulness in marriage;

7. To teach within our Lutheran schools and churches the biological, social, and parental functions of childbearing; and

8. To support the efforts to secure the human life amendments to the United States Constitution.

RESOLUTION NO. 8—ON ABORTION

WHEREAS, The Southern Baptist Convention, meeting in New Orleans in June 1982, clearly stated its opposition to abortion and called upon Southern Baptists to work for appropriate legislation and/or constitutional amendment which will prohibit abortions except to save the physical life of the mother; and

WHEREAS, In addition to legislative remedies for this national sin, it is incumbent that we encourage the woman who is considering abortion to think seriously about the grave significance of such action by presenting information to her about the unborn child in her womb, who is a living individual human being, and encourage her to consider alternatives to abortion; and

WHEREAS, Christlike love requires that such alternatives be made available.

Therefore be it Resolved, That the Southern Baptist Convention meeting in Kansas City, Missouri, June 12-14, 1984, encourage all of its institutions, cooperating churches, and members to work diligently to provide counseling, housing, and adoption placement services for unwed mothers with the specific intent of bringing them into a relationship with Jesus Christ and/or a sense of Christian responsibility; and

Be it further Resolved, That we deplore the practice of performing abortions, as well as dispensing to minors without parental consent or even notification, contraceptive medications which have potentially dangerous side effects, and deplore also the use of tax funds for such activities; and

Be it further Resolved, That we call upon all Southern Baptists to renew their commitment to support and work for legislation and/or constitutional amendment which will prohibit abortion except to save the physical life of the mother; and

Be it further Resolved, That we encourage Southern Baptists to inquire whether or not their physicians perform abortions on demand or give referrals for abortions, and that we commend those of the medical profession who abstain from performing abortions or making abortion referrals; and

Be it finally Resolved, That we urge our agencies and institutions to provide leadership for our cooperating churches and members, by preparing literature to take a clear and strong stand against abortion, and to inform and motivate our members to action to eliminate abortion on demand.

RESOLUTION NO. 11—ON ABORTION AND INFANTICIDE

WHEREAS, Both medical science and biblical references indicate that human life begins at conception, and

WHEREAS, Southern Baptists have traditionally upheld the sanctity and worth of all human life, both born and pre-born, as being created in the image of God, and

WHEREAS, Current judicial opinion gives no guarantee of protection of pre-born persons, thus permitting the widespread practice of abortion on demand, which has led to the killing of an estimated four thousand developing human beings daily in the United States, and

WHEREAS, Social acceptance of abortion has begun to dull society's respect for all human life, leading to growing occurrences of infanticide, child abuse, and active euthanasia.

Therefore, be it Resolved, That the messengers to the 1982 Southern Baptist Convention affirm that all human life, both born and pre-born, is sacred, bearing the image of God, and is not subject to personal judgments as to "quality of life" based on such subjective criteria as stage of development, abnormality, intelligence level, degree of dependency, cost of medical treatment, or inconvenience to parents.

Be it further Resolved, That we abhor the use of federal, state, or local tax money; public, tax-supported medical facilities; or Southern Baptist supported medical facilities for the practice of selfish, medically unnecessary abortions and/or the practice of withholding treatment from unwanted or defective newly born infants.

Be it finally Resolved, That we support and will work for appropriate legislation and/or constitutional amendment which will prohibit abortions except to save the physical life of the mother, and that we also support and will work for legislation which will prohibit the practice of infanticide.

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

IN THE
Supreme Court of the United States
OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

---

BRIEF FOR BIRTHRIGHT, INC. AS AMICUS CURIAE SUPPORTING APPELLANTS

JOSEPH I. MCCULLOUGH, JR.
(Counsel of Record)
JOSEPH I. MCCULLOUGH, JR., P.A.
105 W. Cuthbert Boulevard
P.O. Box 329
Collingswood, New Jersey 08108
(609) 854-3030
Counsel for Amicus

WILSON - EPES PRINTING CO., INC. - 789-0096 - WASHINGTON, D.C. 20001

QUESTION PRESENTED

Whether the tri-mester approach for selecting the test by which state regulation of abortion services is reviewed should be reconsidered and discarded, returning to the states the right to make their own laws regarding abortion, describing when and under what circumstances abortion would be allowed; or whether a more complete reversal should take place granting to unborn children the recognition of their humanity and right to life.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
QUESTION PRESENTED	i
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES	iv
INTEREST OF THE AMICUS CURIAE	1
STATEMENT OF THE CASE	3
ARGUMENT	6
ROE v. WADE, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) WITH ITS TRI-MESTER APPROACH FOR SELECTING THE TEST BY WHICH STATE REGULATION OF ABORTION SERVICES ARE REVIEWED SHOULD BE RECONSIDERED AND REVERSED, RETURNING TO THE STATES THE RIGHT TO MAKE THEIR OWN LAWS REGARDING ABORTION, DESCRIBING WHEN AND UNDER WHAT CIRCUMSTANCES ABORTION WOULD BE ALLOWED; FURTHER, THE HUMANITY OF THE UNBORN SHOULD RESULT IN THIS COURT'S RECOGNITION OF THEIR PERSONHOOD, ENTITLING SUCH UNBORN HUMAN BEINGS TO EQUAL PROTECTION UNDER THE LAW, INCLUDING THE RIGHT TO LIFE	6
CONCLUSION	17

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES:	Page
Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973)	13
Planned Parenthood v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476 (1983)	18
Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973)	passim
CONSTITUTION, STATUTES AND REGULATION:
U.S. Constitution, Amendment V	15
U.S. Constitution, Amendment XIV, Section 1	15
Mo. Stat. Ann., Section 1.205.1-2	3
Abortion Act of 1967, 15 and 16 Elizabeth 2 c. 87..	17
Adolescent Life Act of 1981, 42 U.S.C. 3002 et seq...	16
MISCELLANEOUS:
"A New Ethic for Medicine and Society," CALIFORNIA MEDICINE, Official Journal of the California Medical Association, September, 1970, Volume 113, Number 3	18

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

No. 88-605

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,
v.
REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

---

BRIEF FOR BIRTHRIGHT, INC. AS AMICUS CURIAE SUPPORTING APPELLANTS

INTEREST OF BIRTHRIGHT, INC.

Birthright was founded in Toronto, Canada by Louise Summerhill in 1968. Four years later in 1972, Denise F. Cocciolone, presently the National Executive Director in this country, founded Birthright, Inc. (U.S.A.) with the help and support of Louise Summerhill. Since 1968, this emergency pregnancy services organization has established 550 different centers in the United States. In addition, there are 98 centers in Canada, four in South Africa, one in Nigeria, one in Ghana, one in Hong Kong and others being presently formed in other countries.

Birthright is a non-profit, interdenominational corporation, staffed by volunteers and funded by the private sector. Birthright receives no governmental funding nor are they supported on a regular basis by any particular church or denomination.

Birthright does not engage in political or legislative activity of any kind, but rather offers medical, legal and psychological help to pregnant women from all parts of the country, from all walks of life. Some are rich, others are poor, but most feel abandoned by a family or a society which has no or little patience for a problem unique to women—an unplanned pregnancy. These women, rather than receiving the love and support they need to cope with this challenge are offered the easy way out, the "quick fix" cover-up—abortion. It is to these women that Birthright holds out an alternative of bringing their pregnancy to full term by providing them with shelter facilities where needed, clothing, food, furnishings, as well as the medical, legal and psychological assistance referred to.

Birthright volunteers give of themselves and their time freely and lovingly. Birthright services are offered free of charge and in complete confidence.

The Birthright office in the United States and Canada staffs 2800 telephone lines through which girls and women from the United States and Canada can call for help for any pregnancy-related problem at any time, night or day.

Prior to this case, Birthright has not participated in any other judicial determination, but because of the nature of its organization and the concern for its clients, Birthright has always viewed abortion on demand not as an act of "choice", but as an act of despair on the part of a woman. Based on an average of approximately 300,000 telephone calls for help received each year by Birthright, it is Birthright's opinion that the law has played a major role in a pregnant woman's moral perception of abortion, the thinking going as follows:

"If it is legal, it must be right."

Birthright offers at least a microcosm of an alternate solution to a woman in need, and represents but one of many such agencies growing in size and number throughout these United States. Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), on the other hand, in addition to ignoring the very existance of personhood within the child being carried by our clients, and the cases following in Roe's wake, provide an abortion on demand situation as the seeming only alternative. This case destroys and erodes the very fabric of values in our society. A review of this decision, more specifically the trimester approach for selecting the test by which state regulation of abortion services is reviewed, is a matter in which this organization, Birthright, and its clients have an immediate and continuing interest.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On June 26, 1986, the State of Missouri passed a statute, signed by the governor, regulating abortion in that state. The first section of that statute contains a general finding by the state legislature that "the life of each human being begins at conception" and the requirement that all state laws be interpreted to provide unborn children with all the rights of other persons 'subject only to the constitution of the United States and decisional interpretations thereof by the United States Supreme Court." (Mo. Stat. Ann Section 1.205.1-2) A full description of the statute is set forth in the jurisdictional statement of the Attorney General of the State of Missouri and among other provisions the statute provides that no public funds, employees or facilities are to be used for the purpose of performing or assisting in abortion or for encouraging or counselling a woman to have an abortion. Further, the statute requires that prior to performing an abortion on any woman whom the doctor has reason to believe is 20 or more weeks pregnant (noting that any such prognosis is generally accepted to be as much as four weeks off in either direction) the doctor must determine whether the fetus is viable by performing "such medical examinations and tests as are necessary to make a finding of the gestational age, weight and lung maturity of the unborn child" (Section 188.029).

Appellees, Reproductive Health Services, five publicly employed doctors and nurses and one other non-profit corporation brought a class action challenging the constitutionality of these and other provisions of the Missouri statute. The District Court struck down the provisions (J.S. App. A1-A55) and the Court of Appeals affirmed (id. at A56-A84). The Court of Appeals concluded that the requirement that doctors perform viability tests is an unconstitutional legislative intrusion on a matter of medical skill and judgment. The Appellate Court additionally struck down Missouri's declaration that life begins at conception, not based on any determination of empirical fact or facts, but rather that the statute was an impermissable adoption of a theory disallowed by this very Court in Roe v. Wade, supra. The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals likewise turned down and rejected Missouri's reliance on the statutes caveat requiring compatability with the Constitution and Supreme Court precedent on the grounds that such a clause "cannot validate state laws that are in fact incompatible with the Constitution." [1]

---

[1] Judge Arnold desented (J.A. App. A83-A84) from this part of the decision showing the confusion, even in the judicial mind, and contending that Missouri's declaration of when life begins should be upheld when it relates to a subject other than abortions, such as a wrongful death action or bringing the unborn within the protection of the criminal law. Obviously, Judge Arnold recognizes, at least in part, the "Emperor's Clothes" approach of this Court in calling the unborn a non-person. Judge Arnold agrees with that determination only insofar as this Court has ruled. In other words, he recognizes the personhood of unborn children for all other purposes other than abortion, most probably feeling bound by this Court's determination in Roe v. Wade, supra.

The State of Missouri appeals from the final judgment of the Court of Appeals striking down these and other sections. The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals has issued a final judgment holding these portions of the Missouri statute to be invalid as repugnant to the Constitution of the United States. The case thus falls within this Court's appellate jurisdiction and certiorari was granted.

Question seven of the State of Missouri's jurisdictional statement asks this Court to reconsider, as does this brief, and upon reconsideration, to overrule, its decision in Roe v. Wade, supra. The United States of America intervened in this case and its views on the issue are described in the Amicus Curiae brief of the United States. As indicated in the brief filed by the United States considering the jurisdictional question here, this case is free of procedural defects and implicates a number of legislative choices foreclosed by Roe v. Wade. It is very strongly suggested, as the Solicitor General states, that if the Court is prepared to reconsider Roe v. Wade, this case presents an appropriate opportunity for doing so.

In light of the underlying destruction of the moral fabric of this nation, it is most strongly suggested that at a minimum, Roe v. Wade, supra, and the cases following in its wake, both in the State and Federal Courts, as well as in this Court, be reviewed and be at the very least, cut back substantially, if not overruled entirely.

ARGUMENT

ROE v. WADE, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) WITH ITS TRIMESTER APPROACH FOR SELECTING THE TEST BY WHICH STATE REGULATION OF ABORTION SERVICES ARE REVIEWED SHOULD BE RECONSIDERED AND REVERSED, RETURNING TO THE STATES THE RIGHT TO MAKE THEIR OWN LAWS REGARDING ABORTION, DESCRIBING WHEN AND UNDER WHAT CIRCUMSTANCES ABORTION WOULD BE ALLOWED; FURTHER, THE HUMANITY OF THE UNBORN SHOULD RESULT IN THIS COURT'S RECOGNITION OF THEIR PERSONHOOD, ENTITLING SUCH UNBORN HUMAN BEINGS TO EQUAL PROTECTION UNDER THE LAW, INCLUDING THE RIGHT TO LIFE.

In its conclusion, Mr. Justice Blackmun, delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court in Roe v. Wade summarizes its decision as follows:

"To summarize and to repeat:

1. A state criminal abortion statute of the current Texas type, that excepts from criminality only a life-saving procedure on behalf of the mother, without regard to pregnancy stage and without recognition of the other interests involved, is violative of the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.

(a) For the stage prior to approximately the end of the first trimester, the abortion decision and its effectuation must be left to the medical physician.

(b) For the stage subsequent to approximately the end of the first trimester, the State, in promoting its interest in the health of the mother, may, if it chooses, regulate the abortion procedure in ways that are reasonably related to maternal health.

(c) For the stage subsequent to viability, the State in promoting its interest in the potentiality of human life may, if it chooses, regulate, and even proscribe, abortion except where it is necessary, in appropriate medical judgment, for the preservation of the life or health of the mother."

Missouri, in the statute under review (J.S. A60) states:

"The general assembly of this state finds that:

1. The life of each human being begins at conception;

2. Unborn children have protectable interests in life, health and wellbeing;

3. The natural parents of unborn children have protectable interests in the life, health and wellbeing of their unborn child."

Rather than get into the semantics of whether or not saving language in the statute allows such language by the Missouri legislature constitutionality, the real question that exists is: WHO IS RIGHT?

If the issue was not such a terribly serious one, an issue that literally splits this nation in half, the responsive language of Justice Blackmun on page 159 of the Court's opinion in Roe v. Wade, supra, would be humerous when the ultimate issue of life is presented to the Court:

> ". . . we need not resolve the difficult question of when life begins. When those trained in the respective disciplines of medicine, philosophy and theology are unable to arrive at any consensus, the judiciary at this point in the development of man's knowledge, is not in a position to speculate as to the answers."[2]

Strong issue is taken with the contention that this Court is not in a position to define when life begins. For reasons hereinafter stated, obviously life begins at conception and everyone knows that. We play word games and definition games rather than come out and say: "the taking of human life is justifiable at the convenience of one's mother." In reality, that is the state of the law in the United States in 1989, representing a "new morality" for our progeny.

---

[2] Justice Blackmun, prior to this conclusion, admits that a determination of personhood on the part of the unborn child would result in a totally opposite opinion than that arrived at by the Court: ". . . If this suggestion of personhood is established . . . the fetus' right to life would be guaranteed specifically by the Amendment." Roe v. Wade, supra, at pp. 156-157.

If one were to be in a field hunting and see in the distance what appeared to be a wild turkey and lifted one's rifle to shoot and kill that prey and another were to come along saying, "don't shoot, that's my baby", the hunter could argue that distance and the red scarf around the child's neck created the perception that this were a turkey, and perhaps, despite the woman's protestation, the hunter may still believe that her perception was incorrect and this was indeed a turkey. No one on this Court would suggest other than that the hunter's later act of shooting and killing (if in fact the turkey turned out to be a child) would be reckless and wanton conduct at best, murder at worst. Is abortion any different as practiced in these United States?

Judge Arnold of the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals dissents from the decision below and his dissent is worthy of some consideration. He states (J.S. 83):

> ". . . of course a governmental declaration about when human life begins insofar as it is used to justify regulation of abortion is unconstitutional. Roe v. Wade (Supra.) But I do not see why Mo. Ann. Stat. Section 1.205 should not be upheld insofar as it relates to subjects other than abortion. The statute, for example, may mean that the negligent killing of a fetus gives rise to a state law tort action for wrongful death. Neither the District Court nor this Court suggests that such a change in the common law, if limited to non-abortion situations, would violate the Federal Constitution. Just such a purpose was apparently part of what the state legislature had in mind when it passed this law. Section 1.205.4, which the Court does not quote reads as follows:

> Nothing in this section shall be interpreted as creating a cause of action against a woman for indirectly harming her unborn child by failing to properly care for herself or by failing to follow any particular program of prenatal care.
>
> The implication is that the section may properly be interpreted as creating causes of action against persons other than the mother."

The undersigned would request that the Court very carefully consider the language of Judge Arnold here. What Judge Arnold is saying is that he recognizes that this Court allows this senseless taking of human life by the mother. Why? Because this Court said it is o.k. Otherwise, says Judge Arnold, the child is a human being. Justice Blackman may find it difficult to make such a determination. Judge Arnold does not.

I one time had a discussion with my then five year old daughter. She asked me how the tooth fairy got into her room at night so as to leave the quarter under her pillow after taking away the tooth that had been pulled by the dentist. Recognizing a degree of maturity in my daughter that I had not seen before, I shared with her the fact that her mother had put the quarter there and the tooth fairy was basically a fantasy. My daughter lost another tooth approximately two months later and she placed that tooth under her pillow as well. When she woke the next morning, the tooth was still there and no quarter. She came crying to me telling me "daddy, the tooth fairy didn't come last night." She preferred her own version and chose to ignore the real facts in favor of her own fantasy. We as adults are some times as juvenile. Many tall buildings have no thirteenth floor. What happens to the thirteenth floor? Well, in reality, the thirteenth floor is the fourteenth floor. We can change the number, but if you count the number of floors, the fourteenth is still the thirteenth. Thirteen is an unlucky number. Hotels know that people don't like to sleep on floors with unlucky numbers. Therefore, in order to avoid the reality of the existence of that floor, they simply change the number of the floor.

In the issue before this Court, such distortion of reality also exists. Unborn child becomes "tissue," "product of conception," "blob," "uterine contents." Regardless of what we call it, it is still an unborn child.

One or Abraham Lincoln's favorite stories was this one:

> "How many legs would a sheep have if you called a tail a leg?" "Five" they answered. "You are mistaken," said the President. "The sheep would still have but four legs, for calling something a leg doesn't make it so."

This Court, for instance, rather than refer to poisoning, mutilating or shredding preborn babies, chooses to use the words "termination of pregnancy." Why? The reality of abortion brutalizes our senses and emotions. That is precisely the purpose of the euphemism to substitute language whereby we can name things without calling up mental pictures of their reality. The reality of abortion is that it kills an innocent human being. "Termination of pregnancy" anesthetizes us to the pain of the action for clearly it is the life of the unborn child which is terminated.

The use of the words "uterine contents," "products of conception," or "birth matter," even the correct clinical term of "embryo" or "fetus" depersonalizes the process so that the destruction of the unborn does not sound like killing. As a father of teen age children, I can assure you that adolescents are indeed human, as human as you or I. Is the adolescent less human than the adult because he is younger and less experienced in life? Hardly. Conversely, could not your death or mine be justified as one writer has said, on linguistic grounds by simply calling us "household contents" rather than "uterine contents."

"The enslaved African race," wrote the United States Supreme Court in its Dred Scott Decision of 1857, "are beings of an inferior order and so far inferior that they have no rights which the white man is bound to respect." Is that commentary and that designation sufficient to justify slavery today? Obviously, it is not. No one today denies the fact that the Dred Scott Decision represents one of the saddest moments in this Court's history.

I would very strongly suggest to this Court that Roe v. Wade, supra, falls into the same category. Ultimately, if not in this case, Roe v. Wade, supra, will be overturned and reversed. The reason I say that is simple. Justice ultimately will rule out and the taking of innocent human life is unjust, just as unjust as the enslavement of an entire race. Our individual biological system begins at conception and ends at death, a continum. The science of genetics clearly has always stated that our humanity does not depend on our size, our stage of development or our place of residence. Even if this Court contrarily decides it does by calling the unborn "potentially human." Is a human being a person, as defined by the Constitution of the United States? One would think so, but from 1973 to date, this Court has ruled otherwise. A corporation is a person under the law, for certain purposes, but an unborn child is not.

Professor A. W. Liley, a research professor in Fetal Physiology in Auckland, New Zealand, is known as the "Father of Feteology," the internationally recognized researcher and authority on life before birth. It was Dr. Liley who pioneered the first successful treatment of the unborn child: the intra-uterine blood transfusion. He is an outspoken opponent of abortion and states the following:

> "In a world in which adults control power and purse, the fetus is at a disadvantage being small, naked, nameless and voiceless. He has no one except sympathetic adults to speak up for him and defend him.

Biologically, at no stage can we subscribe to the view that the fetus is a mere appendage of the mother. Genetically, the mother and baby are separate individuals from conception. Physiologically, we must accept that the conceptus is, in a very large measure, in charge of the pregnancy.

It is the embryo who stops his mother's periods and makes her womb habitable by developing a placenta and a protective capsule of fluid for himself. It is he (or she) that regulates his own amniotic fluid volume and although women speak of their water breaking or their membranes rupturing, these structures belong to the fetus and finally it is the fetus, not the mother, who decides when labor should be initiated.

> This, then, is the fetus we know and in deed once were. This is also the fetus whose existence and identity must be callously ignored or energetically denied by advocates of abortion." [3]

We can call an unborn human being a "blob," a "fetus," "tissue" and we can label his violent premeditated death "termination of pregnancy," or we can call a sheep's tail a leg. Calling it something else doesn't make it so, and there are no tooth fairies.

A woman, therefore, is not controlling her own body when she has an abortion. She is indeed ending someone else's right to have a body, to have life. There are circumstances when the law may respect the taking of such preborn life, but should we not call it so. I suspect that, in reality, everyone recognizes that abortion is basically the final step of contraception. No one truely cares about the philosophies involved or even the theology involved. It is convenience that rules.

---

[3] Professor A. W. Liley excerpted from a speech delivered on November 18, 1970, entitled "The Termination of Pregnancy or the Extermination of the Fetus."

In the Roe v. Wade and Doe v. Bolton decisions, 410 U.S. 179 (1973) the Supreme Court provided examples of factors which would guide women in concluding that a child was unwanted and, therefore, "abortable": if the child might "force upon the woman a distressful life or future," if she may be "taxed by child care," if she would experience "embarrassment as a result of being unwed," or if the birth of the child would "deprive a woman of her preferred life style." With such criteria, Roe v. Wade and Doe v. Bolton become the supreme law of the land.

It would indeed be magnificent if there were no unwanted children of any age. It would likewise be indeed gratifying if there were no unwanted wives by husbands or no unwanted aged parents by children. What a wonderful world it would be if there were no handicapped, mentally retarded, no minorities. Indeed it would be heaven on earth if there was no unwanted anybody, but the measure of our humanity is not that there are not unwanted ones among us. Rather, the measure of our humanity is what we do with those who are unwanted. It is suggested that we should care for them, accept them, and recognize our oneness with them. Certainly, the wanted vs. unwanted child syndrome reduces the child to an object. We usually want things, such as a vacation, a raise, a new suit, a new house. To "want" or "not to want" children is to dehumanize them, to take persons and make them things. In this "throw away" society of ours, this consumer oriented world that we live in, we have created an economic system with no room for children. They are no longer necessary for production on the family farm or as insurance for our old age. They, in fact, have become a costly luxury from which men and women seek satisfaction and gratification as the other objects of our so-called "good life."

The Court in Roe v. Wade, supra (page 130 and following), goes back over the years to determine the position taken in other generations toward abortion going back to even ancient times. On page 131 of the Court's review, the Hippocratic Oath, named after the great Greek physician 400 years before Christ, is discussed. Hippocrates is described as the father of medicine, the wisest and greatest practitioner of his art, and the most important and most complete medical personality of antiquity who dominated the medical schools of his time, and who typified the sum of medical knowledge of the past. Justice Blackmun quotes the oath correctly in its conclusionary sentences:

> " . . . I will neither give a deadly drug to anybody if asked for it, nor will I make a suggestion to this effect. Similarly, I will not give to a woman an abortive remedy."

Noting that the oath is not even mentioned in any of the principal briefs in the Roe v. Wade, supra, case nor the Doe v. Bolton, supra, case, the Court on its own states as follows:

> ". . . it (the oath) represents the apex of the development of strict ethical concepts in medicine, and its influence endures to this day . . . ." (Emphasis added by undersigned).

In times past, American indians were not legal "persons" because we did not grant them the protection of our Constitution. We were, therefore, able to take by force and arms anything which belonged to Indians. This Court, even recently, has reviewed cases dealing with the absolute theft of Indian land by the government of the United States. Why were we able to steal their land? We were able to steal their land because they were not "persons" entitled to the protection of the Constitution. As indicated previously, our list of non-persons also included black slaves who were declared to be chattel and personal property of their masters as a result of this Court's decision in 1857 (Dred Scott decision). We at that time wanted their labor, so we denied them "personhood." Needing their labor, we took their liberty. Slavery was highly profitable as is the abortion industry today; slavery was socially accepted as is abortion, as a result of this Court's decision in 1973; slavery was condoned by many churches of the day, if not most, and held as legal by the United States Supreme Court, as is abortion today. We do not seek the unborn's land, nor their labor. No, what we desire is their space in this world, their portion of food, their share of resources and the added convenience of being rid of them. Our Constitution states in both the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendment that no one should be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law.[4] Yet this Court has historically deprived the unborn of life, the Blacks of liberty and the Indians of property. History has proven this Court wrong about Indians; history has proven this Court wrong about blacks; and history will prove this Court wrong about the unborn.

Birthright is an organization that has recognized one other final factor. Abortion has become an excuse for not offering real aid to pregnant women. Roe v. Wade, supra, and the cases following it ignore the fact that abortion is simply a financially cheap way for society to brush troubled women out of the way while claiming to have done them a service. Abortion is indeed a woman's issue, but it is an issue not of women's rights, but of women's oppression. For most women, existing law and customs are the most important criteria for deciding what is right or wrong. Unquestionably, most women look to law for moral guidance. Right now the law is teaching these women that abortion is a moral and presumably effective solution to their unplanned pregnancy. In calling for an overrule of Roe v. Wade, supra, Birthright recognizes that this society must provide love and support to pregnant women, both before and after giving birth, because of the added pressures and difficulties they face, especially in cases of great economic necessity and physical distress. It was suggested in the comments concerning Birthright's interest in the case, that this organization, and ones like it, represent a microcosm of what could be done on a national scale. The following suggestions are made as to a proposed policy following Roe v. Wade reversal:

---

[4] U.S. Constitution, Amendment V and Amendment XIV, Sec. 1.

1. Financial aid from both the private and public sector must be available to help pregnant women carry their children to term and meet the special medical expenses associated with childbirth; further legislative steps must be taken to eliminate insurance clauses refusing medical payments to unwed mothers.[5]

2. The medical community, in some part profiting from abortion on demand, should accept at least a small role by directing women towards crisis counseling centers where trained professionals can help them through problem pregnancies, such as Birthright and other similar organizations. Medical, legal, psychiatric and other such counseling should be available at no cost to women who find pregnancy distressful.

3. The entire field of adoption should be up-graded perhaps by Federal legislation sc as to allow women and families unable to support a child to have choices about how such child is placed.[6]

4. Housing for women with such pregnancies should be expanded.

---

[5] See Adolescent Life Act of 1981, 42 U.S.C. 3002 et seq. This piece of legislation authorizes federal funding and financial assistance to pregnant adolescents.

[6] President George Bush in his most recent address to Congress requested tax relief by way of tax credits for adopting parents to alleviate the financial costs of adoption.

5. Support programs such as post-natal care, medical and nutritional programs and day care centers and general support of young parents and single parents should be encouraged, supported and expanded.

6. Counselling centers for women should be expanded and receive support from private and public funding.

7. Less tangible of all, but perhaps more important than all, unplanned children deserve our unconditional acceptance and women with unplanned pregnancies our love and support.

CONCLUSION

Roe v. Wade, supra, is now 16 years old. The cases that have followed Roe v. Wade, supra, are not cited at length herein for there is no need to. In fact, despite literally hundreds of hours of study in the preparation of this brief, very little legal precedent is cited in support of the argument made. The reason is simple. The argument made cries out for logic, common sense, reasoning, intelligence and conclusions in accord with what is best for all the people of this nation. Whether this Court wishes to be such or not, it is the provider of moral leadership, or should be. There are no cases that support the argument herein since prior to 1973 or at least 1967, the date of the English Abortion Enactment (Abortion Act of 1967, 15 and 16 Elizabeth 2 c. 87), no one would have suggested that the protection of the unborn was something that needed to be considered by this Court or any other Court. Briefs will be considered by this Court which cite innumerable sections of the statute under consideration. This brief concerns itself with but one section of that statute. Other briefs will quote 40 or 50 Supreme Court cases that have dealt with Roe v. Wade and its progeny. That is fine, but unnecessary here. It is suggested that Roe v. Wade is a horrible decision, judicial legislation at best, legal condonation of homicide at worst, a case worthy of review, reconsideration and reversal. The only dent in Roe v. Wade since its publication is Planned Parenthood v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476 (1983). That case reviewed a Missouri statute requiring a second doctor in the operating room for all post-viability abortions performed in the State of Missouri so that such second doctor would make an attempt to save the life of the aborted viable fetus. The Court rightly held, but by the narrowest of margins, that such statute was not unconstitutional as infringing on the mother's welfare despite the dissent of four members of this Court.

One final reflection as I close: In September, 1970, three years before Roe v. Wade, supra., an editorial appeared under the title "A New Ethic For Medicine And Society" in the official journal of the California Medical Association, California Medicine, Volume 113, Number 3. This was the message:

> "The traditional Western ethic has always placed great emphasis on the intrinsic worth and equal value of every human life regardless of its stage or condition. This ethic . . . has been the basis for most of our laws and much of our social policy. The reverence for each and every human life has also been a keystone of Western medicine."
>
> ". . . (The New Ethic) is quite distinctly at variance with the Judeo-Christian ethic and carries serious philosophical, social, economic and political implications for Western society and perhaps for the world society.
>
> It will become necessary and acceptable to place relative rather than absolute values on such things as human lives . . .
>
> The process of eroding the old ethic and substituting the new has already begun. It may be seen most clearly in changing attitudes toward human abortion. In defiance of the long-held Western ethic of intrinsic and equal value for every human life regardless of its stage, condition or status, abortion is becoming > accepted by society as morally right and even necessary.

>
> One may anticipate further developments . . . as the problems of birth control and birth selection are extended inevitably to death selection and death control whether by the individual or by society.
>
> Since the old ethic has not yet been fully displaced it has been necessary to separate the idea of abortion from the idea of killing, which continues to be socially abhorrent.
>
> The result has been a curious avoidance of the scientific fact, which everyone really knows, that human life begins at conception and is continuous whether intra-uterine or extra-uterine until death.
>
> The very considerable semantic gymnastics which are required to rationalize abortion as anything but taking a human life whould be ludicrous if they were not often put forth under socially impeccable auspices. It is suggested that this schizophrenic sort of subterfuge is necessary because while a new ethic is being accepted the old has not yet been rejected."

Before the "old" is completely rejected, may this Court strongly consider the rationality, the morality and the rightness of the argument herein. Birthright should be the right of every American, born or unborn.

Respectfully submitted,

JOSEPH I. MCCULLOUGH, JR.
(Counsel of Record)

JOSEPH I. MCCULLOUGH, JR., P.A.
105 W. Cuthbert Boulevard
P.O. Box 329
Collingswood, New Jersey 08108
(609) 854-3030
Counsel for Amicus

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

(31)

No. 88-605

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 29 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

IN THE

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

October Term, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al., - - Appellants, versus

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al., - - - - - - - - - - - Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF OF FREE SPEECH ADVOCATES AS AMICUS CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

THOMAS PATRICK MONAGHAN
Free Speech Advocates
New Hope, Kentucky 40052
(502) 549-5454
Attorney for Amicius Curiae

WESTERFIELD-BONTE CO., 819 W. KENTUCKY–P.O. BOX 3251, LOUISVILLE, KY.

29

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	PAGE
TABLE OF CONTENTS	i
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES	ii
INTEREST OF AMICUS	1
SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT	1
ARGUMENT	2
Introduction	2
I. Neither Roe v. Wade, Doe v. Bolton, Nor Most Subsequent Abortion Cases Present a "Case or Controversy" for Adjudication.	4
A. The Roe and Doe Cases May Have Been Frauds Upon The Court.	4
B. Roe and Doe Lacked Standing.	6
C. The Present Case at the Court of Appeals Exemplifies the Same "Standing" Defects.	8
II. Even If Standing Were Shown, This Court's Abortion Cases Have Not Followed Proper Substantive and Procedural Rules.	9
A. The Abortion Cases Persistently Avoid Actual Confrontation and Any Trace of Adversarial Clash.	9
B. The Abortion Decisions Are Persistently Overbroad.	15
III. The Abortion Cases Decided by the Court, From Roe v. Wade On, Should be Reversed and the Legislative Branches Alowed to Fulfill Their Responsibilities.	17
CONCLUSION	23

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

PAGE

Cases:

Bellotti v. Baird, 433 U.S. 622 (1979) 10
Burnet v. Coronado Oil & Gas Co., 285 U.S. 393 (1932) .. 21
Byrn v. New York City Health & Hospital Corp., 31 N.Y.2d 194, 286 N.E.2d 887, 33 N.Y.S.2d 390 (1972), appeal dismissed, 410 U.S. 949 (1973) 21
City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., 462 U.S. 416 (1983) 2, 13
Cleveland v. Chamberlain, 66 U.S. (1 Black) 419 (1862) ... 5-6
Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973) ..... 1, passim
Dred Scott v. Sandford, 61 U.S. 1, 19 How. 393 (1857) ..... 13, passim Georgia v. Stanton, 73 U.S. (6 Wall.) 50 (1867) 7
Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980) 17
Heckler v. Chaney, 470 U.S. 821 (1985) 2-3
In re A.C., 533 A.2d 611 (D.C. 1987), vacated and reh'g en banc granted, 539 A.2d 203 (D.C. 1988) 23
In re John or Mary Doe, A Thirty-Nine Week Old Unborn Child, 247 Ga. 86, 274 S.E.2d 457 (1981) 23
Korematsu v. United States, 323 U.S. 214 (1944) 23
Liverpool, New York & Philadelphia S.S. Co. v. Commissioner of Immigration, 113 U.S. 33 (1885) 16
Lochner v. New York, 198 U.S. 45 (1905) 3-4, 16, 19, 20
Lord v. Veazie, 49 U.S. 585, 8 How. 251 (1850) 5
Paris Adult Theatre I v. Slaton, 413 U.S. 49 (1973) 11
Planned Parenthood of Cent. Mo. v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976) 3, 8
Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537 (1896) 16, 19, 22
Poe v. Ullman, 367 U.S. 497 (1961) 7, 9, 10, 12, 13
Raleigh Fitkin-Paul Morgan Memorial Hospital v. Anderson, 42 N.J. 421, 201 A.2d 537 (1964), cert. denied, 377 U.S. 985 (1964) 22-23
Reproductive Health Services v. Webster, 662 F. Supp. 407 (W.D. Mo. 1987) (Webster I), aff'd in part, rev'd in part, 851 F.2d 1071 (8th Cir. 1988) (Webster II), prob. juris. noted, 109 S. Ct. 480 (1989) 8, 11, 17
Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) ..... 1, passim
Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986) ..... 3, passim
Torcaso v. Watkins, 367 U.S. 488 (1961) 23

Statutes and Constitutions:

The Declaration of Independence (U.S. 1776) 2, 20, 23, 24
U.S. Const. art III, § 2 17

Other Authorities:

A. Bickel, The Morality of Consent (1975) 15
W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England (1765) 2
Charlie Brown's 'Cyclopedia, Super Questions and Answers and Amazing Facts, Featuring Your Body (1980) 22
A. Cox, The Role of the Supreme Court in American Government (1976) 15
Dellapenna, "Abortion and the Law: Blackmun's Distortion of the Historical Record," in Abortion and the Constitution 137 (1987) 13
Dellapenna, The History of Abortion: Technology, Morality, and Law, 40 U. Pitt. L. Rev. 359 (1979) 13
Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, 82 Yale L.J. 920 (1973) 15
Epstein, Substantive Due Process by Any Other Name: The Abortion Cases, 1973 Sup. Ct. Rev. 159 15
D. Fehrenbacker, The Dred Scott Case, Its Significance in American Law and Politics (1978) 14
The Human Life Bill: Hearings on S.158 Before the Subcomm. on Separation of Powers of the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary, 97th Cong., 1st Sess. (1981) 15
Kader, The Law of Tortious Prenatal Death Since Roe v. Wade, 45 Mo. L. Rev. 639 (1980) 13
Key Abortion Plaintiff Now Denies She Was Raped, N.Y. Times, Sept. 9, 1987, at A23 4
A. Lincoln, The Collected Works of Abraham Lincoln (R. Basler ed. 1953) 14, 24, 25
Posner, The Uncertain Protection of Privacy by the Supreme Court, 1979 Sup. Ct. Rev. 173 14
W. Prosser, Law of Torts (1964) 2
J. Swift, Gulliver's Travels (1962) 22
This Week, Nat'l Rev., Feb. 24, 1989, at 11 14
Tribe, Toward a Model of Roles in the Due Process of Life and Law, 87 Harv. L. Rev. 1 (1973) 15
Wollner, I Am Mary Doe, Fulton County Daily Report, Feb. 9, 1989, at 1 5
B. Woodward, The Brethren: Inside the Supreme Court (1979) 14

IN THE

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

October Term, 1988

No. 88-605

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, ET AL., - - - Appellants,
v.
REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, ET AL., - Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

INTEREST OF AMICUS

Free Speech Advocates is a legal defense group dedicated to protecting, preserving, and defending the right of public witness and speech on behalf of the unborn child.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The Abortion Cases have not presented a case or controversy, may have been frauds and raise problems of standing such that Roe v. Wade and Doe v. Bolton should never have been before the Court. Further, the abortion cases have not followed proper substantive and procedural rules by avoiding true adversarial clash and repeatedly becoming vehicles for overbroad policy statements and expansive incursions by the Court into legislative matters.

The United States Supreme Court is ill-equipped to legislate and should overrule Roe v. Wade and Doe v. Bolton in order to allow responsible state action in this area.

ARGUMENT

Introduction

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), and Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S 179 (1973), should be overruled.

The most obvious reason to overrule the Abortion Cases is that unborn children from the moment of conception are persons and have been "persons" in the law entitled to constitutional protection. Declaration of Independence (U.S. 1776); 1 W. Blackstone, Commentaries *125-26 (1765); 4 W. Blackstone, Commentaries ch. 14; W. Prosser, Law of Torts 355-56 (1964).

The focus of the present brief, however, is an examination of systematic procedural distortions reflecting the invalidity ab initio of the United States Supreme Court's Abortion Cases. The Roe and Doe abortion decisions, themselves, have aborted this Court's longstanding constitutional law jurisprudence. This problem has been noticed previously by members of the Court.

> This Court's abortion decisions have already worked a major distortion in the Court's constitutional jurisprudence. See Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., 462 U.S. 416, 452 (1983) (O'Connor, J., dissenting). Today's decision goes further, and makes it painfully clear that no legal rule or doctrine is safe from ad hoc nullification by this Court when an occasion for its application arises in a case involving state regulation of abortion. The permissible scope of abortion regulation is not the only constitutional issue on which this Court is divided, but — except when it comes to abortion — the Court has generally refused to let such disagreements, however long standing or deeply felt, prevent it from even-handedly applying uncontroversial legal doctrines to cases that come before it. See Heckler v. Chaney, 470 U.S. 821, 838-40, n.2 (1985) (Brennan, J., concurring) (differences over the validity of the death penalty under the Eighth Amendment should not influence the Court's consideration of a question of statutory administrative law). That the Court's unworkable scheme for constitutionalizing the regulation of abortion has had this institutionally debilitating effect should not be surprising, however, since the Court is not suited to the expansive role it has claimed for itself in the series of cases that began with Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973).

Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747, 814-15 (1986) (O'Connor, J., dissenting).

In a similar vein, Justice White urges a restoration of previously recognized principles of adjudication:

> I am not yet prepared to accept the notion that normal rules of law, procedure, and constitutional adjudication suddenly become irrelevant solely because a case touches on the subject of abortion.

Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 98 (1976) (White, J., dissenting).

However, in this brief, amicus examines specific areas in which the procedural irregularities of the abortion cases are particularly pernicious. Such an examination will underscore the compelling need for abortion cases to be governed by the same rules of constitutional litigation that apply to other cases and consequently for this Court to withdraw the imposition of Roe and Doe upon this moral and political confrontation in our society.

Roe's creation of a constitutional right to abortion on demand represents a return to the discredited Loch- ner doctrine.[1] This is apparent from the source of the abortion liberty, flowing as it does from strained interpretations of the due process clause of the fourteenth amendment. Lochner, of course, is the watchword for the view that the justices are free to read personal concepts of public policy into the Constitution.

I. NEITHER ROE V. WADE, DOE V. BOLTON, NOR MOST SUBSEQUENT ABORTION CASES PRESENT A "CASE OR CONTROVERSY" FOR ADJUDICATION.

A. The Roe and Doe Cases May Have Been Frauds Upon the Court.

It has been reported that "Jane Roe" of Roe v. Wade fame, the only plaintiff in Roe found to have standing,[2] was a woman named Norma Jean McCorvey. Norma Jean McCorvey, in an admission against her interests, now says she lied in asserting that her pregnancy — the basis of the suit in Roe — was the result of rape, assertions during the pendency of Roe notwithstanding. She did not have the abortion. Key Abortion Plaintiff Now Denies She Was Raped, N.Y. Times, Sept. 9, 1987, at A23.

Doe v. Bolton has been shown to suffer from the same defect. In December, 1988, Mary Kay Race Bensing, a woman claiming to be the plaintiff, Mary Doe, in Doe v. Bolton, came forward. Ms. Bensing said that she never had an abortion, never wanted an abortion, and never would have had an abortion. In essence, she claimed that her lawyer had used her as a passive vehicle, seeking her cooperation in return for assistance in regaining custody of her children.

[1] Lochner v. New York, 198 U.S. 45 (1905)

[2] 410 U.S. at 123-29.

Wollner, I Am Mary Doe, Fulton County Daily Report, Feb. 9, 1989, at 1.

Courts retain inherent power to reopen and vacate judgments that were procured by fraud. The apparently uncontradicted press reports of the Roe and Doe deceit should cause this Court, in the interest of truth or out of some concern for its integrity, to reopen the cases for a full evidentiary disclosure. When this Court has been confronted with manipulation of the sort that underlies Roe and Doe, it has responded with the censure such fraud deserves. Lord v. Veazie, 49 U.S. (8 How.) 251 (1850), was a proceeding in which the plaintiff and defendant were attempting to procure the opinion of this Court upon a question of law. Plaintiff and defendant had a common interest opposed to that of other persons, who were not parties to this suit.

The Court responded:

> [a]ny attempt, by a mere colorable dispute, to obtain the opinion of the Court upon a question of law which a party desires to know for his own interest or his own purposes, when there is no real or substantial controversy between those who appear as adverse parties to the suit, is an abuse which courts of justice have always reprehended, and treated as a punishable contempt of court.

Id. at 255.

Cleveland v. Chamberlain, 66 U.S. (1 Black) 419 (1862) involved a case that differed from Lord > in this alone that there both parties colluded to get up an agreed case for the opinion of this Court; here Chamberlain becomes the sole party in interest on both sides, makes up a record, and has a case made to suit himself, in order that he may obtain an opinion of this court, affecting the rights and interests of persons not parties to the pretended controversy.

Id. at 426. Quoting the above cited language from Lord v. Veazie, the Court summarily rejected the effort.

In Roe v. Wade, the Court's majority opinion attempted to finesse the standing problem by holding that this was one of a number of cases "capable of repetition, yet evading review." 410 U.S. at 125. Perhaps this can be accepted as an answer to the problem of "mootness" inhering in pregnancies, which, in the healthy course of things, end normally, before the process of modern litigation can be completed. However, it in no way answers the apparent fact that there never was a case or controversy between Doe and Bolton, or between Roe and Wade. Insofar as the named plaintiffs were concerned, according to their public statements, these cases were shams from the beginning and should be treated as such. But then again, if the Court wishes to legislate abortion policy and perpetuate a fraud itself, sham cases are better than legitimate ones.

B. Roe and Doe Lacked Standing.

Neither Jane Roe nor Mary Doe could credibly maintain that she was subject to any real threat of prosecution. This Court recognized in Roe that this was the situation in Texas, 410 U.S. at 151, and the Georgia statute at issue in Doe by its terms affected only the abortionist. 410 U.S. at 202. The Roe Court asserted that Roe was "thwarted by the Texas criminal abortion laws," 410 U.S. at 124, but those laws were not directed against her. Moreover, she conspicuously did not plead that it was the "medical judgment of [her]. . . attending physician," id. at 120, 164, that she should have an abortion. Norma Jean McCorvey, a.k.a. Jane Roe, simply did not present for review the question the Court purported to decide.

In these circumstances Poe v. Ullman, 367 U.S. 497 (1961), should have controlled the result. Mr. Justice Frankfurter's plurality opinion is instructive:

> This Court can have no right to pronounce an abstract opinion upon the constitutionality of a state law. Such law must be brought into actual, or threatened operation upon rights properly falling under judicial cognizance, or a remedy is not to be had here.

Id. at 504 (quoting Georgia v. Stanton, 73 U.S. (6 Wall.) 50, 75 (1867).

Justice Brennan, concurring, pointed out that > the true controversy in this case is over the opening of birth-control clinics on a large scale; it is that which the State has prevented in the past, not the use of contraceptives by isolated and individual married couples. It will be time enough to decide the constitutional questions urged upon us when, if ever, that real controversy flares up again . . . .

Poe, 367 U.S. at 509.

In his dissent in Poe, Justice Harlan set forth standards that he would apply to determine standing. Among the minimum standards Justice Harlan would have applied are that:

> [T]he controversy must be one which is in truth and fact the litigant's own, so that the clash of adversary contest which is needed to sharpen and illuminate issues is present and gives that aid on which our adjudicatory system has come to rely . . . .

Id. at 525.

Given the fact and circumstances about Roe and Doe, their anonymity, and the lack of any serious attempt to develop an "adversary contest" involving their personal situations, even Justice Harlan's less stringent standing requirement was not satisfied in the Abortion Cases.

C. The Present Case at the Court of Appeals Exemplifies the Same "Standing" Defects.

The complaints of Justices White and O'Connor in their dissents from Danforth and Thornburgh, that the abortion cases have run roughshod over accepted rules of constitutional jurisprudence, find ironic confirmation in the court of appeals decision in this case. Rather than answer Missouri's arguments on this issue by applying established principles of general application, the Eighth Circuit answered by citing authority that "the Supreme Court has visibly relaxed its traditional standing principles in deciding abortion cases." Reproductive Health Services v. Webster, 851 F.2d 1071, 1075 (8th Cir. 1988), prob. juris noted, 109 S. Ct. 780 (1989). Is abortion now such a sacred right that its proponents should be exempt from the rules that apply to First Amendment cases, questions of search and seizure, or any other constitutional dispute?

The district court in this case also made some comments about standing that bear reflection. It argued that the amorphous "class" it certified "provides a fluid membership which guarantees a case or controversy." Reproductive Health Services v. Webster, 662 F. Supp. 407, 412 (W.D. Mo. 1987) (Webster I), aff'd in part, rev'd in part, 851 F.2d 1071 (8th Cir. 1988) (Webster II), prob. juris noted, 109 S. Ct. 780 (1989). But no individual class member is ever identified, so the facts can never be developed with this judge-created "amorphous class." What the court is saying is: "Somewhere out there is a person who might have standing to challenge this statute; we'll pretend that person is a plaintiff here and let the abortionist-plaintiffs tell you about her hypothetical circumstances and represent 'her' interests." If there are really judicial standards for a case or controversy, and if courts are judges in particular cases and not a "bevy of Platonic guardians," then this constitutional adjudication of hypotheticals should be rejected outright.

II. EVEN IF STANDING WERE SHOWN, ROE AND DOE HAVE NOT FOLLOWED PROPER SUBSTANTIVE AND PROCEDURAL RULES.

A. The Abortion Cases Persistently Avoid Actual Confrontation and Any Trace of Adversarial Clash.

In the abortion cases generally, there has been a lack of investigation as to whether there is any active controversy at all between the individual plaintiffs and the defendants.

It is well to recall again the proposed standards for justiciability proposed by Justice Harlan in his Poe v. Ullman dissent:

> 1. Due regard for the fact that the source of the Court's power lies ultimately in its duty to decide, in conformity with the constitution, the particular controversies which come to it, and does not arise from some generalized power of supervision over state and national legislatures;
>
> 2. Therefore, [the Court] . . . should insist that litigants bring to the Court interests and rights which require present recognition and controversies demanding immediate resolution;
>
> 3. Also it follows that the controversy must be one which is in truth and fact the litigant's own, so that the clash of adversary contest which is needed to sharpen and illuminate issues is present and gives that aid on which our adjudicatory system has come to rely . . . .

> 4. Finally, it is required that other means of redress for the particular right claimed be unavailable . . . .

367 U.S. at 525.

This Court in Roe and Doe, and other courts in literally hundreds of subsequent cases, have failed consistently to investigate what "interests and rights" demand "immediate resolution" and even whether "the controversy . . . is in truth and fact the litigants' own . . . ." Thus, the resulting litigation does not provide the necessary "adversary contest which is needed to sharpen and illuminate issues and gives that aid on which our adjudicatory system has come to rely . . . ." Poe, 367 U.S. at 525.

Abortion cases come to the Court almost invariably presented either by anonymous plaintiffs or by abortionist physicians or abortion facilities asserting the rights of anonymous clients. The process is more like a law school class than litigation. The "teacher" thinks up hypothetical circumstances best calculated to advance a point and imputes those facts and circumstances either to an anonymous plaintiff, or if that will not serve, to other anonymous members of a pretended "class" of plaintiffs. In fact, the "class" members are not only never identified, but their interests are represented by plaintiffs who may have very different interests. For example, on what basis is it assumed that unnamed minors are better represented by an abortionist than by their own parents or even by an independent guardian ad litem? In Bellotti v. Baird, 433 U.S. 622 (1979), a pro-abortionist lawyer served as guardian ad litem for a hypothetical person. After having reduced the actual existing unborn child to so much "fetal wastage," abortion advocates then can do the opposite trick, and summon forth out of thin air the potential "persons" needed to make up their plaintiff "class."

In Roe and Doe and their progeny, there is either no attempt to present real facts and real persons, or presentation is made as statistics or anecdotes through expert opinion. When there is a trial at all, as in the present case, it is usually based on expert opinion evaluated under an improper legal standard. As the trial court noted, the abortion cases hold that "the burden of justifying" its requirements is on the state; in cases of doubt, its regulations fail. Webster I, 662 F. Supp. at 419-20. But this rule is contrary to the standard applied in all other kinds of litigation. What is the rule?

> From the beginning of civilized societies, legislators and judges have acted on various unprovable assumptions . . . .
>
> The fact that a congressional directive reflects unprovable assumptions about what is good for the people . . . is not a sufficient reason to find that statute unconstitutional . . . .
>
> Nothing in the Constitution prohibits a State from reaching such a conclusion and acting on it legislatively because there is no conclusive evidence or empirical data.

Paris Adult Theatre I v. Slaton, 413 U.S. 49, 61-63 (1973).

In the abortion cases courts ignore rules of general application in order to engage in evaluating conflicting expert testimony on the current state of the medical art, and in order to reach purported conclusions as to the constitutional validity of state statutes. The abortion cases and their legislative amendments through court actions present virtually no instances of adversarial contest. If all of the relevant medical, sociological, economic and other facts actually pertaining to any given pregnancy were actually developed, the conclusory platitudes of pro-abortion attorneys and experts so often parroted by the courts without critical review could be made subject to "the clash of adversary contest which is needed to sharpen and illuminate issues . . . and gives that aid on which our adjudicatory system has come to rely . . . ." Poe, 367 U.S. at 525.

The result of post-Roe abortion regulation reviews by this Court is that cases are decided on assumed or hypothetical facts. The facts are garnered from self-serving affidavits or expert testimony, without meaningful discovery of the facts of specific pregnancies. Often, abortion controversies in the judicial arena are decided without trial. By scrupulously avoiding the principles of adversarial contest, in these controversies that are not cases, courts are enabled to impose fraud on our judicial system and on our society.

An unfortunately typical description of this process is contained in Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists:

> [T]he Court prematurely decides serious constitutional questions on an inadequate record, in contravention of settled principles of constitutional adjudication and procedural fairness . . . there has been no trial on the merits, and appellants have had no opportunity to develop facts that might have a bearing on the constitutionality of the statute.

476 U.S. at 815 (O'Connor, J., dissenting).

The best that can be said for the type of adjudication undertaken in Thornburgh is that, in a perverse sense, it is faithful to the precedent established in Roe v. Wade and Doe v. Bolton. Those cases, and many in their wake, involved anonymous plaintiffs, who were not subjected to trial and were presented to the Court basically as hypotheticals, with the detailed factual analysis being provided by the independent research of the justices. Thus it is that in Roe v. Wade, major factual and historical "findings" were made from partisan literature — some of it written specifically to influence that very decision[3] — and without the type of critical analysis that might conceivably have been possible had there been a genuine "clash of adversary contest . . . to sharpen and illuminate issues . . . ." Poe, 367 U.S. at 525. One natural result is the Court's development of its unworkable trimester framework that has been correctly characterized by members of this Court "clearly on a collision course with itself," City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., 462 U.S. 416, 458 (1983) (O'Connor, J., dissenting). Roe as a sham case follows in its development Dred Scott v. Sandford, 61 U.S. 1, 19 How. 393 (1857), another sham case, which was most probably set up by slavery interests to constitutionalize that generation's moral disorders. Lincoln pointed out the fraudulent nature of the Dred Scott case in the Lincoln-Douglas debates.

> I have never pretended to know whether Dred Scott's owners were Democrats or Abolitionists, or Free Soilers or Border Ruffians. I have said that there is evidence about the case tending to > show that it was a made up case, for the purpose of getting that decision. I have said that that evidence was very strong in the fact that when Dred Scott was declared to be a slave, the owner of him made him free, showing that he had the case tried and the question settled for such use as could be made of that decision; he cared nothing about the property thus declared to be his by that decision.

---

[3] See Dellapenna, "Abortion and the Law: Blackmun's Distortion of the Historical Record," in Abortion and the Constitution 137 (1987) (an updated version of The History of Abortion: Technology Morality, and Law, 40 U. Pitt. L. Rev. 359 (1979)), for a full analysis of the Means-Blackmun-Mohr partisan distortion of history for the abortion constituency and its lobbied decision in Roe. See also Kader, The Law of Tortious Prenatal Death Since Roe v. Wade, 45 Mo. L. Rev. 639, 652-53 (1980) ("[T]he discussion [by the Supreme Court of the applicability of wrongful death statutes to an action based on the death of an unborn child] was perfunctory, and unfortunately largely inaccurate and should not be relied upon as the correct view of the law at the time of Roe v. Wade").

Abraham Lincoln, 3 The Collected Works of Abraham Lincoln 283 (R. Basler ed. 1953) (Sixth Debate with Stephen A. Douglas at Quincy, Illinois, October 13, 1858). See also D. Fehrenbacker, The Dred Scott Case, Its Significance in American Law and Politics 575 (1978), for further analysis of the hidden agenda of those who manipulated the Dred Scott case to the Court and on the Court. For this hidden agenda factor in Roe, see B. Woodward, The Brethren: Inside the Supreme Court (1979), and recent memos reported by Bob Woodward of The Washington Post.[4] [4] Bob Woodward of the Washington Post has unearthed memos that passed among Justices William O. Douglas, Harry Blackmun, Potter Stewart, and Thurgood Marshall during the Supreme Court's, er, consideration of the famous case of Roe v. Wade. It transpires that Blackmun admitted that his "guidelines" for the state regulation of abortion were "arbitrary." Marshall gently objected that those guidelines might not serve the "interests" of poor women as well as heart could wish. And Stewart worried that Blackmun's approach was a little too "legislative." Indeed. The whole exchange shows vividly that genuine constitutional issues hardly troubled the majority in Roe; they carried on like a bunch of backroom pols bent on pleasing a pet constituency.

---

This Week, Nat'l Rev., Feb. 24 1989, at 11. Prominent commentators have reached a similar conclusion.

Judge Richard Posner, writing in The Uncertain Protection of Privacy by the Supreme Court, 1979 Sup. Ct. Rev. 173, 199, stated that "Wade raise[s] . . . the question whether we have a written Constitution, with the limitations thereby implied on the creation

(Continued following page)

B. The Abortion Decisions Are Persistently Overbroad.

As early as Roe v. Wade, the dissenting justices pointed out how the Court leapt to conclusions that of new constitutional rights, or whether the Constitution is no more than a grant of discretion to the Supreme Court to mold public policy in accordance with the Justices' own personal and shifting preference."

---

(Continued from preceding page)

Robert H. Bork, testifying before a Senate subcommittee, said that "I am convinced, as I think almost all constitutional scholars are, that Roe v. Wade is an unconstitutional decision, a serious and wholly unjustifiable judicial usurpation of state legislative authority.... The trouble is that nobody believes the Constitution allows, much less demands, the decision in Roe v. Wade . . ." The Human Life Bill: Hearings on S.158 Before the Subcomm. on Separation of Powers of the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary, 97th Cong., 1st Sess. 14, 16 (1982).

John Hart Ely, in The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, 82 Yale L.J. 920 (1973), said that Roe "is not constitutional law and gives almost no sense of an obligation to try to be." Further, Ely noted that the decision "lacks even colorable support in the constitutional text, history, or any other appropriate source of constitutional doctrine." Ely also observed that while Roe and Lochner are twins, they are not identical, but in regard to their differences, "Roe may turn out to be the more dangerous precedent."

Archibald Cox, in The Role of the Supreme Court in American Government 113-14 (1976), states: "The failure to confront the issue in principled terms leaves the opinion to read like a set of hospital rules and regulations.... Neither historian, nor layman, nor lawyer will be persuaded that all the prescriptions of Justice Blackmun are part of the Constitution."

Alexander Bickel, in The Morality of Consent 28 (1975), on the question why the Court usurped that legislative function reserved to the states, says "[o]ne is left to ask why. The Court never said. It refused the discipline to which its function is properly subject."

Richard Epstein, in Substantive Due Process by Any Other Name: The Abortion Cases, 1973 Sup. Ct. Rev. 159, 175-76, notes that no principled ground of decision existed for Roe and that "only principled grounds for decision stand between it and the charge of arbitrary decision based upon its naked political preferences."

Even defenders of Roe hedged themselves. See, e.g., Tribe, Toward a Model of Roles in the Due Process of Life and Law, 87 Harv. L. Rev. 1, 7 (1973), "One of the most curious things about Roe is that behind its own verbal smokescreen, the substantive judgment on which it rests is nowhere to be found."

were not remotely necessary to decide the immediate cases before it. Once again, this flows almost inevitably from the Court's primary failure to analyze the personal situations of the individual plaintiffs, to say nothing of those of the anonymous class members purportedly represented by those individual plaintiffs.

To the knowledge of this amicus, no satisfactory answer has ever been given, or even attempted, to Justice Rehnquist's observation in Roe v. Wade that:

> In deciding such a hypothetical lawsuit, the Court departs from the longstanding admonition that it should never 'formulate a rule of constitutional law broader than is required by the purpose of precise facts to which it is to be applied.'

410 U.S. at 172 (quoting Liverpool, New York & Philadelphia S. S. Co. v. Commissioners of Emigration, 113 U.S. 33, 39 (1885)) (additional citation omitted). Of course, the fact that these flaws were recognized from the beginning makes them no less weighty today than they were at the time:

> If an argument that a constitutional decision is erroneous must be novel in order to justify overruling that precedent, the Court's decisions in Lochner v. New York, 198 U.S. 45 (1905), and Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537 (1896), would remain the law, for the doctrines announced in those decisions were nowhere more eloquently or incisively criticized than in the dissenting opinions of Justice Holmes (in Lochner) and Harlan (in both cases). That the flaws in an opinion were evident at the time it was handed down is hardly a reason for adhering to it.

Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 788 (White, J., dissenting).

The present case indicates that the propensity of some courts in abortion cases to go far overboard in their pronouncements is as strong as ever. Missouri's declaration that human life begins at conception was qualified on its application so as to have no effect on abortionists — at least none until Roe v. Wade is reversed. Nevertheless the Eighth Circuit invalidated it — though the plaintiffs could show no effect on them other than that they didn't like it. Webster II, 851 F.2d at 1075-77. With respect to remedy, too, this Court should return to its settled principles.

III. THE ABORTION CASES DECIDED BY THE COURT, FROM ROE v. WADE ON, SHOULD BE REVERSED AND THE LEGISLATIVE BRANCHES ALLOWED TO FULFILL THEIR RESPONSIBILITIES.

Decisions that fail to decide a "case or controversy" are not simply flawed, but void. The Constitution itself limits the federal judicial power to "cases and controversies." U.S. Const. art. III, § 2.

Later decisions built upon the quicksand of "set up" disputes cannot stand. As Justice O'Connor noted, "the Court is not suited to the expansive role it has claimed for itself in the series of cases that began with Roe v. Wade. . . ." Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 814-15 (O'Connor, J., dissenting). A general reversal of the spurious jurisprudence that commenced with Roe v. Wade is the best step at this time out of the legal quagmire of the abortion cases. The Roe v. Wade framework itself is medically discredited, legally unworkable and politically explosive.

Merely scaling back the abortion cases is not possible. The procedural flaws are such that there is no ground on which to fall back. Decisions such as Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980), suggest that an "unduly burdensome" requirement be applied before any statute will be subject to "strict scrutiny." Doubtless this is the direction in which "post-reversal of Roe" jurisprudence may turn. However, it is impossible to begin to delineate the parameters of such cases until they have reached the Court with proper plaintiffs, a proper adversarial proceeding and a proper record, interpreting statutes developed by Congress and state legislatures that do not labor under the yoke this Court has placed upon them these past sixteen years.

In an imperfect world, legislative bodies may not decide policy correctly. However, in their fumbling effort to address social controversy, because they are more readily responsive to human experience they are also more likely eventually to ameliorate evils than to exacerbate them. This is because legislative temporizing and compromising is seen as such. Whereas when courts legislate by pronouncements on social issues, an unjustified and uncalled for finality attaches, along with a base alloy of "high purpose." Undue deference accompanies this judicial misbehaviour, thus increasing the social destructiveness of the judiciary's actions.

Thus the legislatively enacted Missouri Compromise of 1820 and the Compromise of 1850, while not pure, in that the evil of slavery continued its existence, by their very temporalness, recognized a moral order, the reality of human nature, and a hopeful possibility of future change. Not so the Supreme Court's intervention in the moral and social confrontation over slavery in Dred Scott. The Court's decision actually precipitated the Civil War by effectively destroying legislative efforts to build a consensus on slavery. A modest approach of legislative regulation that continued to keep slavery out of the new territories and continued a national recognition of slavery as an evil might have ultimately emancipated the slaves in conditions more conducive to full integration into national life. After all, it was only in 1863 that serfdom was abolished in Russia, and only in 1885 that slavery, after being regulated to extinction, was abolished in Brazil.

The social cataclysm of civil war and the continuing scars our society still suffers from that bloodletting, the onset of Jim Crow and a continuing racism, might have been avoided had not the Supreme Court usurped the legislative power and ideologized the moral and social confrontation of that day. Likewise, when the Supreme Court imbedded "separate but equal" in the Constitution, it froze segregation more solidly into American law, further worsening the human condition of injustice in our country.

Similarly, with Roe and Doe the Court enacted a new social theory based on a continued development of "Mr. Herbert Spencer's Social Statics." Lochner v. New York, 198 U.S. at 45 (Holmes, J., dissenting). This Court in Roe, as with Dred Scott, and Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537 (1896), is again setting the stage for social upheaval and blood. It is not yet too late for a wiser and more prudent policy to be undertaken.

After the fall of the abortion cases, a predictably wide range of new legislative responses will emerge. Advocates on both sides of the abortion controversy recognize that a handful of states have, by legislative actions, endorsed abortion on demand as this Court ordered nationwide in Roe. A similarly-sized handful of states have the legislative consensus necessary immediately to outlaw most abortions. The great majority of states will experience the kind of political ferment that will allow their respective legislatures to grapple with the diverse interests involved.

A more prudent role for the federal courts would be to give breathing room for the development of consensus to occur. But for this Court to continue dishonestly denying the value of unborn life by ukase at this time is for the United States Supreme Court to again repeat the moral and political blunders that have so marred the Court when it buttressed slavery, spawned Jim Crow, opposed social welfare legislation, and fought unions. Lochner must be buried again.

Scientific evidence has never been clearer that human life begins at conception. Such evidence should lead legislatures, and eventually this Court, informed by the spirit of the Declaration of Independence, to recognize the constitutional personhood of the unborn. But for now, at a minimum, the flat earth nonsense of Roe must be renounced.

> We need not resolve the difficult question of when life begins. When those trained in the respective disciplines of medicine, philosophy, and theology are unable to arrive at any consensus, the judiciary, at this point in the development of man's knowledge, is not in a position to speculate as to the answer.

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 159.[5]

---

[5] Compare the difficulty of the United States Supreme Court with the unborn in Roe, 410 U.S. at 159, "We need not resolve the difficult question of when life begins," to its difficulty with slaves in Dred Scott, 19 How. at 407, who according to them were > no[t] intended to be included in the general words used in that memorable instrument. It is difficult at this day to realize the state of public opinion in relation to that unfortunate race, which prevailed in the civilized and enlightened portions of the world at the time of the Declaration of Independence . . . .

To the informed heart and mind, neither question is difficult in 1857, 1973 or today. The facts of humanness and the condition of humanity may place us in quandaries, but feigning obtuseness or lying can never be the basis for judicious action.

The highest state court in New York in 1972 had no such "intellectual" problem over when an individual life began. Byrn v. New York City Health & Hospital Corp., 31 N.Y.2d 194, 286 N.E.2d 887, 335 N.Y.S.2d 390 (1972), appeal dismissed, 410 U.S. 949 (1973). Byrn was actually cited in Roe, when the Court legislated abortion on demand. The New York court at least admitted the obvious, that the human fetus (Latin for "young") is human and alive.

And now to uphold the great deceit of Roe and Doe, stare decisis will be trotted out by those who usually care nothing for tradition. Mr. Justice Brandeis has said well why the stare decisis doctrine is not proper to deter the Court from doing now what remains still the legally and morally correct course.

> The doctrine of res judicata demands that a decision made by the highest court, whether it be a determination of a fact or a declaration of a rule of law, shall be accepted as a final disposition of the particular controversy, even if confessedly wrong. But the decision of the Court, if, in essence, merely the determination of a fact, is not entitled, in later controversies between other parties, to that sanction which, under the policy of stare decisis, is accorded to the decision of a proposition purely of law. For not only may the decision of the fact have been rendered upon an inadequate presentation of then existing conditions, but the conditions may have changed meanwhile. Moreover, the judgement of the Court in the earlier decision may have been influenced by prevailing views as to economic or social policy which have since been abandoned.

Burnet v. Coronado Oil & Gas Co., 285 U.S. 393, 412 (1932) (Brandeis J., dissenting) (citations omitted) (emphasis added). See also Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 786-89 (White, J., dissenting) (citing the overruling of Plessy and other cases and stating that "history has been far kinder to those who departed from precedent than to those who would have blindly followed the rule of stare decisis").

Although the accumulated knowledge of when life begins was ignored in 1973, there have been subsequent breakthroughs in publications as early as 1980 that might be more easily understood now in 1989 by some judges and their researchers.

> WHEN DID YOU START GROWING? You started growing from just two cells about nine months before you were born. One cell, a sperm cell, came from your father. Another cell, an egg cell, came from your mother. The two cells joined together inside the mother's body. They formed a special new cell called a fertilized egg. This cell was the start of a whole human being — you.

1 Charlie Brown's 'Cyclopedia, Super Questions and Answers and Amazing Facts, Featuring Your Body 3 (1980).

If Roe should remain on stare decisis, so should Dred Scott and Plessy, and Swift was correct.

> It is a maxim among lawyers that whatever hath been legally done before may legally be done again, and therefore, the lawyers take special care to record all the decisions formerly made against common justice and the general reason of mankind. These, under the name of precedents, they produce as authorities, to justify the most iniquitous opinions; and the judges never fail of decreeing accordingly.

J. Swift, Gulliver's Travels 237 (1962).

The anomaly of having a right to override your mother's decision to deny you blood if she is a Jehovah's Witness, Raleigh Fitkin-Paul Morgan Memorial Hospital v. Anderson, 42 N.J. 421, 201 A.2d 537 (1964), cert. denied, 377 U.S. 985 (1964), or the right to demand to be delivered in a manner conducive to being born alive, In re John or Mary Doe, A Thirty-Nine Week Old Unborn Child, 247 Ga. 86, 274 S.E.2d 457 (1981); In re A.C., 533 A.2d 611 (D.C. 1987), vacated and reh'g en banc granted, 539 A.2d 203 (D.C. 1988), but being unable to contradict her decision to kill you, if she is a secularist, only demonstrates whose religion is established, Torcaso v. Watkins, 367 U.S. 488 (1961), and what the Roe and Doe decisions are about.

If we are not truly created equal and endowed by our Creator with the right to life, as the Declaration of Independence proclaims, where can we stand when the power of the State to define classes subject to death warrants turns on us? The right to life of non-naturalized persons is presently recognized by this Court. But see Korematsu v. United States, 323 U.S. 214 (1944).

There is no rightful defense of the abortion cases. The Roe and Doe decisions are without redeeming social value.

CONCLUSION

Although this Court has grown to accept fawning over all its errors, it is hoped some advocate will address directly in oral argument the fundamental dishonesty of the abortion cases. Amicus would, by leave, advocate this obvious truth before you even though those arguments would be before those who, because of personal pride and past complicity in the present barbarism, would understandably prefer that the norms of polite deceit be continued. How much better that the lies and false scholarship of Roe and Doe not be addressed directly, for only with the cover of sophistry can the immorality and foolishness of the abortion cases remain hidden. Taking part in the lie has thus far remained a rule of argumentation before the United States Supreme Court on abortion.

In 1859, after the Supreme Court had decided Dred Scott and before Fort Sumter, Abraham Lincoln spoke of those entrenched establishment rulers who were busy > blowing out the moral lights before us; teaching that the negro is no longer a man but a brute; that the Declaration has nothing to do with him; that he ranks with the crocodile and the reptile; that man, with body and soul, is a matter of dollars and cents.

A. Lincoln, 3 The Collected Works of Abraham Lincoln 425 (R. Basler ed. 1953). Lincoln noted that only by dismantling the clear meaning of the Declaration of Independence, "that all men are created equal and endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," could the Slave Power "repress all tendencies to ultimate emancipation." Id. 424.

Now, the Abortion Power seeks to blow out the moral lights before us, as it, too, disdainfully discards the Declaration of Independence's bold and prophetic witness to the worth and dignity of each individual human being — slave or unborn.

> In their enlightened belief, nothing stamped with the Divine image and likeness was sent into the world to be trodden on, and degraded, and imbruted by its fellows. They grasped not only the whole race of man then living, but they reached forward and seized upon the farthest posterity. They erected a beacon to guide their children and their children's children and the countless myriads who should inhabit the earth and other ages.

A. Lincoln, 2 Collected Works of Abraham Lincoln 546 (R. Basler ed. 1953).

This time let us not repeat Dred Scott v. Sandford, but in humility recognize the truth of the Child or at least return this great defining issue of America to the normal political process, in hope that we will respond properly and dutifully to the moral lights that have been revealed to us.

Roe v. Wade, Doe v. Bolton, and their spawn must be overruled.

Respectfully submitted,

THOMAS PATRICK MONAGHAN
Free Speech Advocates
New Hope, Kentucky 40052
(502) 549-5454
Attorney for Amicus Curiae

MOTION

MOTION FILED
FEB 23 1989

No. 88-605

IN THE
SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES
OCTOBER TERM 1988

WILLIAM WEBSTER, ATTORNEY GENERAL
OF THE STATE OF MISSOURI

APPELLANT

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES

APPELLEE

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT
OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

MOTION TO ALLOW COUNSEL TO REPRESENT CHILDREN UNBORN AND BORN ALIVE

ALAN ERNEST
P.O. BOX 2471
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20013
(703) 437-1178

COUNSEL FOR MOVANT

CONTENTS

Interest of Counsel.....1

Summary of Argument.....1

Argument.....2

THE UNBORN HAVE A CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT TO BE ESPECIALLY REPRESENTED BY COUNSEL TO PROVE THEIR LIVES ARE PROTECTED BY THE U.S. CONSTITUTION...2

1.

THIS COURT EFFECTED AND MAINTAINS THE ROE v. WADE KILLINGS BY UNCONSTITUTIONALLY REFUSING TO ALLOW COUNSEL TO REPRESENT THE UNBORN AND DEFEND THEIR RIGHT TO LIFE UNDER THE U.S. CONSTITUTION.....2

2.

THIS COURT EFFECTED THE ROE v. WADE KILLINGS BY UNCONSTITUTIONALLY REFUSING TO ALLOW PRIOR NOTICE OF THE CONSTITUTIONAL STANDARDS, THE BURDENS, OR THE EVIDENCE WHICH IT USED TO INFER THAT THE LIVES OF THE UNBORN ARE NOT PROTECTED BY THE U.S. CONSTITUTION...5

3.

THIS COURT EFFECTED THE ROE v. WADE KILLINGS BY UNCONSTITUTIONALLY USING A SECRET EVIDENTIARY PROCESS TO FIND EVIDENCE TO INFER THAT THE LIVES OF THE UNBORN ARE NOT PROTECTED BY THE U.S. CONSTITUTION.....9

4.
THIS COURT EFFECTED AND MAINTAINS THE ROE v. WADE KILLINGS BY UNCONSTITUTIONALLY REFUSING TO ALLOW ITS EVIDENCE, WHICH IT USED TO INFER THAT THE LIVES OF THE UNBORN ARE NOT PROTECTED BY THE U.S. CONSTITUTION, TO BE CONFRONTED AND CROSS-EXAMINED....11

5.
THIS COURT EFFECTED AND MAINTAINS THE ROE v. WADE KILLINGS BY UNCONSTITUTIONALLY REFUSING TO ALLOW EVIDENCE TO BE PRESENTED ON BEHALF OF THE UNBORN TO ESTABLISH THEIR RIGHT TO LIFE UNDER THE U.S. CONSTITUTION.....13

Issues Raised by Counsel for the Unborn, Not Raised by the Parties.....17

Conclusion.....18

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases:

Dred Scott v. Sanford, 19 How. 393.....6

Goldberg v. Kelly, 397 U.S. 254.....4

Imbler v. Pachtman, 424 U.S. 409 5

In Re Gault, 387 U.S. 1.....4

United States v. Altstoetter, 3-Trials of War Criminals Before the Nuernberg Military Tribunals (1951).....5,16-17

Books:

4 Collected Works of Abraham Lincoln (Basler ed. 1953).....6

Briefs Filed In This Court:

Amicus Curiae Brief by the Legal Defense Fund for Unborn Children, filed in this case.....17

Petition for Rehearing, Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973).....2,8,10,12,15

U.S. Constitution:

Sixth Amendment-"Assistance of Counsel"...4

Fifth Amendment-"Due Process" 4

MOTION TO ALLOW COUNSEL TO REPRESENT CHILDREN UNBORN AND BORN ALIVE

The Court is moved to allow Alan Ernest to represent the victims being killed by Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, as counsel or guardian ad litem, for the purpose of defending their right to life under the U.S. Constitution.

INTEREST OF COUNSEL

Alan Ernest is a lawyer in the District of Columbia and a member of the bar of this Court. His purpose is to prove that the guarantee of life to "any person," made in the U.S. Constitution, does include the unborn.

This is effectively a motion to allow retained counsel since there will be no expense to this Court, or to the taxpayers.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The unborn have a constitutional right to be especially represented by counsel to prove that their lives are specifically guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution.

Argument

THE UNBORN HAVE A CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT TO BE ESPECIALLY REPRESENTED BY COUNSEL TO PROVE THEIR LIVES ARE PROTECTED BY THE U.S. CONSTITUTION.

1.

THIS COURT EFFECTED AND MAINTAINED THE ROE v. WADE KILLINGS BY UNCONSTITUTIONALLY REFUSING TO ALLOW COUNSEL TO REPRESENT THE UNBORN AND DEFEND THEIR RIGHT TO LIFE UNDER THE U.S. CONSTITUTION.

Counsel did not especially represent the unborn in the U.S. District Court, or at any stage in Roe v. Wade. An original party objected that the unborn should be represented by counsel in this Court:

> (T)he Court should have every benefit of a complete record and the representation of a guardian ad litem for that fetal entity and for its natural right to develop to birth.[1]

But this Court refused to allow counsel to represent the unborn and defend their right to life under the U.S. Constitution. Thus the killings commenced.

And the Supreme Court has maintained the killings by steadfastly refusing to

---

1. Petition for Rehearing 5, Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973), denied 410 U.S. 959 (1973).

allow counsel to represent the unborn, and defend their right to life under the U.S. Constitution.[2]

---

2. The Court has refused to allow counsel for the unborn in all its abortion cases. Some are: Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379, motion to allow counsel for the unborn denied 437 U.S. 902; Anders v. Floyd, 440 U.S. 445, motion to allow counsel for the unborn denied 439 U.S. 890; Bellotti v. Baird, 443 U.S. 622, motion to allow counsel for the unborn denied 439 U.S. 1065; Ashcroft v. Freiman, affirmed 440 U.S. 941, motion to allow counsel for the unborn denied, 440 U.S. 941; United States v. Zbaraz, 448 U.S. 358, motion to allow counsel for the unborn denied 444 U.S. 1030; Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297, motion to allow counsel for the unborn denied 445 U.S. 941; H.L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398, motion to allow counsel for the unborn denied 445 U.S. 959; Simopoulos v. Virginia, 462 U.S. 506, motion to allow counsel for the unborn denied 458 U.S. 1104; Planned Parenthood of Kansas City v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476, motion to allow counsel for the unborn denied 458 U.S. 1104; Akron Center for Reproductive Health v. Akron, 462 U.S. 416, motion to allow counsel for the unborn denied 458 U.S. 1104; Diamond v. Charles, 90 L Ed 2d 48 (1986), motion to allow counsel for the unborn denied 87 L Ed 2d 704; Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians, 90 L Ed 2d 779 (1986), motion to allow counsel for the unborn denied 87 L Ed 2d 702; Hartigan v. Zbaraz, 98 L Ed 2d (1988), motion to allow counsel to for the unborn denied 93 L Ed 2d 697.

The unborn have a constitutional right to be represented by counsel in this case to defend their right to life under the U.S. Constitution.[3] Judges who willfully

---

3. Even in civil proceedings, where crucial deprivations are threatened, such as loss of welfare, due process guarantees (1) prior notice of the factual and legal bases; (2) the right to be represented by counsel; (3) the right to confront and cross-examine adverse evidence; (4) the right to present evidence. Goldberg v. Kelly, 397 U.S. 254, 268-271 (1970). See also, In Re Gault, 387 U.S. 1 (1967).

Could it be possible that procedures, which could not be used to deprive a mother of welfare, could be used to exclude her from the protection of the U.S.Constitution so that she could be killed with impunity from criminal laws? This is preposterous.

The Constitution would not permit any court to condemn even one single Jew to death in a criminal case, but deny any of these procedural rights. Then neither can it permit any court to condemn all Jews in the United States to death, but deny any of these procedural rights, by calling it a civil proceeding, and decreeing the lives of all Jews are not protected by the U.S. Constitution, and it is "liberty" to kill all Jews with impunity from criminal laws.

Any victim is entitled to all these procedural protections before any court can decree that the victim's life is not protected by the Constitution, and the victim can be killed with impunity from criminal statutes. The rule for one is the rule for all; these are the sacred truth-seeking procedures which protect the lives of all Americans.

deny this right are guilty of crime.[4] This denial makes Roe v. Wade void.

2.

THIS COURT EFFECTED THE ROE v. WADE KILLINGS BY UNCONSTITUTIONALLY REFUSING TO ALLOW PRIOR NOTICE OF THE CONSTITUTIONAL STANDARDS, THE BURDENS OF PROOF, OR THE EVIDENCE WHICH IT USED TO INFER THAT THAT THE LIVES OF THE UNBORN ARE NOT PROTECTED BY THE U.S. CONSTITUTION.

The District Court in Roe v. Wade did not even look to see if the lives of the unborn were protected by the Constitution. This question was argued for the first time after the case reached this Court. Since this Court had never previously excluded anyone from the protection of the U.S. Constitution so they could be killed with impunity from criminal statutes, the parties had no prior notice of the factual and legal bases for such an exclusion.

Moreover in the aftermath of Dred Scott v. Sanford, legitimate public

---

4. "Even judges ... could be punished criminally for willful deprivations of constitutional rights." Imbler v. Pachtman, 424 U.S. 409 (1976).

expectation rested on the assurance that this Court would never again attempt another exception to the universal terms "any person."[5]

---

5. This Court's decision in Dred Scott v. Sanford appears to be the only precedent in American history in which this Court has implied an exception to the universal terms "any person" in the Fifth or Fourteenth Amendments. The Court there ruled that the universal words "any person" did not include Negroes, there was a constitutional right to own a slave, and Congress could not prohibit slavery in the free territories. This decision triggered a civil war. Candidate Abraham Lincoln vowed he would not obey Dred Scott. Opponents said their states would withdraw from the Union rather than be deprived of their assumed constitutional right to own slaves and take them to the free territories. 4 Collected Works of Abraham Lincoln 267 (1953). But President Abraham Lincoln responded that if he were bound by Dred Scott, "the people will have ceased to be their own rulers." Id., at 268. Thus the war commenced.

A purpose of the Fourteenth Amendment was to overrule Dred Scott, and place it beyond the power of judges to ever again produce convulsions by implying an exception the universal words "any person." For over a century legitimate public expectation rested on the assurance that this Court would never again attempt an exception to the universal terms "any person."

But without any prior notice, this Court once again, in the precise manner of Dred Scott, attempted to imply an exception to the universal words "any person." In Roe v. Wade, this Court thus combined both total surprise and violent defiance of the long standing legitimate public expectation that never again would this Court violate the universal words "any person."

In particular, this Court gave the parties in Roe v. Wade no prior notice of the constitutional standards, the burdens of proof, or the evidence, which the Court used to infer that the universal words "any person," as used in the Fourteenth Amendment, did not include the unborn.

The first time the parties had notice was when Roe v. Wade was published, and the victims were already condemned to death. An original party objected that it lacked the prior notice needed to defend the unborn:

> (N)ot only did the Court set a new constitutional standard, but at the same moment the Court applied the standard without giving the Appellees notice or opportunity to present evidence with respect to the point in gestation at which such standards, if they be correct as a matter of law in the first place, should be applied. "Viability", "meaningful life" or existence, "fetal life": all presumably have medical meaning which should be subject to medical testimony before a decision of constitutional import becomes solidified in concrete. These concepts are not even necessarily the appropriate ones.[6]

But this Court refused to allow the original parties to have prior notice. Thus the killings commenced.

And this Court has maintained the killings despite repeated objections that the unborn had no prior notice in Roe v. Wade of the factual and legal basis needed to defend the unborn's right to life under the U.S. Constitution.[7]

---

6. Petition for Rehearing 6, Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973), denied 410 U.S. 959 (1973). (emphasis added).

7. See cases in note 2, supra.

The unborn have a constitutional right to prior notice of all the factual and legal bases before they can be excluded from the protection of the Constitution so they can be killed with impunity from criminal statutes.[8] Judges who willfully deny this right are guilty of crime.[9] This denial makes Roe v. Wade void.

3.

THIS COURT EFFECTED THE ROE v. WADE KILLINGS BY UNCONSTITUTIONALLY USING A SECRET EVIDENTIARY PROCESS TO FIND EVIDENCE TO INFER THAT THE LIVES OF THE UNBORN ARE NOT PROTECTED BY THE U.S. CONSTITUTION.

This Court used some secret evidentiary process, not open to the parties, to find evidence to infer that the lives of the unborn were not protected by the U.S. Constitution. The Court conducted these evidentiary proceedings in its back rooms; the parties were not allowed to be present; no public record was made of these proceedings. The purpose of these

---

8. See note 3, supra.

9. See note 4, supra.

proceedings was to find evidence to infer that the lives of the unborn were not protected by the U.S. Constitution. An original party objected to these secret judicial proceedings:

> The Court has taken judicial notice of innumerable facts and factors, some which are expressly referred to in the Court's decision and some which are unknown to the parties but which apparently were extricated from various sources by the Court's diligent research, which facts nevertheless should be subject to refutation and counter-evidence since they form the foundation for the Court's opinion ... of constitutional stages of fetal growth.[10]

But the Court permitted the killings to commence despite this objection to its secret evidentiary proceedings.

And this Court has maintained the killings despite repeated objections that it used secret evidentiary proceeding in Roe v. Wade.[11]

---

10. Petition for Rehearing 4, Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973), denied 410 U.S. 959 (1973).

11. See cases in note 2, supra.

The unborn have a constitutional right not to be excluded from the protection of the U.S. Constitution by secret evidentiary proceedings.[12] Judges who willfully deny this right are guilty of crime.[13] This denial makes Roe v. Wade void.

4.

THIS COURT EFFECTED AND MAINTAINED THE ROE v. WADE KILLINGS BY UNCONSTITUTIONALLY REFUSING TO ALLOW ITS EVIDENCE, WHICH IT USED TO INFER THAT THE LIVES OF THE UNBORN ARE NOT PROTECTED BY THE U.S. CONSTITUTION, TO BE CONFRONTED AND CROSS-EXAMINED.

Since the Court used a secret process, the original parties had not seen all the evidence which the Court used to infer that the lives of the unborn are not protected by the U.S. Constitution. An original party asked permission to cross-examine the evidence which the Court used to infer that the lives of the unborn were not protected by the U.S. Constitution:

> The Court has taken judicial notice of innumerable facts and factors, some

---

12. See note 3, supra.

13. See note 4, supra.

> which are expressly referred to in the Court's decision and some which are unknown to the parties but which apparently were extricated from various sources by the Court's diligent research, which facts nevertheless should be subject to refutation and counter-evidence since they form the foundation of the Court's opinion .... of constitutional stages of fetal growth.[14]

But the Supreme Court refused to allow the original parties to cross-examine its evidence in Roe v. Wade, which it used to infer that the lives of the unborn were not protected by the U.S. Constitution. Thus the killings commenced.

And this Court has maintained the killings by steadfastly refusing to allow its evidence, which it used to infer that the lives of the unborn were not protected by the U.S. Constitution, to be confronted and cross-examined.[15]

---

14. Petition for Rehearing 4, Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973), denied 410 U.S. 959 (1973) (emphasis added).

15. See cases in note 2, supra.

The unborn have a constitutional right to confront and cross-examine the evidence which this Court used to infer that their lives are not protected by the U.S. Constitution.[16] Judges who willfully deny this right are guilty of crime.[17] This denial makes Roe v. Wade void.

5.

THIS COURT EFFECTED AND MAINTAINED THE ROE v. WADE KILLINGS BY UNCONSTITUTIONALLY REFUSING TO ALLOW EVIDENCE TO BE PRESENTED ON BEHALF OF THE UNBORN TO ESTABLISH THEIR RIGHT TO LIFE UNDER THE U.S. CONSTITUTION.

In Roe v. Wade, the Court invented new constitutional standards on the protection of life by the U.S. Constitution, which the parties did not see until after Roe v. Wade was decided. The parties never had opportunity to present evidence under these new standards. An original party asked permission to present evidence under the new constitutional standards, which it had not seen before, to show that the lives of 16. See note 3, supra.

---

17. See note 4, supra.

the unborn are protected by the Constitution:

> We are dealing here with a procedure long considered outlawed and which has suddenly become become legal.
> ....
> What the Court has done is to compel the State to condone the killings of prenatal infants and even to encourage it by loose controls.
> ....
> The interest in protecting the concept of the sacredness of human life and the natural rights which follow its emergence, underlies the interest in protecting fetal life and is the root of the State's expressed desire to curb killing.
> ....
> The Court has selected a point in time at which states may protect fetal life, without any record of facts upon which to base the conclusion that only at "viability," as that term is defined by the Court, do the people of a state have authority to demand caution before a prenatal infant is destroyed.
> ....
> Appellees have had no opportunity to show by evidence in a traditional judicial trial setting at what gestational stage the separate life of the fetus is "meaningful" medically; in addition, the Court overlooked the significance of Georgia's legal recognition of meaningful human life as found in case law and statute.
> ....
> With no opportunity for Appellees to demonstrate the factual basis, in terms of current medical science, that its interest attaches at a particular point in the natural development of a human fetus, the Court has seized upon the convenient point of "viability" and crystallized constitutional command which bars State action.

....

In the medical concept of "life," with its current body of technological knowledge, including such advances as fetal electrocardiography and fetal electroencephalography, legal "life" should not be cemented at an event in a judicial conclusion which does not have the benefit of medical evidence.

....

At any rate, Appellees should have an opportunity to present evidence and testimony to support the State's claim of medically and scientifically sound interest in requiring a cautious approach to the extinguishment of fetal life.[18]

But the Court refused to allow the original parties to present evidence to show that the lives of the unborn were protected by the U.S. Constitution. Thus the killings commenced.

And this Court has maintained the killings by steadfastly refusing to allow evidence to be presented on behalf of the

---

18. Petition for Rehearing 3,4,5,6,8, Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973), denied 410 U.S. 959 (1973).

unborn to prove that their lives are protected by the Constitution.[19]

The unborn have a constitutional right to present evidence in this case to prove that their lives are protected by the U.S. Constitution.[20] Judges who willfully deny this right are guilty of crime.[21] This denial makes Roe v. Wade void.

The procedures used by the Court to effect and maintain the Roe v. Wade killings are essentially the same procedures cited by the Nuremberg Court as part of the evidence to convict the Nazi judges of complicity in extermination and murder.[22]

---

19. See cases in note 2, supra.

20. See note 3, supra.

21. See note 4, supra.

22. "In many instances they were denied the right to introduce evidence, to be confronted by witnesses against them.... They were ... denied the right of counsel of their own choice....(T)he accused learned only a few moments before trial of the nature of the alleged crime for which he was to be tried. The entire proceedings from beginning to end were secret and no

II.
ISSUES RAISED BY COUNSEL NOT RAISED BY THE PARTIES

Although a party has asked this Court to overrule Roe v. Wade, it did not raise the issue that the lives of the unborn are protected by the U.S. Constitution.

The unborn have a right to be especially represented by counsel, to present evidence and arguments not presented by the parties, to show that the universal and unalienable guarantee of life to "any person," made in the U.S. Constitution, does include the unborn.[23] public record was allowed to be made of them." United States v. Altstoetter, 3 Trials of War Criminals Before the Nuernberg Military Tribunals 1046-1047 (1951).

---

"Such a mock trial is not a judicial proceeding but a murder." Id., at 1164.

"The dagger of the assassin was concealed beneath the robe of the jurist." Id. at 985.

23. This evidence and arguments are presented in the amicus curiae brief by the Legal Defense For Unborn Children, and incorporated herein by reference.

CONCLUSION

The photograph on the next page shows a child killed by a second stage abortion under Roe v. Wade. These children are entitled by law to have assistance of counsel to prove that the universal and unalienable guarantee of life to "any person," made by the U.S. Constitution, includes the unborn.

When judges use the above procedures to defy the unalienable guarantee of life to "any person" in order to exclude millions of victims from the protection of the U.S. Constitution, so they can be killed with impunity from criminal statutes, it can not be pretended it is any longer the government of the United States, or any government of Constitution and laws. "Such a mock trial is not a judicial proceeding but a murder."

Alan Ernest
Counsel for Movant

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

MOTION FILED
FEB 23 1989

(33)

No. 88-605

IN THE
SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES
OCTOBER TERM 1988

WILLIAM WEBSTER, ET AL

APPELLANTS

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, ET AL

APPELLEES

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE BRIEF AMICUS CURIAE WITH BRIEF BY LEGAL DEFENSE FOR UNBORN CHILDREN

ALAN ERNEST
P.O. BOX 2471
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20013
(703) 437-1178

Counsel

74

FEB 23 1983

MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE

Interest of Amicus

The brief, which does not support either party, defends the constitutional right to life of the unborn, which the parties have not done.

Argument

The amicus proves that the the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments' guarantee of life to "any person" does include the unborn. Thus this Court must not only overrule Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, it must rule that the States have a duty to protect unborn life. The parties have not raised this issue; it disposes of all issues in this case.

The universal guarantee of life to "any person" is the most important right in the Constitution, and the lives of millions of children depend on their being permitted to present all relevant evidence to prove their unalienable right to life.

Alan Ernest, Counsel

Contents

Interest of Amicus Curiae.....1

Summary of Argument.....1

Argument

I.

THE UNALIENABLE GUARANTEE OF LIFE TO "ANY PERSON" DOES INCLUDE THE UNBORN.

1. THE LETTER OF THE LAW (THE GUARANTEE OF LIFE TO "ANY PERSON," THE TWO MOST IMPORTANT WORDS EVER ENACTED INTO LAW) ON ITS FACE INCLUDES THE UNBORN.....1

2. THE MODIFIER "ANY" INVOKES A VIRTUALLY IRREBUTTABLE PRESUMPTION THAT THE UNALIENABLE GUARANTEE OF LIFE TO "ANY PERSON" DOES INCLUDE THE UNBORN.....4

3. THE SPIRIT OF THE LAW, THE PROMISE THAT "ALL MEN ARE CREATED EQUAL," SHOWS THE UNALIENABLE GUARANTEE OF LIFE TO "ANY PERSON" DOES INCLUDE THE UNBORN.....5

4. HISTORY SHOWS THE UNALIENABLE GUARANTEE OF LIFE TO "ANY PERSON" DOES INCLUDE THE UNBORN.....6

II.

ROE v. WADE IS VOID BECAUSE IT CRIMINALLY DEFIED THE UNALIENABLE GUARANTEE OF LIFE TO "ANY PERSON" AND CONDEMNED TO DEATH MILLIONS OF VICTIMS WHOM THE CONSTITUTION ENDEAVORS TO PRESERVE.

1. ROE v. WADE CRIMINALLY DEFIED THE UNALIENABLE GUARANTEE OF LIFE TO "ANY PERSON" BECAUSE THIS COURT DECREED KILLINGS TO BE "LIBERTY" WHICH THE PEOPLE HAD DEFINED TO BE "MURDER." THE COURT DECREED "MASS MURDER IS LIBERTY." 10

2. ROE v. WADE CRIMINALLY DEFIED THE UNALIENABLE GUARANTEE OF LIFE TO "ANY PERSON" BECAUSE THIS COURT FABRICATED EVIDENCE TO FALSELY IMPLY THAT THE WORDS "ANY PERSON" DO NOT INCLUDE THE UNBORN.....23

3. ROE v. WADE CRIMINALLY DEFIED THE UNALIENABLE GUARANTEE OF LIFE TO "ANY PERSON" BECAUSE THIS COURT DEFIED THE RULINGS OF JOHN MARSHALL AND USED A "GUILTY UNTIL PROVEN INNOCENT" BURDEN OF PROOF TO IMPLY THAT THE WORDS "ANY PERSON" DO NOT INCLUDE THE UNBORN...39

4. ROE v. WADE CRIMINALLY DEFIED THE UNALIENABLE GUARANTEE OF LIFE TO "ANY PERSON" BECAUSE THIS COURT USED "IRON CURTAIN" PROCEDURES TO IMPLY THAT THE WORDS "ANY PERSON" DO NOT INCLUDE THE UNBORN; IT USED THESE PROCEDURES TO MAINTAIN ITS ROE v. WADE KILLINGS...47

5. DUE PROCESS OF LAW HAS COMPELLED THE U.S. SUPREME COURT TO CONFESS IN COURT THAT IT IS GUILTY OF MASS MURDER, AND TO ADMIT THAT THE UNALIENABLE GUARANTEE OF LIFE TO "ANY PERSON" DOES INCLUDE THE UNBORN.....54

Conclusion.....64

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases:

Baxter v. Palmigiano, 425 U.S. 308.....56

Clarke v. State, 117 Ala. 1 13,14

Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264 41,54

Craig v. Missouri, 3 Pet. 410 22

Dartmouth College v. Woodward,
4 Wheat. 518.....40

Dred Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. 393.....6-8

Ernest v. U.S. Attorney, etc., cert.
denied 89 L Ed 2d 721 (1986).....21

Goldberg v. Kelly, 397 U.S. 254.....51

Gulf, Colo. and S. Fe RR v. Ellis,
165 U.S. 150.....5

Hamilton v. United States,
26 App. D.C. 382.....13

Imbler v. Pachtman, 424 U.S. 409.....51

In Re Gault, 387 U.S. 1.....51

Lamb v. State, 67 Md. 524 24

Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch 137.....57

Martin v. Hunter's Lessee,
1 Wheat. 305 41

McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316.....55

Mills v. Comm. 13 Pa. 631 24,34

Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. 213 54

Passenger Cases, 7 How. 282.....58

Pollard v. Dwight, 4 Cranch 421.....15

Porter v. Lasiter, 87 S.E. 2d 100 14

Regina v. West, 2 C & K 784.....12-13

Ross v. Oregon, 227 U.S. 150.....62

Santa Clara v. So. Pac. RR,
118 U.S. 394.....39

Smith v. State, 33 Me. 48.....30

State v. Anderson, 343 A. 2d 505 15

State v. Reed, 45 Ark. 333 24

State v. Slagle, 83 N.C. 544 24

Sturges v. Crowninshield,
4 Wheat. 122.....40

United States v. Altstoetter, 3 Trials of War Criminals before the Nuernberg
Military Tribunals (1951).....20,50,62

United States v. Hale,
422 U.S. 171.....56,58

Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356.....39

Texts:

Archbold, Complete Treatise on Criminal Procedure, Pleading and Evidence
(1860).....13

Berger, Government by Judiciary: The Transformation of the Fourteenth Amendment (1977).....52

Bishop, Commentaries on the Criminal Law (4th ed. 1865).....14

Black's Law Dictionary 45

Blackstone, Commentaries.....11,23,63

Carroll, Alice in Wonderland 44

Coke, Institutes.....11,12

Denman, Introduction to the Practice of Midwifery (1808).....26,27

Hawkins, Pleas of the Crown.....11

Hodge, Principles and Practice of Obstetrics (1860).....27,34,35

Holmes, The Common Law (1963).....63

McCormick, The Law of Evidence (1972)....56

Model Penal Code.....62

Orwell, 1984 (1949).....19

Perkins, Criminal Law
(2d ed. 1969).....14,57,62

Plato (Jowett transl. 1942).....56

Ramsbotham, Principles and Practice of Obstetric Medicine (1856).....27

Russell, Treatise on Crimes and Misdemeanors (4th ed. 1865) 13

Schwartz, Statutory History of the United States: Civil Rights (1970).....8

Speer, Inside the Third Reich 57

Storer, On Criminal Abortion in America (1860).....31

Taylor, Manual of Medical Jurisprudence
(Penrose Am. ed. 6th ed. 1866).....11,14

Velpeau, M.D., Complete Treatise on Midwifery (4th Am. ed. 1854).....27

Wharton, Treatise on the Criminal Law of the United States (1874).....30

Wharton, Treatise on the Law of Homicide in the United States (1855).....14

Wharton and Stille, Treatise on Medical Jurisprudence (1860).....24

Wigmore, Evidence (Chadborn Rev. 1972)...56

Writings of Thomas Jefferson
(A. Bergh ed. 1907).....12

Articles, Reports & Briefs:

Amicus Curiae Brief by the Legal Defense Fund for Unborn Children, filed in Akron
v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health,
462 U.S. 416 (1983).....60

Destro, Abortion and the Constitution:
The Need for a Life Protective Amendment,
63 Cal. L. Rev. 1250 (1975).....3,38

Hearings on the Proposed Constitutional Amendments on Abortion, Before the Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights of the Committee of the Judiciary,
House of Representatives, 94th Cong., 2d
Sess., Ser. 46, Part 1 (1976).....17

Jeffries and Edmonds, Abortion: The Dreaded Complication, The Philadelphia Inquirer,
August 2, 1981 17

Joynes, Va. Med. J. (1856).....33

Landers, To a Traditionalist, Mr. Ron Sounds So Good, Wall Street Journal.....52

Quay, Justifiable Abortion, Medical and Legal Foundations, 49 Geo. L.J. 395 23

Transactions of the American Medical Association (1860).....34

U.S. Constitution and Statutes:

Fourteenth Amendment- "Any Person".....1-9

Fifth Amendment- "Any Person".....1-9

Fifth Amendment- Due Process 47-53

18 U.S.C. § 242 64

Interest of Amicus

The amicus defends the right to life of the unborn, which the parties have not done.

Summary of Argument

The unalienable guarantee of life to "any person," made in the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments, includes the unborn.

Argument

I.

THE GUARANTEE OF LIFE TO "ANY PERSON," MADE BY THE CONSTITUTION, INCLUDES THE UNBORN.

1. THE LETTER OF THE LAW (THE GUARANTEE OF LIFE TO "ANY PERSON," THE TWO MOST IMPORTANT WORDS EVER ENACTED INTO LAW) ON ITS FACE INCLUDES THE UNBORN.

The 5th and 14th Amendments guarantee that not "any person" can be deprived of "life ... without due process of law." The words "any person" are universal, admit of no exceptions for anyone, make no distinction between born and unborn life, and thus on their face include the unborn, the same as everyone else. The obvious purpose of guaranteeing life universally to "any person" was to forbid making exceptions so some persons could be exterminated.

The Court admitted that if the word "person" included the unborn, then Roe v. Wade "collapses," because the unborn's lives would be "guaranteed" by the Constitution.[1] In ruling "the word 'person' ... does not include the unborn,"[2] the Court hit the Constitution head on, did what is expressly forbidden, and directly defied the letter of the law of its most important guarantee.

The words "any person" are the two most important words ever written into law. The guarantee of life to "any person" is the single most important guarantee because it protects the lives of everybody from government sanctioned extermination, as happened in Nazi Germany.

And the words "any person" give legal body to the spirit that "all men are created equal" and endowed with an "unalienable" right to life. The words "any person" exactly summarize what America stands for, its unique contribution to civilization. As Abraham Lincoln said, what made America great was the promise "not alone to the people of this country, but hope to the world for all future time ... that ALL should have an equal chance."

---

1. Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 156-157.
2. Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 158.

The words "any person" are the very words which guarantee that equal chance to "ALL"; they stand as the supreme political achievement of the human race, the prize of milleniums of struggle. If the Constitution had stated it protected the life of "any person - except the unborn," then its words would support Roe v. Wade. But its words say "any person," without any exceptions at all.

The Supreme Court of West Germany held that the words, "Everybody has the right to life," did include the unborn; it explained that the word "everybody" is universal.[3]

---

3. R. Destro, Abortion and the Constitution The Need For A Life Protective Amendment, 63 Cal. L. Rev. at 1341-51 (1975). In 1975 the Supreme Court of West Germany ruled that the phrase in its Constitution, "Everybody has the right to life," did include the unborn, that "Abortion is an act of homicide," and

The Constitution extends its guarantee of life to "any person." The letter of the law permits no exceptions; on their face the words "any person" do include the unborn.

2. THE MODIFIER "ANY" INVOKES A VIRTUALLY IRREBUTTABLE PRESUMPTION THAT THE GUARANTEE OF LIFE TO "ANY PERSON" INCLUDES THE UNBORN.

The Court never studied the letter of the law - the universal words "any person." Instead the Court focused on the isolated word "person," and ignored its modifier "any," which invokes a virtually irrebuttable presumption in favor of life that the words "any person" do include the unborn.[4]

By reading the guarantee of life to "any person" as if it merely said "some persons," the Court did the most forbidden the state had a "duty ... to protect unborn life." It noted "Everybody" is universal:

---

> The right to live is guaranteed to everybody who is "alive." No distinction can be made among the several stages of developing life before birth, or between prenatal or postnatal life. "Everybody" ... means every "living person,"... therefore, "everybody" in this sense also includes unborn human beings.

4. See burden of proof, infra p. 39.

thing and reduced to nothing what is deemed the most important law in the history of political institutions.

3. THE SPIRIT OF THE LAW, THAT "ALL MEN ARE CREATED EQUAL," SHOWS THE GUARANTEE OF LIFE TO "ANY PERSON" INCLUDES THE UNBORN.

Roe v. Wade violates the spirit of the law, as well as its letter. The promise that "all men are created equal" and endowed with an "unalienable" right to "life" is the guiding spirit of American law. The Supreme Court itself ruled it is the spirit of the Fourteenth Amendment:

> "The first official action of this nation declared the foundation of government in these words: 'We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life...' While such declaration of principles may not have the force of organic law ... yet the latter is but the body and the letter of which the former is the thought and the spirit, and it is always safe to read the letter of the Constitution in the spirit of the Declaration of Independence. No duty rests more imperatively upon the courts than ... to secure the equality of rights which is the foundation of free government." Gulf, Colo. & S. Fe Ry v. Ellis, 165 U.S. at 159-160 (1896).

There is no real medical dispute that the unborn have been created.[5] Reading the letter of the Constitution, the guarantee of life to "any person," in the spirit that "all" are "created equal," and "all" shall get their equal chance to live, proves that the words "any person" do include the unborn. Concerning the right to life, the unborn are the equal of anyone.

4. HISTORY SHOWS THE GUARANTEE OF LIFE TO "ANY PERSON" DOES INCLUDE THE UNBORN.

The last time this Court attempted to imply an exception to the words "any person" was Dred Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. 393 (1857). The 13th and 14th Amendments were intended to overrule this decision that the words "any person," as used in the 5th Amendment, did not include Negroes; there was a constitutional right to own a slave; the phase "all men are created equal" did not include Negroes; Congress could not prohibit slavery in the territories; and Negroes could not sue in federal court to see if they were slave or free.

---

5. The uncontradicted medical evidence in the Texas brief in Roe v. Wade showed the fetal heart begins "pulsations at 24 days"; and "brain waves have been noted at 43 days"; and the unborn child is "alive."

Abraham Lincoln was a leading opponent of Dred Scott. If officials can say all men are created equal except Negroes, he asked, "where will it stop?" He denounced Dred Scott as based on "falsehood," and he alleged a conspiracy by the U.S. Supreme Court, two Presidents, and leading members of Congress, to make slavery legal everywhere and overturn the foundation of our government. Explaining why he would not obey it, President Lincoln said that Dred Scott resulted in "the rule of minority, as a permanent arrangement" which was "wholly inadmissible" and if the President were bound by Dred Scott, "the people will have ceased, to be their own rulers."

Dred Scott triggered a civil war, and President Lincoln defied the Court's decision, that there was a constitutional right to own a slave, when he emancipated slaves and declared them to be "forever free." He reminded us at Gettysburg that we were fighting to see whether a nation dedicated to the principle that "all men are created equal" could "long endure."

The Fourteenth Amendment was intended to rededicate this nation to this original proposition. One of its framers explained:

> "It establishes equality before the law, and it gives to the humblest ... the most despised ... the same protection before the law as it gives to the most powerful.... Without this ... there is no republican government." Rep. Jacob Howard, quoted in 1 B. Schwartz, Statutory History of the United States: Civil Rights 262 (1970).

The framers intended to prevent another Dred Scott catastrophe of judges ever again implying exceptions to the words "any person" to exclude anyone; they employed the universal words most suited for this purpose. And the people had already enacted criminal abortion laws to protect all stages of unborn life, showing the guarantee of life to "any person" means what it says.

Roe v. Wade is simply another Dred Scott disaster which rests on historical contradictions so insane that to permit it is to confess that men cannot be governed by truth, reason, or laws.[6] The Court did the most forbidden thing, and defied the "unalienable" guarantee of life to "any person," the two most important words ever written into law.

The letter of the law, its spirit, its history, its presumption in favor of life, the medical facts known to the 19th century, as well as the 20th, unite to permit only one lawful conclusion: the guarantee of life to "any person" does include the unborn.

---

6. Roe v. Wade rests on the contradiction that without one word of explanation, the framers intended their very promise of life to all, to "any person," to sweep away all their abortion statutes, and make killings, which they had already condemned as criminal, a fundamental "liberty" ranked along with free speech. Roe v. Wade further pretends that the framers somehow silently connived to repudiate a major point of the civil war, so that, in the manner of Dred Scott, judges would be at liberty to again produce more convulsions by implying more exceptions to the words "any person."

II.

ROE v. WADE IS VOID BECAUSE IT CRIMINALLY DEFIED THE UNALIENABLE GUARANTEE OF LIFE TO "ANY PERSON" AND CONDEMNED TO DEATH MILLIONS OF VICTIMS WHOM THE CONSTITUTION ENDEAVORS TO PRESERVE.

1.

ROE v. WADE CRIMINALLY DEFIED THE GUARANTEE OF LIFE TO "ANY PERSON" BECAUSE THIS COURT DECREED KILLINGS TO BE "LIBERTY" WHICH THE PEOPLE HAD DEFINED TO BE "MURDER." THE COURT DECREED "MASS MURDER IS LIBERTY."

When the Fourteenth Amendment was adopted in 1868, an abortion was murder if the child was "born alive." And a child could be "born alive" long before the Court's arbitrary point of "viability."[1]

An 1859 study by the American Medical Association stated the law of murder throughout the United States:

> If a person, intending to procure abortion, does an act which causes the

---

1. This Court arbitrarily set the point, where the law could begin to protect the unborn, at "viability" (about 7 months gestation) "because the fetus then presumably has the capability of meaningful life outside the ... womb." Roe v. Wade, supra, 163. The point is arbitrary, because the Court cannot explain why (in legal and medical precedent) it can be criminal to kill the unborn a few days after viability, but must be "liberty" to kill the unborn a few days before. The Court invented it.

> child to be born earlier than its natural time, and therefore in a state much less capable of living, and it afterwards die in consequence of such premature exposure, the person who by this misconduct brings the child into the world, and puts it into a situation in which it cannot live, is guilty of murder.[2]

Yet in 1973, without any investigation of the law of murder, the Court decreed this very killing to be "liberty" which the American people had universally defined to be "murder." In plainest terms, the Supreme Court decreed: "MASS MURDER IS LIBERTY."

A. THE ENGLISH COMMON LAW WAS THE LAW OF THE LAND IN COLONIAL AMERICA

America's first settlement at Jamestown followed the English common law, as did other colonies. The common law defined an abortion in which a "quick" (about 4 months gestation) child died after being "born alive" to be "murder."[3] So if

---

2. Reported in A.S. Taylor, A Manual of Medical Jurisprudence 462 (6th ed. 1866). He described the AMA report as "a complete and comprehensive exhibit of laws of each of the United States." Id., at 460.

3. Coke, 3 Inst. 50; Hawkins, 1 Hawkins Ch. 13, s. 16; Blackstone, 4 Bl. Com. 198.

the child were "born alive" (even if not "viable"), Coke said the abortion is "so horrible an offense" and "this is murder."[4]

Regina v. West involved this very abortion of a quick, but pre-viable child:

> "The prisoner is charged with murder; and the means stated are, that the prisoner caused the premature delivery ... by using some instrument for the purpose of procuring abortion; and that the child so prematurely born was, in consequence of its premature birth, so weak that it died.
> ....
> "A medical witness stated ... that it was a healthy child; but that, being born at that period of gestation, it was impossible that it could live any considerable length of time separated from the womb of the mother. It was incapable of maintaining a separate and independent existence." Regina v. West, 2 C & K 784, 786-788 (1848).

Although not yet viable, the judge cited Coke and instructed the jury that if the child were "born alive," the abortion was

---

4. Coke, 3 Inst. 50. "This work is executed with so much learning and judgment, that I do not recollect that a single position in it has ever been judicially denied....(I)t may still be considered as the fundamental code of the English law." 14 The Writings of Thomas Jefferson 57 (Bergh ed. 1907). Jefferson was an authority on colonial law, serving on the 1776 committee which adapted Virginia's laws to republican form, the common law being assigned to him.

murder.[6] The English writers cited this as the correct statement of the law.[7]

Thus Roe v. Wade decreed killings to be "liberty" which had been condemned as "murder" since earliest colonial times.

B. "BORN ALIVE" ABORTIONS WERE MURDER WHEN THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT WAS ADOPTED.

The English common law is the dictionary which courts use to construe the state and federal homicide statutes.[8]

By the time the Fourteenth Amendment was adopted, American legal authorities had

---

6. Regina v. West, 2 C & K at 788: "I am of opinion (and I direct you in point of law), that if a person intending to procure abortion does an act which causes a child to be born so much earlier than the natural time, that it is born in a state much less capable of living, and afterwards dies in consequence of its exposure to the external world, the person who by her misconduct so brings the child into the world, and puts it thereby in a situation in which it cannot live, is guilty of murder."

7. 1 J.F. Archbold, A Complete Treatise on Criminal Procedure, Pleading and Evidence 783 (Waterman Am. ed. 7th ed. 1860); 1 W.O. Russell, A Treatise on Crimes and Misdemeanors 671-672 (4th ed. 1865).

8. Clarke v. State, 117 Ala. 1 (1898); Hamilton v. United States, 26 App. D.C. 382 (1905).

long followed the common law rule that abortions of pre-viable children "born alive" were murder. In 1858 the preeminent legal writer of the 19th century explained:

> "If a person intending to procure abortion, does an act which causes a [quick] child to be born so much earlier than the natural time, that it is born in a state much less capable of living, and afterwards dies, in consequence of its exposure to the external world, the person who by this misconduct, so brings the child into the world, and puts it thereby in a situation in which it cannot live, is guilty of murder" F. Wharton, A Treatise on the Law of Homicide in the United States 93 (1855).

This was the uncontradicted view in the United States when the Fourteenth Amendment was adopted.[9] Courts applied this law of murder.[10] It was still the law in 1973.[11] In 1975 the New Jersey courts

---

9. 2 J.P. Bishop, Commentaries on the Criminal Law 365 (4th ed. 1868); A.S. Taylor, supra, 462, 517.

10. Clarke v. State, 117 Ala. 1 (1898). "In Georgia ... the wilful killing of an unborn child so far developed as to be ... called 'quick,' is considered as murder." Porter v. Lassiter, 87 S.E. 2d 100, 102 (1955).

11. R. Perkins, Criminal Law 30 n.17 (2d ed 1969).

applied this 17th century murder law to the killing of a pre-viable fetus born alive:

> That a fetus may be the victim of murder if it be born alive has long been a part of our common law....Coke, Institutes 58 (1648).[12]

For almost four centuries governments came and went, but the law that born alive abortions are murder, which is binding on the U.S. Supreme Court,[13] remained the law of the land.

Thus Roe v. Wade decreed killings to be "liberty" which had been universally condemned by the framers and adopters of the Fourteenth Amendment to be "murder."

C. THE GUARANTEE OF LIFE TO "ANY PERSON" INCLUDES CHILDREN GUARDED BY THE MURDER LAW

The guarantee of life to "any person" in the Fourteenth Amendment must include

---

12. State v. Anderson, 343 A. 2d 505, 508 (1975), affirmed 413 A. 2d 611 (1980). The courts rejected the claim it was not murder because "the infants were never capable of maintaining a separate and independent existence." Id. at 615.

13. Chief Justice Marshall ruled that the Supreme Court must accept the construction given by a state to its own statute. Pollard v. Dwight, 4 Cranch 421, 429.

all persons whose lives were protected by the law of murder when the Amendment was adopted. No dispute is even possible.

If the killing of Jews had been defined to be murder in 1868, it is certain that the framers did not intend to exclude Jews from the guarantee of life to "any person" so it would be "liberty" to kill Jews with impunity from criminal laws. Changing the names of the victims does not change the legal result.

The people who framed and adopted the Amendment had condemned the taking of a crying, pre-viable infant from its mother's womb to be murder. Thus it is certain that they did not intend to exclude the lives of these children from the guarantee of life to "any person" so it would be "liberty" to kill them with impunity from murder laws.

By arbitrarily setting "viability" as the point the law could begin to protect unborn life, the Court decreed the same killing to be "liberty" which the American people had condemned as "murder."

The words "any person" do indisputably include children protected by the law of murder. And since personhood under the Constitution does not just fade away with time, like some magic disappearing ink, the right to life of these children is still guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment.

D. ROE_v._WADE_ALLOWS_HYSTEROTOMY_ABORTIONS

Roe v. Wade hysterotomy abortions, basically Caesareans, result in children "born alive."[14] As explained to Congress:

> With few exceptions, babies aborted by this method will all move, will all breathe, and some will cry.... Almost all were born alive.[15]

---

14. Jeffries and Edmonds, Abortion: The Dreaded Complication, Philadelphia Inquirer, August 2, 1981.

15. Hearings on Constitutional Amendments on Abortion, before subcomm. on Civil and Constitutional Rights, of the House Comm. of the Judiciary, 94th Cong., 2d Sess., Ser. 46, Part 1, at 397 (1976) (statement by Dr. John Willke, M.D.). There are about 140,000 second stage abortions each year. Washington Post, April 26, 1985, A11. Most methods can result in a child born alive.

When the Fourteenth Amendment was adopted, these hysterotomy abortions were murder. Thus the lives of the children are still guaranteed by the Amendment, and the killings are still murder.

F. THE DECREE "MASS MURDER IS LIBERTY" OVERTHROWS THE U.S. CONSTITUTION

Is a government of laws founded upon evidence, or the mere naked decrees of men holding office for life? The evidence proves that the lives of these children are guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution.

This evidence for the unborn is exactly the same evidence which many people must rely upon to prove their lives are guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution.[16] If 16. Suppose it were claimed in federal court that it is "liberty" to kill the insane, or invalids, or Jews. What factual, non-argumentative evidence could be found to establish their right to life under the U.S. Constitution?

---

As with the unborn, it would do no good to object that no one ever heard of a "liberty" to kill them - or to object that such killings had thereto been criminal.

The Amendment merely states that it protects the life of "any person." So, as with the unborn, it does not expressly the evidence is ineffective for the unborn, then the Roe v. Wade precedent can grow to a "liberty" to kill virtually anyone. If the Supreme Court decreed it "liberty" to kill Jews, this same evidence would prove it "murder," and not "liberty." Judges may have more sympathy for other victims, but changing the names of the victims will not change the legal result.

Roe v. Wade murders reason itself. In his novel, "1984," Orwell described how a tyranny defrauded its subjects into obedience with the "doublethink" slogan "FREEDOM IS SLAVERY." Although this science fiction appears improbable, the U.S. Supreme Court has defrauded the United refer to them; and its legislative history does not appear to expressly refer to them.

---

The principle that all people are "created" equal, with an "unalienable" right to "life," having been sneered out of court in Roe v. Wade, now provides no assurance for anyone.

As with the unborn, the murder laws don't expressly refer to the insane, or invalids, or Jews; the intention of the legislators is found in the common law.

If the evidence cannot protect the unborn, the lives of many are imperiled.

States into obedience with the ultimate falsehood: "MASS MURDER IS LIBERTY."

Abraham Lincoln ridiculed Dred Scott by reducing it to its plainest terms:

> [We hold these truth to be self-evident, that] all men are created equal - except Negroes.
> That if any one man, choose to enslave another, no third man shall be allowed to object.

The Fourteenth Amendment intended to prevent this forever. Yet Roe v. Wade, reduced to its plainest terms, asserts:

> We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal - except those created to be murdered.
> That if any one man, choose to murder another, no third man shall be allowed to object.

By changing the names of the victims, the Supreme Court has duplicated the decree of "the supreme judge" of Nazi Germany who asserted the killing of Jews to be legal.[17]

---

17. United States v. Altstoetter, 3 Trials of War Criminals Before the Nuernberg Military Tribunals 1011-1014 (1951). The Nazi judges claimed that they could not be held accountable for complicity in extermination and murder, since they had acted "within the authority" of the "decrees" of "the supreme judge." Id. at

The key doctrines of the Nazi judiciary have been adopted by the courts of the United States: a "supreme judge" which decrees mass murder to be legal; and lower judges who rule they must blindly obey.[18]

The Court did exactly what the guarantee of life to "any person" was intended to prevent, and decreed murder to be legal, by giving "murder" the new name "liberty." But Chief Justice Marshall condemned such sham:

> "Is the proposition to be maintained that the Constitution meant to prohibit names and not things? That a very important act, big with great and ruinous mischief which is expressly forbidden by words most appropriate for its description; may be performed by the substitution of a name? That the Constitution, in one of its most important provisions, may be evaded by giving a new name to an old

---

983-85. Their "supreme judge" had decreed killings to be legal which had been defined by statute to be criminal. But the tribunal held, "The dagger of the assassin was concealed beneath the robe of the jurist."

18. Ernest v. U.S. Attorney etc., cert. denied 475 U.S. 1084 (1986). The U.S. District Judge ruled that Roe v. Wade was "the worst decision by the Supreme Court in the history of the Court." But he stated that even if the Supreme Court decreed it liberty to kill Jews, he must obey and permit the killings to continue.

thing? We cannot think so." Craig v. Missouri, 3 Pet. at 433 (1830).

Thus the United States is ruled by the decree "MASS MURDER IS LIBERTY." But murder is still murder, no matter what new name the Court gives it. This is the most catastrophic crime in history. This precedent of judicial alchemy to convert murder into "liberty" can be evoked at whim to kill anyone; it cancels the "unalienable" guarantee of life and makes everybody a mere hostage of this Court; it is a virtual murder gun held to everyone's head - all life now depends merely on judicial whim; it defies the consent of the governed; it smashes the hopes of the whole human race for government by truth and laws, and reduces government to the mere matter of which murderer can grab power and be obeyed. Again people must struggle to ensure that the nation dedicated to the proposition that "all men are created equal" shall not "perish from this earth."

ROE v. WADE CRIMINALLY DEFIED THE UNALIENABLE GUARANTEE OF LIFE TO "ANY-PERSON" BECAUSE THIS COURT FABRICATED EVIDENCE TO FALSELY IMPLY THAT THE WORDS "ANY PERSON" DO NOT INCLUDE THE UNBORN.

The 19th century abortion statutes supplanted the medieval view that unborn life began at "quickening"[1] and expanded protection of law to all stages of unborn life; they prove the guarantee of life to "any person" includes the unborn, that no distinction can be made among the stages of unborn life.

When the Fourteenth Amendment was adopted in 1868, over three-fourths of the ratifying states had already made abortion at any stage of gestation a crime.[2] Within a few years, these statutes were universal.

---

1. "Life is the immediate gift of God, a right inherent by nature in every individual: and it begins in contemplation of law as soon as the infant is able to stir in the mother's womb." 1 Bl. Com. 126.

2. The statutes are set out in Quay, Justifiable Abortion, Medical and Legal Foundations, 49 Geo. L. J. 447-520 (1961).

And in those few States still following the common law, judicial revision makes it impossible for this Court to assert with any assurance that it was any different than the prevailing statutes:

> By the ancient common law ... as the life of an infant was not supposed to begin until it stirred in the mother's womb, it was not regarded as a criminal offense to commit an abortion in the early stages of pregnancy. A considerable change in the law has taken place in many jurisdictions by the silent and steady progress of judicial opinion; and it has been frequently held by Courts of high character that abortion is a crime at common law without regard to the stage of gestation.[3]

---

3. Lamb v. State, 67 Md. 524 (1887). Some state supreme courts rejected medieval medical views and ruled that the common law made abortion at any stage of gestation a crime. Mills v. Comm., 13 Pa. 631 (1850); State v. Slagle, 83 N.C. 544 (1880); State v. Reed, 45 Ark. 333 (1885).

Wharton, a standard 19th century text, stated that under common law "the protection of the law was cast round an unborn child from its first stage of ascertainable existence, no matter whether 'quickening' had taken place or not." F. Wharton and M. Stille, Treatise on Medical Jurisprudence 927-28 (2d ed. 1860).

And those state supreme courts which ruled that abortion prior to quickening was not a common law crime were immediately

The theory of a "liberty" to kill the unborn faced a fatal contradiction. How could the Court dare to Dred Scott-like imply an exception to the guarantee of life to "any person" in order to declare killings to be "liberty" which the people had defined to be criminal? This absurd contradiction wrecks Roe v Wade.

To resolve this fatal contradiction the Court fabricated the hypothesis that the 19th century criminal abortion statutes were not intended to protect unborn life, but were only intended to protect the mother. This falsely implied that the people never intended the lives of the unborn to be protected by law. This false hypothesis was fabricated as follows.

---

overruled by their legislatures which made abortion at any stage of pregnancy a crime. Comm. v. Parker, 50 Mass. 263 (1845), was immediately overruled by Mass. Acts & Resolves ch. 27 (1845). State v. Cooper, 22 N.J.L. 52 (1849), was immediately overruled by N.J. Laws at 266 (1849). Abrahams v. Foshee, 3 Iowa 274 (1856) was overruled by the next legislature, Iowa Rev. Laws, tit. XXIII, ch. 165. art. 2, sec. 4221 (1860).

A.

The Court first asserted as fact:

> "When most criminal abortion laws were first enacted, the procedure was a hazardous one for the woman." Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 148.

The only authority cited was a 20th century medical history book.[4] But this book only described the hazards of major surgery in general prior to Lister's discovery of antiseptics; the abortion operation was not mentioned anywhere in the entire book.

The 19th century obstetric authorities throughout the Western world prove that abortions by physicians were "perfectly safe" to the woman.[5] They prove the Court's assertion of fact to be false.

---

4. Haagensen and Lloyd, A Hundred Years of Medicine 19 (1943), cited in Roe v. Wade, supra, at 148 n.43.

5. 2 T. Denman, M.D., An Introduction to the Practice of Midwifery 96 (1802). He was a standard English authority. They based their judgments on their own experience in performing abortions, and from hundreds of cases reported from around the world. In addition to perforation, other procedures were also safe. A French physician wrote "experience has proved that the dangers of the operation are reduced to a small

The Supreme Court never revealed the "hazardous" abortion "procedure" to which it was referring. Actually, the 19th century physicians generally used the ancient method,[6] which one physician traced back 2000 years,[7] and which they described as "perfectly safe" to woman.

The Court did not examine even one 19th century obstetric textbook; and they prove its assertion, "the procedure was a hazardous one for the woman," to be false.

Since abortion was not dangerous to the life of the mother, the only motivating matter." A.L.M. Velpeau, M.D., A Complete Treatise on Midwifery 530 (4th Am. ed. 1852). The preeminent American physician wrote "to the mother there is very little danger." H.L. Hodge, M.D., The Principles and Practice of Obstetrics 293 (1864).

---

6. Dr. Denman, a standard authority in England, wrote in 1802: "the membranes of the ovum are punctured," which permitted "the discharge of the waters," which induced the "action of the uterus," which resulted in the expulsion of the fetus from the womb, which was "perfectly safe" to the woman. 2 Denman, supra, at 96-99.

7. F. Ramsbotham, M.D., The Principles and Practice of Obstetric Medicine 724 (4th ed. 1856).

purpose the abortion statutes could have had was to protect the lives of the unborn from destruction by abortions, even safe abortions by physicians. Had it been the purpose of the legislators to only protect the mother, they would have simply required abortions, which were known all over the western world to be safe to the mother, to be performed only by physicians.

B.

The Court next asserted: "Abortion mortality was high."[8] This is asserted as fact. The Court cited no authority to support it. The 19th century obstetric authorities prove this assertion to be false; their medical texts show that the abortion operation was "perfectly safe."

The purpose of the Court's false assertion of fact is to go beyond the mere theory that abortion was hazardous to the mother, and infer that the carnage was so great as to call for legislation to protect women from the medical profession.

---

8. Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 149.

C.

Upon these two false assertions of fact, the Court next falsely inferred:

> "[A] State's real concern in enacting a criminal abortion law was to protect the pregnant woman, that is, to restrain her from submitting to a procedure that placed her life in serious jeopardy." Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 149.

This is a false inference, drawn from two false assertions of fact. Moreover, the 19th century treatises on criminal law expressly stated that these abortion statutes were intended to supplant the ancient common law and protect the lives of the unborn during all stages of gestation:

> "The notion that a man is not accountable for destroying the child before it quickens, arose from the hypothesis that quickening was the commencement of vitality with it, before which it could not be considered as existing. This "absurd distinction" ... is now exploded in medicine.... The foetus is certainly ... as much a living being immediately after conception, as at any other time before delivery.
>
> ....
>
> "There is as much vitality ... on one side of quickening as on the other, and ... the infant is as much entitled to > protection ... a week before it quickens as a week afterwards.... Acting under these views, the legislatures ... passed acts making ante-quickening-foeticide individually penal." 1 F. Wharton, A Treatise on the Criminal Law of the United States 656-57 (5th ed. 1861).

There is no 19th century authority to the contrary. If the purpose of these laws had been to protect the mother, and not the child, these texts would certainly have noted such an important thing.

And State supreme courts ruled that these statutes protected the unborn:

> "(T)he statute ... essentially changed the common law. There is a removal of the unsubstantial distinction, that it is no offense to procure an abortion, before the mother becomes sensible of the motion of the child, notwithstanding it is then capable of inheriting an estate.... It is now equally criminal to produce abortion before and after quickening." Smith v. State, 33 Me 48 (1851).

Since abortions by physicians were known all over the western world to be safe to the mother, the motivating purpose of these abortion laws could only have been to protect the lives of unborn children from destruction from abortions. That legislatures prohibited safe abortions by physicians, despite the great danger to the mother from abortions by criminals,[9] shows their great respect for unborn life.

D.

The Court next made its irrelevant study of the single word "person," and held it "does not include the unborn":

> "(O)ur observation ... that throughout the major portion of the 19th century prevailing legal abortion practices were far freer than they are today, persuades us that the word 'person,' as used in the Fourteenth Amendment, does not include the unborn." Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 158.

The Court could not find even one 19th century authority to support this result; the whole weight rests on the Court's "major portion - far freer" assertion, which is false.[10] The reverse is closer to

---

9. "In thirty-four cases of criminal abortion ... twenty-two were followed...by death, and only twelve were not. In fifteen cases necessarily induced by physicians, not one was fatal." H.R. Storer, M.D., On Criminal Abortion in America 43 (1860)

10. The ancient common law only prevailed in the early 19th century. By mid-century, a majority of the States which ratified the Amendment had already enacted statutes the truth. The evidence indicates that legal abortion was far freer in 1973, than when the Amendment was adopted.[11]

The Court's "major portion - far freer" doctrine, were it even true, is absurdly irrelevant[12] and ominously skirts which punished abortion throughout gestation. (Supra n.2) By 1868, over three-fourths had enacted such statutes; and shortly they were universal. In those few states with no statute, this Court cannot claim with assurance that the common law was any different. (Supra n.3) Thus the "prevailing law" for the last half of the 19th century; it was about the same as existed in most states in 1973; and "legal" abortion was not "far freer" then.

---

11. The statutes listed in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 140 n37, show that by 1973 four states permitted abortion on demand, while fourteen permitted abortions for other reasons not allowed in 1868. The statutes prevailing in 1868 only permitted abortions to save the life of the mother or child. Thus legal abortion was far freer in 1973 than in 1868, although in most states it was still about the same as it was in 1868.

12. The same thing could be said about "legal slavery," which really was "far freer" for the "major portion" of the 19th century than it is today. Would this prove a right to own a slave today? If the Court could ignore the events of 1860 to 1866 - it could plausibly reaffirm its Dred Scott rule that there was a right to own a slave.

the central issue of the law existing in 1868, and the reason for the vast change.

The Court's assertion that "legal abortion" was then "far freer" refers to the ancient common law that abortion prior to "quickening" was not a crime, on the theory that life began at "quickening." A physician, who helped draft Virginia's 1848 abortion statute, explained its purpose was to supplant this "exploded error":

> "(T)hat the embryo is endowed with an inherent vitality from the first moment of conception, and is therefore as much entitled to the protection of the law before the period of 'quickening' as after it, every well-informed physician must yield a ready assent. The old doctrine, once held by medical men ... that the foetus first becomes animated, or endowed with distinct vitality, at the moment when the sensation of quickening is experienced by the mother, has been long since banished from the domain of science ... and now only finds a retreat in the dark and ancient caverns of the common law.
> ....
> "(T)he civil rights of the unborn child are perfect from the very commencement of its being." L.S. Joynes, M.D., "Foetus in Utero," Virginia Medical Journal 179-180, 187 (1856).

The 19th century medical and legal authorities, with none to the contrary, condemned this ancient theory of life:

> "(I)t is the duty of every accoucheur earnestly to protest against the ancient theological and legal opinion that, prior to the fourth month, the embryo had no proper existence.... (T)he merest tyro in physiological investigations must be convinced of the falsity of all such opinions." H.L. Hodge, M.D., The Principles and Practice of Obstetrics 78 (1864).

Yet the Court exactly adopted, as constitutional law, a view of unborn life which the 1860 president of the AMA called "a barbarous physiology" and which courts ruled "never ought to have been the law anywhere,"[13] and which 19th century legislatures condemned as criminal. The AMA president said in urging States to protect all stages of unborn life:

> "This relic of a barbarous physiology needs to be exploded, and the truth should be generally promulgated, that, from the moment of conception, a new being is engendered." 13 Transaction of the American Medical Association 56-57 (1860).

---

13. Mills v. Commonwealth, supra, 632.

The abortion statutes were urged by America's most eminent medical professors and physicians, and they were intended to protect all stages of unborn life:

> From the moment of fecundation, the new being becomes independent ... its individuality is complete.... (T)here is a progressive ... advancing from one degree of perfection to another. Every protection, therefore, which is extended by human legislation to the young infant ... should be equally effectual in securing the life of the embryo from the earliest period of its existence.[14]

The abortion statutes show the universal guarantee of life to "any person" was not based on "a barbarous physiology"; the Amendment recognizes that there is no time during unborn life that a rational line can be drawn to permit the killings.

But the Court accepted the medieval view, that life began at "quickening"

---

14. H.L. Hodge, M.D., The Principles and Practice of Obstetrics 78 (1864). Hodge's "name had become a household word throughout the land" and his book "valued among the very first works on obstetrics ever issued from the American or foreign press." R. Penrose, M.D., Discourse on Life of H.L. Hodge 20-21 (1872)

(about 4 months), and arbitrarily enlarged it to "viability" (about 7 months), making a "liberty" to kill which even its only authority, the ancient common law, condemned as criminal. Thus the basis of the Court's decree that "the word 'person'... does not include the unborn." Thus 20th century constitutional law was founded on medieval medical theory which was rejected as false in the 19th century, and remains false today.

In short, the Court manufactured a constitutional right to kill, out of "an exploded error" that an ante-quick child was not alive, which the "merest tyro" knew to be false, and was universally condemned as "a barbarous physiology" found only in "dark and ancient caverns," which 19th century judges ruled "never ought to have been the law anywhere," and which legislatures condemned as criminal everywhere, in order to Dred Scott-like blast an exception to the guarantee of life to "any person," so tens of millions of victims could be killed with impunity from criminal statutes. This is not law; it is murder under ruse of law.

The Court's arbitrary shopping among medieval notions, rejected by the framers as "barbarous," to define the unalienable guarantee of life to "any person," is a another murder gun precedent pointed at the head of all Americans; it makes everyone a hostage of this Court; judges can arbitrarily pull its trigger to destroy anyone.

The Court now has bloody precedent for doing the most forbidden act; it directly defied the unalienable guarantee of life to "any person," the two most important words ever written into law, and condemned to death millions of victims whom the U.S. Constitution endeavors to preserve. It can now happen to anyone; the Court has cancelled the "unalienable" guarantee of life to "ALL," and sealed it in blood.

E.

In construing its equivalent word "everybody," the Supreme Court of West Germany ruled it did include the unborn:

> "No distinction can be made among the several stages of developing life before birth, or between prenatal and postnatal life." [Supra page 3 n.3]

The history of the criminal abortion statutes proves the framers made this same conclusion when they universally guaranteed life to "any person" without any exceptions: there is no time during unborn life that the law can withdraw its protection and permit the killings; rather it is the duty of the law to protect the weak.

Without need of assistance from Chief Justice John Marshall's burdens of proof, as described in the next section, history permits only one rational conclusion: the universal and "unalienable" guarantee of life to "any person" includes the unborn during all stages of unborn existence.

3.

THIS COURT CRIMINALLY DEFIED THE UNALIENABLE GUARANTEE OF LIFE TO "ANY PERSON" WHEN IT DEFIED THE RULINGS OF JOHN MARSHALL AND USED A "GUILTY UNTIL PROVEN INNOCENT" BURDEN OF PROOF TO INFER THAT THE WORDS "ANY PERSON" DO NOT INCLUDE THE UNBORN.

The Court used the correct burden when it previously construed "any person."[1] Yet when it came to the unborn, it used a "guilty until proven innocent" burden.

A.

THE BURDENS, DESCRIBED BY CHIEF JUSTICE MARSHALL, PROVE THE GUARANTEE OF LIFE TO "ANY PERSON" DOES INCLUDE THE UNBORN.

Chief Justice John Marshall described the conditions the Court must satisfy to lawfully imply an exception to universal terms in the U.S. Constitution.

Before the Court can exclude the unborn from the guarantee of life to "any

---

1. The Court properly ruled that the words "any person" included Chinese aliens, saying the words are "universal in their application, to all persons ... without regard to any differences." Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356, 369 (1886). And this Court was so sure that the words "any person" included "corporations," it refused to even allow counsel to argue against it. Santa Clara v. So. Pac. RR, 118 U.S. 394, 396 (1886).

person," so they can be killed with impunity from criminal laws, the Court must prove that including the unborn within the terms "any person" would be "so monstrous, that all mankind would, without hesitation, unite in rejecting the application."[2]

The Court must prove that if the right to life of the unborn had "been suggested [to the framers] the language would have been so varied, as to exclude it,"[3] and the

---

2. Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. 122, 202-203 (1819). When the Constitution uses universal words, and a case is "within the very words of the Constitution," it would be "dangerous in the extreme" to infer the case "is not within its spirit" because "we believe the framers of that instrument could not intend what they say" unless the "absurdity and injustice of applying the provision to the case, would be so monstrous, that all mankind would, without hesitation, unite in rejecting the application."

3. Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 518, 644-45 (1819). "It is not enough to say that this particular case was not in the mind of the Convention, when the article was framed, nor of the American people, when it was adopted. It is necessary to go farther, and to say that, had this particular case been suggested, the language would have been so varied, as to exclude it, or it would have been made a special exception. The case being within framers would have changed the guarantee to read: "Nor shall any state deprive any person, except unborn persons, of life ... without due process of law."

These are the burdens which protect the lives of all Americans from government sanctioned extermination, as happened in Nazi Germany; they carry the life of each American in their hands. The Court bears the heaviest burden of proof to imply an exception to the guarantee of life to "any person" so millions of victims can be killed with impunity from criminal laws.[4] the words of the rule, must be within its operation likewise, unless there be something in the literal construction so obviously absurd ... as to justify those who expound the constitution in making it an exception."

---

The Court used these burdens when it ruled it could not read its jurisdiction, which includes "all cases" arising under the Constitution, as if it merely said "some cases." Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat 264 (1821); Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 1 Wheat. at 339 (1816).

4. The truth of this extraordinary burden can be demonstrated by applying it to various cases. Before the Court could imply an exception to the universal terms "any person," so that Jews could be deliberately

Chief Justice Marshall's rules prove the guarantee of life to "any person" does include the unborn because "all mankind" would not unite "without hesitation" to exclude them. And the framers would not have changed the guarantee to read "any person - except the unborn," so it would be liberty to kill them, because the people had already enacted criminal statutes to protect the lives of the unborn by law. Thus the guarantee of life to "any person" does include the unborn.

---

killed with impunity from criminal laws, the Court would have to prove that "the absurdity and injustice" of including Jews within the universal terms "any person" would be "so monstrous, that all mankind would, without hesitation, unite in rejecting the application." And the Court must prove that if the case of the Jews had been suggested to the framers, they would have changed the Amendment to read: "No state shall deprive any person, except Jews, of life without due process of law." This same burden protects us all.

B.

THIS COURT EXACTLY DEFIED THE BURDEN DESCRIBED BY CHIEF JUSTICE JOHN MARSHALL.

Instead of placing the burden on the advocates of the killings to prove that including the unborn within the guarantee of life to "any person" would "be so monstrous, that all mankind would, without hesitation, unite in rejecting the application," the Court reversed the burden:

First, the Court declared a "liberty" to kill the unborn with impunity from criminal laws, before it even looked to see if the guarantee of life to "any person" included the unborn.[5]

Second, subsequently, the Court looked to see if the guarantee of life to "any person" included the unborn.[6]

---

5. Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 153: "(T)he Fourteenth Amendment's concept of personal liberty ... is broad enough to encompass a woman's decision ... to terminate her pregnancy."

6. Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 156-157. "The appellee ... argue that the fetus is a 'person' within the language and meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment."

Third, the Court admitted that if the words "any person" included the unborn, its predetermined assertion of a "liberty" to kill the unborn "of course, collapses."[7] But the Court decreed a "liberty" to kill the unborn before it looked to see if the unborn had a "guaranteed" right to live.

Thus the Court had passed its sentence of death, before it even looked to see if the Constitution guaranteed a right to live. It is analogous to a court sentencing an accused to be hung before it even heard the evidence. As Alice's Queen demanded: "Sentence first; verdict afterwards."[8]

---

7. Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 156-157: "If this suggestion of personhood is established, the appellant's case, of course, collapses, for the fetus' right to life would then be guaranteed specifically by the Amendment."

8. The vengeful Queen in "Alice in Wonderland" shouted "Off with her head" and when admonished that the jury must first consider its verdict, she said: "No! No! Sentence first- verdict afterwards."
So it was in Roe v. Wade - first the sentence of death; then the verdict whether the law allowed the victim to live.

Fourth, the Court's purpose for first predetermining a "liberty" to kill the unborn, was not only to shift the burden of proof from the advocates of the killings onto the unborn, but also to impose its heaviest "compelling" burden on the unborn, a burden of proof so devastating that state statutes seldom, if ever, survive it.[9]

Fifth, the Court stated that the evidence did not prove "with any assurance" that the guarantee of life to "any person" included the unborn.[10] This confirms that the Court placed the burden on the unborn to prove with "assurance" that the words "any person" included the unborn. This is the heaviest burden which can be imagined.

---

9. Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 155: "Where certain 'fundamental rights' are involved, the Court has held that regulation limiting these rights may be justified only by a 'compelling state interest.'" As its compelling state interest, Texas claimed that the lives of the unborn were protected by the Fourteenth Amendment. Id., at 156.

10. Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 157. "Assurance" means: "To make certain and put beyond doubt." Black's Law Dictionary (4th ed. 1968).

Finally, by calling upon its false evidence to raise trifling doubts, the Court said that the unborn had not met their burden of proof and ruled "the word 'person' ... does not include the unborn."

If the Court used such burdens to decree a "liberty" to kill Jews, surely none would deny it would be murder. Judges may have more sympathy for other victims, but changing the name of the victims will not change the legal result.

When courts use such burdens to condemn victims to death, it can no longer be pretended it is still the government of the United States - any government of laws. This is still another "murder gun" precedent pointed at the head of every American; judges can arbitrarily use it to destroy anyone. The true burden proves beyond dispute that the guarantee of life to "any person" does include the unborn.

ROE v. WADE CRIMINALLY DEFIED THE UNALIENABLE GUARANTEE OF LIFE TO "ANY PERSON" BECAUSE THIS COURT USED "IRON CURTAIN" PROCEDURES TO IMPLY THAT THE WORDS "ANY PERSON" DO NOT INCLUDE THE UNBORN; IT USED THESE PROCEDURES TO MAINTAIN ITS KILLINGS.

The Court effected Roe v. Wade by using unconstitutional "iron curtain" procedures in a mock trial without truth.[1]

---

1. A. Denial of Assistance of Counsel
Counsel did not especially represent the unborn in the U.S. District Court in Roe v. Wade. And the U.S. Supreme Court denied a request by an original party to allow counsel to especially represent the unborn and defend their right to life. Thus, counsel did not represent the unborn at any stage of the original proceedings.

B. Denial of Prior Notice
The District Court did not even look to see if the lives of the unborn were protected by the U.S. Constitution; this question was argued for the first time after Roe v. Wade reached the Supreme Court. And the Supreme Court gave the parties no prior notice of the constitutional standards, or the burdens of proof, or the evidence, which the Court used to infer that the lives of the unborn were not protected by the U.S. Constitution. The first time the parties had notice was when Roe v. Wade was published, and the victims were already condemned to death. An original party objected that it lacked the prior notice needed to defend the unborn.

C. Secret Evidentiary Proceedings
The Court used some secret evidentiary process, not open to the parties, to find

And the Court maintains its killings by using "iron curtain" procedures in mock trials without truth, despite continual objection that the Court was using criminal procedures to maintain its killings:

— 1. The Supreme Court willfully refuses to allow retained (no cost to taxpayers) counsel to represent the victims being evidence to infer that the lives of the unborn were not protected by the U.S. Constitution. An original party objected that the Court's facts were "unknown to the parties" and it never had opportunity to cross-examine the Court's evidence.

---

D. Denial of Right to Cross-Examine

An original party asked permission to cross-examine the evidence which the Court used to infer that the lives of the unborn were not protected by the Constitution. Since the Court found its evidence in secret proceedings, the parties had not previously seen the evidence. But the Supreme Court would not allow its evidence to be cross-examined.

E. Denial of Right to Present Evidence

An original party asked permission to present evidence under the new constitutional standards, which it had not seen before, to show that the lives of the unborn are protected by the Constitution. But the Court refused to allow it. And thus the killings commenced.

killed and defend their right to life.[2]

2. The Supreme Court willfully refuses to allow its evidence in Roe v. Wade, which it used to infer that "the word 'person'...

---

2. Some of the cases are: Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379, motion to allow counsel for the unborn denied 437 U.S. 902; Anders v. Floyd, 440 U.S. 445, motion to allow counsel for the unborn denied 439 U.S. 890; Bellotti v. Baird, 443 U.S. 622, motion to allow counsel for the unborn denied 439 U.S. 1065; Ashcroft v. Freiman, affirmed 440 U.S. 941, motion to allow counsel for the unborn denied, 440 U.S. 941; United States v. Zbaraz, 448 U.S. 358, motion to allow counsel for the unborn denied 444 U.S. 1030; Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297, motion to allow counsel for the unborn denied 445 U.S. 941; H.L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398, motion to allow counsel for the unborn denied 445 U.S. 959; Simopoulos v. Virginia, 462 U.S. 506, motion to allow counsel for the unborn denied 458 U.S. 1104; Planned Parenthood of Kansas City v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476, motion to allow counsel to for the unborn denied 458 U.S. 1104; Akron Center for Reproductive Health v. Akron, 462 U.S. 416, motion to allow counsel to for the unborn denied 458 U.S. 1104; Diamond v. Charles, 476 U.S. 54, motion to allow counsel for the unborn denied 473 U.S. 932; Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747, motion to allow counsel for the unborn denied 473 U.S. 931; Hartigan v. Zbaraz, 98 L Ed 2d 478 (1988), motion to allow counsel for the unborn denied 479 U.S. 1003.

does not include the unborn," to be confronted and cross-examined.[3]

3. The Supreme Court willfully refuses to allow evidence to be presented to show that the Constitution's unalienable guarantee of life to "any person" includes the unborn.[4]

These are basically the procedures cited by the Nuremberg Court as part of the evidence to convict the Nazi judges of complicity in extermination and murder.[5]

The Supreme Court's own rulings on due process of law show these procedures to be

---

3. See cases, supra note 2.

4. See cases, supra note 2.

5. "The trials ... did not approach even a semblance of ... justice. The accused ... were denied the right to introduce evidence, to be confronted by witnesses against them.... They were ... denied the right of counsel of their own choice.... (P)roceedings ... were secret." United States v. Altstoetter, supra, at 1046-47 (1951). "Such a mock trial is not a judicial proceeding but a murder." Id., at 1164. "The prostitution of a judicial system for the accomplishment of criminal ends involves an element of evil to the State which is not found in frank atrocities which do not sully judicial robes." Id., at 1086.

unconstitutional,[6] and the willful use of these procedures to be criminal.[7]

If the Court had used these procedures to decree it "liberty" to kill Jews, it

---

6. Even in civil proceedings (such as where loss of welfare is threatened) due process guarantees (1) prior notice of the factual and legal bases; (2) the right to assistance of counsel; (3) the right to cross-examine adverse evidence; and (4) the right to present evidence. Goldberg v. Kelly, 397 U.S. 254, 268-271 (1970). See also, In Re Gault, 387 U.S. 1 (1967).

Could it be possible that procedures, which could not be used to deprive a mother of welfare, could be used to exclude her from the protection of the U.S.Constitution so that she could be killed with impunity from criminal laws? This is preposterous.

The Constitution would not permit any court to condemn even one single Jew to death in a criminal case, but deny any of these procedural rights. Then neither can it permit any court to condemn all Jews in the United States to death, but deny any of these procedural rights, by calling it a civil proceeding, and decreeing the lives of all Jews are not protected by the U.S. Constitution, and it is "liberty" to kill all Jews with impunity from criminal laws.

Any victim is entitled to all the procedural protections before any court can decree that the victim's life is not protected by the Constitution, and the victim can be killed with impunity from criminal statutes.

7. "Even judges ... could be punished criminally for willful deprivations of constitutional rights." Imbler v. Pachtman, 424 U.S. 409 (1976).

would be condemned as murder. Judges may have more sympathy for other victims, but changing the names of the victims will not change the legal result.

The Court maintains its decree "MASS MURDER IS LIBERTY" by refusing to allow truth to work in its Court. No truth seeking process was left unbloodied. It is notorious that truth is not permitted to work in this Court, and that the Court falsifies history to achieve its ends.[8]

The record proves the Court used "iron curtain" procedures, a mock trial without

---

8. "The Court ... has flouted the will of the framers and substituted an interpretation in flat contradiction of the original design.... Such conduct impels one to conclude that the Justices are become a law unto themselves.... It perilously resembles ... Hitlerism." R. Berger, Government by Judiciary: The Transformation of the Fourteenth Amendment 408-12 (1977).

"Court had adjourned in the real world and reconvened in Cloud Cuckooland. [The Justices] began to invent a country suited to their purposes.... They have falsified the American past ... and no one in charge seems prepared to do anything about it." T. Landers, To A Traditionalist, Mr. Ron Sounds So Good, Wall St. J., edit. page, Dec. 27, 1984.

truth, to do the most forbidden thing, to defy the guarantee of life to "any person" so millions of victims could be killed with impunity from criminal statutes; and the Court maintained its killings for fifteen years by using "iron curtain" procedures in mock trials without truth. In the words of the Nuremberg court, "Such a mock trial is not a judicial proceeding but a murder."

These procedures are still another "murder gun" precedent which this Court holds to the head of every American; everyone is now a hostage of this Court; judges can use this "iron curtain" process to destroy anyone. The process makes Roe v. Wade void.[9]

---

9. A more detailed description of the procedures is made in the MOTION TO ALLOW COUNSEL REPRESENT CHILDREN UNBORN AND BORN ALIVE, filed in this case, and incorporated by reference.

5.

DUE PROCESS OF LAW HAS COMPELLED THE U.S. SUPREME COURT TO CONFESS IN COURT THAT IT IS GUILTY OF MASS MURDER, AND TO ADMIT THAT THE UNALIENABLE GUARANTEE OF LIFE TO "ANY PERSON" DOES INCLUDE THE UNBORN.

For the 95th time, the U.S. Supreme Court is accused of criminally defying the guarantee of life to "any person" and exterminating millions of victims whom the U.S. Constitution endeavors to preserve.

For the 71st time, the U.S. Supreme Court is accused of mass murder in violation of state and federal statutes.

For the 75th time, this Court is accused of using criminal procedures to effect and maintain Roe v. Wade killings.

John Marshall would have called Roe v. Wade "treason to the Constitution."[1]

---

1. Chief Justice Marshall wrote that this Court could not extend the Constitution "to objects not...contemplated by its framers." Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. at 332. If the Court usurped such power, it would be "treason to the Constitution." Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. at 404. By decreeing "liberty" to be the very thing which the framers had condemned to be "murder," the Court has indisputably extended the Constitution to objects not contemplated by its framers. For 15 years, "treason to the

But, for fifteen years, the U.S. Supreme Court has never denied the charges, much less attempted to prove the charges to be false. These facts are unparalleled in the legal history of the world.

Under this Court's own rulings, its silence year after year, while the victims

---

Constitution" has masqueraded as "the supreme law of the land."

The Court supplanted the Constitution as the supreme law. Chief Justice Marshall wrote that "the Constitution derives its whole authority" from the consent of the governed. McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. at 403. Yet, the Court now defies this consent; it simply invents a dream world and imposes it on the people by decree. A divided Congress is unable to control this Court, which results in rule by minority.

Thomas Jefferson warned that this Court was "the most dangerous" branch because judges were "installed for life, responsible to no authority (for impeachment is not even a scarecrow)"; and judges twist words to make "anything mean everything or nothing, at pleasure" with judges finally becoming "despots." Thus Roe v. Wade fully explained.

People have lost faith in the simple power of facts to prove: falsehood is called truth; murder is called liberty; treason is called law. This defeat of the consent of the governed as the basis of law is the most momentous revolution in human history. The way out was shown by Abraham Lincoln, who would "call things by their right names, no matter who was offended."

are being killed, is an admission that the charges are true.[2] In the Court's words:

> "Failure to contest an assertion, however, is considered evidence of acquiescence only if it would have been natural under the circumstances to object to the assertion in question." United States v. Hale, 422 U.S. 171, 176 (1975).

The circumstances leave no doubt that due process has compelled the U.S. Supreme Court to confess that the charges are true.

---

2. Under the tacit confession rule, failure to deny a charge is admissible as a confession that the charge is true. 4 Wigmore, Evidence, § 1071-1072 (Chadborn rev. 1972). "Underlying the rule is the assumption that human nature prompts an innocent man to deny false accusations and consequently a failure to deny a particular accusation tends to prove belief in the truth of the accusation." McCormick on Evidence, § 161 (1972). The Court has often affirmed this rule. "(T)he Court has consistently recognized that ... silence in the face of accusation is a relevant fact.... Silence is often evidence of the most persuasive character." Baxter v. Palmigiano, 425 U.S. 308, 319 (1976). And the rule is ancient. As Socrates cross-examined at his trial 2400 years ago: "(Y)ou are silent, and have nothing to say. But is not this rather disgraceful, and a very considerable proof of what I was saying?" "I may assume that your silence gives consent." Plato 41, 45 (Jowett tr. 1942).

First, the evidence makes it as clear as daylight why the Court is silent in the face of the charges: the charges are proved to be true.[3] Truth cannot be proved false.

Second, the charges were made in cases filed pursuant to the Constitution and laws of the United States. Chief Justice John Marshall ruled that judges who "close their eyes on the Constitution" and "condemn to death those victims whom the Constitution endeavors to preserve" commit "crime."[4]

---

3. The Court decreed killings to be "liberty" which States had defined to be "murder." This is mere historical fact; no denial is possible. As John Marshall said, "a fact which has existed cannot be made never to have existed." Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch at 167 (1803).

4. Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch 137, 179-180 (1803). This correctly states the criminal law. Where there is an affirmative duty to act, the deliberate omission to do that duty, which results in death to others, can be prosecuted as homicide. Perkins, Criminal Law 604 (2nd ed. 1969).

The only Nazi to plea guilty at Nuremberg cited this law. When warned of Auschwitz, Speer wrote: "I did not investigate - for I did not want to know what was happening there.... From fear of discovering something which might have made me turn from my course, I closed my eyes." A. Speer, Inside the Third Reich 375-76

The Court had a legal duty to fully hear allegations that Roe v. Wade was wrongly decided. The Court affirmed its duty:

> "(I)ts opinion upon the construction of the Constitution is always open to discussion when it is supposed to have been founded in error, and that its judicial authority should hereafter depend altogether on the force of the reasoning by which it is supported." The Passenger Cases, 7 How. 282, 470 (1849).

Third, the Court's steadfast silence for fifteen years in the face of the scores of accusations is unparalleled in the legal history of the world; the Court cited this very circumstance as making confession by silence more trustworthy.

> "Silence gains more probative weight where it persists in the face of accusation, since it is assumed in such circumstances that the accused would be more likely than not to dispute an untrue accusation." United States v. Hale, 422 U.S. 171, 176 (1975).

Fourth, not only has the Court's silence persisted in the face of repeated accusations, but it has persisted even in the teeth of warnings that its silence was being taken as an admission that the charges are true.

---

(1970). This "deliberate blindness" is complicity in criminal extermination.

Fifth, the charges described judicial crimes not surpassed in all history, that (1) judges had done the most forbidden thing, and defied the unalienable guarantee of life to "any person," the two most important words ever written into law, and criminally exterminated millions of children; (2) the United States was being ruled by the most corrupt decree which the human mind could even imagine: "MASS MURDER IS LIBERTY"; (3) due process of law had compelled the judges to confess to guilt of mass murder; and (4) the judges schemed to reaffirm the legitimacy of their murders in mock trials designed to keep truth from working in all state and federal courts.[5]

---

5. In Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416 (1983), the Court reaffirmed Roe v. Wade by stare decisis in a mock trial without truth.

The parties did not ask the Court to overrule Roe v. Wade. This was done by the amicus curiae brief by the Legal Defense

The United States being ruled by the decree "MASS MURDER IS LIBERTY" is the most catastrophic crime in the history of civilization; it smashes the hopes of the whole human race for a government of laws, and

---

Fund for Unborn Children, as follows: "For the 52nd time, the U.S. Supreme Court is accused in its own court with mass murder." The amicus brief laid out the evidence, and concluded: "THE U.S. SUPREME COURT HAS CONFESSED IN COURT TO GUILT OF CRIMINAL EXTERMINATION, INCLUDING MASS MURDER, AND THIS IS THE LEGAL EQUIVALENT OF THE EXPRESS OVERRULING OF ROE v. WADE." But this Court responded to these arguments by saying:

> And arguments continue to be made, in these cases as well, that we erred in interpreting the Constitution. Nonetheless, the doctrine of stare decisis, while perhaps never entirely persuasive on a constitutional question, is a doctrine that demands respect in a society governed by the rule of law. We respect it today, and reaffirm Roe v. Wade.

Thus, the Court's response to "arguments" that it was guilty of mass murder. When a court rules that its decree "MASS MURDER IS LIBERTY" must be obeyed without a hearing or even a question, then history could not reveal a more murderous mockery of "the rule of law." The Court hid behind stare decisis in a mock trial and used this ruse of law to defraud all lower courts into obeying Roe v. Wade without question.

reduces government to the matter of which murderer can grab power and be obeyed.

Never in the legal history of the world was it more imperative to deny charges if they were untrue. Judges, under solemn legal duty to uphold the law, are accused of mass murder. The evidence is laid out in court. The judges have done the most forbidden thing, and defied the guarantee of life. Little children are being killed. The killings violate criminal statutes. Pictures of the dead are shown to the judges. But for 15 years the judges do not meet the evidence; do not prove it false.

A government of laws can permit only one conclusion to be drawn from these facts: The U.S. Supreme Court was met in court with the truth; truth worked in the only manner in which it was permitted to work; and due process of law compelled this Court to admit, in the most emphatic manner which the mind can imagine, that the words "any person" do include the unborn.

Any judge who closes his eyes on these facts, and chooses to take part in a national scheme to kill little children, in defiance of the guarantee of life to "any person," and criminal statutes, to maintain the decree "MASS MURDER IS LIBERTY," knows he is guilty of complicity in mass murder and criminal defiance of the Constitution.[6]

---

6. Roe v. Wade asserted to legalize killings which statutes had made criminal. Since Roe v. Wade is a mistake of law, all the killings since 1973 can be prosecuted.

The ex post facto provisions of the U.S. Constitution do not apply to judicial decisions which are a mistake of law. Ross v. Oregon, 227 U.S. 150, 161 (1912).

The general rule is that mistake of law is no excuse for breaking the law. R. Perkins, Criminal Law 920 (2d ed. 1969).

The limited affirmative defense of reasonable reliance on an official judicial opinion, thereafter determined to be a mistake of law, does not apply to homicide cases. Model Penal Code, Tentative Draft No. 4, Comments Sec. 2.04, page 138; R. Perkins, Criminal Law 928 (2d ed. 1969).

Thus, the law applied at Nuremberg applies to this case. Obedience to the orders of judicial superiors is no excuse for complicity in murder. United States v. Altstoetter, supra, at 983-985.

Perhaps judges responsible for the Roe v. Wade murders did not believe they were breaking the law. But as Oliver Wendell Holmes wrote: "Ignorance of the law is no excuse for breaking it.... It is no doubt true that there are many cases in which the

In explaining how the Nazi regime got away with its monstrous crimes, Winston Churchill quoted Machiavelli: "Men avenge slight injuries, but not grave ones." The Court knows that truth well; the legal foundation of the United States now rests on the assumption that the gravest crime in history cannot be avenged.

The photo on the last page shows a second stage abortion under Roe v. Wade. If the child were born alive, this Court would be guilty of murder. If the child were born criminal could not have known that he was breaking the law, but ... the lawmaker has determined to make men know and obey." O.W. Holmes, The Common Law 41 (1963).

---

Even if the Supreme Court held a gun to the head of a lower judge, and threatened death unless he obeyed Roe v. Wade, it would not be a defense to murder, for "he ought rather to die himself than escape by the murder of an innocent." 4 Bl. Com. 30.

The law makes a mortal distinction between killing and not killing: (1) any judge who stopped the Roe v. Wade killings, and made a mistake of law, could only be overruled on appeal; (2) but any judge who allows the killings to continue and makes a mistake of law, can be convicted of murder, and be sentenced to death. The law of capital murder is a hard school, where lessons are taught only one time, and mistakes of law are not forgiven.

dead, this Court would be guilty of extermination under 18 U.S.C. § 242.

Truth has worked in this Court; judges cannot stop it. Due process has compelled this Court to admit that the unalienable guarantee of life to "any person" does include the unborn.

CONCLUSION

Merely overruling Roe v. Wade will simply continue its crimes, perhaps on a less extensive scale. The Court misguided this nation and the entire world.

Now the Court must promulgate the truth, that the universal and unalienable guarantee of life to "any person," made in the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments of the U.S. Constitution, do include the unborn, and States have a duty to protect unborn life.

Alan Ernest
Counsel

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

No. 88-605

(34)

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

vs.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal From The United States Court Of Appeals For The Eighth Circuit

BRIEF OF COVENANT HOUSE AND GOOD COUNSEL, INC., AMICI CURIAE

GREGORY A. LOKEN*
Institute for Youth Advocacy
Covenant House
460 West 41st Street
New York, New York 10036
(212) 613-0349

CHRISTOPHER C. GRISANTI
Good Counsel, Inc.
P.O. Box 6068
Hoboken, New Jersey 07030
(201) 795-0637
*Counsel of Record

Counsel for Amici

February 23, 1989

34p

Question Presented

In order to promote its compelling interest in preserving values of responsible parenthood, may a state enact statutes seeking to end its participation in, and even to actively discourage, abortion on demand?

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	PAGE
Question Presented	i
Statement of Interest	1
Summary of the Argument	3
Introduction	4
I. THE STATE HAS A COMPELLING INTEREST IN ENCOURAGING RESPONSIBLE PARENTHOOD FROM THE MOMENT OF CONCEPTION	6
A. The States Are Entitled To Have Grave Concern Over The Quality Of Parental Care Provided To Born And Unborn Children	7
B. The State's Right To Encourage And Enforce Parental Responsibility For Children Voluntarily Conceived Is Firmly Grounded In The Constitution	10
II. THE STATE'S INTEREST IN ENCOURAGING RESPONSIBLE PARENTHOOD IS DEEPLY COMPROMISED BY BEING FORCED TO SANCTION ABORTION ON DEMAND	12
III. THE CHALLENGED STATUTES SHOULD BE UPHELD AS PROPERLY GROUNDED IN A LEGITIMATE STATE INTEREST IN DISCOURAGING ABORTION ON DEMAND	16
A. The Challenged Act Is Valid Under A Reasonable Reading Of This Court's Past Decisions	17
B. If The Challenged Law Is In Conflict With Roe v. Wade, Then That Case Should Be Reconsidered And Overruled To The Extent It Mandates State Approval Of Abortion On Demand	17

	PAGE
C. If Roe v. Wade Is Reconsidered, The Question Of What Affirmative Obligations Toward Parents Must Be Assumed By States With Strict Anti-Abortion Statutes Should Be Left Open	18
Conclusion	19
Appendix

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

PAGE

Cases:

Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health 462 U.S. 416 (1983) 12

Brown v. Board of Education, 349 U.S. 294 (1955) 19

Clark v. Jeter, 486 U.S.—, 100 L.Ed. 2d 465 (1988) 12

Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965) 11

Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980) 17

Lehr v. Robertson, 463 U.S. 248 (1983) 11

Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977) 5, 17

May v. Anderson, 345 U.S. 528 (1953) 11

Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390 (1923) 11

Moore v. City of East Cleveland, 431 U.S. 494 (1977) 11

Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510 (1925) 4, 5

Planned Parenthood Ass'n v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476 (1983) 17

Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158 (1944) 4, 11

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) ..... passim

Rose v. Rose,—U.S.—, 107 S. Ct. 2029 (1987) 11

Skinner v. Oklahoma, 316 U.S. 535 (1942) 11

Stanley v. Illinois, 405 U.S. 645 (1972) 11

Swann v. Charlotte-Macklenburg Board of Education, 402 U.S. 1 (1971) 19

Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynocologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1987) 12, 17, 18

PAGE

Wetmore v. Markoe, 196 U.S. 68 (1904) 11

Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205 (1972) 7, 11

Wissner v. Wissner, 338 U.S. 655 (1950) 11

Statutes:

Rev. Stat. Mo. 1.205.1(1), 1.205.1(2) 16

Rev. Stat. Mo. 188.029 16

Rev. Stat. Mo. 188.205, 188.210, 188.215 16

42 U.S.C.S. s666(a)(5) 11

Other Authorites:

American Humane Association, Trends in Child Abuse and Neglect: A National Perspective (1984) 8

Baron & Strauss, Sexual Stratification, Pornography and Rape in the United States (1984) 4a

I. Chasnoff, Drug Use in Pregnancy: Parameters of Risk (1988) 10

Cherlin, The Weakening Link Between Marriage and the Care of Children (1988) 8, 9

Children's Defense Fund, A Children's Defense Budget FY 1989 (1988) 8, 9

G. Eliot, Daniel Deronda (1876) 4

M. Glendon, Abortion and Divorce in Western Law (1987) 16

C. Grobstein, Science and the Unborn (1988) 15

Herzog, Boys Who Make Babies (1984) 14

Homeless Youth: The Saga of "Pushouts" and "Throwaways" in America, Rep. of the Subcomm. on the Constitution of the Comm. on the Judiciary, U.S. Senate, 97th Cong. 2d Sess. (1980) 7

PAGE

Landesman-Dyer & Emmanual, Smoking During Pregnancy (1979) 9

Marsiglio, Adolescent Fathers in the United States: Their Initial Living Arrangements, Marital Experience and Educational Outcomes (1987) 12

D. Miller et at., Runaways—Illegal Aliens in Their Own Land (1980) 7

National Center for Health Statistics, Monthly Vital Statistics Reports 8, 9

National Research Council, Risking the Future (1987) .. 2, 9, 13

New York City Office of the Comptroller, Whatever Happened to Boarder Babies? (1989) 10

New York State Division of Substance Abuse Services, Children of Substance Abusers in New York State: Trends and Estimates (Treatment Issue Rep. No. 67) 10

Park & Neville, Teenage Fatherhood (1987) 14

Rosen & Johnson, Drug-Addicted Mothers, Their Infants and SIDS (1988) 10

"Seeking Stardom in Joe Clark, the Movie" New York Times, B1 (May 4, 1988) 19

Shaffer & Caton, Runaway and Homeless Youth in New York City: A Report to the Ittleson Foundation (1984) 7

Singh, Adolescent Pregnancy in the United States: An Interstate Analysis (1986) 4a

Stressguth et al., IQ at Age 4 in Relation to Maternal Alcohol Use and Smoking During Pregnancy. (1989) 9, 10

Torres & Forrest, Why do Women Have Abortions? (1988) 6, 14

Tribe, The Supreme Court 1972 Term—Forward: Toward a Model of Roles in the Due Process of Life and Law, 87 Harv. L. Rev. 1 (1973) 18

PAGE

Uhlenberg & Eggebeen, The Declining Well-Being of American Adolescents (1986) 7, 8

United States Department of Commerce, Statistical Abstract of the United States 1987 (1986) 9, 14

United States Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census Marital Status and Living Arrangements Current Population Reports, Series P-20 (1988) 8

United States Department of Health and Human Services, Study Findings Study of National Incidence and Prevalence of Child Abuse and Neglect (1988) 8

Vinovskis & Chase-Lansdale, Hasty Marriages or Hasty Conclusions? (1988) 15

Vinovskis & Chase-Lansdale, Should We Discourage Teenage Marriage? (1987) 15

Weitzman, The Divorce Revolution (1985) 15

K. Wooden, Weeping in the Playtime of Others (1976) 7

Yates et al., A Risk Profile Comparison of Runaway and Non-Runaway Youth (1988) 7

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

vs.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

BRIEF AMICI CURIAE

Covenant House and Good Counsel, Inc. respectfully submit this brief amici curiae in support of the State of Missouri in this case. The written consents of the parties have been obtained and submitted to the Clerk on this date.

Statement of Interest

Covenant House is a New York not-for-profit corporation dedicated to serving homeless and runaway children. With programs currently located in 11 North and Central American cities, Covenant House provides crisis shelter and services, along with some longer-term options, to over 20,000 such children annually. A large number of those receiving care are adolescent mothers and their children: thus in Covenant House's New York program alone over 800 teenage mothers arrive each year bringing with them over 1000 infants and toddlers. Young pregnant women and adolescent fathers comprise another substantial segment of those served.

Covenant House has a strict "open intake" policy, admitting all young people under 21 who seek help, and requires no adherence to particular religious or ethical viewpoints by those who come. Still, based on its long experience working with desperately vulnerable teenagers and children, most of whom have been exiled from their homes by neglect, abuse, or rejection, the agency adheres to a strong pro-life philosophy. No abortions are performed at Covenant House nor is abortion counseling given; in any case, very few of the pregnant young women who come have any interest in that option.[1] (Obtaining an abortion outside the agency is, of course, no ground for penalty or stigma at Covenant House.) The agency daily confronts, in working with the families of the teenagers and children in care, the kind of "opt-out" parenthood which characterizes abortion on demand, and which it files this brief to combat.

Good Counsel, Inc., is a New Jersey not-for-profit corporation dedicated to the shelter and care of homeless unwed mothers and pregnant women. Since its inception in May, 1985, Good Counsel has provided assistance to over 100 such women. Good Counsel runs four homes throughout the New York City metropolitan area, and offers its services as an alternative to women who might otherwise choose abortion.

Women stay at the homes for an average of six months, both before and after delivering their children. Good Counsel offers them food, shelter and the company of other women who share their problems. Women from many different backgrounds have sought shelter, but not surprisingly most are from poor and minority families. A given creed or acceptance of a certain lifestyle is not a requirement for aid at Good Counsel. Those pregnant women who already have children are able to shelter them at Good Counsel during their stay. At the end of their stay, which can last up to a year, Good Counsel assists the mothers in finding more permanent shelter and employment.

As two agencies which have wrestled for years with the dilemmas posed by pregnancy for young women and men, Covenant House and Good Counsel seek through this brief to add a somewhat different point of view to the polarized debate over abortion.

---

[1] This is unsurprising, since the pregnant young women and mothers served by Covenant House are predominantly members of minority groups and from low-income households, both factors generally found to be associated with low interest in abortion. See Nat'l Research Council, 1 Risking the Future 113 (1987).

Summary of the Argument

The bitter debate over abortion that has plagued this Court since Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), has been framed as a contest between, on the one hand, the woman's right to make personal choices about reproduction, and, on the other, the state's interest in "potential" or actual unborn life as well as in maternal health. Left out of that paradigm, however, is another interest of increasingly compelling character: the state's interest in encouraging responsible parenthood among those who do become parents.

Careful consideration of the nature of abortion on demand and its effects on pre- and post-natal parenting strongly suggests that it is in irreconcilable conflict with this substantial state interest. Because the Missouri statutes under review merely seek to remove the State from appearing to sanction abortion on demand, they are plainly constitutional. Yet if they are seen as conflicting unavoidably with Roe v. Wade, that decision should be reconsidered and overruled or limited. In that event the Court should leave open the question whether strict anti-abortion statutes can only be enacted as part of a general state policy to assist needy parents and to protect unwed mothers from discrimination.

INTRODUCTION

To Daniel the words Father and Mother had the altar-fire in them; and the thought of all closest relations of our nature held still something of the mystic power which had made his neck and ears burn in boyhood. [2]

For Daniel Deronda, abandoned as an infant, it was impossible to take for granted the bond between parent and child. And his creator, George Eliot, found "greatness" in her characters insofar as they were "full of conscience and tender heart for the footsteps that tread near and need a leaning-place."[3] It was, in her view, the best kind of "unapplauded heroism" to attend to "the beatings of the hearts that are close to us, as the hunger of the unfledged bird to the breast of its parent."[4]

This Court, too, has always regarded with special solicitude the quiet demands placed on parents by their unfledged children. The responsibilities of parents are both a "right" and a "high duty". Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 535 (1925). It is both the "function and freedom" of parents to prepare children for "obligations the state can neither supply nor hinder". Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158, 166 (1944). In Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), the Court faced squarely the sad truth that parenthood, especially that undertaken outside marriage, can involve a "distressful life", "psychological harm" and other health detriments, and "unwanted stigma". 410 U.S. at 153. The Court recognized, too, "the distress, for all concerned, associated with the unwanted child". Id.

Amici feel that distress keenly, as well, through their work with homeless children unwanted by their parents, and with young pregnant women, mothers and fathers. These young lives are searing indictments of society's indifference, but even more directly of the parents who failed adequately to nurture them, or minimally to prepare them for the complexities of life in the great world. It was not society, after all, which determined their birth or upbringing, but rather concrete men and women making awesome choices about parenthood.

[2] G. Eliot, Daniel Deronda 409 (1978 1st ed. 1876) (Chapt. XXXVII).

[3] Id. at 474 (Chapt. XLIII).

[4] Id.

As Pierce put it, "[t]he child is not the mere creature of the State", 268 U.S. at 535, and the state has therefore a profound interest in encouraging responsible parenthood among its citizens. Yet that interest has not, strangely, been considered directly in the debate over abortion that has gripped this Court for almost two decades. Roe v. Wade and its successors attempted the excruciating task of balancing the "personal liberty" and "privacy" interests of pregnant women against the state's interest in "potential life" and regulation of medicine. Roe v. Wade, supra, 410 U.S. at 147-156. None of those decisions addressed, however—possibly because not clearly discussed by the participants—how the balance of these competing interests should take account of the state's larger efforts to encourage responsible parenthood.[5]

It is the view of Amici that such efforts are of compelling importance to children like the ones they serve—and much more plainly so now than at the time Roe was decided. Yet for reasons both obvious and subtle, state-sanctioned access to abortion on demand operates to frustrate those efforts. Amici thus support the holding of the Court in Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464, 477 (1977) that a state may "favor normal childbirth" over abortion, and support the Missouri statutes here.

[5] The Court in Roe did note that one argument advanced "occasionally" in support of abortion laws is that they "discourage illicit sexual conduct". 410 U.S. at 148. Although the context of sexual conduct resulting in pregnancy may profoundly affect the parents' ability to discharge their duties to a child, the existence of abortion laws as a punitive sanction to discourage sexual misconduct is insupportable. Id. A state's interest in its citizens' affirmative parental obligations is distinct, however, from its interest in their sexual conduct, and by any reasonable measure vastly more substantial. Thus, as discussed infra at 12, men may be held financially and personally accountable for a child from the moment of its conception whether or not his sexual conduct was lawful.

If, however, those statutes are seen as in hopeless collision with Roe v. Wade and its successors, then Amici urge reexamination of those decisions insofar as they give unequivocal constitutional sanction to abortion at any stage of pregnancy.[6] Where a state has clearly manifested in the whole array of its policy a strong concern for supporting responsible parenthood, it should be allowed to discourage abortions on demand as part of that policy.[7] States which offer no affirmative commitment of assistance to parents unable to bear the burdens of their role, however, may be less able to justify strict regulation of abortion.

I. THE STATE HAS A COMPELLING INTEREST IN ENCOURAGING RESPONSIBLE PARENTHOOD FROM THE MOMENT OF CONCEPTION.

Children are not reared by law, by regulation, or by agency. They are raised by people, whether by their natural or adoptive parents, extended family members, or state-designated caretakers. If the young are to survive, to learn, and to flourish, they must be nurtured by attentive human hands and hearts. That is ultimately why the Court has limited state interference with parental rights to those cases involving "harm to the physical or mental [6] Amici note as well their belief, founded in part on working with thousands of young women and their children, that no meaningful definition of human life can exclude the unborn from the moment of conception. While the Constitution may not compel states to provide protection for all human life in all circumstances, Amici believe, Roe to the contrary notwithstanding, that it does not forbid strong state efforts in that direction. This brief, however, takes as its subject only the effect of considering larger issues of parental responsibility in the structure of Roe itself.

[7] Amici address in this analysis only the issue of "abortion on demand"—that is, for purposes of this discussion, those abortions which end pregnancies resulting from fully consensual sexual conduct (ie., excluding rape or incest) and those which do not pose serious health risks for the mothers. Such abortions currently comprise over 90 percent of all those performed. Torres & Forrest, Why Do Women Have Abortions?, 20 Family Planning Persp. 169, 170 (1988). Amici readily recognize that nonconsensual and life-threatening pregnancies pose deeply complex questions beyond the scope of the issues discussed in this brief—or fairly presented on the facts of this case.

health of the child or to the public safety, peace, order, or welfare. . . ." Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205, 230 (1972).

A. The States Are Entitled To Have Grave Concern Over The Quality Of Parental Care Provided To Born And Unborn Children.

Unfortunately in this imperfect age such harms abound; indeed, in the last two decades nothing less than a crisis in parenting has occurred in this country. For Amici this crisis is daily visible in the hundreds of "throwaway" children for which they must provide care. On the heels of a dramatic rise in the number of "runaway" teenagers in the late 1960's and early 1970's,[8] by 1980 some 250,000 children had become truly "homeless"—abandoned or exiled by their parents.[9] These children, whether they ran away or were "pushed out", frequently leave highly abusive home environments,[10] only to find even worse abuse and despair on the street.[11] Yet it is clear that these severely damaged youth are to some very real extent part of what other observers have seen as a major decline in the well-being of American adolescents in the past twenty years—with death rates, out-of-wedlock pregnancy rates, drug and alcohol use, and delinquency rates all rising, while measures of educational achievement have fallen.[12] While not "conclusive", the evidence for this age group suggests [8] See, e.g., D. Miller, et. al., Runaways—Illegal Aliens in Their Own Land 17 (1980); K. Wooden, Weeping in the Playtime of Others 80 (1976).

[9] Homeless Youth: The Saga of "Pushouts" and "Throwaways" in America, Report of the Subcommittee on the Constitution of the Committee on the Judiciary, U.S. Senate, 97th Cong., 2d Sess. 27 (1980).

[10] D. Shaffer & C. Caton, Runaway and Homeless Youth in New York City: A Report to the Ittleson Foundation 64-65 (1984) (50 percent had experienced serious physical abuse at home).

[11] See, e.g., Yates, et al., A Risk Profile Comparison of Runaway and Non-Runaway Youth, 78 Am. J. Pub. Health 820 (1988).

[12] Uhlenberg & Eggebeen, The Declining Well-Being of American Adolescents, 82 The Public Interest 25, 30-34 (1986).

that "there has been a declining commitment of parents to their children over the past several decades."[13]

With regard to smaller children, the situation is no less disturbing. Reports of child maltreatment virtually doubled between 1976 (the first year for which national figures are available) and 1981,[14] then rose again by 90 percent between 1981 and 1986.[15] Because substantiation rates remained the same throughout the entire decade, it is impossible not to conclude, as did one recent report, that "there has been a substantial real increase in the numbers of abused and neglected children."[16] One of the most recent in-depth studies found that over 1.6 million children experienced abuse or neglect in 1986, with small children under age 2 at greatest risk of fatality from abuse.[17] Child homicide rates, which had remained relatively steady in the early 1970's, increased dramatically from 1972 to 1986, by 42 percent for children under one year and 50 percent for children aged 1 to 4.[18]

Abuse and neglect are the most graphic indicators of weakening parent-child ties, but others abound. Thus in the United States the proportion of births out of wedlock virtually tripled from 1965 to 1985, while divorce rates were doubling, leaving 27 percent of children under age 18 in single-parent families or with non-parent relatives by 1987.[19] Children born out of wedlock and

---

[13] Id., at 35.

[14] American Humane Ass'n, Trends in Child Abuse and Neglect: A National Perspective 16 (1984).

[15] Children's Defense Fund, A Children's Defense Budget FY 1989 200 (1988).

[16] Id., at 201.

[17] U.S. Dep't of Health and Human Services, Study Findings, Study of National Incidence and Prevalence of Child Abuse and Neglect: 1988 3-14, 5-15 (1988).

[18] Based on data reported in Nat'l Center for Health Statistics, Monthly Vital Statistics Reports. Between 1971 and 1972 the death-by-homicide rate rose 2 percent for children under age 1, and fell 14 percent for children aged 1 to 4. Id.

[19] Cherlin, The Weakening Link Between Marriage and the Care of Children, 20 Family Planning Persp. 302, 303 (1988); U.S. Dep't of Commerce, Bur. of Census, Marital Status and Living Arrangements: March 1987, Current Pop. Rep., Series P-20, No. 423 21 (1988).

those affected by divorce are extremely likely to live in poverty,[20] in substantial part because their fathers pay little or nothing for their support.[21] If since the 1960's there has been, in the words of one scholar, a "weakening link between marriage and the care of children,"[22] there has also grown up an even more troubling attitude among fathers in particular. For them, as Lenore Weitzman has succinctly put it, "parenting is becoming increasingly optional."[23] Not surprisingly, then, between 1969 and 1985 the proportion of children under 18 living in poverty increased by 45 percent.[24]

The issue of parental commitment to children does not, however, begin with their birth. In the last ten years it has become starkly apparent that the actions of a mother even during the earliest weeks of pregnancy can have tragic consequences for their children. Failure to obtain timely prenatal care, for example, can lead to prematurity and low birthweight.[25] It is thus alarming that such failure has recently been on the increase.[26] Use of alcohol, even in the earliest phases of pregnancy, can substantially affect measures of a child's intelligence at age 4.[27] Smoking during pregnancy increases the chances of miscarriage, stillbirth,

---

[20] Cherlin, supra note 19, at 304.

[21] Children's Defense Fund, supra note 15, at 88-89 ("Data from 1985 and 1986 reveal that the majority of divorced, separated, and never-married mothers were rearing their children with no financial help from the children's fathers." Id. at 88.)

[22] Cherlin, supra note 19, at 303.

[23] The Divorce Revolution 369 (1985).

[24] U.S. Dep't of Commerce, Statistical Abstract of the United States 1987 443 (1986) (13.8% in 1969 to 20.1% in 1985).

[25] See Nat'l Research Council, I Risking the Future 196 (1987), and studies cited therein.

[26] Nat'l Center for Health Statistics, Advance Report of Final Natality Statistics, 1986 37 Monthly Vital Statistics Rep. 11 (7/12/88).

[27] Stressguth, et al., IQ at Age 4 in Relation to Maternal Alcohol Use and Smoking During Pregnancy, 25 Developmental Psych. 3, 8 (1989).

prematurity, and low birthweight.[28] Abuse of illegal drugs poses the direst risks; as one scholar put it, an "infant delivered to a drug-addicted woman is at risk for problems of growth and development as well as neonatal abstinence, and is also at increased risk of infections and exposure to HIV."[29] Even worse, such infants have a 5 to 10 times increased risk of dying of sudden infant death syndrome, with neurobehavioral problems likely to extend into early childhood.[30] Nor should these cases be regarded as exotic: in New York alone, 24,000 children (1 out of every 10) were born to substance abusers in 1986.[31] Many of these children will become "boarder babies" in hospitals, with prospects of long-term, expensive, and destructive placement in foster care.[32]

In face of this evidence, it is impossible to imagine responsible state governments taking a passive stance toward the protection and care of children within their borders. Any reasonable policy toward encouraging proper parental behavior cannot begin any later than the earliest stages of pregnancy; nor can it end until late adolescence. Children are desperately vulnerable throughout their minority.

B. The State's Right To Encourage And Enforce Parental Responsibility For Children Voluntarily Conceived Is Firmly Grounded In The Constitution.

Parents, children, and indeed all family ties enjoy special sanctuary in American law. The Constitution does not counte-[28] Id. at 9; Landesman-Dyer & Emmanuel, Smoking During Pregnancy, 19 Teratology 119 (1979).

[29] Chasnoff, Drug Use in Pregnancy: Parameters of Risk, 35 Ped. Clinics N.Am. 1403, 1410 (1988).

[30] Rosen & Johnson, Drug-Addicted Mothers, Their Infants, and SIDS, Ann. N.Y. Acad. Sciences 89, 92 (1988).

[31] N.Y.S. Div. of Substance Abuse Services, Children of Substance Abusers in New York State: Trends and Estimates 15 (1988) (Treatment Issue Rep. No. 67).

[32] See N.Y.C. Office of the Comptroller, Whatever Happened to the Boarder Babies? (1989).

nance state action to separate family members without cause. Moore v. City of East Cleveland, 431 U.S. 494 (1977); Stanley v. Illinois, 405 U.S. 645 (1972). Nor does it permit interference in the sensitive educational and emotional decisions of family members. Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205 (1972); Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965); Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390 (1923). The Constitutional rights protecting the family are "rights far more precious than property rights," May v. Anderson, 345 U.S. 528, 533 (1953), and are among the "basic civil rights of man." Skinner v. Oklahoma, 316 U.S. 535, 541 (1942).

Yet this protection is not grounded in mere sentiment. The unique constitutional rights granted the family, and parents in particular, are mirrored by the great duties demanded of those who have voluntarily entered into that relationship. As this Court not long ago observed, "the rights of the parents are a counterpart of the responsibilities they have assumed." Lehr v. Robertson, 463 U.S. 248, 257 (1983). Indeed, "the family itself is not beyond regulation" when the state is acting reasonably to "guard the general interest in youth's well being". Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158, 166 (1944).

While the special role of the states in family law has limited the occasions on which this Court has faced the exact scope of parental responsibility toward children, those opportunities have not been fruitless. Thus in garnishment cases the Court has long recognized the special obligations of parent to child. See Rose v. Rose,_U.S._, 107 S.Ct. 2029 (1987) (exception to federal anti-garnishment statute for child support payments); Wissner v. Wissner, 338 U.S. 655, 659-660 (1950) (although wife could not attach husband's life insurance, Court recognized possible exception for child support); Wetmore v. Markoe, 196 U.S. 68, 74 (1904) (child support payments cannot be discharged in bankruptcy). As Justice O'Connor has noted,

> Our Anglo-American tradition accords a special sanctity to the support obligation. Unlike other debts, for example, the obligation to support spouse and child is enforced on threat of contempt.

Rose, 107 S.Ct. at 2040 (concurring). Support of children is not a mere "contractual obligation or . . . a debt due", but rather a "policy of the law" deeply rooted in our values. Wetmore, 196 U.S. at 74.

Most crucially for this case, that obligation begins, for men at least, at their child's very conception. It is the universal policy of the states to permit paternity actions against fathers whether or not they have had any contact with mother or child since conception, actions which may be brought throughout the child's minority. See Clark v. Jeter, 486 U.S._, 100 L.Ed.2d 465 (1988); 42 U.S.C. §666(a)(5) (Supp. 1988). The risk assumed by a man in voluntary sexual intercourse is that a child will be conceived and born, a child that will require an extended commitment at least of financial support, and usually of shared custody and care.[33] Against this risk the Constitution erects no shield.

II. THE STATE'S INTEREST IN ENCOURAGING RESPONSIBLE PARENTHOOD IS DEEPLY COMPROMISED BY BEING FORCED TO SANCTION ABORTION ON DEMAND.

For women, by contrast, abortion on demand[34] creates an entirely different parent-child relationship. Except to protect maternal health, no state may interfere with a mother's decision to end her unborn child's life until the end of the second trimester. Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747, 768-69 (1987); Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416, 435-38 (1983).[35] Parenthood thus remains optional for them until fetal "viability" is reached.

[33] Thus a remarkably high proportion even of unmarried teenage fathers live with their child. Marsiglio, Adolescent Fathers in the United States: Their Initial Living Arrangements, Marital Experience and Educational Outcomes, 19 Family Planning Persp. 240 (1987).

[34] For an explanation of amici's use of the term "abortion on demand", see note 7, supra.

From the standpoint of encouraging responsible parenthood among the population generally, this six-month grace period comes, in Amici's view, at a heavy price. In three ways the existence of abortion on demand cuts to the heart of parental commitment: attitudes of mothers toward prenatal behavior, attitudes of fathers toward their paternal obligations, and larger societal views of children. Because the "trimester" and "viability" lines are wholly irrelevant to any realistic view of parental duties, state-sanctioned abortion on demand radically conflicts with state interests in insuring the well-being of all children.

Early prenatal care and abstention from high-risk behavior during pregnancy are, as discussed above,[36] crucial to the life and health of children. A state policy encouraging or appearing to encourage abortion on demand sends a quite different message to pregnant women—that the life (or "potential" life) they carry is, until "viability", subject to termination at any time it becomes inconvenient. By the time the third trimester is reached, of course, the unborn child—now suddenly invested with legal personhood—may be permanently damaged by neglect or abuse. For young women not initiated in the delicate medical/legal debate over the nuances of "trimesters", any responsibility for personal sacrifice or even prudent medical attention may seem fanciful as long as parenthood remains strictly optional.

For fathers, by contrast, abortion on demand presents an often excruciating dilemma. Some are eager to become parents [35] In Roe v. Wade, of course, the Court explicitly denied that it was creating a right for every woman to "terminate her pregnancy at whatever time, in whatever way, and for whatever reason she alone chooses", 410 U.S. at 153, but as later interpreted that decision has come to mean exactly that, at least through the first two trimesters. Thornburgh, supra, 476 U.S. at 782 (Burger, C.J., dissenting).

[36] Supra, at 9-10.

and suffer a deep sense of loss after an abortion.[37] Many others, including many encountered by Amici in their programs, are like "Joe":

> Joe came to the group very shaken and reported that Liz, his casual paramour of some months earlier, had not had an abortion after all. . . . Joe told us he was very angry with Liz. She deceived him. Then he told us that really hadn't had very much to do with her decision-making and certainly not with its implementation. Joe was clearly troubled. He developed a sleep disturbance and started to drink excessively. . . . He thought he hated Liz. But he couldn't just shrug it off. That kid was his, whatever that meant.[38]

What it all too often means in the long run, of course, is paternal flight, instability, or non-support.[39] In psychological terms this is not terribly difficult to understand. Why feel any commitment to a child whose birth was solely at the mother's discretion? Why stick around after having been "deceived"? That this reaction is callous toward his partner and grossly irresponsible toward his child may be obvious to an observer, but it is nevertheless all too typical a scenario, with often devastating consequences for the innocent child.

The question of how paternal commitment to children is affected by the existence of abortion on demand becomes especially nagging upon scrutiny of out-of-wedlock birth rates. From 1975 to 1983, while the number of abortions in this country was rising by 46 percent,[40] the number of births to unmarried women was [37] It is worth noting, in this regard, that only a small minority of women having abortions cite the desire of the husband or partner as a reason for the decision. Torres & Forrest, supra note 6, at 170 (23 percent).

---

[38] Herzog, Boys Who Make Babies, in Adolescent Parenthood 65, 69 (M. Sugar ed. 1984).

[39] See Park & Neville, Teenage Fatherhood, in Nat'l Research Council, 2 Risking the Future 145, 153-156 (1987).

[40] Statistical Abstract, supra note 24, at 69.

climbing 60 percent.[41] (Total live births, by contrast, rose by only 15 percent during those years.)[42] More tellingly, perhaps, a correlational analysis of abortion ratios and illegitimacy ratios for the 50 states and the District of Columbia reveals a strong positive relationship between the two.[43] That is, in states where women are more likely to terminate their pregnancies through abortion they are also more likely to bear a child out of wedlock.[44] In light of these facts it can only appear that the Court in Roe v. Wade was mistaken in believing that, at least on a society-wide basis, access to abortion would reduce the number of "unwanted" children or of mothers suffering from the "stigma" of being unmarried. 410 U.S. at 153. Abortion on demand appears to operate to attenuate the ties between parents, and between fathers and children.[45]

On an even larger scale, moreover, state-sanctioned abortion on demand is extremely difficult to reconcile with efforts of the state to combat "optional" parenthood[46] in other areas. This is so precisely because "viability," the all-or-nothing dividing line between absolute "reproductive freedom" and irrevocable parenthood, is a meaningless concept in the real world of parenting. No child is capable of living without intensive support and care until at least their teenage years.[47] How can a state reasonably tell its

---

[41] Id. at 61.

[42] Id. at 59.

[43] Details of that survey are discussed in Appendix A, infra.

[44] See Appendix A, infra.

[45] It is important to note, in this context, that children of married teenage mothers seem to fare better on important measures of adjustment than those of the unmarried. Vinovskis & Chase-Lansdale, Hasty Marriages or Hasty Conclusions, The Public Interest 128, 131 (Winter 1988); Vinovskis & Chase-Lansdale, Should We Discourage Teenage Marriage? The Public Interest 23, 33-36 (Spring 1987).

[46] See Weitzman, supra note 23, at 369.

[47] Conversely, if "viability" is conceived in strictly biological terms, test-tube fertilization and artificial insemination now mean that day-old preembryos can grow to maturity wholly apart form their biological parent. C. Grobstein, Science & The Unborn 8-10 (1988). It has thus become a concept meaningless at both ends of the spectrum.

citizens not to push out, abuse, or abandon their children while proclaiming they have absolute liberty to do exactly those things to "non-viable" offspring? Amici do not contend that any causal relationship exists between the rise of abortion on demand since the early 1970's and the decline, discussed supra at 7-10, in the overall well-being of American children throughout that period. Still, it is precisely the attitude on which abortion on demand is premised—opt-out parenthood—that also stands behind so many blights on the lives of born children.

In comparison with European nations, American law is extreme in its allowance of abortion with virtually no restrictions throughout the first and second trimesters.[48] Although a great diversity exists among developed countries in the extent to which abortion is legally allowed, most of them flatly eschew abortion on demand.[49] Only the most jaundiced view of parenthood, and callous disregard of children's welfare, could induce a state to do otherwise.

III. THE CHALLENGED STATUTES SHOULD BE UPHELD AS PROPERLY GROUNDED IN A LEGITIMATE STATE INTEREST IN DISCOURAGING ABORTION ON DEMAND.

The State of Missouri has chosen not to endorse the concept of optional parenthood in its statutes regulating abortion. The law under review challenges parents, through its preamble, to respect the "protectable interests in life, health and well-being" of unborn children. RSMo 1.205.1(1), 1.205.1 (2) (1986). It requires doctors to test with particular care of the likelihood of an unborn child's viability. RSMo 188.029 (1986). And it withholds from support for elective abortions all state funds, employees, and facilities. RSMo 188.205, 188.210, 188.215 (1986).

---

[48] M. Glendon, Abortion and Divorce in Western Law 14, 22-24 (1987).

[49] Id. at 14.

A. The Challenged Act Is Valid Under A Reasonable Reading Of This Court's Past Decisions.

In doing these things, the statute appears to go no further than the narrow boundaries marked by Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297, 314-318 (1980) (so long as statute "places no governmental obstacle in the path of a woman who chooses to terminate her pregnancy" it may "encourage alternate activity" through allocation of state resources); Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464, 473-474 (1977) (same); and Planned Parenthood Ass'n v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476, 482-486 (1983) (upholding second-physician requirement to protect fetal viability). To the extent that Thornburgh, supra, 476 U.S. at 768-771 (rejecting safeguards for viable unborn children), is to the contrary, it should be overruled as violative of the state's interest in protecting children from parental maltreatment.

B. If The Challenged Law Is In Conflict With Roe v. Wade, Then That Case Should Be Reconsidered And Overruled To The Extent It Mandates State Approval Of Abortion On Demand.

Missouri's statute poses no threat to its citizens' freedom to obtain abortions until "viability." Yet it does evince a strong state policy discouraging abortion on demand, even in the first trimester. To that admittedly limited extend, it may collide with the spirit, if not the letter, of Roe v. Wade, supra.

In such a collision it must be the statute, and not Roe, which survives. By ignoring the compelling interest of the states to encourage parental responsibility among those who have voluntarily assumed the risk of parenthood, Roe's analysis of the competing interests was tragically incomplete. Men who engage in sexual intercourse are liable to the full responsibility of parenthood from the moment of conception. If any children are to have reasonable assurances of healthy birth and productive life, that same standard must be applied to the mothers that carry them.[50] And, too, in Amici's view a proper respect for human life makes Roe's dismissal of concern for the unborn seem perverse and extraconstitutional. See, Thornburgh, supra, 476 U.S. at 792-794 (White, J., dissenting).

C. If Roe v. Wade Is Reconsidered, The Question Of What Affirmative Obligations Toward Parents Must Be Assumed By States With Strict Anti-Abortion Statutes Should Be Left Open.

In saying that Roe conflicts with the states' compelling interest in parental responsibility, however, Amici are all too well aware of the tragic burdens borne by ill-prepared young parents. Nor do Amici discount the long history of discrimination against women that is implicitly recognized by Roe's account of the consequences of unwanted motherhood. 410 U.S. at 153. See, Tribe, The Supreme Court 1972 Term—Foreword: Toward a Model of Roles in the Due Process of Life and Law, 87 Harv. L. Rev. 1, 41 (1973). Finally, it would be exceedingly optimistic to assume that both these concerns are adequately addressed in the legal regimes of most states.

While Roe is in error, then, it may not be possible, on the record of this case, fully to elaborate a correct alternative. Amici believe, above all, that a decision to overrule Roe should at the same time leave open a subsidiary question: do states which choose to enact strict controls on abortion thereby assume an affirmative duty to provide reasonable assistance to needy expectant parents, as well as safeguards against discrimination against unwed mothers? Thus it may be impossible to justify, even on a rational basis analysis, a strict anti-abortion statute resting on the state's concern for responsible parenthood when other parts of the state's code belie such concern. And it may lie within the equitable power of the federal courts to fashion remedies against longstanding discriminatory practices toward single mothers based on their gender. Cf. Swann v. Charlotte-Mecklenburg Board of Education, 402 U.S. 1, 11-14 (1971); Brown v. Board of Education, 349 U.S. 294, 299-300 (1955).[51]

[50] Roe explicitly rejected, of course, the purported "unlimited right to do with one's body as one pleases". 410 U.S. at 154. It is therefore not possible to distinguish mothers from fathers on the simple basis of who carries the unborn child. But see note 7, supra. Yet as the social and economic circumstances of younger men and women approach nearer parity, Roe's other factors related to the "life and future" of the parent also become less persuasive distinctions.

CONCLUSION

Everybody look at her like she a mistake . . . . But she just a baby. When she look at me and I look at her she don't know she a mistake.[52]

In the long struggle over abortion on demand, it has been the grave misfortune of this Court to see mistakes when it ought to see babies. Most parents are luckier; they understand, and bravely assume, the most basic of human tasks from the moment they know of life in the womb. For others it does no good to pretend that society can treat parenthood as lightly as a consumer contract; it is not cancelable at will out of dissatisfaction. If the next generation is to receive the care and nurturance it deserves, states must discourage the concept of provisional parenthood that is central to abortion on demand.

The challenged Missouri statutes do no more than this, and their invalidation by the lower courts was plain error. Surely the time has come, in this nightmarish struggle over the unborn, to embrace unapplauded heroism and to shelter unfledged hearts.

[51] It is quite possible, on the other hand, that with Roe's demise the political processes of the various states will satisfactorily address these problems. See Glendon, supra note 48, at 49-50, 53-58.

[52] N.Y. Times, May 4, 1988, at B1, col.1 (statement of young would-be actress about effects of birth of child on her career).

The decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit should be reversed.

Respectfully submitted,

GREGORY A. LOKEN*
Institute for Youth Advocacy
Covenant House
460 W. 41st Street
New York, New York 10036
(212) 613-0349

CHRISTOPHER C. GRISANTI
Good Counsel, Inc.
P.O. Box 6068
Hoboken, New Jersey 07030
(201) 795-0637

*Counsel of Record

Counsel for Amici

APPENDIX

APPENDIX A

ABORTION AND OUT-OF-WEDLOCK BIRTHS

An Interstate Analysis

It was the perception of Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 153 (1973), that access to abortion would lessen "the distress, for all concerned, associated with the unwanted child", especially when born to an "unwed mother". If that is true on a large scale, greater resort to abortion should reduce the percentage of children born to unmarried women. In areas where abortion is less common—for reasons of access or community resistance—the percentage of children born to unwed mothers should be greater.

To test this hypothesis on a limited scale, 1985 figures were obtained for each of the 50 states and the District of Columbia in two categories. First, the ratio of abortions to live births was calculated for each locale—a number indicating how likely it is that pregnant women will resort to abortion.[1] Second, the percentage of all births in 1985 that were to unmarried mothers was obtained for each jurisdiction—an imperfect-but-hard-to-improve measure of the likelihood their babies were "wanted", in Roe's formulation.[2]

The two rates for each jurisdiction are listed below, along with rankings in each category:

Births to Unwed Mothers & Abortions for 1985

State	Abortion Rate[1]	Ranking	Out of Wedlock Birth Rate[2]	Ranking
Alabama	32.4	28	24.9	12
Alaska	26.9	31	18.2	31
Arizona	37.6	22	23.9	15
Arkansas	15.4	46	22.4	17
California	64.6	5	24.6	13

State	Abortion Rate[1]	Ranking	Out of Wedlock Birth Rate[2]	Ranking
Colorado	44.2	14	16.6	40
Connecticut	49.7	8	21.3	23
Delaware	47.7	10	26.2	8
D.C.	242.3	1	56.7	1
Florida	46.8	11	25.8	9
Georgia	39.8	18	25.7	11
Hawaii	61.0	6	19.9	24
Idaho	15.1	47	10.8	50
Illinois	35.8	23	25.7	10
Indiana	19.9	43	19.8	25
Iowa	24.1	39	13.6	46
Kansas	25.6	34	14.7	45
Kentucky	18.6	45	18.5	28
Louisiana	23.6	40	28.6	4
Maine	29.3	29	17.8	35
Maryland	43.3	15	29.1	3
Massachusetts	49.3	9	18.4	30
Michigan	46.7	12	18.1	33
Minnesota	25.0	35	15.1	43
Mississippi	13.6	48.5	32.9	2
Missouri	26.1	32.5	21.6	21
Montana	27.5	30	16.8	39
Nebraska	26.1	32.5	14.8	44
Nevada	64.7	4	15.6	42
New Hampshire	45.5	13	13.4	47
New Jersey	65.5	3	22.3	18
New Mexico	22.0	41	26.3	7
New York	75.2	2	28.1	5
N. Carolina	38.2	21	22.1	19
N. Dakota	24.3	37	11.5	49

State	Abortion Rate[1]	Ranking	Out of Wedlock Birth Rate[2]	Ranking
Ohio	35.7	24.5	21.8	20
Oklahoma	24.7	36	17.2	37
Oregon	38.6	20	18.7	27
Pennsylvania	35.0	24.5	22.8	16
Rhode Island	59.6	7	19.6	26
S. Carolina	21.6	42	26.4	6
S. Dakota	13.6	48.5	17.9	34
Tennessee	33.5	26	24.3	14
Texas	32.7	27	16.4	41
Utah	11.9	50	8.7	51
Vermont	42.7	17	17.1	38
Virginia	39.7	19	21.4	22
Washington	44.1	16	18.5	29
W. Virginia	19.0	44	17.4	36
Wisconsin	24.2	38	18.1	32
Wyoming	11.4	51	13.3	48

If the Roe hypothesis is true, then there should be a significant negative correlation between abortion and out-of-wedlock-birth rates. In fact, however, the Pearson coefficient (r) for the two rates is not only positive but strongly positive ($r = .71$, $p, < .01$). Spearman's Rho rank-order coefficient is also significantly positive for the two sets of data (.31, $p < .05$). It appears, then, that states with higher abortion rates will in fact have higher out-of-wedlock birth rates than other states.

Is this the result of skewing in the data? Both the District of Columbia and Mississippi, in particular, seem to present special cases. Both have extremely high minority populations; one is wholly urban, while the other is by far the poorest state in the nation, and one of the most rural. Because they have the two highest out-of-wedlock birth rates but are at opposite ends of the rankings on abortion, they tend to distort the results. If both are removed from the calculus the correlation coefficient declines to r = .36, still a significantly positive correlation at a 95 percent confidence level. (Removing D.C. alone reduces r to + .26 and the confidence level to 90 percent.)

Are other, cultural factors at work which actually have a greater effect on the rates? Two possible indicators of such underlying factors, state-by-state sales of sex magazines and state-by-state "status of women" indices,[3] proved to have no significant association with the out-of-wedlock birth rate. Adult abortion may, however, be something of a cultural factor in its own right: one interstate correlational study found strong positive correlations between the adult abortion rate in individual states and the teenage pregnancy and abortion rates.[4]

It is impossible to suggest causal relationships on the basis of these various statistical findings. But it does seem clear that Roe's hypothesis as framed above is flatly incorrect: increased access to abortion has, if anything, an inflating effect on births to unwed mothers. That both abortions and out-of-wedlock births increased at similarly high rates in recent times—far more than fertility generally—only serves to reinforce that impression.[5]

---

[1] Figures computed using those provided in Henshaw, et al., Abortion Services in the United States, 1984 and 1985, 19 Family Planning Persp. 63 (1987), and Children's Defense Fund, A Call to Action to Make Our Nation Safe for Children: A Briefing Book on the Status of American Children in 1988 18 (1988).

[2] Figures computed from Children's Defense Fund, supra note 1, at 18.

[3] The figures were taken from Baron & Strauss, Sexual Stratification, Pornography, and Rape in the United States, in Pornography and Sexual Aggression 185, 190-191 (Donnerstein & Malamuth ed. 1984).

[4] Singh, Adolescent Pregnancy in the United States: An Interstate Analysis, 18 Family Planning Persp. 210, 215 (1986). Unfortunately this study did not specifically examine out-of-wedlock pregnancies among teenagers.

[5] See text at 15, supra.

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court Of The United States

October Term, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants

vs.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

AMICUS ALABAMA LAWYERS FOR UNBORN CHILDREN, INC.'S BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

JOHN J. COLEMAN, III*
P.O. Box 306
Birmingham, Alabama 35201
(205) 251-8100

THOMAS E. MAXWELL
P.O. Box 130675
Birmingham, Alabama 35213
(205) 879-0000

Attorneys for Amicus Alabama Lawyers for Unborn Children, Inc.
Counsel of Record*

February 23, 1989

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. May the Court logically avoid reconsidering a judicial decision recognizing an implied constitutional right when the Court has before it state efforts to regulate that right, especially if in so doing the Court could lose control of the constitutional issue to a less suitable branch of government?

2. May the Court both preserve the constitutional concept of individual rights yet also determine who has standing as a "person" to claim constitutional protection using a criterion that decides standing based on subjective worthiness judgments distinguishing among objectively distinct human individuals?

3. Does the equal protection clause mandate that a state interpret its homicide laws to allow a woman to abort a life-threatening or rape-induced pregnancy but to protect the preborn child's right to life over the woman's right to privacy in all other cases?

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
QUESTIONS PRESENTED	i
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES	iii
STATEMENT OF INTEREST	2
SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT	2
ARGUMENT	4
I. This Court Must Reconsider Roe v. Wade	4
II. Biological Reality And Constitutional Precedent Mandate Rejection Of Roe's Characterization Of The Unborn As Nonpersons	9
III. The Court Can Resolve The Conflict Of Abortion Consistent With The Constitution By Treating Both Of The Competing Individuals Like Adults	20
CONCLUSION	28
CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE	29

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases:	Page
Akron v. Akron Ctr. for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416 (1983)	5
Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186 (1962)	6
Baker v. Dallas Hotel Co., 73 F.2d 824 (5th Cir. 1934)	24
Boys Markets v. Retail Clerks Union Local 770, 398 U.S. 235 (1970)	5
Brandenburg v. Ohio, 395 U.S. 444 (1969)	21
Brown v. Board of Education, 349 U.S. 294 (1955)	5
Buck v. Bell, 274 U.S. 200 (1928)	9
Chaplinsky v. New Hampshire, 315 U.S. 568 (1942)	21
Crosswhite v. Shelby Operating Corp., 30 S.E.2d 673 (Va. 1944)	24
Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973)	9
Dunn v. Blumstein, 405 U.S. 330 (1972)	20
Edelman v. Jordan, 415 U.S. 651 (1973)	5
Ex Parte McCardle, 74 U.S. (7 Wall.) 506 (1869)	7
Floyd v. Anders, 440 F. Supp. 535 (D.S.C. 1977)	9, 12
Hamner v. Dagenhart, 247 U.S. 251 (1918)	5
Korematsu v. United States, 323 U.S. 214 (1944)	20
Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537 (1896)	5, 7
Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486 (1969)	6
Reproductive Health Service v. Webster, 851 F.2d 1071 (8th Cir. 1988)	5
Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973)	passim
Schenck v. United States, 249 U.S. 47 (1919)	21

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES — (Continued)

Cases: Page

Scott v. Sandford, 60 U.S. (19 How.) 393 (1857) 8, 9, 17

Shapiro v. Thompson, 394 U.S. 618 (1969) 20

Slaughter-House Cases, 83 U.S. (16 Wall.) 36 (1873) 7, 8

The Antelope, 23 U.S. 66 (1848) 9

Thornburg v. American College of Obstetrics and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986) 16

United States v. Carolene Products Co., 304 U.S. 144 (1938) 7

United States v. Darby, 312 U.S. 100 (1941) 5

Washington v. Davis, 426 U.S. 229 (1976) 21

West Virginia State Board of Education v. Barnett, 319 U.S. 624 (1943) 8

Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539 (1974) 18

Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356 (1886) 20

Statutes and Constitutional Provisions

Model Penal Code §210.0(3) 21

R. S. Mo. §1.205 ..... 4, 5

R. S. Mo. §188.025 4

R. S. Mo. §188.029 4

R. S. Mo. §§188.205-15 ..... 4, 5

U.S. Const. amend. V, XIV 4

Commentators:

Bickel, The Morality of Consent (1975) 6

Boyle, That the Fetus Should be Considered a Legal Person, 24 Am.J.Juris. 59 6

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES — (Continued)

Commentators: Page

Bury My Heart at Wounded Knee (New York 1972) 9

Byrn, An American Tragedy: The Supreme Court on Abortion, 41 Fordham L.Rev. 807 (1973) ["Byrn, An American Tragedy"] 6, 11

Byrn, The Abortion Amendments: Policy in the Light of Precedent, 18 St. Louis U.L.J. 380 (1974) 7, 12

Coleman, Roe v. Wade: A Retrospective Look at A Judicial Oxymoron, 29 St. Louis U.L.J. 7 (1984) 6

Comment, Homo Sapienism: Critique of Roe v. Wade and Abortion, 39 Alb.L.Rev. 856 (1975) 6

Dellapenna, The History of Abortion: Technology, Morality, and Law, 40 U.Pitt.L.Rev. 359 (1979) 6, 11

Destro, Abortion and the Constitution: The Need for a Life-Protective Amendment, 63 Calif. L.Rev. 1250 (1975) 7, 11

Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, 82 Yale L.J. 920 (1973) 7

Epstein, Substantive Due Process by Any Other Name: The Abortion Cases, 1973 Sup. Ct. Rev. 159 ..... 3, 7

Freund, Sutherland, Howe, and Brown, Constitutional Law 667 (4th Ed. 1977) 6

Galebach, A Human Life Statute, 7 Human Life Review 3 (1981) 7

Glenn, Abortion and Inalienable Rights in Classical Liberty, 20 Am.J.Juris. 62 (1975) 3

Krimmel and Foley, Abortion: An Inspection Into The Nature of Human Life and Potential Consequences of Legalizing Its Destruction, 46 U.Cin.L.Rev. 725 (1977) 13

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES — (Continued)

Commentators: Page

Means, The Law of New York Concerning Abortion and the Status of the Fetus, 1664-1968: A Case of Cessation of Constitutionality (pt. 1), 14 N.Y.L.F. 411 (1968) 11

Means, The Phoenix of Abortional Freedom: Is a Penumbra or Ninth-Amendment Right About to Arise from the Nineteenth-Century Legislative Ashes of a Fourteenth-Century Common-Law Liberty?, 17 N.Y.L.F. 335 (1971) 11

Regan, Rewriting Roe v. Wade, 77 Mich. L. Rev. 1569 (1979) 23

Rice, The Dred Scott Case of the Twentieth Century, 10 Hous. L. Rev. 1059 (1973) 7

Sherry, The Law of Innkeepers, §1.6 (rev. ed. 1981) 26

Simes, Future Interests, 132 (1951) 18

Uddo, A Wink from the Bench: The Federal Courts and Abortion, 53 Tul.L.Rev. 398 (1979) 7

Witherspoon, Reexamining Roe; Nineteenth-Century Statutes and the Fourteenth-Amendment, 17 St. Mary's L.J. 29 ..... 11, 12

Medical Authorities:

American College of Obstetrics and Gynecologists, Terminology Bull., No. 1 (Sept. 1965) 15

Arey, Developmental Anatomy, 55 (1974) 13

Asimov, The Genetic Code, 20 (1962) 13

Brash, Human Embryology, 2 (1956) 13

Gilbert, Biography of the Unborn, 13 (1963) 13

Greenhill & Friedman, Biological Principles and Modern Practice of Obstetrics, 23 (1974) 13

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES — (Continued)

Medical Authorities: Page

Guttmacher, Life in the Making, 55 (1933) 15

Hamilton & Mossman, Human Embryology, 14 (1972) 13

Krieger, The Human Reproductive System, 88 (1969) 13

Langman, Medical Embryology, 3 (1975) 13

Lauria, Thirty-Six Lectures in Biology, 146 (1975) 13

Moore, The Developing Human, 1 (1977) 13

Patten, Human Embryology, 43 (1968) 13

Roberts, An Introduction to Medical Genetics, 1 (1963) 13

Simpson & Beck, Life: An Introduction to Biology, 139 (1965) 13

Thomas, Introduction to Human Embryology, 52 (1968) 13

Torrey, Morphogenesis of the Veriebrates, 47 (1971) 13

Waddington, Principles of Embryology, 45 (1958) 13

Hearings Before the Subcommittee on Separation of Powers on S. 158 ..... 13, 14, 17

Other Authorities:

1867 Ohio S.J. App. 233 19

Restatement (Second) of Torts §314 (1965) 21, 22

Restatement (Second) of Torts §314 A(2) (1965) 24, 26

Restatement (Second) of Torts §322 ..... 22, 24, 26

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court Of The United States

October Term, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,

Appellants

vs.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,

Appellees

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

AMICUS ALABAMA LAWYERS FOR UNBORN CHILDREN, INC.'S BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

Amicus Alabama Lawyers for Unborn Children, Inc., ("Alaw-Life") hereby submit this Brief in support of Appellants William L. Webster, et al.[1]

[1]Amicus Alaw-Life is exempt from Supreme Court Rule 28.1. Over 125 Alabama lawyers comprise its membership.

STATEMENT OF INTEREST

Alabama Lawyers for Unborn Children, Inc. ("Alaw-Life") respectfully submits this Amicus Brief for the Court's consideration. Both parties consent. A-1, A-2. Alaw-Life members oppose abortion in most cases and represent in legal proceedings the interests of preborn persons and those who advocate their interests, often against abortion clinics and allied governmental entities. This Court's decision in this case and the inherent reconsideration of Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), directly affects those interests. Alaw-Life believes that the perspective held by its members, that preborn persons are entitled to constitutional standing as "persons" and the same degree of constitutional protection afforded other "persons", either will not be addressed or addressed adequately by the parties and other amici.

The parties did not address this issue in their respective Jurisdictional Statement and Motion to Affirm even though evaluation of the validity of state abortion regulations clearly requires addressing whether the State is constitutionally BOUND to recognize and protect these rights of preborn persons. Alaw-Life does not believe that either party will address this issue in their briefs on the merits. Alaw-Life is aware of only a few of the other amici that even address the "personhood" issue and of none who resolve the issue in the manner proposed here — protecting preborn persons from abortion except in rape-induced or life-threatening pregnancies because respect for every person's individual rights requires it.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), had as its goal the vindication of individual rights. 410 U.S. at 129, 152-54, 165-66. The Bill of Rights concept of individual rights is that an individual may exercise autonomy free from governmental intrusion except to the extent necessary to protect others from harm; that an individual may claim governmental protection from harm by others on the same terms that the government provides it to others; and that the Court is best suited to resolve conflicts involving the freedom from governmental intrusion and the right to claim governmental protection.[2] This Court must reconsider Roe because Roe provides the starting point to resolution of the regulatory controversy involved here. Roe — itself purporting to vindicate individual rights while adopting a result inconsistent with individual rights — involves a conflict of the kind the Court is best suited to resolve, and the Court will lose control over the issue to a less suitable branch of government if it does not act soon.

Roe must be overruled. Our individual rights depend upon a definition of standing as a "person" to claim constitutional protections that rests upon criteria that are objectively verifiable independent of governmental control; Roe adopts a definition of "person" dependent upon "worthiness" judgments within governmental control. No autonomy of right or protection of right exists if government is allowed to select who among individuals is worthy to have "rights". Choices must be between rights, not between individuals. Otherwise, these rights become privileges given to those the government deems worthy and withdrawn from everyone else.

Reversing Roe provides a starting point to deal with abortion in a manner that enables every individual, preborn and born, to claim freedom from governmental intrusion and protection from harm as a matter of right. Recognition of the principles of self defense and individual responsibility mandate that the Constitution protect the pregnant woman's right to abort when the pregnancy is rape-induced or life-threatening, and that the Constitution protect the infant's right to live in all other situations. This solution affords both the pregnant woman and the infant the same degree of governmental protection and makes it available on the same terms as it is to others.

---

[2] See, e.g., Epstein, Substantive Due Process by Any Other Name: The Abortion Cases, 1973 Sup. Ct. Rev. 159, 179; Glenn, Abortion and Inalienable Rights in Classical Liberty, 20 Am.J.Juris. 62 (1975).

ARGUMENT

I. This Court Must Reconsider Roe v. Wade

Evaluation of the Missouri abortion regulation statute's constitutionality mandates, at the outset, reconsideration of Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), the seminal decision defining the permissible parameters of state abortion regulation. The statute's express terms, containing a legislative declaration of life's beginning, makes reconsideration of Roe's prohibition of such declarations unavoidable. Alaw-Life accordingly respectfully requests that the Court decline plaintiffs-appellees' astonishing request that it bypass the issue.

The Constitution contains no express language conferring the right to abort; that concept is a creation of Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973). The right must be defined before the extent of its infringement may be ascertained. Evaluation of Roe's persuasiveness in establishing the abortion right, and its accuracy in defining that right's proper parameters, must necessarily precede any determination of whether Missouri's regulations respecting the time,[3] place,[4] and manner[5] unduly infringe the Roe privacy right.

The Constitution contains express language protecting every "person" from the denial of life without due process of law. U.S. Const. amend. V, XIV. Evaluation of the soundness of Roe's declaration that preborn individuals do not receive this protection necessarily must precede any determination of whether Missouri's legislative finding that life begins at conception is mandated, permitted, or prohibited by the Constitution. See 410 U.S. at 151-52; R. S. Mo. §1.205.

The Eighth Circuit recognized that it could not sidestep Roe. Finding Missouri's regulations constitutionally infirm,

---

[3]When the infant reaches his or her sixteenth week, the Missouri statute requires that his or her abortion be performed in a hospital. R. S. Mo. §188.025.

[4]The Missouri statute restricts politically-funded counselling and abortion procedures. R. S. Mo. §§188.205-15.

[5]The Missouri statute requires the physician to make a determination regarding viability. R. S. Mo. §188.029.

that court relied on Akron v. Akron Ctr. for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416 (1983),[6] and expressly struck down Missouri's prohibition of public employee participation in most abortions because "this prohibition violates the due process clause as interpreted by Roe and its progeny."[7] The Eighth Circuit also invalidated Missouri's declaration that life begins at conception "because, as the Supreme Court has stated, 'a State may adopt one theory of when life begins to justify its regulation of abortions.' "[8] See R. S. Mo. §1.205.

Nor may plaintiffs rest on stare decisis to avoid Roe's reconsideration. Plaintiffs-Appellees' Motion to Affirm at 16-17. Stare decisis is a slender reed on which to rest in the constitutional realm.[9] Plaintiffs' own authorities illustrate why. Quoting extensively from Brown v. Board of Education, 349 U.S. 294 (1955), See Plaintiffs-Appellees' Motion to Affirm at 17, Plaintiffs then insist that reversing a fifteen year old decision would wreak untold havoc. Plaintiffs-Appellees' Motion to Affirm at 17-18. Yet Brown itself overruled a decision on a moral issue much like Roe even though that decision had stood for more than fifty years[10] and even though in so doing it precipitated much social upheaval. Unsound law must not be allowed to stand, whether for half a century or for fifteen years, merely because of the inertia of its prior incorrect declaration.[11]

This Court must reconsider Roe because Roe does not satisfactorily resolve a conflict among individual rights — a matter that the judiciary is best suited to handle. Individual rights are founded upon the premise that government will

---

[6]See Reproductive Health Service v. Webster, 851 F.2d 1071, 1074 (8th Cir. 1988), citing 462 U.S. at 430-31; 851 F.2d at 1075, quoting 462 U.S. at 444; 851 F.2d at 1079, quoting 462 U.S. at 427.

[7]851 F.2d at 1083.

[8]Id. at 1075, quoting Akron, 462 U.S. at 444.

[9]Edelman v. Jordan, 415 U.S. 651, 671 n.14 (1973); see also, Boys Markets v. Retail Clerks Union Local 770, 398 U.S. 235, 240-41 (1970).

[10]See Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537 (1896).

[11]Compare, e.g., Hamner v. Dagenhart, 247 U.S. 251, 272 (1918) (invalidated child labor law) with United States v. Darby, 312 U.S. 100, 113, 116 (1941) (upheld FLSA, overruled Hamner's precise rationale 23 years later).

not restrict one person's autonomy except when necessary to protect another from harm, but can be counted on to do so then. Resolution of a conflict of individual rights requires identifying the competitors and then fashioning relief consistent with individual rights. Regarding abortion, the decisionmaker must decide whether the competitors are characterized as the woman and the government or the woman and the preborn infant.

The dispositive issue of interest characterization is whether the infant has standing as a "person" — the right to claim rights. Following this determination, the decisionmaker then must ascertain under what circumstances abortion prohibition unduly infringes the woman's autonomy and under what circumstances it is necessary to prevent harm to another. Courts are best suited for such choices.[12]

Roe neither properly characterizes the interests nor resolves the conflict. Roe purports to vindicate individual rights but reaches a result — characterizing the infant as a "nonperson" — inconsistent with that value. The Court's inability to enforce its decisions makes its ability to persuade essential to its ability to govern.[13] Because Roe's rationale has proved unpersuasive,[14] proposals for nullifying legisla-

---

[12]The abortion controversy presents a choice between interpreting the Constitution to confer autonomy of right on individuals, and interpreting it to confer autonomy only insofar as the government sees fit to grant it. "Such a [constitutional] determination falls within the traditional role awarded courts to interpret the law, and does not involve 'a lack of the respect due [a] coordinate [branch] of government,' nor does it involve an 'initial policy determination of a kind clearly for nonjudicial discretion.' " Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486, 548-49 (1969) (quoting Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 217 (1962)).

[13]See generally, P. Freund, A. Sutherland, M. Howe and E. Brown, Constitutional Law 667 (4th Ed. 1977).

[14]Commentary on Roe consistently has remained overwhelmingly critical. Coleman, Roe v. Wade: A Retrospective Look at A Judicial Oxymoron, 29 St. Louis U.L.J. 7 (1984); Dellapenna, The History of Abortion: Technology, Morality, and Law, 40 U.Pitt.L.Rev. 359 (1979). See Bickel, The Morality of Consent (1975); Comment, Homo Sapienism: Critique of Roe v. Wade and Abortion, 39 Alb.L.Rev. 856 (1975). Boyle, That the Fetus Should be Considered a Legal Person, 24 Am.J.Juris. 59; Byrn, An American Tragedy: The Supreme Court on Abortion, 41 Fordham L.Rev. 807 (1973) ["Byrn, An American Tragedy"]; Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, 82 Yale L.J. 920 (1973); Epstein, Substantive Due Process by Any Other Name: The Abortion Cases, 1973 Sup. Ct. Rev. 159. Rice, The Dred Scott Case of the Twentieth Century, 10 Hous. L.Rev. 1059 (1973).

tion[15] and constitutional amendments[16] abound. The Court could lose control of the issue to a less suitable branch of government[17] or to an unneccessary constitutional amendment.[18]

This Court must reach the conflict between individual rights underlying this case; a decision leaving it to Congress or state legislatures abdicates the judicial function. "The very [15]Legislative solutions include a statute depriving the lower federal courts of jurisdiction over such cases. Uddo, A Wink From the Bench: The Federal Courts and Abortion, 53 Tul.L.Rev. 398 (1979), and one declaring that life begins at conception. Galebach, A Human Life Statute, 7 Human Life Review 3 (1981).

---

[16]Numerous commentators have proposed amendments to do away with Roe. See, e.g., Byrn, The Abortion Amendments: Policy in the Light of Precedent, 18 St. Louis U.L.J. 380 (1974) [hereinafter cited as Byrn, The Abortion Amendments]; Destro, Abortion and the Constitution: The Need for a Life-Protective Amendment, 63 Calif. L.Rev. 1250 (1975).

[17]Congress unlike the Court, must be responsive to changes in popular will. If stare decisis generally strengthens the Court's position (Ex parte McCardle, 74 U.S. (7 Wall.) 506 (1869), restrictions excepted), flexibility strengthens the hand of Congress. Placing the definition of "person" in the hands of Congress would at least open the possibility that standing would be expanded and contracted as particular political minorities held or lost majority favor. The Court would risk an Ex parte McCardle showdown any time it attempted to interfere. Standing as a "person" would be much more secure if left to the Court's Carolene Products function. See United States v. Carolene Products Co., 304 U.S. 144, 152-53 n.4 (1938). The Court would have incentive to maintain stability rather than to be moved by popular opinion; it could check its Roe mistakes in the same manner that it checked Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537 (1896), and with less chance of provoking a confrontation with Congress.

[18]It weakens the veracity of constitutional language to add provisions that single out an identified class of individuals for protection that existing provisions already purport to grant to all. A constitutional amendment requires majority approval that a court decision does not, but may provide, in fact, no more protection that a court decision offers. See, e.g., Slaughter-House cases, 83 U.S. (16 Wall.) 36, 74 (1873) (limiting privileges and immunities clause to federal rights).

purpose of a Bill of Rights was to withdraw certain subjects from the vicissitudes of public controversy, to place them beyond the reach of officials and to establish them as legal principles to be applied by the courts." West Virginia State Board of Education v. Barnett, 319 U.S. 624, 628 (1943). Deciding who can claim the right to live and under what circumstances cannot be left to the legislative branch. Dire consequences have ensued when the Court has allowed popular will to define who has standing as a "person".[19] This Court must retain control of this issue, face it, and take this opportunity to articulate a persuasive rationale.

---

[19]Ironically, the best example of this phenomenon in the past, like Roe, involved the Court's preservation of slavery in some states by placing a narrow construction on standing to claim autonomy of right. In Scott v. Sandford, 60 U.S. (19 How.) 393 (1857), the Court held that a slave did not have the right to sue in federal court because, being black, he was not then and could never become a "citizen" of the United States. Id. at 403-04, 410. The Court summarized:

> The question before us is, whether [African Americans] compose a portion of this people . . . ? We think they are not, . . . and were not intended to be included, under the word "citizens" in the Constitution, and can therefore claim none of the rights and privileges which that instrument provides for and secures to citizens of the United States. On that contrary, they were at that time considered as a subordinate and inferior class of beings, who had been subjugated by the dominant race, and WHETHER EMANCIPATED OR NOT, . . . had no rights or privileges but such as those who held the power and the Government might choose to grant them.

Id. at 404-05 (empahsis added).

The Court was not compelled to reach this conclusion. It could have justified a broad construction of "the people" based upon the Declaration of Independence and used the fourth amendment quarantee of the "rights of the people to be secure in their persons," U.S. Const. amend. IV (emphasis added), an amendment negating provisions suggesting support for slavery, U.S. Const. art I, §9 and art. IV §2. The implied limitation placed by the Court upon a principle that appeared contrary to the principle's express terms proved unpersuasive. The Court lost control of the issue, the Civil War followed, and the fourteenth amendment reversed the Court's decision. See, e.g., The Slaughter-House Cases, 83 U.S. (16 Wall.) 36, 73 (1873).

II. Biological Reality And Constitutional Precedent Mandate Rejection Of Roe's Characterization Of The Unborn As Nonpersons

Roe is wrong because it mischaracterized the competing interests involved in an abortion, and denied preborn human beings standing as "persons" in the tradition of some of this Court's most notorious and regrettable decisions.[20] Justice White has accurately observed that Roe declares that "the Constitution of the United States values the convenience, whim, or caprice of the putative mother more than the life or potential life of the fetus."[21] Roe's denial of standing to the preborn is unpersuasive because it contradicts settled modern constitutional principles and established medical fact. Roe's erroneous adoption of a definition of "person" that excludes some human beings reduces individual rights for all to individual privileges dependent upon governmental whim. Any protection the law affords to those without standing to claim it for themselves depends entirely upon the "convenience, whim, or caprice" of the majority. Like the African American slaves of the last century, those deemed unworthy have "no rights or privileges but such as those who held the power and the Government might choose to grant them". Scott v. Sandford, 60 U.S. (19 How.) 393, 448-50 (1857).

Individual rights depend on the proposition that every individual — not just those the government deems worthy — have standing to claim on the same terms as everyone else the freedom from governmental intrusion and the government's protection from intrusion by others. Determining who qualifies as a "person" with standing to claim constitutional protection requires establishing objectively-verifiable criteria free of value judgments. Otherwise individual rights become individual privileges, granted and withdrawn according to the ebb and flow of judgments of "worthiness".

---

[20]See Scott v. Sandford, 60 U.S. (19 How.) 393 (1857); The Antelope, 23 U.S. 66 (1848); see also, Buck v. Bell, 274 U.S. 200, 207 (1928); see generally, Bury My Heart at Wounded Knee (New York 1972) at 342-48 (describes situation in which General Sherman ruled one native American was a "person" but his brother was not).

[21]Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, 221 (1973) (White, J., dissenting). Floyd v. Anders, 440 F. Supp. 535, 538 (D.S.C. 1977), vac. 440 U.S. 445 (1979), followed this approach, but see infra Note 28, holding that a second trimester infant who lived three weeks after an abortion was "not a person whose life state law could legally protect".

Distinct human existence is the only standing criterion that preserve autonomy of right for all individuals because it is the only criterion that can be verified objectively without making worthiness judgments among individuals. Accepting this criterion to preserve individual rights for all individuals mandates that a constitutionally protected "person" is a human being from the moment of his or her medically verifiable distinct individual existence — fertilization.

When an individual's autonomy is subject to another's approval, its exercise is a privilege and not a right. Likewise, if standing is subject to government will, standing is a privilege, dependent upon a governmental determination of worthiness. Autonomy of right requires guaranteed protection of its exercise. Autonomy subject to government approval cannot be autonomy of right.

A government fashioning the criterion for standing must respect individual rights. The criterion chosen must be verifiable, inclusive, and objective to ensure that every individual can claim autonomy of right. First, the criterion must be verifiable independent of government judgment. Second, the criterion must include all individuals by attaching standing from the point of time that is designated as the beginning of individuality. Finally, the method for designating the beginning of standing must only inquire into the fact, and not the quality, of individual existence. Power to make a qualitative inquiry undermines a criterion's objectivity.

The Court in Roe denominated the preborn as a "potential life". 410 U.S. at 163. The state might, if it so desired, protect "potential life" after the preborn infant reached viability unless his or her continued presence endangered maternal life or health. 410 U.S. at 162-63. The preborn infant was not entitled to claim protection in his or her own right until birth. The Court justified choosing birth as the criterion dispositive of standing based upon its analysis of the law's historical treatment of the preborn. The Court's historical analysis was erroneous.[22] From 1868, the year the Fourteenth Amendment passed, forward, almost all states have criminalized abortion to protect the infant.[23] Roe's choice of criterion, however, reveals a more fundamental error. If standing begins at birth, one may discern the criterion for standing by [22]Id. at 132-41. The Court's historical analysis relied upon two articles by Professor Cyril H. Means; Means, The Law of New York Concerning Abortion and the Status of the Fetus, 1664-1968: A Case of Cessation of Constitutionality (pt. 1), 14 N.Y.L.F. 411, 418-28 (1968), cited in 410 U.S. at 132-33 n.21; and Means, The Phoenix of Abortional Freedom: Is a Penumbra or Ninth-Amendment Right About to Arise from the Nineteenth-Century Legislative Ashes of a Fourteenth-Century Common-Law Liberty?, 17 N.Y.L.F. 335 (1971), cited in 410 U.S. at 135 n.26. Commentators since Roe have demonstrated serious inaccuracies in Means's analysis. See, e.g., Byrn, An American Tragedy, supra note 14, at 815-35; Dellapenna, The History of Abortion: Technology, Morality, and Law, 40 U.Pitt.L.Rev. 359, 366-407 (1979); Destro, supra note 14, at 1267-86; Witherspoon, Reexamining Roe; Nineteenth-Century Statutes and the Fourteenth Amendment, 17 St. Mary's L.J. 29 ["Witherspoon"].

---

[23]Roe's contrary contentions are erroneous. Roe says English common law did not protect infants before quickening because they were deemed unworthy, 410 U.S. at 132-33; in fact, problems of proving the woman was pregnant mandated the quickening requirement. Byrn, An American Tragedy: The Supreme Court on Abortion, 41 Fordham L.Rev. 807, 823-25. Roe says legislative abortion prohibitions in this country did not "begin generally to replace the common law" until "after the War Between the States", 410 U.S. at 138-39; in fact, eighteen of thirty states prohibited it as early as 1849, and twenty-seven of thirty states had such legislation as of 1864. See Witherspoon, 17 St. Mary's L.J. at 33 n.15 (collects these). Roe says "most . . . statutes dealt severely with abortion after quickening but were lenient with it before quickening", 410 U.S. at 139; in fact, twenty of thirty states with statutes the year the Fourteenth Amendment passed imposed the same penalties before and after quickenting. Witherspoon, 17 St. Mary's L.J. at 36 n.22. Roe says "a State's real concern in enacting a criminal abortion law was to protect the pregnant woman", 410 U.S. at 149; in fact, twenty of thirty-six states by 1883 imposed a harsher penalty upon proving the infant's death, Witherspoon, 17 St. Mary's L.J. at 38 n.24, fourteen of the twenty provided the same punishment for killing the child as killing the mother, id. at 40 n.28, seventeen states characterized the infant's death with other homicide, id. at 44 n.47, and twenty-three of the states and six territories the year the Fourteenth Amendment was ratified referred to the preborn child as a "child" in their statutes. Id. at 50 n.57, 58. Roe says if preborn infants received protection as "persons", why was there an exception "for the purpose of saving the life of the mother?" 410 comparing the preborn with the born. The difference is that the latter live outside the mother while the former live within.[24]

This criterion is independently verifiable because it is referenced to birth, and birth is beyond government control. It also is sufficiently inclusive because it designates birth as the beginning of individuality and attaches standing from that point. It cannot, however, satisfy the third requirement. Obviously, birth begins an infant's existence only if the infant does not exist before that time. This can only occur, however, if existence is restricted to a physically independent existence. The distinction between dependent and independent existence is purely qualitative. For this reason, birth is an unacceptable criterion.

Roe's qualitative inquiry makes its criterion subjective. Government capacity to alter its scope produces unpalatable results. It requires no conceptual leap for government to use physical dependence as a springboard to exclude children,[25] the handicapped,[26] and the elderly from the class of those entitled to claim the law's protection. All these could fit Roe's characterization as "not persons in the whole sense." One three-judge panel, relying on Roe, has held that an infant aborted after twenty weeks was "not a person whose life the state law could legally protect," even though he lived for three weeks thereafter.[27] A more recent Indiana decision holding that parents could allow a newborn infant with

---

U.S. at 153 n.54. In fact, self defense against an innocent attacker is allowed against born as well as unborn. E.g., Witherspoon, 17 St. Mary's L.J. at 47. Roe asks "why is the woman not a principal or an accomplice?" 410 U.S. at 158 n.54. In seventeen states, she was. Witherspoon, 17 St. Mary's L.J. at 59. n.90.

[24]See generally, Byrn, The Abortion Amendments, at 385-89.

[25]Hearings Before the Subcommittee on Separation of Powers on S.158, at 44 ("If the issue is primarily one of personhood, then I submit that this is not fully achieved until late adolescence.").

[26]See N.Y. Times, Feb. 4, 1983, §1 at 10, col. 6.

[27]Floyd v. Anders, 440 F. Supp. 535, 538 (D.S.C. 1977), vac. 440 U.S. 445 (1979).

Down's Syndrome to starve to death demonstrates the pernicious influence of Roe's weak standing criterion.[28]

Roe selected a criterion imposing subjective worthiness determinations because Roe relied upon subjective factors in making the selection. Roe looked to Stoic philosophers, English common law, Protestant theology, Aristotelian logic, and Renaissance Catholic dogma as its sources. See 410 U.S. at 160-61. Roe looked everywhere but to scientific observation.

Whatever significance theologians, psychologists, anthropologists, and philosophers attach to fertilization, there is no dispute that it marks the point biologically at which distinct individual existence begins.[29] This scientific fact is

---

[28]See N.Y. Times, Feb. 4, 1983, §1 at 10, col. 6.

[29]See, e.g., M. S. Gilbert, Biography of the Unborn, 13 (1963); J. Langman, Medical Embryology, 3, 23-27 (1975); C. H. Waddington, Principles of Embryology, 45 (1958); S. Rep. 97-___ on S. 158, 97th Cong. 1st Sess. at 7-9 quoting L. Arey, Developmental Anatomy, 55 (1974); I. Asimov, The Genetic Code, 20 (1962); J. Brash, Human Embryology, 2 (1956); J. Greenhill & E. Friedman, Biological Principles and Modern Practice of Obstetrics, 23 (1974); W. Hamilton & H. Mossman, Human Embryology, 14 (1972); M. Krieger, The Human Reproductive System, 88 (1969); S. Lauria, Thirty-Six Lectures in Biology, 146 (1975); K. Moore, The Developing Human, 1, 12 (1977); B. Patten, Human Embryology, 43 (1968); J. Roberts, An Introduction to Medical Genetics, 1 (1963); G. Simpson & W. Beck, Life: An Introduction to Biology, 139 (1965); J. Thomas, Introduction to Human Embryology, 52 (1968); T. Torrey, Morphogenesis of the Vertebrates, 47 (1971); Hearings Before the Subcommittee on Separation of Powers on S. 158 ["Hearings"], at 8, (Testimony of Dr. Jerome Lejune, Professor of Fundamental Genetics, Medical College of Paris), 12-13 (Testimony of Dr. Hymie Gordon, Professor and Chairman, Department of Medical Genetics, Mayo Clinic), 14 (Testimony of Dr. Micheline M. Mathews-Roth, Principal Research Associate, Harvard University), 25 (Testimony of Dr. Watson A. Bowes, Jr., Division of Prenatal Medicine, University of Colorado, Denver), 39-41 (Testimony of Dr. Alfred M. Bongiovanni, Professor, University of Pennsylvania Medical School), 48 (Testimony of Dr. Jasper Williams, Past President, National Medical Association); see generally, Krimmel and Foley, Abortion: An Inspection Into the Nature of Human Life and Potential Consequences of Legalizing its Destruction, 46 U.Cin.L.Rev. 725, 744-62 (1977); 39 Albany L.Rev. at 873-74.

not a recent discovery.[30] Physicians who reject fertilization as the beginning of individual life do so for subjective philosophical reasons, not scientific biological ones.[31] Even abortion proponent Dr. Alan Guttmacher recognized, contrary to Roe, that fertilization was an individual's biological beginning:

[30]"Physicians have now arrived at the unanimous opinion, that the foetus in utero is alive from the very moment of conception . . . [T]he willful killing of a human being, at any state of its existence is murder . . . " H. Storer, Why Not? A Book For Every Woman at 28-29, 79 (1986), reprinted in part in Hearings, supra Note 28 at 681 (ellipsis in the original).

[31]Some physicians, like others who enjoy constitutional protection, unquestionably believe, for nonscientific reasons, that true "personhood" requires more than distinct existence; however, none can deny that distinct existence begins at fertilization. Opponents of abortion regulation distinguish between the distinct life of a human being and "human life" — the former plus some additional ability or feature. Dr. Leon Rosenberg believes conception (meaning fertilization) is "a critical event in human reproduction" and that fertilization creates a new cell "that contains all of the genetic information needed to develop ultimately into a human being." Hearings at 49. He, however, concludes that "the fertilized human egg is a living cell with the potential for human life," and that, in his view, "there is an enormous difference between the potential for human life and . . . 'actual human life.' " Id. (quoting S. 158, 97th Cong., 1st Sess., §1 (1981)). Dr. James Neel followed this line of thought by contending that a newly conceived infant is not a person until he or she goes through the stages of prenatal development that he believes are similar to the stages of evolution. Hearings, supra, at 77-78. University of Pennsylvania Medical School professor Dr. Alfred M. Bongiovanni exposes the logical flaw of this view when, after testifying that life begins at fertilization, he states: "If the issue is primarily one of personhood then I submit that this is not fully achieved until late adolescence. The dramatic changes . . . at the time of puberty [are] just as amazing as the multiplication and differentiation of cells from the single fertilized ovum." Id. at 44.

The Roe View

When those trained in the respective disciplines of medicine, philosophy, and theology are unable to arrive at any consensus, the judiciary, at this point in the development of man's knowledge, is not in a position to speculate as to the answer [of when life begins].

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 159 (1973).

The Scientific View

The nucleus of the sperm-head, bearing all the hereditary factors which come through the father, becomes indissolubly united with the nucleus of the ovum, bearing all the hereditary factors which come from the mother — AND A NEW LIFE, A COMPOSITE OF THEM BOTH, IS BEGUN.

Dr. A. Guttmacher, Life in the Making, 55 (1933) (emphasis added; hereafter, "Guttmacher").

Fertilization as a criterion in itself is independently verifiable. "Distinct existence" is a matter of observation, not a matter of judgment. Unlike Roe's criterion, it grants standing at the beginning of individuality and is objective. By definition, one individual must be distinct from another. An individual's existence distinct from his or her parents begins at fertilization; to inquire whether fertilization has occurred is to inquire concerning the fact of individual existence without regard to its quality.

Roe's contention that "conception is a process over time rather than event", 410 U.S. at 159, is an illusory play on words. Obstetricians, who stood to gain from abortion, in 1965 changed the meaning of "conception" from "fertilization" — the uniting of the sperm and the ovum — to "fertilization plus," fertilization plus a number of subsequent events such as implantation and cleavage.[32] So defined, "conception" is indeed a process. However, fertilization is still an event. See supra, Note 28; Guttmacher at 55. Roe's verbal sleight of hand cannot change what science affirms[33] — that distinct life begins at fertilization.

[32]See American College of Obstetrics and Gynecologists, Terminology Bull., No. 1 (Sept. 1965).

The contention that living gametes do not differ from a living zygote assumes either that fertilization does not produce a separate organism from the cells of two larger organisms, or that this change does not matter. If either assumption were correct, chosing fertilization as the beginning of distinct existence would not satisfy step three of the standing test. Having no basis in observation, the choice would be a mere judgment call not better than those Roe made. Neither assumption, however, is correct.

Gametes are living cells before they join at fertilization. They are parts of larger organisms, and are not organisms themselves. A zygote, on the other hand, is an entire organism. See Guttmacher at 55. Destroying a gamete does not destroy a human organism; destroying a zygote does. Id. The difference is fundamental because it determines whether the abortion harms "another". As for the second objection — the zygote's dependence on his or her mother — the fact that a person physically depends upon another does not make him or her any less a person. Taking account of physical dependence is a qualitative inquiry.

The "[s]ubstantial problems" that Roe argues are presented by abortifacient birth control methods, 410 U.S. at 161, reveal their illusory nature upon close examination. Scrutinized under the lens of individual rights, these problems quickly evaporate. Critics seeking to preserve birth control methods that are thought to be abortifacient do not dispute the fact of individual existence from the moment of fertilization. They contend that respect for individual rights is too costly. These critics argue that protecting preborn individuals does not justify curtailing the use of the IUD or "morning after" pill, implying that the integrity of newly distinct individuals must give way to the autonomy of their parents. These critics "red circle" the autonomy of some individuals for special protection at the expense of the existence of others. Their approach offers a plausible alternative to respect for individuals' rights, but one our Constitution's present Bill of Rights cannot support.

---

[33]Characterizing as "religious" the view that life begins at fertilization, see Thornburg v. American College of Obstetrics and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747, 778 (1986) (Stevens, J., concurring), solves nothing. See id. at 795-96 n.4 (White, J., dissenting). Any side of any issue can be called "religious". Id. This characterization obscures the fundamental issue of which view is scientifically verifiable apart from the religious belief. Others may have religious or philosophical beliefs that distinct life does not begin at fertilization, but the foregoing authorities establish that secular scientific observation says it does. See supra, Note 29.

Roe refuses to recognize standing from fertilization because the preborn are not "persons in the whole sense." 410 U.S. at 162. If that is the test, standing "is not achieved until late adolescence."[34] If Roe is correct, then all pre-adolescent children, born or preborn, have no standing to claim protection, but only such protection as others with standing chose to give them. See Scott v. Sandford, 60 U.S. (19 How.) at 404-5. The most cursory review of the law governing capacity to sue and be sued, to contract, and to own property in one's own name would confirm that BORN children "have never been recognized in the law as persons in the whole sense." 410 U.S. at 162. By Roe's view, the pre-adolescents, no less than the preborn, merely "represent only the potentiality of life." Id. Surely the fact that one's property ownership is contingent upon being born, or one's use rights upon reaching majority, must not define whether the Constitution confers on preborn individuals the standing to claim protection for the only freedom they can exercise — the freedom to live.

Roe's characterization of the preborn as "potential life" is scientifically inaccurate. Characterizing the preborn requires recognizing that they are genetically unique, distinct, and alive from the moment of fertilization forward. Like pre-adolescent childhood, a child's prebirth development is more akin to a vested expectancy than a contingent one. The interest that an infant presently has is best termed "vested expectancy" in adult life.

---

[34]The Human Life Bill: Hearings on S. 158 Before the Subcomm. on Separate of Powers of the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary, 97th Cong., 1st Sess., Vol. 1 at 44 (statement of Dr. Alfred M. Bongiovanni, Professor, University of Pennsylvania Medical Faculty).

American law has recognized vested expectancies in property and liberty. The born and preborn owners of these interests may presently claim protection for rights that they cannot presently exercise. A vested remainderman has the present right to protect his future "possessory" interest by precluding those now in possession from destroying the value of the property, and by claiming just compensation in the event of condemnation. See generally, L. Simes, Future Interests 132-35 (1951). The same principle applies to liberty in the form of "good time" credits awarded to inmates. An inmate who has accumulated "good time" credits owns a vested expectancy in liberty, a present interest in future freedom. Although the inmate cannot yet exercise freedom, he or she can claim the Constitution's protection for its future exercise. See Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 555, 557-58 (1974).

The owners of vested property and liberty expectancies are given the present right to claim protection because these rights need only the passage of time to become fully exercisable. The interests presently exist; their full exercise needs time to mature.

These same principles mandate protecting the preborn and born infant's vested expectancy in adult life. The infant is an owner in the sense that he or she is, at the instant of fertilization, a distinct human individual. His or her interest is "vested" in the sense that he or she is presently living. See supra, Note 29. It is an expectancy in the sense that he or she, like a newborn child or a ten-year old, cannot presently enjoy adult life. If the Constitution protects vested expectancies in property and liberty, certainly it must also protect a "vested expectancy" in life. The preborn infant should be able to claim this protection against those who would destroy the value of his or her interest.

This characterization represents past American law more honestly than Roe. Most states have prohibited abortion since 1848. At the time the Fourteenth Amendment was passed, and for over one hundred years thereafter, the overwhelmingly majority of states punished abortion at all stages of pregnancy, imposed harsher penalties upon proof of the infant's death, called the preborn infant a "child," and required the specific intent to destroy the child (without regard to the impact on the mother's health). See supra, Note 23. This characterization represents more honestly the intent of the framers.[35] This characterization represents more honestly the scientific facts. See supra, Note 29.

The preborn infant's dependence on his or her mother for support during pregnancy does not destroy the analogy. The fact that the holders of vested expectancies are presently dependent on others does not make their interest any less valid and enforceable. The remainderman depends upon the life tenant to preserve the value of the property. The life tenant is prohibited from committing waste or negative waste, and must preserve the remainderman's interest. Similarly, the inmate depends upon the state to preserve the value of his interest. If the state does not feed him during his incarceration, he will starve to death. The state, like the life tenant, must provide this support until the inmate can enjoy his freedom. Is the preborn's interest due any less recognition and protection?

Reversing Roe is more than simple preservation of legal consistencies. The Court should reverse Roe to protect preborn infants because to deny them protection undermines protection as a matter of right for all individuals.[36]

---

[35]The same Ohio legislators who approved the Fourteenth Amendment three weeks later passed an abortion prohibition because they concluded that "the killing of a human being, at any stage of its existence, is murder." 1867 Ohio S.J. App. 233, 234.

[36]Choosing the point that minimizes individual value judgments is itself a value judgment, but it is a value judgment necessary to preserve autonomy of right. If autonomy of right is not subject to the will of another, standing to claim protection for the right must not be within another's control. Fertilization eliminates the most discretion because it bases standing upon an event alone rather than upon a judgment.

III. The Court Can Resolve The Conflict Of Abortion Consistent With The Constitution By Treating Both Of The Competing Individuals Like Adults

Abortion brings into conflict the rights of two individuals. The principles of responsibility and self-defense are fundamental to a system that respects individual rights. Applied to abortion, they yield a solution, consistent with the system, to the difficult issues that abortion presents. Simply stated, a woman may only end support for her preborn infant's life if she did not originally choose to risk supporting it, or if, although she did assume that risk, she must end support to save her own life.

Traditional principles of equal protection analysis mandate that a state that permits abortion beyond cases in which pregnancy results from rape or threatens maternal life enforces its homicide laws differently according to whether the victim has been born.[37] Different treatment of a person's right to live according to whether he or she is born denies a fundamental right because of a physical characteristic over which the one affected has no control.[38] Distinctions based upon these characteristics generally are disfavored,[39] and distinctions that affect fundamental rights such as the right to live must be narrowly drawn to further a compelling state interest.[40]

The only conceivably compelling interest that the state could offer for such a distinction is that it is necessary to protect the pregnant woman's right of privacy. The right of privacy, like other constitutional rights, is not absolute and [37]Whether the state accomplishes this end by express statutory language or by inconsistent enforcement of a facially neutral statute is irrelevant. See Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356, 373-74 (1886).

---

[38]For the state to decline to protect an individual's constitutional rights is for it to deny that right entirely. Autonomy that does not enjoy state protection is illusory.

[39]See, e.g., Korematsu v. United States, 323 U.S. 214, 216 (1944) ("all legal restrictions which curtail the civil rights of a single racial group are immediately suspect").

[40]See, e.g., Dunn v. Blumstein, 405 U.S. 330, 338-39 (1972) (voting rights); Shapiro v. Thompson, 394 U.S. 618, 134 (1969) (travel restrictions).

not standing alone in a vacuum. The Constituion does not grant one the autonomy to harm others freely. Even freedom of speech is not this absolute. Words that create a "dangerous probability of imminent lawlessness"[41] and those "which by their very utterance inflict injury or tend to incite immediate breach of the peace"[42] do not enjoy First Amendment protection. Privacy, therefore, cannot justify making a birth/prebirth distinction in protecting life.[43]

Protecting the pregnant woman's right to abort for life threatening or rape-induced pregnancies is just as important as protecting the preborn infant's right to live in all other situations. A system that respects individual rights must necessarily recognize the principles of self defense and individual responsibility as means of breaking conflicts between competing interests. Like anyone else, the pregnant woman has the right to use deadly force to repel an attacker threatening her life, regardless of whether the attacker is consciously attacking. Model Penal Code §210.0(3) (Proposed Official Draft 1962). Like anyone else, a pregnant woman is not obligated to provide aid to one whose life is imperilled if she did not choose to do something risking that peril and the other's perilous position did not result from that choice, even though her declining to provide assistance will cause the other's death. Restatement (Second) of Torts §314 (1965). Forc-

---

[41]See, e.g., Brandenburg v. Ohio, 395 U.S. 444, 447 (1969) (per curiam); Schenck v. United States, 249 U.S. 47, 52 (1919) ("The question in every case is whether the words used are used in such circumstances and are of such a nature as to create a clear and present danger that they will bring about the substantive evils that Congress has a right to prevent.").

[42]See Chaplinsky v. New Hampshire, 315 U.S. 568, 571-72 (1942).

[43]The solution admittedly imposes a heavier immediate burden upon women than it imposes upon men. The heavier burden is not caused by discriminatory treatment, but by the application of a neutral principle; mere adverse impact is not inconsistent with the Fourteenth Amendment. See, e.g., Washington v. Davis, 426 U.S. 229, 242 (1976). Holding both men and women responsible to those rendered vulnerable by their decisions and actions concerning procreation has different consequences for the latter because the latter's choice has different consequences. Here equal treatment producing unequal results is essential to preserve everyone's individual rights.

ing the continuation of life-threatening or rape-induced pregnancies, like refusing to recognize the preborn as persons, enables the government to make worthiness determinations that undermine every individual's ability to claim autonomy from government or governmental protection from others as a matter of right.

Fundamental to the concept of integrity is the right to claim government protection to prevent harm resulting from the exercise of autonomy by another. Fundamental to autonomy is the right to be free from government interference. Fundamental to an effective mechanism that respects these two principles is individual responsibility. If integrity is the right to claim government protection and if government protection may not extend beyond what is necessary to prevent harm, integrity must be tailored to the harm threatened. Individual responsibility serves this function because a government that follows this principle limits its interference in the autonomy of an individual to what is necessary to protect others from the harmful consequences of that individual's act without otherwise limiting the autonomy to act.

Responsibility defines the limits of both integrity and autonomy. It limits integrity by precluding enforced samaritanism, and limits autonomy by enforcing accountability. A government that professes a belief in individual rights may not limit autonomy to the extent of compelling one individual to render assistance to another unless the former is responsible for the latter's disadvantaged position.

Thus, an individual may, with legal impunity, walk by a dying man. See Restatement (Second) of Torts §314 (1965). However, government must require an individual to render assistance to another when the former has voluntarily acted, innocently or otherwise, in a manner that placed the latter in peril. Id. §322. The mechanism chosen must vindicate responsibilty. It must not require good samaritanism nor neglect to achieve accountability.

A government that respects individual rights also must attach standing to claim government protection at the beginning of distinct individuality because attaching standing at any other point destroys autonomy of right.

The principle of self-defense provides a means of identifying these situations. Self-defense is the autonomy to repel an unlawful intrusion by another. It is the autonomy to preserve one's integrity when government protection is unavailable. Government protection is unavailable when the intrusion is lawful or when the intrusion results from the victim's own decision. Holding individuals responsible for the consequences of their actions, while permitting them to defend themselves against harmful intrusions that do not result from their actions and against life-threatening intrusions of every kind, provides a mechanism for resolution that respects individual rights.

Whether self-defense justifies using force against another depends not only upon the harm threatened, but also upon whether the threat is lawful. Id. at 1611-12. Because the harm results from the infant's need for physical support, the woman may "defend herself" only if she is not required to provide it. Does she defend against an attack or seek to avoid an obligation?[44]

If the law imposes upon a person the affirmative duty to provide assistance to another, the extent of that duty is defined by what "a reasonable man would believe to be necessary to afford the aid or protection to which [the person owed the duty] is entitled, but no more."[45] This definition is couched in terms of: (1) the knowledge of the person owing the duty, and (2) the nature of the peril facing the person to whom the duty is owed. Placed in the context of the pregnancy relationship, the aid "a reasonable [woman] would believe to be necessary" to provide is that of continuing to carry the preborn infant until birth, because the assistance the infant requires is physical support. These, however, cannot be the only two determinants.

---

[44]Commentators who contend a pregnant woman is always a "good samaritan," e.g., Regan, Rewriting Roe v. Wade, 77 Mich.L.Rev. 1569, ignore this distinction. But cf. id. at 1611-12 (acknowledges "lawfulness" requirement).

[45]Restatement (Second) of Torts scope note to topic seven, chapter twelve: "Duties of Affirmative Action." (1965).

Another factor in determining whether aid is reasonable is the effect of providing assistance upon the one that must render it. The Restatement only directly mentions this in a discussion of affirmative duties found in the comments in section 314A.[46] This section provides that the person owing the duty "will seldom be required to do more than give such first aid as he reasonably can, and take reasonable steps to turn the sick man over to a physician, or to those who will look after him and see that medical assistance is obtained."[47]

Illustrations under section 322, concerning the duty to aid another harmed by the actor's conduct, whether tortious or otherwise, indicate that the person undertaking the duty must at least endure inconvenience in the prevention of further harm to those jeopardized by his conduct.[48] Requiring innkeepers to take special precautions to discharge their duty to provide safe premises when small children are guests supports this conclusion.[49] Neither the comment, the illustrations, nor the cases, however, address the situation in which the burdens incident to providing aid compare to those of a "normal" pregnancy. See generally, supra, Note 14, 29 St. Louis U.L.J. at 32-33.

To posit such a case, imagine a dweller in a remote cabin in the American Rockies that is accessible only during the summer months, with no telephone or shortwave. He has just settled in for the winter, stocking enough food to last him comfortably until the snow melts. On the last day that descent to "civilization" is possible, his snowmobile strikes a hunter and that accident causes an avalanche, closing the road. Whether or not the cabin dweller is at fault, the Restatement requires that he assist the hunter. Since it is no

---

[46] Id. §314A comment f.

[47] Id.

[48] Id. §322 comment b, illustrations 1-3.

[49] See Crosswhite v. Shelby Operating Corp., 30 S.E.2d 673, 674-75 (Va. 1944); see also Baker v. Dallas Hotel Co., 73 F.2d 825, 827-28 (5th Cir. 1934); see generally 40 Am.Jur.2d Hotels §83 (1968).

longer possible to descend the mountain or to summon help, "reasonable care to prevent . . . further harm" seemingly would mean taking the hunter in for the winter. Caring for the hunter would impose a burden on the cabin dweller somewhat analogous to a normal pregnancy. Fulfilling this obligation in light of limited food could present threats to the cabin dweller's health, and if food supplies are low enough, to his life. Id.

If the person with the duty to assist "will seldom be required to do more" than give first aid and seek medical help, the Rocky Mountain cabin dweller's plight provides one example of the exceptional case. If food is not a factor, merely caring for the hunter throughout the winter appears to be what section 322 of the Restatement requires the cabin dweller to do. Although the cabin dweller will suffer the prolonged inconvenience of having the hunter around, his duty to protect the hunter from further harm renders the inconveniences unavoidable.

The applicability of this model to the relationship created by the "normal" pregnancy is evident. Self-defense becomes a concern only if requiring a woman to fulfill the obligations she risked undertaking would deprive her of individual integrity. The burdens imposed by the "normal" pregnancy or by one threatening health are simply the cost of the obligation of support. They limit the woman's present autonomy because they result from her past choices of action.

The assumption underlying the discussion of the proposed mechanism thus far is that the woman experiencing unwanted pregnancy has chosen to risk pregnancy. When she has not, she is not responsible, under the principle of individual responsibility, for the infant's existence, and, under the principle of self-defense, must be permitted to cease providing support. A system that respects individual rights requires as much.[50]

---

[50] Critics who contend that this result vindicates less important rights at the cost of more valuable ones are misguided. The right to exist may be more fundamental than the right to be free from having to provide support for nine months. But more is at stake. A woman pregnant because

An innkeeper may take every precaution to keep the inn accident free. Regardless of the precautions taken, however, the duty to give aid if a guest becomes injured is unaffected.[51] It is the choice of engaging in an act posing risk to another, and not the extent of the risk posed, that triggers the duty. See also, Restatement (Second) of Torts §322.

Likewise, the woman may take every precaution against creating a distinct individual dependent upon her for support. But she, like the innkeeper, has the duty to provide assistance if her precautions fail. The fact that she takes such precautions does not make her participation in the act creating the dependency any less voluntary. Since she remains responsible, she remains obligated.

The cabin dweller hypothetical illustrates why life-threatening pregnancies are distinct. The decision to repel an unlawful attack must remain with each individual. Even if sharing his food with the hunter will mean that he will be hungry, this does not justify relieving the cabin dweller of his responsibility. He may claim to be excused from his responsibility only if he is unable to discharge it without bringing about his own death, only if sharing the food with the hunter would mean that he would starve. It is only at this point that considerations of self-defense may be viewed as a limit upon the cabin dweller's obligation.[52] of rape has a decidedly greater interest in choosing to end a resulting pregnancy than a sunbather has in choosing not to throw a nearby life preserver to a drowning swimmer. Yet the law protects the sunbather's interest at the cost of the swimmer's life.

---

[51]See Restatement (Second) of Torts §314A(2) (1965). See generally J. Sherry, The Law of Innkeepers §1:6 (rev. ed. 1981).

[52]Unless his life is at stake, the cabin dweller's interest in protecting his "autonomy" is freedom from hunger and related health problems, and freedom from the time constraint of caring for the hunter. The hunter's interest is in protecting his integrity, because he will perish if he does not remain with the cabin dweller throughout the winter. In using the principle of "responsibility" to resolve this conflict, the interest of the hunter must prevail. The cabin dweller actively created the hunter's dependent condition; the hunter did not. The cabin dweller's responsibility for his past actions limits his present autonomy. If the cabin dweller's life is at stake, the interests involved are different. The conflict is now the

Although life-threatening pregnancies result from past choices, mortality is a consequence that government may not impose. Government prohibition of abortion when pregnancy endangers maternal life is inconsistent with respect for individual rights. Self-defense limits individual responsibility. Individual responsibility can break conflicts between one individual's autonomy and that of another, or between one individual's integrity and the autonomy of another. It cannot break conflicts between the integrity of two individuals.

Allowing government to break autonomy-autonomy or autonomy-integrity conflicts allows it to perform the necessary function of determining which right is worthiest. Allowing government to break an integrity-integrity conflict, however, allows it to determine which individual is worthiest. This is neither necessary nor permissible. Each individual must be able to defend his or her integrity against intrusion by the integrity of another if government is to respect individual rights.

The principles of responsibility and self-defense are fundamental to a system that respects individual rights. When applied here, they yield a solution, consistent with that system, to the difficult issues that abortion presents. Simply stated, a woman may only end support for her preborn infant's life if because of rape she did not originally choose to risk supporting it, or if, although she did assume that risk, she must end support to save her own life.

This solution recognizes that abortion involves a conflict between two individuals, allowing for the death of one only when a similar situation would justify this result if the individuals were both adults. It provides each individual protection of his or her integrity except to the extent cabin dweller's integrity versus that of the hunter's — a question of standing. Although the cabin dweller still is responsible for the hunter's vulnerability, the government cannot, for that reason, find that his life is no longer worth protecting. If the government could force him to give up his life, it would be able to determine which of two individuals is more worthy of protection. A government able to make this choice does not recognize individual rights because it only recognizes the standing of individuals whom it deems worthiest.

---

necessary to allow for the other's self-defense. It treats the freedom to abort with the same respect that it accorded any exercise of autonomy in a system that respects individual rights, and limits it only as is necessary to prevent harm to others.

CONCLUSION

Roe must be reconsidered because it is the cornerstone of all abortion regulation law and governs the evaluation of Missouri's regulations here. That cornerstone is crumbling; the Court soon will lose control of the abortion issue if it does not act definitively now chooses to discard Roe. Judicial misinterpretations should be supported artificially until they become archaic relics; those affected in the interim deserve better.

Roe, while acknowledging that our Constitution values respect for individuals' rights, adopted a result undermining individual rights. Only judicial recognition that human beings are constitutional "persons" from the moment of fertilization guarantees the preborn's right to claim the freedom from governmental intrusion and protection from harm by others. Science tells us distinct existence begins at fertilization; religious and social beliefs to the contrary do not justify refusing constitutional standing until some later stage of development.

Recognizing that abortion presents a conflict between the rights of two individuals, a conflict resolution mechanism that treats each individual the same without regard to individual physical characteristics like age or developmental stage is mandated. This mechanism requires prohibiting abortion in all cases except rape-induced and life-threatening pregnancies.

For the foregoing reasons, Alaw-Life respectfully requests that this Court REVERSE the Eighth Circuit decision below, OVERRULE Roe, and recognize the standards and criterion described above.

Counsel of Record for Amicus Alaw-Life

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I hereby certify that three copies of the above and foregoing have been served upon counsel listed below by placing copies in the United States mail, postage prepaid, on this the ____ day of February, 1989.

Robert K. Evans
(Counsel of Record)
Dara Klassel
Barbara E. Otten
Planned Parenthood Federation of America, Inc.
810 Seventh Avenue
New York, New York 10019
(212) 541-7800

Frank Susman, P.C.
Thomas M. Blumenthal
Susman, Schermer, Rimmel & Shifrin 7711 Carondelet Avenue, 10th Floor
St. Louis, Missouri 63105
ACLU of Eastern Missouri
(314) 725-7300

Attorneys for Appellees

William L. Webster
Attorney General
State of Missouri

Michael L. Boicourt
(Counsel of Record)
Assistant Attorney General
State of Missouri

Jerry L. Short
Assistant Attorney General
State of Missouri
6th Floor, Broadway Building
Post Office Box 899
Jefferson City, Missouri 65102
(314) 571-8782

Attorneys for Appellants

Of Counsel

APPENDIX

Planned Parenthood®
Federation of America, Inc.

February 16, 1989

John J. Coleman, III
Balch & Bingham
Post Office box 306
Birmingham, Alabama 35201

Re: Webster v. Reproductive Health Services, 88-605

Dear Mr. Coleman:

Appellees hereby consent pursuant to Rule 36.3 to the filing of an amicus curiae brief on behalf of Alabama Lawyers for Unborn Children, Inc.

Sincerely yours,

Roger K. Evans
Director of Litigation

RKE/ts

cc: Jerry L. Short
Attorneys for appellants

810 Seventh Avenue New York, New York 10019 212/541-7800

ATTORNEY GENERAL OF MISSOURI

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER
ATTORNEY GENERAL

JEFFERSON CITY
65102

P.O. Box 899
(314) 751-3321

February 10, 1989

John J. Coleman III
Balch & Bingham
Post Office Box 306
Birmingham, Alabama 35201

Re: William L. Webster, et al., v. Reproductive Health Services, et al., No. 88-605

Dear Mr. Coleman:

In response to your request, Attorney General William L. Webster and the State of Missouri consent to your filing an amicus curiae brief on behalf of the Alabama Lawyers for Unborn Children, Inc.

Very truly yours,

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER
Attorney General

MICHAEL L. BOICOURT
Assistant Attorney General

JERRY L. SHORT
Assistant Attorney General

JLS:j

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

---

BRIEF OF THE AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF PROLIFE OBSTETRICIANS AND GYNECOLOGISTS (AAPLOG) AND THE AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF PRO-LIFE PEDIATRICIANS (AAPLP) AS AMICI CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

DOLORES HORAN *
222 N. LaSalle Street #300
Chicago, IL 60601
(312) 704-3750

PAIGE COMSTOCK CUNNINGHAM
343 S. Dearborn Street
Chicago, IL 60604
(312) 786-9494
Counsel for Amicus Curiae

* Counsel of Record

February 23, 1989

WILSON - EPES PRINTING CO., INC. - 789-0096 - WASHINGTON, D.C. 20001

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES	iii
INTEREST OF THE AMICI CURIAE	1
SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT	2
ARGUMENT	4
I. MISSOURI HAS A COMPELLING INTEREST IN PROTECTING THE LIFE OF THE UNBORN CHILD WHO IS REGARDED BY MEDICAL SCIENCE AS A PATIENT	4
A. Medical Science Regards The Unborn Child as A Patient	4
B. The Lives of Premature Unborn Children Who Might Be Preserved By Mo. Rev. Stat. Section 188.029 Have Been Enhanced By Recent Advances in Medical Science	7
II. THE PLAIN LANGUAGE OF MO. REV. STAT. SECTION 188.029 REQUIRES TESTING FOR VIABILITY THAT REASONABLY FURTHERS MISSOURI'S COMPELLING INTEREST IN PROTECTING THE LIFE OF THE VIABLE UNBORN CHILD	8
III. THE COURT OF APPEALS FAILED TO APPLY THE CORRECT STANDARD OF REVIEW IN THIS FACIAL CHALLENGE TO THE FETAL VIABILITY TESTING PROVISIONS OF MO. REV. STAT. SECTION 188.029	11
IV. THE DETERMINATION OF GESTATIONAL AGE, FETAL WEIGHT, AND LUNG MATURITY IS DIRECTLY RELATED TO THE DETERMINATION OF VIABILITY AT TWENTY OR MORE WEEKS GESTATION AND REASONABLY FURTHERS MISSOURI'S COMPELLING INTEREST IN THE LIFE OF THE VIABLE UNBORN CHILD	14

TABLE OF CONTENTS—Continued

	Page
A. Gestational Age Is Directly Related to the Determination Of Viability at Twenty or More Weeks Gestation And Can Be Determined By A Standard Ultrasound Examination	16
B. Fetal Weight Is Directly Related to the Determination of Viability at Twenty or More Weeks Gestation And Can Be Determined By A Standard Ultrasound Examination	20
C. Fetal Lung Maturity Is Related to the Determination of Viability At Twenty or More Weeks Gestation And Can Be Determined By A Standard Ultrasound Examination	23
V. THE COURT OF APPEALS ERRED BY FAILING TO SEVER AND UPHOLD THE CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS OF SECTION 188.029	29
CONCLUSION	30

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES	Page
Alaska Airlines, Inc. v. Brock, 107 S.Ct. 1476 (1987)	30
Brockett v. Spokane Arcades, Inc., 472 U.S. 491 (1985)	30
Burlington Northern Railroad Co. v. Oklahoma Tax Comm., 107 S.Ct. 1855 (1987)	11
City Council v Taxpayers for Vincent, 466 U.S. 789 (1984)	13
City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416 (1983)	3
Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979)	19, 27, 30
DeBartolo Corp. v. Florida Gulf Coast Bldg. & Const. Trades Council, 108 S.Ct. 1392 (1988)	12
Frisby v. Schultz, 108 S.Ct. 2495 (1988)	13
Hall v. Hancock, 32 Mass. (15 Pick.) 255 (1834)	5
Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980)	3
Landreth Timber Co. v. Landreth, 471 U.S. 681 (1985)	11
New York State Club Assn. v. City of New York, 108 S.Ct. 2225 (1988)	13
Planned Parenthood v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476 (1983)	2, 12, 13, 23
Planned Parenthood v. Ashcroft, 655 F.2d 848 (8th Cir. 1981)	2
Regan v. Time, Inc., 468 U.S. 641 (1984)	30
Reproductive Health Services v. Webster, 851 F.2d 1071 (8th Cir. 1988)	passim
Reproductive Health Services v. Webster, 662 F. Supp. 407 (W.D. Mo. 1987), superceding, 655 F. Supp. 1300 (W.D. Mo. 1987)	passim
Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973)	2
United States v. Salerno, 107 S.Ct. 2095 (1987)	12
STATUTES
Mo. Rev. Stat. 1.140 (1986)	29
Mo. Rev. Stat. 188.015(4) (1986)	4
Mo. Rev. Stat. 188.029 (1986)	passim
Mo. Rev. Stat. 188.030(2) (1986)	2
Mo. Rev. Stat. 188.030(3) (1986)	2

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

MISCELLANEOUS

General

Black's Law Dictionary (5th ed. 1979) 5, 10

W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England (University of Chicago Paperback 1979) 5

E. Coke, Third Institutes of the Laws of England (1644) 5

M. Dalton, The Countrey Justice (1618) 5

W. Lambarde, Eirenarcha, or of the Office of the Justices of Peace (DaCapo Press Reprint 1970) .. 5

Medical

Amon, et al., Obstetric Variable predicting survival of the immature newborn ([less than] 1000 gm): A five-year experience at a single perinatal center, 156 Am. J. Ob. Gyn. 1380 (1987) 10

Baraitser, et al., Prenatal Treatment of Fetal Hydrops, 6 Prenatal Diagnosis 109 (1986) 6

J. Beck, Elements of Medical Jurisprudence (11th ed. 1860) 5

Benacerraf, In Utero Treatment of a fetus with diaphragmatic hernia complicated by hydrops, 155 Am. J. Ob. Gyn. 817 (1986) 6

Berkowitz, Intravascular transfusion in utero: The percutaneous approach, 154 Am. J. Ob. Gyn. 622 (1986) 6

E. Blechschmidt, The Beginning of Human Life (1977) 5

Buckwald, et al., Mortality and Follow-up Data for Neonates Weighing 500 to 800 g. at Birth, 138 Am. J. Dis. Child. 779 (1984) 20

Campbell, et al., Routine Ultrasound Screening for the Prediction of Gestational Age, 65 Ob. Gyn. 613 (1985) 18

Chervenak, et al., A comparison of sonographic estimation of fetal weight and obstetrically determined gestational age in the prediction of neonatal outcome for the very low-birth weight fetus, 152 Am. J. Ob. Gyn. 47 (1985) 21

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Crawford, et al., Ultrasonic tissue characterization of the placenta: Is it of clinical value, 13 J. Clin. Ultrasound 533 (1985) 25

R. Creasy & R. Resnik, Maternal-Fetal Medicine: Principles and Practice (1984) 18, 21, 22, 23

Cruikshank, Amniocentesis for Determination of Fetal Maturity, 25 Clin. Ob. Gyn. 773 (1982) 24

D. Danforth and J. Scott, Obstetrics & Gynecology (5th ed. 1986) ..... passim

A. Dean, Principles of Medical Jurisprudence (1854) 5

Eilers, et al., Classroom Performance and Social Factors of Children with Birth Weights of 1250 Grams or Less, 77 Pediatrics 203 (1986) 7

Farrell, et al., A sensitive and specific ultrasonic sign of fetal lung maturation, 4 J. Ultrasound Med. (supp.) 80 (1985) 26

Fried, et al., Echogenicity of fetal lung: Relation to fetal age and maturity, 145 Am. J. Radiology 951 (1985) 26

Garite, Testing for Fetal Lung Maturity, 9 Perinatol. Neonatal. 85 (1985) 26

Goldstein, et al., Ultrasonographic assessment of gestational age with the distal femoral and proximal tibial ossification centers in the third trimester, 158 Am. J. Ob. Gyn. 127 (1988) 18

Goldstein, Ultrasound Assessment of fetal intestinal development in the evaluation of gestational age, 70 Ob. Gyn. 682 (1987) 18

Gross, et al., Sonographic free floating particles (FFP) in amniotic fluid predict mature lecithin/sphingomyelin ratio (Paper Presented at the Third Annual Meeting of the Society of Perinatal Obstetricians, San Antonio, TX, Jan. 27-29, 1983) 25

Guzick, et al., Ultrasound prediction of fetal weight in prolonged pregnancy, 151 Am. J. Ob. Gyn. 783 (1985) 21

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Hadlock, et al., Estimating Fetal age using multiple parameters: A prospective evaluation in a racially mixed population, 156 Am. J. Ob. Gyn. 955 (1987) 18

Hadlock, et al., Estimation of fetal weight with the use of head, body and femur measurements —A prospective study, 151 Am. J. Ob. Gyn. 333 (1985) 21

Harrison, Golbus & Filly, The Unborn Patient: Prenatal Diagnosis and Treatment (1984) 6

W. Hern, Abortion Practice (1984) 18

Kazzi, et al., The relationship of placental grade, fetal lung maturity, and neonatal outcome in normal and complicated pregnancies, 148 Am. J. Ob. Gyn. 54 (1984) 25

Kitchen, et al., Outcome in infants of birth weight 500 to 999 gm: A continuing regional study of 5-year-old survivors, 111 J. Pediatr. 761 (1987) .. 20

Kitchen, et al., Outcome in infants with birth weight 500 to 999 gm: A regional study of 1979 and 1980 births, 104 J. Ped. 921 (1984) 20

Kitchen, et al., Collaborative study of very-low-birthweight infants: Technigues of perinatal care and mortality, Lancet 1: 1454 (June 26, 1982) 7

A. Kurjak, ed., The Fetus as a Patient (1985) 6

Ludman, et al., Birth Weight, Respiratory Distress Syndrome and Cognitive Development, 141 Am. J. Dis. Child. 79 (1987) 24

McCormick, The Contribution of Low Birth Weight to Infant Mortality and Childhood Morbidity, 312 N. Eng. J. Med. 82 (1985) 20

MacGregor, et al., Underestimation of Gestational Age by Conventional Crown-Rump Length Dating Curves, 70 Ob. Gyn. 344 (1987) 18

Mercer, Fetal foot length as a predictor of gestational age, 156 Am. J. Ob. Gyn. 350 (1987) 18

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Michejda, Present Status of intrauterine treatment of hydrocephalus and its future, 155 Am. J. Ob. Gyn. 873 (1986) 6

K. Moore, The Developing Human: Clinically Oriented Embryology (3d ed. 1982) 5

Mullin, et al., Ultrasound Screening for Free-Floating Particles and Fetal Lung Maturity, 66 Ob. & Gyn. 50 (1985) 26, 29

Myers, Hospital Guidelines for Fetal Viability Assessment and Postdecision Responsibilities, 54 Mount Sinai J. Med. 191 (1987) 8

Nwaesai, et al., Preterm Birth at 23 to 26 Weeks' gestation: Is active obstetric management justified, 157 Am. J. Ob. Gyn. 890 (1987) 6, 11

Ott, et al., Accurate ultrasonic estimation of fetal weight III: Prospective evaluation of new formulae, 3 Am. J. Perinatol. 307 (1986) 21

Ott & Doyle, Ultrasonically Estimated Weight and Gestational Age: Predictors of Neonatal Respiratory Distress Syndrome, 32 J. Repro. Med. 915 (1987) 21, 22, 26

Paneth, et al., Newborn Intensive Care and neonatal mortality in low-birth-weight infants, 307 N. Eng. J. Med. 149 (1982) 7

Patterson, Estimation of Fetal Weight During Labor, 65 Ob. Gyn. 330 (1985) 21

C. Pauerstein, ed. Clinical Obstetrics (1987) 15, 19

Pritchard, MacDonald, & Gant, Williams Obstetrics (17th ed. 1985) ..... passim

Reece, et al., Embryonic trunk circumference: A new biometric parameter for estimation of gestational age, 156 Am. J. Ob. Gyn. 713 (1987) 18

Rickards, et al., Extremely Low Birth Weight Infants: neurological, psychological, growth and health status beyond five years of age, 147 Med. J. of Austl. 476 (1987) 8

Sampson, et al., Single Ultrasonic Estimation of Fetal Weight in Utero Compared with Birth Weight, 30 J. Repro. Med. 28 (1985) 21

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Shennan, et al., Perinatal factors associated with death or handicap in very preterm infants, 151 Am. J. Ob. Gyn. 231 (1985) 20

Skouteli, et al., Predictors for Survival and Normal Neurodevelopmental Outcome of Infants weighing Less Than 1001 Grams at birth, 27 Dev. Med. & Child Neuro. 588 (1985) 7

Stewart, et al., Outcome for Infants of very low birthweight: Survey of World Literature, Lancet 1: 1038 (May 9, 1981) 7

Streissguth, et al., IQ at Age 4 in Relation to Maternal Alcohol Use and Smoking During Pregnancy, 25 Develop. Psych. 3 (Jan. 1989) 5

Tait, Improved Flurorescence Polarization Assay for Use in Elevating Fetal Lung Maturity I: Development of the Assay Procedure, 32 Clin. Chem. 248 (1986) 24

Tahilramaney, et al., Ultrasonic estimation of weight in the very low-birth weight fetus: A resident versus staff physician comparison, 151 Am. J. Ob. Gyn. 90 (1985) 21

Tahilramaney, et al., Ultrasound in evaluation of fetal pulmonary maturity, 10 Perinatol. Neonatol. 9 (1986) 26

Thompson & Makowski, Estimation of Birth Weight and Gestational Age, 37 Ob. Gyn. 44 (1971) 21

Verloove-Vanhorick, et al., Neonatal Mortality Risk in Relation to Gestational Age and Birthweight, Lancet 1:55 (Jan. 11, 1986) 10, 20

E. Volpe, Patient in the Womb (1984) 6

Walker & Patel, Mortality and Morbidity in infants born between 20 and 28 weeks gestation, 94 Brit. J. Ob. Gyn. 670 (1987) 10

Watts, Intraperitoneal Fetal Transfusion under Direct Ultrasound Guidance, 71 Ob. & Gyn. 84 (1988) 6

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Yu, et al., Prognosis for infants born at 23 to 28 weeks' gestation, 293 Br. Med. J. 1200 (1986).. 10

Zilanti, et al., Assessment of maturity through the study of the ultrasonic image of the fetal intestine, 4 J. Ultrasound Med. (suppl) 81 (1985) 26

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

No. 88-605

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

---

BRIEF OF THE AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF PROLIFE OBSTETRICIANS AND GYNECOLOGISTS (AAPLOG) AND THE AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF PRO-LIFE PEDIATRICIANS (AAPLP) AS AMICI CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

INTEREST OF THE AMICI CURIAE

The AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF PROLIFE OBSTETRICIANS AND GYNECOLOGISTS (AAPLOG) is a national organization of obstetricians and gynecologists founded in 1973 and dedicated to reaffirming the unique value and dignity of individual human life in all stages of development from the moment of conception. The organization is engaged in educational and research projects which enhance the goals of the organization. The AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF PRO-LIFE PEDIATRICIANS (AAPLP) is a national educational organization comprised of pediatricians who are dedicated to fostering respect for human life at all stages of development.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

This is a facial challenge to the constitutionality of several Missouri restrictions on the performance of elective abortions. Of particular interest to these amici is section 188.029 of the Missouri, Revised Statutes, which requires that the physician make a determination of viability when he "has reason to believe" that the fetus is at twenty or more weeks gestational age, and that the physician "perform or cause to be performed such medical examinations and tests as are necessary to make a finding of the gestational age, weight, and lung maturity of the unborn child. . . ."

Missouri has, in force, three other provisions which have been previously upheld and which protect the viable fetus during abortion by requiring: (1) the use of that method of abortion which will best preserve the life of the fetus (sec. 188.030.2); (2) the presence of a second physician (sec. 188.030.3), and (3) that both physicians exercise the same standard of care toward any infant born alive from an abortion as would be given to any infant intended to be born alive and not aborted (sec. 188.030.3). See Planned Parenthood v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476 (1983); Planned Parenthood v. Ashcroft, 655 F.2d 848 (8th Cir. 1981). By enacting the provision challenged here, the Missouri legislature has prefaced these three provisions with the logical prerequisite that a physician who intends to perform an abortion when the physician "has reason to believe" that the fetus is of twenty or more weeks gestational age first make a determination of viability. If the physician determines in his medical judgment that the fetus is viable, the restrictions of section 188.030 become effective.

Missouri has an "important and legitimate interest" in the fetus throughout pregnancy which becomes "compelling" at viability. Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 163 (1973). As the Supreme Court in Harris v. McRae said of the Roe decision, "the state interest in protecting the potential life of the [viable] fetus was found to justify a criminal prohibition against abortions, except where necessary for the preservation of the life or health of the mother." 448 U.S. 297, 313 (1980). Since the states have not been permitted to protect the life of the viable unborn child by limiting the reasons for which post-viability abortions can be performed, the states have taken the only available recourse by attempting to regulate the method of a post-viability abortion.

If Missouri's interest is truly "compelling," then the State must be permitted to protect viable unborn children by requiring physicians—in their best medical judgment—to utilize standard medical technology to make objective findings as part of their determination of viability. As Justice O'Connor has observed, "recent studies have demonstrated increasingly earlier fetal viability." City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., 462 U.S. 416, 457 (1983). Preterm infants are surviving not only at earlier gestational ages, but with increasingly improved outcomes. Given the potential for survival of infants of twenty-four weeks gestational age, and the four week margin of error in estimating gestational age, Missouri's requirement of determination of viability when the physician "has reason to believe" that the fetus is twenty or more weeks gestational age is reasonable. A "compelling interest" is, at a minimum, one demanding attention. By demanding attention to certain objective factors that are directly related to viability, Missouri reasonably protects its compelling interest.

The plain language of section 188.029 requires only those tests which are "necessary" to make a finding of three non-exclusive factors relevant to viability: gestational age, fetal weight, and fetal lung maturity. The courts below misread the plain language of the statute by reading into section 188.029 a requirement of a single test—amniocentesis—that is simply not required. At twenty weeks gestation, an ultrasound examination to determine gestational age is standard medical practice. It is routinely provided by the plaintiff clinics. An ultrasound examination can effectively provide all three designated findings of sec. 188.029.

In this facial challenge, the Appellees have failed to establish that "no set of circumstances exists under which the Act would be valid." The Missouri regulation "reasonably furthers" the State's compelling interest in viable fetal life and imposes no physical or psychological burden on the woman's decision to abort. Accordingly, sec. 188.029 should be held constitutional in its entirety, and the judgment of the court below should be reversed.

ARGUMENT

I. MISSOURI HAS A COMPELLING INTEREST IN PRESERVING THE LIFE OF THE UNBORN CHILD WHO IS REGARDED BY MEDICAL SCIENCE AS A PATIENT.

A. Medical Science Regards the Unborn Child As A Patient.

Missouri Revised Statutes (Mo.Rev.Stat.), section 188.029 provides:

> Before a physician performs an abortion on a woman he has reason to believe is carrying an unborn child of twenty or more weeks gestational age, the physician shall first determine if the unborn child is viable by using and exercising that degree of care, skill, and proficiency commonly exercised by the ordinarily skillful, careful, and prudent physician engaged in similar practice under the same or similar conditions.
>
> In making this determination of viability, the physician shall perform or cause to be performed such medical examinations and tests as are necessary to make a finding of the gestational age, weight, and lung maturity of the unborn child and shall enter such findings and determination of viability in the medical record of the mother.

Mo. Rev. Stat. sec. 188.029 (1986).[1] The State of Missouri enacted this statute because it has an important and legitimate interest in the life of the unborn child[2] throughout pregnancy that becomes "compelling," according to this Court, at viability. Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 163 (1973).

[1] "Gestational age" is measured "from the first day of the woman's last menstrual period (LMP)." Mo.Rev.Stat. 188.015(4) (1986). This definition is consistent with standard medical practice. D. Danforth & J. Scott, Obstetrics & Gynecology 263 (5th ed. 1986); Pritchard, MacDonald, & Gant, Williams Obstetrics 139 (17th ed. 1985); C. Pauerstein, ed. Clinical Obstetrics 121 (1987).

[2] Throughout this brief, we use the terms "unborn child" and "fetus" interchangeably. Although "fetus" is a medical term, derived from Latin, that describes the developing unborn of any viviparous animal, the common law and medical jurisprudence have traditionally used the term "child" or "unborn child" to refer to the unborn offspring of human parents at any time of pregnancy. See e.g., Black's Law Dictionary 559 (5th ed. 1979); Hall v. Hancock, 32 Mass. (15 Pick.) 255, 257 (1834); W. Lambarde, Eirenarcha, or of the Office of Justices of Peace 217-18 (1581 ed.) (DaCapo Press Reprint 1970); M. Dalton, The Countrey Justice 213 (1618 ed.) (Walter J. Johnson Inc. reprint 1975); E. Coke, Third Institutes of the Laws of England 50 (1644) ("childe"); 1 W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 129 (University of Chicago Paperback 1979); 4 Blackstone 198 ("child").

Medical science, however, has an interest in the unborn child from a much earlier point in prenatal development. Medical science affirms that human life begins at conception. K. Moore, The Developing Human: Clinically Oriented Embryology 1, 13 (3d ed. 1982); E. Blechschmidt, The Beginning of Human Life 16-17 (1977). This is the traditional understanding of American medicine since at least the early nineteenth century. 1 J. Beck, Elements of Medical Jurisprudence 462-64 (11th ed. 1860); A. Dean, Principles of Medical Jurisprudence 37-41, 123-31 (1854); S. Farr, Elements of Medical Jurisprudence, in T. Cooper, Tracts on Medical Jurisprudence 40 (1819). The unborn child who is adversely affected by alcohol in the first month of pregnancy is the same child who suffers intellectual disabilities at four years. Streissguth, et al., IQ at Age 4 in Relation to Maternal Alcohol Use and Smoking During Pregnancy, 25 Develop. Psych. 3 (Jan. 1989). Since the time of the Roe Court's pronouncements about the potentiality of human life, a new medical discipline has emerged: fetology. This science treats the unborn child as a distinct patient.

> Indeed, the fetus is no longer dealt with as a maternal appendage ultimately to be shed at the whim of biologic forces beyond control. Instead, the fetus has achieved the status of the second patient, a patient who usually faces much greater risks of serious morbidity and mortality than does the mother.

Pritchard, MacDonald, & Gant, Williams Obstetrics 267 (17th ed. 1985) (hereinafter "Williams Obstetrics"). "[T]he status of the fetus has been elevated to that of a patient who should be given the same meticulous care by the physician that we long have given the pregnant woman." Id. at 139. See generally, A. Kurjak, ed. The Fetus as a Patient (1985); Harrison, Golbus & Filly, The Unborn Patient: Prenatal Diagnosis and Treatment (1984); E. Volpe, Patient in the Womb (1984).

Medical technology for the child in utero has advanced greatly, developing surgery and treatment for previously untreatable conditions.[3] Medical technology also has moved the line of viability earlier in pregnancy. In Roe, the Court found that "[v]iability is usually placed at about seven months (28 weeks) but may occur earlier, even at 24 weeks." 410 U.S. at 160 (footnote omitted). Viability may now occur as early as twenty-two weeks, with substantial potential of viability at twenty-four weeks. Nwaesei, et al., Preterm birth at 23 to 26 weeks' gestation: Is active obstetric management justified, 157

[3] See generally, Watts, Intraperitoneal Fetal Transfusion Under Direct Ultrasound Guidance, 71 Ob. & Gyn. 84 (1988); Baraitser, et al., Prenatal Treatment of Fetal Hydrops, 6 Prenatal Diagnosis 109 (1986); Michejda, Present Status of intrauterine treatment of hydrocephalus and its future, 155 Am. J. Ob. Gyn. 873 (1986); Benacerraf, In Utero treatment of a fetus with diaphragmatic hernia complicated by hyrops, 155 Am. J. Ob. Gyn. 817 (1986); Berkowitz, Intravascular transfusion in utero: The percutaneous approach, 154 Am. J. Ob. Gyn. 622 (1986).

Am. J. Ob. Gyn. 890 (1987). Missouri may take into account these tremendous advances in medical science and technology and regulate to protect those fetuses who may survive the abortion procedure.

B. The Lives of Premature Unborn Children Who Might Be Preserved By Mo. Rev. Stat. section 188.029 Have Been Enhanced By Recent Advances in Medical Science.

In recent years, great strides have been made in the medical and nursing management of very low birth weight (VLBW) infants, leading to an increasing survival rate. Paneth, et al., Newborn intensive care and neonatal mortality in low-birth-weight infants: A population study. 307 New Eng. J. Med. 149 (1982); Kitchen, et al., Collaborative study of very-low-birthweight infants: Techniques of perinatal care and mortality, Lancet 1: 1454 (June 26, 1982). There has been "an impressive fall in the neonatal mortality rate among the very low-birthweight and extremely low-birthweight [less than 1001 g] infants . . . in centres around the world." Skouteli, et al., Predictors for Survival and Normal Neurodevelopmental Outcome of Infants Weighing Less Than 1001 Grams at Birth, 27 Dev. Med. & Child Neuro. 588 (1985).

A significant percentage of these children survive with little or no permanent disability. One short-term follow-up study "concluded that there has been an increase in the proportion of healthy survivors with a relatively low permanent handicap rate of 6% to 8% of all VLBW newborns." Eilers, et al., Classroom Performance and Social Factors of Children With Birth Weights of 1250 Grams or less, 77 Pediatrics 203 (1986) (citing Stewart, et al., Outcome for infants of very low birthweight: Survey of world literature, Lancet 1: 1038 (May 9, 1981)). Long-term follow-up has yielded equally encouraging results. One study of 60 VLBW survivors at age five years and beyond showed that 74% had no important disability; 17% had a mild or moderate disability; only 9% were severely disabled. Rickards, et al., Extremely-low-birthweight infants: neurological, psychological, growth and health status beyond five years of age, 147 Med. J. of Austl. 476 (1987). An important finding was that severe disability was less prevalent at five years (9%), than at the two-year review (15%). Id. at 481. Even though a fetus may be "previable" (defined as including any fetus estimated to be under 500 grams birthweight or under 22 weeks gestational age), "all delivery room staff [must] be prepared for the possibility of the delivery of a liveborn viable fetus. When this occurs, appropriate pediatric intervention must be made, independent of prior obstetric decisions." Myers, Hospital Guidelines for Fetal Viability Assessment and Postdecision Responsibilities, 54 Mount Sinai J. Med. 191, 192 (1987) (emphasis in original).

Medical practice and evolving technology thus support intervention to preserve the lives of premature infants born alive. Through section 188.029, Missouri has sought to protect its compelling interest in the lives of viable unborn children.

II. THE PLAIN LANGUAGE OF MO. REV. STAT. SECTION 188.029 REQUIRES TESTING FOR VIABILITY THAT REASONABLY FURTHERS MISSOURI'S COMPELLING INTEREST IN PROTECTING THE LIFE OF THE VIABLE UNBORN CHILD.

The plain language of Mo.Rev.Stat. section 188.029 indicates that it was enacted to provide objective, medical factors for the physician in making his assessment of viability in accordance with sound standards of medical practice. The second sentence provides that—in making the determination of viability when the physician "has reason to believe" that the fetus is of twenty or more weeks gestational age—"the physician shall perform or cause to be performed such medical examinations and tests as are necessary to make a finding of the gestational age, weight, and lung maturity of the unborn child and shall enter such findings and determinations of viability in the medical record of the mother." This provision provides substantial flexibility for the attending physician. First, he may perform the tests himself or he may delegate that responsibility. Cf. City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416, 448 (1983). Second, no particular kind of test is specified by weeks of gestation. Third, the physician is not required to administer any specific test for each of the factors. Rather, he may choose from "such tests as are necessary to make a finding" on all three factors. If one test or examination yields a finding for all three factors, that test is sufficient. The emphasis is on the end—making "a finding"—and not on the means—particular tests.

It is a familiar practice of legal interpretation that "necessary" is a word that "must be considered in the connection in which it is used, as it is a word susceptible of various meanings." Black's Law Dictionary 928 (5th ed. 1979). Under section 188.029, it is not "necessary" for the physician or his agent to make the best finding, a finding derived from the most sophisticated medical technology, the most detailed finding, or the most comprehensive finding. And, it should be quite obvious, the plain language does not make it necessary to use a test that will yield no finding. A test or examination that is futile to make a finding cannot, within the realm of logic, be considered "necessary to make a finding" within the plain language of section 188.029.

This relaxed standard affords flexibility to the physician within the context of developing medical technologies, in different locations, with different costs. The flexible standard corresponds admirably both to the array of tests or examinations that are available today to make a finding of gestational age, weight, and lung maturity and to the certainty that new tests or examinations will be developed in the future for making a finding on these three factors. At twenty or more weeks gestation, certain tests are available in standard, current medical practice that can yield a finding on all three factors. If only one test is performed and a finding of previability (immaturity) is made, the results may be a "false positive" and the fetus being aborted might actually be viable. The state has a compelling interest in protecting these viable fetuses by requiring findings on more than one factor; false positives may be eliminated and maturity revealed.[4] At twenty weeks gestation, certain tests

[4] The importance of considering all three factors is underscored by disagreement in the medical literature as to any single factor being determinative of viability. "[I]n infants weighing [less than] 1000 gm at birth, birth weight rather than gestational age is the more important variable influencing survival." Amon, et al., Obstetric variable predicting survival of the immature newborn ([less than] 1000 gm): A five-year experience at a single perinatal center, 156 Am. J. Ob. Gyn. 1380 (1987) (footnote omitted). This finding differs from Yu et al., Prognosis for infants born at 23 to 28 weeks' gestation, 293 Brit. Med. J. 1200 (1986): "Gestation, not birth weight, however, is the parameter that must be used by the obstetrician as a guide to making critical decisions about the care of the mother and fetus. Gestation is a better predictor of outcome because of the inherent inaccuracies in clinically or sonographically estimating fetal weight." Id. (footnote omitted). See also, Walker and Patel, Mortality and morbidity in infants born between 20 and 28 weeks gestation, 94 Brit. J. Ob. Gyn. 670, 673 (1987): "This gives support to the widespread use of ultrasound scans in early pregnancy. Since obstetricians have to manage pregnancies on the basis of gestational age, and since the occurrence of problems in mid-trimester can seldom be predicted, confirmation of gestational age early in all pregnancies is important." In a group of 1338 very preterm and/or very-low-birthweight infants, "the best obstetric estimate of gestational age was a better predictor of neonatal mortality than birthweight." Verloove-Vanhorick et al, Neonatal Mortality Risk in Relation to Gestational Age and Birthweight, Lancet 1:55 (Jan. 11, 1986). "Although birth weight and gestational age have been shown to be major determinants of neonatal survival, that are available later in gestation may be futile to make a finding. As gestation progresses, other tests become available to make a finding. Conversely, at twenty weeks gestation, certain tests or examinations are available that may be less accurate than other tests as gestation progresses. However, at each point in gestation at twenty weeks or later, medical practice currently provides tests or examinations that can make a finding on each of these three factors. Section 188.029 requires no more. Since each of these three factors is related to viability, and since infants born alive at 22-24 weeks may be viable, section 188.029 "reasonably furthers" Missouri's compelling interest in the life of the viable unborn child.

III. THE COURT OF APPEALS FAILED TO APPLY THE CORRECT STANDARD OF REVIEW IN THIS FACIAL CHALLENGE TO THE FETAL VIABILITY TESTING PROVISIONS OF MO. REV. STAT. SECTION 188.029.

It is a settled principle of statutory construction that absent clear evidence of a contrary legislative intention, a statute should be interpreted according to its plain language. Burlington Northern Railroad Co. v. Oklahoma Tax Comm., 107 S.Ct. 1855 (1987); Landreth Timber Co. v. Landreth, 471 U.S. 681, 685 (1985). The application of the plain meaning is particularly important in a facial challenge to the constitutionality of a state statute because the language is challenged on its face and > the challenger must establish that no set of circumstances exists under which the Act would be valid. The fact that the [] Act might operate unconstitu-gestational age better reflects fetal maturation and is therefore more likely to be a better predictor of outcome." Nwaesei, et al., Preterm birth at 23 to 26 weeks' gestation: Is active obstetric management justified?, 157 Am. J. Ob. Gyn. 890, 894-95 (1987).

> tionally under some conceivable set of circumstances is sufficient to render it wholly invalid, since we have not recognized an "overbreadth" doctrine outside the limited context of the First Amendment.

United States v. Salerno, 107 S.Ct. 2095, 2100 (1987). Finally, this Court has held that " 'the elementary rule is that every reasonable construction must be resorted to in order to save a statute from unconstitutionality.' " DeBartolo Corp. v. Florida Gulf Coast Bldg. & Const. Trades, 108 S.Ct. 1392, 1397 (1988). This canon applies even to the construction of state abortion statutes. Planned Parenthood v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476, 493 (1983).

In Planned Parenthood v. Ashcroft, this Court upheld the constitutionality of Missouri's requirement of the attendance of a second physician at the abortion of a viable fetus. Mo.Rev.Stat. section 188.030.3 (1986). Section 188.030.3 requires that both physicians "take all reasonable steps in keeping with good medical practice . . . to preserve the life and health of the viable unborn child; provided that it does not pose an increased risk to the life or health of the mother." This Court held that "the State's compelling interest in protecting a viable fetus justifies the second-physician requirement even though there may be the rare case when a physician may think honestly that D & E is required for the mother's health. Legislation need not accommodate every conceivable contingency." 462 U.S. at 485 n.7.

> Viable fetuses will be in immediate and grave danger because of their premature birth . . . By giving immediate medical attention to a fetus that is delivered alive, the second physician will assure that the State's interests are protected more fully than the first physician alone would be able to do. And given the compelling interest that the State has in preserving life, we cannot say that the Missouri requirement of a second physician in those unusual circumstances where Missouri permits a third> trimester abortion is unconstitutional. Preserving the life of a viable fetus that is aborted may not often be possible, but the State legitimately may choose to provide safeguards for the comparatively few instances of live birth that occur.

Id. at 485-86.

Section 188.029 is a logical precursor to the second physician requirement upheld in Ashcroft and is sustained by the same medical and legal understanding. It is manifestly justified by Missouri's compelling interest in the viable fetus. By requiring findings on three nonexclusive factors that are directly related to fetal viability, are not deemed to be conclusive determinants of viability, and are made through methods that are consistent with standard medical practice, section 188.029 "reasonably furthers" Missouri's compelling interest in the life of the viable unborn child. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. at 486.

The courts below, however, applied an erroneously heightened standard of review, which not only disregarded this Court's holding in Ashcroft but completely failed to apply the normal standard of review in a facial challenge to the constitutionality of state legislation. With the narrow exception of First Amendment claims of protected speech, plaintiffs rarely prevail on a facial challenge. New York State Club Ass'n. v. City of New York, 108 U.S. 2225, 2233 (1988) (quoting City Council v. Taxpayers for Vincent, 466 U.S. 789, 798 (1984)). By failing to apply the proper standard of review to this facial challenge, the courts below applied a stricter standard of review to this state abortion statute than is commonly applied to legislation touching core First Amendment speech. Cf. Frisby v. Schultz, 108 S.Ct. 2495 (1988). The State is not required to address and answer every possible application of the law to any imaginable circumstance. The courts below erred by failing to uphold the second part of section 188.029 insofar as it "reasonably furthers" Missouri's compelling interest in the life of the viable unborn child. Like the second physician requirement upheld in Ashcroft, the determination of viability when the physician "has reason to believe" that the unborn child is of twenty or more weeks gestation in section 188.029 may be applied in cases in which the physician subsequently finds that the fetus is not viable. But, based on the unrebutted medical testimony that an error of plus/minus four weeks can be made in the determination of gestational age, the courts below held that a determination of viability when the physician "has reason to believe" that the unborn child is of twenty or more weeks gestation is reasonably related to the state's compelling interest in the viable fetus. The courts below erred by failing to apply this same analysis to the second part of section 188.029. Because both parts of section 188.029 "reasonably further" Missouri's "compelling interest" in the viable unborn child, both parts of section 188.029 are constitutional.

IV. THE DETERMINATION OF GESTATIONAL AGE, FETAL WEIGHT, AND LUNG MATURITY IS DIRECTLY RELATED TO THE DETERMINATION OF VIABILITY AT TWENTY OR MORE WEEKS GESTATION AND REASONABLY FURTHERS MISSOURI'S COMPELLING INTEREST IN THE LIFE OF THE VIABLE UNBORN CHILD.

Requiring a determination of viability when the physician "has reason to believe" that the fetus is of twenty or more weeks gestational age "reasonably furthers" Missouri's compelling interest in the life of a viable unborn child, because there is a substantial potential for error in the clinical determination of gestational age by last menstrual period (LMP). At the trial in this case, medical testimony from witnesses both for the plaintiffs and for Missouri admitted the substantial potential for error in this determination. There is a four week or greater potential for error in predicting gestational age based upon the information provided by the patient (T.II-48 (Hern)). Dr. Maulik agreed that if a physician estimated a twenty week fetus based on information provided by the patient, "in fact the fetus could be as little as 16 weeks old or as much as 24 weeks old." (T. I-55). In addition, there was also testimony that the use of sonography (despite its cost) is good medical practice for a woman believed to be twenty weeks and that fetuses at twenty-four weeks are viable (T. I-55, T. I-61). Dr. Crist testified that sonography and manual examination of the uterus were used to determine fetal age at 20 weeks and that ultrasonography and a "normogram" were used to estimate fetal weight at twenty weeks gestation (T.I-99; T.II-65 (Widdicombe)). These tests are standard medical practice, according to this testimony.

This testimony is supported by substantial medical literature. It is well known that the clinical assessment of gestational age is prone to inherent inaccuracy and the degree of inaccuracy can be quite large. "Clinical assessment of gestational age is fraught with error because the LMP is uncertain in 20% to 40% of gravidas." D. Danforth & J. Scott, Obstetrics & Gynecology 263 (5th ed. 1986) (hereinafter "Danforth"); C. Pauerstein, ed., Clinical Obstetrics 268 (1987) (hereinafter "Pauerstein"). One study found that "even when the LMP is reported with certainty, in 15% of pregnancies the clinically assessed gestational age will vary by at least 3 weeks from the age assigned to the newborn by careful pediatric examination." Id. It is important, and standard medical practice, to have an accurate assessment of gestational age. Section 188.029, therefore, directly enhances the determination of accurate gestational age at twenty or more weeks gestation.

A. Gestational Age Is Directly Related to the Determination Of Viability at Twenty or More Weeks Gestation and Can Be Determined By A Standard Ultrasound Examination.

A standard text on obstetrics provides: "Precise knowledge of the age of the fetus is the imperative for ideal obstetric management." Williams Obstetrics at 246. Indeed, one of the "major goals" of prenatal care is to "determine the gestational age of the fetus." Id. at 247, 249; Danforth at 366. "[B]ecause duration is one of the most important parameters to be considered when clinical judgments are being made, an accurate determination of gestational length is one of the important functions of prenatal care." Danforth at 365.

Accurate knowledge of gestational age is important for several reasons. "Knowledge of dates is essential in the management of pregnancy because gestational age forms the X-coordinate of many graphs pertaining to the evaluation of fetal status." Danforth at 263. In addition, "[a]ccurate information about maturity is needed by the obstetrician deciding whether to prematurely abbreviate a pregnancy, for example, or perform a repeat cesarean section." Id. "The degree of maturity attained is pivotal in making the decision to abbreviate a particular pregnancy for the benefit of mother or fetus." Pauerstein at 268; Williams Obstetrics at 602. Inaccurate estimation of fetal age can contribute "to the development of respiratory distress syndrome (RDS) in the newborn with a resultant increase in perinatal morbidity and mortality." Id. Dr. Maulik testified for the plaintiff in the district court that "viability is a correspondent of gestational age." (T. I-30) Accurate knowledge of gestational age is, therefore, directly related to the state's compelling interest in the life of the viable fetus.

Several methods can be used "with reasonable accuracy" to determine gestational age. Danforth at 365. These include: estimation of the date of the last menstrual period (LMP), manual examination, maternal perception of fetal movement (quickening), measurement of fundal height, and ultrasound or sonography. Both Dr. Maulik (T.I-30, I-35) and Dr. Crist (T.I-101) testified at trial that determination of gestational age by menstrual history is the least reliable method. A pelvic examination is also "unreliable as a method for dating." Danforth at 365. In the first trimester, even under "ideal conditions," a pelvic examination can be inaccurate to plus/minus 2 weeks. Danforth at 263. Moreover, if the uterus is retroverted (turned backward in relation to the pelvic axis) "as it is in approximately 30% of women, the accuracy of fetal age determination deteriorates to [plus or minus] 4 weeks." Id. The plaintiffs' witness, Dr. Maulik, testified in the district court that the pelvic exam was "not very accurate." (T. I-31). Another method—maternal perception of quickening—is useful only as a "rough estimate" of gestational age. Danforth at 365. Another method involves the measurement of fundal height—the length from the top of the uterus to the pubic symphysis. This is used to measure pregnancy primarily in the second trimester, when the pregnancy is more advanced. Where the physician is making regular, periodic measurements, the height of the fundus, although not a precise measurement of gestational age, may corroborate other clinical estimations of gestational age. Danforth at 365-66.

Finally, it has become standard medical practice to use ultrasound to determine gestational age at approximately 20 weeks gestation when gestational age is uncertain:

> The accurate determination of gestational age is one of the most important goals of prenatal care. It is reasonable for the obstetrical care provider to ask at about 20 weeks, "Am I confident of this patient's gestational age?" If not, ultrasound should be used to determine the gestational age prior to the third trimester.

Danforth at 366. See also id. at 262 (Table 15-1). "When gestational age cannot be clearly identified, sonography is likely to be of considerable value." Id. at 249. "Ultrasonography has become an integral part of the assessment of age and health of the fetus." R. Creasy & R. Resnik, Maternal-Fetal Medicine: Principles and Practice 210 (1984) (new 1989 edition forthcoming) (hereinafter "Creasy & Resnick"). The use of sonography to determine gestational age is also standard abortion practice. Hern, Abortion Practice 207 (1984).

The district court found that "it is standard medical practice to determine 'gestational age' by ultrasound examination and fetal skull measurements whenever it appears that a woman is at least 20 weeks pregnant." 662 F.Supp. at 422. Indeed, the court found that such an examination to determine gestational age is "performed on every woman seeking a second trimester abortion" at the plaintiff, Reproductive Health Services. Id. at 422 n.43. See also T.II-6, 23-24, 47-48 (Hern).

With the use of ultrasound, at least five fetal parameters (measurements) are used to determine gestational age at 20 weeks or later.[5] These include: measurement of the crown-rump length (CRL), the biparietal diameter (BPD), femur length (FL), fetal head circumference (HC), and the abdominal circumference (AC). Pauerstein at 268-72. See also T.I-29-44, 55-71 (Maulik), T.I-97-108, 116-121 (Crist). Measurement of crown-rump length, biparietal diameter "and possibly femur length are the most accurate indicators of fetal age before 26 weeks of gestation." Danforth at 269. The plaintiffs' witness, Dr. Maulik, testified in the district court that "from 15 weeks to 24 weeks, we will use measurements of the fetal head, fetal skull to be precise, and also the fetal thigh measurements" and head circumference. (T.I-34). The standard use of ultrasound to determine gestational age when the fetus is believed to be of twenty or more weeks gestation indicates that section 188.029 is in complete accord with standard medical practice.

[5] See generally, Goldstein, et al., Ultrasonographic assessment of gestational age with the distal femoral and proximal tibial ossification centers in the third trimester, 158 Am. J. Ob. Gyn. 127 (1988); Goldstein, et al., Ultrasound Assessment of fetal intestinal development in the evaluation of gestational age, 70 Ob. Gyn. 682 (1987); Hadlock, et al., Estimating fetal age using multiple parameters: A prospective evaluation in a racially mixed population, 156 Am. J. Ob. Gyn. 955 (1987); MacGregor, et al., Underestimation of Gestational Age by Conventional Crown-Rump Length Dating Curves, 70 Ob. Gyn. 344 (1987); Mercer, Fetal foot length as a predictor of gestational age, 156 Am. J. Ob. Gyn. 350 (1987); Reece et al., Embryonic trunk circumference: A new biometric parameter for estimation of gestational age, 156 Am. J. Ob. Gyn. 713 (1987); Campbell, et al., Routine Ultrasound Screening for the Prediction of Gestational Age, 65 Ob. Gyn. 613 (1985).

Nevertheless, in a manner akin to "divide and conquer," the lower courts invalidated the second and third required findings of fetal weight and lung maturity. Then—having reduced the non-exclusive findings from three to one—the courts refused to sever and uphold the remaining required finding of gestational age by relying on the dictum in Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379, 388-89 (1979) that legislatures cannot "proclaim one of the elements entering into the ascertainment of viability . . . as the determinant of when the State has a compelling interest in the life or health of the fetus." 851 F.2d at 1074-75; 662 F.Supp. at 423. Aside from the fact that it was the lower courts, and not Missouri, which thereby designated only one finding, the plain language of section 188.029 does not even make the gestational age finding the sole, conclusive, or determinative factor in assessing viability. Rather, it merely requires a finding of gestational age as a part of the physician's assessment of viability ("[i]n making this determination"). Thus, the dictum in Colautti simply does not apply to section 188.029. Accordingly, the court of appeals erred in striking the determination of gestational age in section 188.029. That judgment should be reversed.

B. Fetal Weight Is Directly Related to the Determination of Viability at Twenty or More Weeks Gestation and Can Be Determined By A Standard Ultrasound Examination.

Section 188.029 also provides that the physician "shall perform or cause to be performed such medical examinations and tests as are necessary to make a finding of the . . . weight . . . of the unborn child . . . ." The determination of fetal weight is directly related to determining the viability of the unborn child at 20 or more weeks gestation.[6] For example:

> Antenatal prediction of birth weight has proven to be especially useful in the management of women at high risk for premature delivery. The reason is related to the fact that in approximately 35% of preterm infants exceeding 1000 g, clinical estimates of weight can be quite low, leading the physician to assume falsely that the chances of survival for the fetus are minimal. At present, accurate determination of birth weight even in the range of 750 g to 1000 g is important because the perinatal outcome of very low birth weight infants managed in modern intensive care neonatal centers has markedly improved.

Danforth at 274. See also, McCormick, The Contribution of Low Birth Weight to Infant Mortality and Childhood

[6] See generally, Verloove-Vanhorick, et al., Neonatal Mortality Risk in Relation to Gestational Age and Birthweight, Lancet 1:55 (Jan. 11, 1986); Kitchen, et al., Outcome in infants of birth weight 500 to 999 gm: A continuing regional study of 5-year-old survivors 111 J. Pediatr. 761 (1987); Shennan, et al., Perinatal factors associated with death or handicap in very preterm infants, 151 Am. J. Ob. Gyn. 231 (1985); Buckwald, et al., Mortality and Follow-up Data for Neonates Weighing 500 to 800 g at Birth, 138 Am. J. Dis. Child. 779 (1984); Kitchen, et al., Outcome in infants with birth weight 500 to 999 gm: A regional study of 1979 and 1980 births, 104 J. Pediatr. 921 (1984);

Morbidity, 312 N. Eng. J. Med. 82 (1985). This relationship is nothing new. "Estimating fetal weight and gestational age has been the subject of considerable investigative work for the past several decades in evaluating growth rate and development of the fetus at risk and when early termination of pregnancy is to be accomplished." Thompson & Makowski, Estimation of Birth Weight and Gestational Age, 37 Ob. Gyn. 44 (1971).

Several parameters are used in determining fetal weight by ultrasonography.[7] Generally, the same fetal parameters that are used to determine gestational age are used to determine fetal weight. With ultrasound, fetal weight may be estimated using a formula that "utilizes head circumference, abdominal circumference and femur length." Ott & Doyle, Ultrasonically Estimated Weight and Gestational Age: Predictors of Neonatal Respiratory Distress Syndrome, 32 J. Repro. Med. 915, 916 (1987). See also C. Pauerstein, ed. Clinical Obstetrics 268 (Table 12-1) (1987). "Fetal length is one of the major determinants of fetal weight." Danforth at 272. A formula targeted to low birth weight and premature fetuses which incorporated fetal head circumference, fetal abdominal circumference, and femur length has considerable accuracy. Danforth at 273. Some physicians have found that "[a] single cross-sectional area of the fetal abdomen at the level of the insertion of the ductus venosus permits weight estimation to within 200 gm." Creasy & Resnik at 218.

[7] See generally, R. Creasy & R. Resnik, Maternal-Fetal Medicine: Principles and Practice at 218 (1984); Ott & Doyle, Ultrasonically Estimated Weight and Gestational Age: Predictors of Neonatal Respiratory Distress Syndrome, 32 J. Repro. Med. 915, 916 (1987); Ott, et al., Accurate ultrasonic estimation of fetal weight: III. Prospective evaluation of new formulae, 3 Am. J. Perinatol. 307 (1986); Chervenak, et al., A comparison of sonographic estimation of fetal weight and obstetrically determined gestational age in the predication of neonatal outcome for the very low-birth weight fetus, 152 Am. J. Ob. Gyn. 47 (1985); Guzick, et al., Ultrasound prediction of fetal weight in prolonged pregnancy, 151 Am. J. Ob. Gyn. 783 (1985); Hadlock, et al., Estimation of fetal weight with the use of head, body, and femur measurements—A prospective study, 151 Am. J. Ob. Gyn. 333 (1985); Patterson, Estimation of Fetal Weight During Labor, 65 Ob. & Gyn. 330 (1985); Sampson, et al., Single Ultrasonic Estimation of Fetal Weight in Utero Compared with Birth Weight, 30 J. Repro. Med. 28 (1985); Tahilramaney, et al., Ultrasonic estimation of weight in the very low-birthweight fetus: A resident versus staff physician comparison, 151 Am J. Ob. Gyn. 90 (1985).

Contrary to the lower courts' holdings, the requirement of a finding of fetal weight does not impose any undue burden on the physician or patient. A finding of fetal weight can be obtained from the same ultrasound test used to determine gestational age, which the district court found to be standard medical practice for women at 20 weeks gestation. 662 F.Supp. at 423 & n.45. In striking down the required finding of fetal weight, the district court (662 F.Supp. at 422) and the court of appeals (851 F.2d at 1074-75) relied on estimated costs of "$125-250" for tests to determine fetal weight. This finding is not supported by the record and the lower courts employed an erroneous standard of review in relying on this finding. The only basis for these costs in the record is the testimony of Dr. Crist. He attributed these costs to the work of a "paranatologist" [sic] for a "high-risk patient" later in gestation. (T.I-108)

Since medical testimony in this case—supported by abundant medical literature—indicates that the use of ultrasound is standard medical practice for a woman at twenty or more weeks gestation, any costs attributable to this standard medical practice cannot logically be attributable to Missouri's statute, nor do they support the claim that the statute imposes any burden on the physician or his patient. The same ultrasound test that permits estimation of gestational age permits estimation of fetal weight. Thus, the district court and court of appeals applied an erroneous standard of review in disregarding the plain language of section 188.029 and in relying on such costs to strike it down.

C. Fetal Lung Maturity Is Related to the Determination of Viability At Twenty or More Weeks Gestation And Can Be Determined By A Standard Ultrasound Examination.

Section 188.029 also provides that the physician "shall perform or cause to be performed such medical examinations and tests as are necessary to make a finding of the . . . lung maturity of the unborn child. . . ." At twenty weeks gestation, the fetal lung is maturing. All airways in the fetal lung are accompanied by pulmonary arterial branches and all of the preacinar veins are also present at 20 weeks gestation. Creasy & Resnik at 370.

> Therefore, by 20 weeks the development of the airways and pulmonary vessels is complete, and with the appearance of respiratory bronchioles and icini, the lung is prepared to support extrauterine life.

Id. This does not mean that fetal lungs are fully mature at twenty weeks gestation, but, by providing for a "finding" of fetal lung maturity when the physician "has reason to believe" that the fetus is at twenty or more weeks gestation, section 188.029 "reasonably furthers" Missouri's compelling interest in the viable unborn child. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. at 486.

Fetal lung maturity, like gestational age and fetal weight, is related to fetal viability. See generally, Danforth & Scott at 320; Williams Obstetrics at 154ff; Creasy & Resnik, at 369ff. This is because immature fetal lungs may lead to respiratory distress syndrome, or RDS, which may cause infant mortality. In recent years nearly 20% of all neonatal deaths in the United States have been attributable to RDS. Tait, Improved Fluroescence Polarization Assay for Use in Evaluating Fetal Lung Maturity I: Development of the Assay Procedure, 32 Clin. Chem. 248 (1986). Morbidity, however, may not be severe. See Ludman, et al., Birth Weight, Respiratory Distress Syndrome and Cognitive Development, 141 Am. J. Dis. Child. 79 (1987) ("[no] significant difference [in cognitive development] was found at any age between children who had and did not have RDS during the neonatal period").

It was only thirty years ago that the cause of RDS was discovered to be the deficiency of pulmonary surfactant. Williams Obstetrics at 154, 769. Surfactant is a group of phospholipids (detergents) that lower surface tension in the alveoli (lung air sacs) and thus prevent complete collapse of the alveoli with expiration. In the absence of adequate amounts of surfactant, the alveoli collapse completely each time the infant exhales. As a result, each infant breath requires that as much intrathoracic pressure be generated as with the infant's first breath. This may lead to hyaline membrane (cartilage) formation in the alveoli and to exhaustion of the infant as she fights to take in air. Cruikshank, Aminocentesis for Determination of Fetal Maturity, 25 Clin. Ob. Gyn. 773 (1982). Maturity of the fetal lung, therefore, is reflected in the amount of surfactant produced; if there is not enough surfactant, or it is of poor quality, the alveoli collapse (a state called atelectasis) and inadequate oxygen exchange occurs, resulting in hypoxia (decreased oxygen) and cyanosis (bluish color).

The plaintiffs and the district court misread the plain language of section 188.029 as though it required a specific "test of fetal lung maturity." The plain language is actually much more flexible. It requires "such medical examinations and tests as are necessary to making a finding of . . . lung maturity. . . ." Based upon the district court's construction, the court found that it was "clearly established that the only method to evaluate lung maturity is by amniocentesis, an expensive procedure which all witnesses agreed would be useless and contrary to accepted medical practice until at least twenty-eight to thirty weeks of gestation." Id. at 422.[8] This finding however, is immaterial.

There are a number of different methods in standard medical practice to determine fetal lung maturity at twenty or more weeks gestation. The most simple and most obvious is by inference. It is well known that fetal lungs do not mature until 33-34 weeks gestation. This obviously does not mean that no unborn child can survive if born at less than 33-34 weeks; it merely implies that an infant born before that time may suffer from RDS, which can lead to infant mortality. The finding of 33-34 weeks gestational age, from which this inference can be made, can be derived from an ultrasound test and the fetal parameters previously described. If an assessment of the gestational age indicates that the child is less than thirty-three weeks, a general finding can be made that the fetal lungs are not mature. This finding can then be used by the physician in making his determination of viability under section 188.029.

A second method of making a "finding" on fetal lung maturity at twenty or more weeks gestation is by ultrasound.[9] Ott & Doyle, Ultrasonically Estimated Weight

---

[8] The court's statement earlier in the proceedings—which directly contradicts this later finding—more correctly construes the plain language: "I don't think this says they have to do that, this doesn't say anything about that." (T.I-121) Moreover, the finding is directly contrary to repeated testimony that amniocentesis would not be a "necessary" test to determine fetal lung maturity at 20-24 weeks gestation because amniocentesis would be futile to make a finding. (T.I-68-71 (Maulik), 117-118 (Crist), 136 (Pearman)).

[9] See generally, Kazzi, et al., The relationship of placental grade, fetal lung maturity, and neonatal outcome in normal and complicated pregnancies, 148 Am. J. Ob. Gyn. 54 (1984); Crawford, et al., Ultrasonic tissue characterization of the placenta: Is it of, clinical value, 13 J. Clin. Ultrasound 533 (1985); Gross, et al. Sonographic and Gestational Age: Predictors of Neonatal Respiratory Distress Syndrome, 32 J. Repro. Med. 915 (1987) (hereinafter "Ott & Doyle"); Tahilramaney, et al., Ultrasound in evaluation of fetal pulmonary maturity, 10 Perinatol. Neonatal. 9 (1986); Garite, Testing for fetal lung maturity, 9 Perinatol. Neonatal 85 (1985); Mullin, et al., Ultrasound screening for Free-Floating Particles and Fetal Lung Maturity, 66 Ob. & Gyn. 50 (1985). With the use of ultrasound, several fetal parameters "such as placental grading, free-floating particles in the amniotic fluid, echogenicity of the fetal lung, fetal lung compressibility, and maturation of the fetal gastro-intestinal tract, have been proposed as rapid, non-invasive methods of evaluating fetal respiratory maturity." Ott & Doyle at 916. This method for determining fetal lung maturity involves an examination of the increase in free-floating particles and particulate matter in the amniotic fluid, which can be seen by ultrasound. The increase in this matter has been associated with lung maturity. Mullin, 66 Ob. & Gyn. at 50.

On the potential of using an ultrasound test, the district court's reasoning is inscrutable. The district court found:

> Medical experts for both plaintiffs and defendants concurred that it is standard medical practice to determine "gestational age" by ultrasound examination and fetal skull measurements whenever it appears that a woman is at least twenty weeks pregnant. Defendants have further acknowledged that no tests other than the ultrasound measurements pro-free floating particles (FFP) in amniotic fluid predict mature lecithin/sphingomyelin ratio (Paper Presented at the Third Annual Meeting of the Society of Perinatal Obstetricians, San Antonio, TX, Jan. 27-29, 1983); Fried, et al., Echogenicity of fetal lung: Relation to fetal age and maturity, 145 Am. J. Radiology 951 (1985); Farrell, et al., A sensitive and specific ultrasonic sign of fetal lung maturation, 4 J. Ultrasound Med. (suppl) 80 (1985); Zilanti, et al., Assessment of maturity through the study of the ultrasonic image of the fetal intestine, 4 J. Ultrasound Med. (suppl) 81 (1985).

---

> vide information necessary to determine viability prior to at least 30 weeks gestational age. Despite such concessions, the State defends this statutory language and maintains that the section demands only those examinations which are "necessary" to make the required findings. Thus, defendants insist that there is no duty to perform an amniocentesis for lung maturity or even a fetal weight determination if these tests would be futile. However, the ultrasound exam would be mandatory.

Id. at 422 n.44. The court then held that "[t]his evidence" must be evaluated in light of the dictum in Colautti that legislatures could not "proclaim one of the elements entering into the ascertainment of viability . . ." and concluded that the "State may not dictate either the tests or the findings which enter into a decision whether or not a fetus is viable." 662 F.Supp. at 423. Thus, according to the court, even if an ultrasound examination could yield a finding on gestational age, weight and lung maturity, it could not be required under the standard of review derived from Colautti.

By construing section 188.029 to require a specific test of lung maturity, the court read into the plain language a requirement of what is merely a third method of making "a finding" on fetal lung maturity at some points in gestation—amniocentesis—but is simply not required by either the plain language of section 188.029 or by standard medical practice. See generally, Williams Obstetrics at 268ff. Amniocentesis involves the insertion of a needle through the mother's abdominal wall into the amniotic sac, from which amniotic fluid is withdrawn (aspiration). A variety of tests to determine fetal lung maturity may be performed on amniotic fluid withdrawn by amniocentesis. These tests analyze the presence and strength of certain biochemicals in the amniotic fluid which are related to the development of the fetal lung. Among the available amniotic tests to predict fetal lung maturity, the lecithin/sphingomyelin ratio (L/S ratio) of amniotic fluid is perhaps the most widely used. As the fetal lung matures, the amount of lecithin in amniotic fluid increases, both absolutely, and in relation to sphingomyelin. Above a certain L/S ratio, lung maturity is very likely.

However, given the availability of ultrasound to determine gestational age and fetal weight, aminocentesis would not be medically indicated to determine fetal lung maturity until approximately thirty-two weeks gestation, if then. The L/S ratio, which tests for surfactant, is not a dispositive factor for viability. It predicts the occurrence of respiratory distress syndrome (RDS), which is related to viability, but does not exactly predict viability, because an infant with RDS may nevertheless survive with good outcome. Moreover, although a "mature" L/S ratio predicts that RDS will not occur with 98% certainty, an immature ratio by no means ensures that RDS will develop. Although functional maturity of the surfactant system usually occurs between thirty-three and thirty-seven weeks gestation in normal pregnancy—thereby allowing the finding of a good L/S ratio—it is obvious that infants can survive before this time and therefore before a good L/S ratio can be found. As a result, of the three findings specified by section 188.029, although all are related to viability, fetal lung maturity is probably the least important of the three factors in making a determination of viability.

In addition to the fact that the fetus may well be viable several weeks, even months, before the fetal lung matures, various medical indications would justify delivery even though the fetal lung is technically immature as determined by the L/S ratio. For example, early delivery may be indicated if the mother is diabetic or suffers from severe hypertension or severe hydramnios. Williams Obstetrics at 603. "There are times when the risk to the fetus from a hostile environment will be greater than the risk of death from respiratory distress even though the L/S ratio is less than 2." Williams Obstetrics at 273-74. If the intrauterine environment of the pregnant mother with diabetes deteriorates, "the fetus most often is better off being delivered even though premature." Williams Obstetrics at 602.

Abortion must be considered such a circumstance. When an abortion is induced with the usual intent to end the life of the fetus, the risk of death to the infant from respiratory distress will be less than the risk of certain death from abortion.

Finally, there may be several reasons why a physician would not want to administer amniocentesis to determine lung maturity under certain circumstances in pregnancy. Amniocentesis is associated with a small risk of maternal and fetal morbidity, including "(1) trauma to the fetus, to the placenta, or, less often, to the umbilical cord or to maternal structures; (2) infection; and (3) abortion or premature labor." Williams Obstetrics at 268; Mullin, 66 Ob. & Gyn. 50. Some of the examples of maternal morbidity can be discounted as a "risk" where an elective abortion is proposed as the outcome of the amniocentesis, because some of these risks (e.g., premature labor) are only "risks" when the mother intends to bear the child. On the other hand, the "risks" to the fetus from amniocentesis that are considered "risks" if the mother plans to carry the pregnancy to term are not "risks" if probable death for the child from abortion is the alternative. For this reason, it is difficult to follow the reasoning of the district court that amniocentesis would be contra-indicated because of risk to the fetus, rendering the statute unconstitutional. 662 F.Supp. at 423. Nevertheless, true "risks" of maternal morbidity from amniocentesis (which, as demonstrated above, would not be indicated until at least thirty-two weeks), would reasonably be weighed by the physician.

V. THE COURT OF APPEALS ERRED BY FAILING TO SEVER AND UPHOLD THE CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS OF SECTION 188.029.

The courts below relied on the general severability provision in the Missouri statutes, Mo.Rev.Stat. section 1.140 (1986), to uphold and sever the first sentence of section 188.029, but refused to sever and uphold any provisions of the second sentence, on the rationale that Colautti v. Franklin prohibited the state from designating "either the tests or the findings which enter into a decision whether or not a fetus is viable." 662 F.Supp. at 423. Because the dictum in Colautti does not extend that far, the lower courts erred by disregarding their obligation to separate constitutional provisions from unconstitutional provisions "and to maintain the act in so far as it is valid." Regan v. Time, Inc., 468 U.S. 641, 652 (1984); Brockett v. Spokane Arcades, Inc., 472 U.S. 491, 502 (1985). We submit that all provisions of § 188.029 are constitutional. However, because each of the discrete findings required in § 188.029 is an independent measure of viability, § 188.029 can "function in a manner consistent with the intent of" the Missouri legislature even if one or two findings is left standing. Alaska Airlines, Inc. v. Brock, 107 S.Ct. 1476, 1481 (1987). For this reason, the courts erred in failing to sever and uphold each of the three findings that are constitutional.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment below, striking down the second sentence of Mo.Rev.Stat. § 188.029 as unconstitutional, should be reversed.

Respectfully submitted,

DOLORES HORAN *
222 N. LaSalle Street #300
Chicago, IL 60601
(312) 704-3750

PAIGE COMSTOCK CUNNINGHAM
343 S. Dearborn Street
Chicago, IL 60604
(312) 786-9494

Counsel for Amicus Curiae

* Counsel of Record

February 23, 1989

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

---

BRIEF OF CERTAIN AMERICAN STATE LEGISLATORS AS AMICI CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

PAUL BENJAMIN LINTON *
CLARKE D. FORSYTHE

AMERICANS UNITED FOR LIFE
Legal Defense Fund
Suite 1804
343 S. Dearborn St.
Chicago, Illinois 60604
(312) 786-9494
Counsel for Amici Curiae

* Counsel of Record

February 23, 1989

WILSON - EPES PRINTING CO., INC. - 789-0096 - WASHINGTON, D.C. 20001

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES	ii
INTEREST OF THE AMICI	1
SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT	1
ARGUMENT	3
I. ONLY FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS, IMPLICIT IN THE CONCEPT OF ORDERED LIBERTY AND HISTORICALLY AND TRADITIONALLY CONSIDERED BEYOND THE PROPER SCOPE OF GOVERNMENT REGULATION, ARE PROTECTED BY THE RIGHT OF PRIVACY	3
II. THE COMMON LAW OF ENGLAND PUNISHED ABORTION AFTER QUICKENING AS A CRIMINAL OFFENSE	6
III. THE AMERICAN COLONIES AND STATES ACCEPTED THE COMMON LAW OF ENGLAND AND PUNISHED ABORTION AFTER QUICKENING AS A CRIMINAL OFFENSE	8
IV. THE ABORTION STATUTES ENACTED BY THE STATE LEGISLATURES IN THE NINETEENTH CENTURY, WHICH ABOLISHED THE QUICKENING DISTINCTION AND PROHIBITED ABORTION THROUGHOUT PREGNANCY EXCEPT TO SAVE THE LIFE OF THE MOTHER, WERE INTENDED TO PROTECT UNBORN HUMAN LIFE	12
CONCLUSION	30
APPENDIX: List of Amici	1a

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases: Page

Abrams v. Foshee, 3 Iowa 274 (1856) 8, 16
Anderson v. Commonwealth, 190 Va. 665, 58 S.E.2d 72 (1950) 15, 20
Bennett v. Hymers, 101 N.H. 483, 147 A.2d 108 (1958) 16
Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986) 4-5, 29
Bowlan v. Lunsford, 176 Okla. 115, 54 P.2d 666 (1936) 15, 20
Burnet v. Coronado Oil & Gas Co., 285 U.S. 393 (1932) 15
Cheaney v. State, 259 Ind. 138, 285 N.E.2d 265 (1972), cert. den. for want of standing of petitioner, sub nom. Cheaney v. Indiana, 410 U.S. 991 (1973) 21
Commonwealth v. Bangs, 9 Mass. 387 (1812) 8
Commonwealth v. Parker, 50 Mass. (9 Met.) 263 (1845) 8
Dougherty v. The People, 1 Colo. 514 (1872) 15, 17
Duncan v. Louisiana, 391 U.S. 145 (1968) 3
Dunn v. People, 29 N.Y. 523 (1864) 25
Edwards v. State, 79 Neb. 251, 112 N.W. 611 (1907) 16
Eggart v. State, 40 Fla. 527, 25 So. 144 (1898) 8
Evans v. People, 49 N.Y. 86 (1872) 8, 10
Foster v. State, 182 Wis. 298, 196 N.W. 233 (1923) 15
Joy v. Brown, 173 Kan. 833, 252 P.2d 889 (1953) 12, 20
Lamb v. State, 67 Md. 524, 10 A. 208 (1887) 8, 9, 16
McClure v. State, 214 Ark. 159, 215 S.W.2d 524 (1949) 16
Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390 (1923) 3
Miller v. Bennett, 190 Va. 162, 56 S.E.2d 217 (1949) 15
Mills v. Commonwealth, 13 Pa. 630 (1850) 9
Mitchell v. Commonwealth, 78 Ky. 204 (1879) 8
Montgomery v. State, 80 Ind. 338 (1881) 16
Moore v. East Cleveland, 431 U.S. 494 (1977) 4
Nash v. Meyer, 54 Idaho 283, 31 P.2d 273 (1934) 15, 20

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

National Bank v. County of Yankton, 101 U.S. 129 (1880) 14
Nelson v. Planned Parenthood Center of Tucson, Inc., 19 Ariz. App. 142, 505 P.2d 580 (1973), modified on rehearing pursuant to Roe 21
Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U.S. 319 (1937) 3, 4
Passley v. State, 194 Ga. 327, 21 S.E.2d 230 (1942) 15, 20
People v. Belous, 71 Cal.2d 954, 458 P.2d 194 (1969), cert. den., 397 U.S. 915 (1970) 21
People v. Nixon, 42 Mich. App. 332, 201 N.W.2d 635 (1972) 15, 21, 25
People v. Sessions, 58 Mich. 594, 26 N.W. 291 (1886) 8, 16, 23
Rex v. Bourne, 1 K.B. 687 (1939) 7
Rodgers v. Danforth, 486 S.W.2d 258 (Mo. 1972) 21
Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) 1-2, 4, 9, 12, 14-15, 21-24, 26, 28-30
Sasaki v. Commonwealth, 485 S.W.2d 897 (Ky. 1972), judgment vacated and cause remanded for further consideration in light of Roe v. Wade, sub nom. Sasaki v. Kentucky, 410 U.S. 951 (1973) 21
Smith v. Gaffard, 31 Ala. 45 (1857) 8
Smith v. State, 33 Me. 48 (1851) 8, 16, 17
Snyder v. Massachusetts, 291 U.S. 97 (1934) 3
State v. Alcorn, 7 Idaho 599, 64 P. 1014 (1901) 15
State v. Ausplund, 86 Ore. 121, 167 P. 1019 (1917) 15, 19-20
State v. Barquet, 262 So.2d 431 (Fla. 1972) 21
State v. Carey, 76 Conn. 342, 56 A. 632 (1904) 15
State v. Cooper, 22 N.J.L. 52 (1849) 8
State v. Cox, 197 Wash. 67, 84 P.2d 357 (1938) 15, 20
State v. Crook, 16 Utah 212, 51 P. 1091 (1898) 16, 18
State v. Emerich, 13 Mo.App. 492 (1883) 8
State v. Farnam, 82 Ore. 211, 161 P. 417 (1916) 25
State v. Gedicke, 43 N.J.L. 86 (1881) 15, 17
State v. Hoover, 252 N.C. 113, 113 S.E.2d 281 (1960) 15, 21

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

	Page
State v. Howard, 32 Vt. 380 (1859)	15, 16
State v. Jordan, 227 N.C. 579, 42 S.E.2d 674 (1947)	15
State v. Miller, 90 Kan. 230, 133 P. 878 (1913)	15
State v. Moore, 25 Iowa 128 (1866)	16, 17
State v. Munson, 86 S.D. 663, 201 N.W.2d 123 (1972), judgment vacated and cause remanded for further consideration in light of Roe v. Wade, sub nom. Munson v. South Dakota, 410 U.S. 950 (1973)	21
State v. Murphy, 27 N.J.L. 112 (1858)	15, 25
State v. Powell, 181 N.C. 515, 106 S.E.133 (1921)	16, 20
State v. Reed, 45 Ark. 333 (1885)	8
State v. Siciliano, 21 N.J. 249, 121 A.2d 490 (1956)	15
State v. Slagle, 83 N.C. 630 (1880)	9
State v. Tippie, 89 Ohio St. 35, 105 N.E. 75 (1913)	15
State v. Watson, 30 Kan. 281, 1 P. 770 (1883)	15
Thompson v. State, 493 S.W.2d 913 (Tex. Cr. App. 1971), judgment vacated and cause remanded for further consideration in light of Roe v. Wade, sub nom. Thompson v. Texas, 410 U.S. 950 (1973)	21
Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986)	3
Trent v. State, 15 Ala.App. 485, 73 So. 834 (1916)	5, 19
Worthington v. State, 92 Md. 222, 48 A.2d 355 (1901)	16, 18-19

Constitutional Provisions:

U.S. Const., art. IV, sec. III, cl. 2	14
U.S. Const., amend. IV, sec. 2	1-5, 12, 14, 29

Statutes:

Alabama:

Ala. Acts, ch. 6, sec. 2 (1840)	12
Ala. Code, sec. 3605 (1867)	26

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Arizona:

	Page
Ariz. Code, ch. 10, div. 5, sec. 45 (1865)	14
Ariz. Pen. Code, sec. 455 (1887)	24

Arkansas:

Ark. Rev. Stat., ch. 44, div. III, art. II, secs. 5, 6 (1838)	12, 27
Act of Nov. 8, 1875, No. 4, 1875 Ark. Acts 5-6	12, 27

California:

Cal. Sess. Laws, ch. 99, sec. 45, p. 233 (1849-1850)	12
Act of May 20, 1861, ch. DXXI, 1861 Cal. Stat. 588	12, 26
Act of Feb. 14, 1872, Cal. Pen. Code, sec. 275 (1872)	24

Colorado:

Act of Nov. 5, 1861, div. 4, sec. 42, 1861 Colo. Laws 296-97	14
Colo. Rev. Stat., ch. XXII, sec. 42 (1868)	14, 26

Connecticut:

Conn. Stat., tit. 22, sec. 14 at 152 (1821)	12
Conn. Pub. Acts, ch. LXXI, secs. 1, 2, p. 65 (1860)	12
Conn. Pub. Acts, ch. LXXI, sec. 3, p. 65-66 (1860)	24
Conn. Gen. Stat. tit. XII, ch. II, secs. 22-25 (1866)	26

Delaware:

Act of February 13, 1883, ch. 226, secs. 1, 2 1883 Del. Laws 522	26

Florida:

Fla. Acts, 1st Sess., ch. 1637, no. 13, ch. 3, secs. 10, 11, ch. 8, secs. 9-11 (1868), 1868 Fla. Laws 64, 97	13
Fla. Acts, 1st Sess., ch. 1637, no. 13, ch. 3, sec. 11, ch. 8, sec. 9, 1868 Fla. Laws 64, 97	27

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

	Page
Georgia:
Act. of Feb. 25, 1876, ch. CXXX, secs. I-III, 1876 Ga. Laws 113	26, 27
Idaho:
Act of Feb. 4, 1864, ch. 4, sec. 42, 1864 Idaho Laws 443	14, 24
Illinois:
Ill. Rev. Crim. Code, div. 5, sec. 46, p. 131 (1833)	12
Act of February 28, 1867, Ill. Pub. Laws, p. 89 (1867)	12, 26
Indiana:
Ind. Rev. Stat., sec. 3 at 224 (1838)	12
Ind. Laws ch. LXXXI, sec. 2, at 130-31 (1859)	12, 26
Act of April 14, 1881, ch. XXXVII, sec. 22, 1881 Ind. Laws 177	27
Act of April 14, 1881, ch. XXXVII, sec. 23, 1881 Ind. Laws 177	24
Iowa:
Iowa (Terr.) Rev. Stat., ch. 49, secs. 10, 13 at 167 (1843)	12
Act of March 15, 1858, Iowa Rev. Stat., sec. 4221 (1860)	12, 26
Kansas:
Kan. (Terr.) Stat., ch. 48, secs. 9, 10, 39 at 238, 243 (1855)	12
Kan. (Terr.) Laws, ch. 28, secs. 9, 10, 37 (1859)	12
Louisiana:
La. Crimes & Offences, sec. 24 at 138 (1856)	12, 26
Maine:
Me. Rev. Stat., ch. 160, secs. 11-14 (1840)	12
Me. Rev. Stat., tit. XI, ch. 124, sec. 8 at 685 (1857)	26, 27
Maryland:
Md. Laws, ch. 179, sec. 2, p. 315 (1868)	13, 26

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

	Page
Massachusetts:
Mass. Acts & Resolves, ch. 27 (1845)	12
Mass. Gen. Stat., ch. 165, secs. 9-11 (1860)	26
Michigan:
Mich. Rev. Stat., ch. 153, secs. 32-34, p. 662 (1846)	12
Mich. Rev. Stat., ch. 153, secs. 33-34, p. 662 (1846)	27
Minnesota:
Minn. (Terr.) Rev. Stat., ch. 100, secs. 10, 11, p. 493 (1851)	12
Act of March 10, 1873, ch. 9, 1873 Minn. Laws 117-19	24, 26, 27
Mississippi:
Miss. Code, ch. 64, secs. 8, 9, p. 958 (1848)	12
Missouri:
Mo. Rev. Stat., art. II, secs. 9, 10, 36 at 168-69, 172 (1835)	12
Mo. Gen. Stat., pt. IV, tit. XLV, ch. 200, secs. 10, 34 (1865)	27
Montana:
1864 Mont. Laws 184	14
Mont. Rev. Code, sec. 94-402 (1947)	24
Nebraska:
Neb. (Terr.) Stat., tit. 4, ch. 4, sec. 42 (1866)	13, 26
Act of March 4, 1873, Neb. Gen. Stat., ch. 58, secs. 6, 39 (1973)	27
Nevada:
Nev. (Terr.) Laws, ch. 28, div. 4, sec. 42, p. 63 (1861)	12, 26
Act of February 16, 1869, ch. 22, sec. 1 1869 Nev. Laws 64-65	24
Nev. Rev. Stat., sec. 200.220 (1959)	24

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

	Page
New Hampshire:
N.H. Laws, ch. 743, sec. 1, p. 708 (1848)	12
Act of January 4, 1849, ch. 743, sec. 4, 1848 N.H. Laws 708-09	24
New Jersey:
N.J. Laws, pp. 266-67 (1849)	12, 26
Act of March 25, 1881, N.J. Gen. Pub. Laws, ch. CXCI at 240 (1881)	27
New Mexico:
Act of Feb. 15, 1854, No. 28, ch. 3, secs. 10, 11, 1854 N.M. Laws 88	14
New York:
N.Y. Laws, ch. 260, secs. 1-6 at 285-86 (1845)	12
N.Y. Laws, ch. 22, sec. 1, p. 19 (1846)	12
Act of May 13, 1845, ch. 200, sec. 3, 1845 N.Y. Laws 285-86	24
Act of April 6, 1872, ch. 181, 1872 N.Y. Laws 509-10	24
Act of July 26, 1881, N.Y. Pen. Code, ch. 676, tit. 9, ch. 2, secs. 191, 194, tit. 10, ch. 4, sec. 295, ch. 7, secs. 318-21, 3 N.Y. Rev. Stat., at 2478-80 (1881)	27
North Carolina:
Act of March 12, 1881, ch. 351, 1881 N.C. Laws 584-85	26
North Dakota:
Dak. Pen. Code, secs. 338 (1887)	24
Ohio:
Ohio Gen. Stat., ch. 35, secs. 111, 112 at 252 (1841)	12
Act of April 13, 1867, 1867 Ohio Laws 135-36	26, 27
Oklahoma:
Okla. Stat., sec. 2188 (1890)	24
Okla. Rev. Laws, sec. 2437 (1910)	24

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

	Page
Oregon:
Act of Oct, 19, 1864, Ore. Gen. Laws, Crim. Code, ch. 43, sec. 509, p. 528 (1845-1864)	12, 26, 27
Pennsylvania:
Pa. Laws, No. 374, secs. 87-89 (1860) 1860 Pa. Laws 404-05	12
Pa. Laws, No. 374, tit. 6, secs. 87-88 (1860) 1860 Pa .Laws 404-05	27
South Carolina:
Act of March 24, 1883, No. 354, 1883 S.C. Acts 547-58	24
Act of Dec. 24, 1883, No. 354, secs. 1-3, 1883 S.C. Acts 547-58	26, 27
South Dakota:
Dak. Pen. Code, sec. 338	24
Tennessee:
Act of March 26, 1883, ch. CXL, secs. 1, 2 1883 Tenn. Acts 188-89	26, 27
Texas:
Tex. Gen. Stat. Dig., ch. VII, articles 531-536, p. 524 (Oldham & White 1859)	12
Tex. Pen. Code, arts. 531-536 (1856) 1858 Tex. Gen. Laws 172	26
Tex. Pen. Code, art. 531, 535 (1856) 1858 Tex. Gen. Laws 172	27
Utah:
Utah Code Ann., sec. 76-2-2 (1953)	24
Vermont:
Vt. Acts No. 33, sec. 1 (1846)	12
Act of Nov. 21, 1867, No. 57, secs. 1, 3 (1867) 1867 Vt. Acts 64-66	26
Virginia:
Va. Acts, tit. II, ch. 3, sec. 9, p. 96 (1848)	12, 26
Act of March 14, 1878, ch. 311, ch. 2, sec. 8, 1878 Va. Acts 281-82	27

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Washington:

Wash. (Terr.) Stat., ch. 2, secs. 37, 38 at 81 (1854) 14

West Virginia:

See Va. Acts, tit. II, ch. 3, sec. 9, p. 96 (1848), W. Va. Const., art. XI, par. 8 (1863) 12, 26 ch. 118, sec. 8, 1882 W. Va. Acts 27

Wisconsin:

Wis. Rev. Stat., ch. 133, secs. 10, 11 (1849) 12

Wis. Rev. Stat., ch. 164, sec. 11, ch. 169, secs. 58, 59 (1858) 12, 24, 26, 27

Wyoming:

ch. 73, sec. 31, 32, 1890 Wyo. Laws 131 24

Other Authorities:

Annot., Woman Upon Whom Abortion Is Committed As Accomplice For Purposes Of Rule Requiring Corroboration Of Accomplice Testimony, 34 A.L.R.3d 858 (1970) 25

W. Blackstone, Commentaries On The Laws Of England 6-8

H. Bracton, The Laws And Customs Of England (Twiss ed. 1879) 6

Byrn, An American Tragedy: The Supreme Court On Abortion, 44 Fordham L. Rev. 807 (1973) 7

Century Digest (West) 9

J. Choper, Judicial Review and the National Political Process: A Functional Reconsideration of the Role of the Supreme Court (1980) 28

E. Coke, Third Institute of the Laws of England (1644) 6, 8

Decennial Digests (West) 9

Destro, Abortion and the Constitution: The Need for a Life-Protective Amendment, 63 Calif. L. Rev. 1250 (1975) 15

Fleta (Selden Soc. ed. 1955) 6

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Forsythe, Homicide of the Unborn Child: The Born Alive Rule and Other Legal Anachronisms, 21 Val. U. L. Rev. 563 (1987) 7

J. Keown, Abortion, doctors and the law: Some aspects of the legal regulation of abortion in England from 1803 to 1982 (Cambridge University Press 1988) 7

L. Koehler, A Search For Power: The "Weaker Sex" in Seventeenth-Century New England (1980) 10

S. Massengill, A Sketch of Medicine and Pharmacy (2d ed. 1942) 11

Means, The Law of New York Concerning Abortion and the Status of the Foetus, 1664-1968: A Case of Cessation of Constitutionality (pt. 1), 14 N.Y.L.F. 411 (1968) 8

Means, The Phoenix of Abortional Freedom: Is a Penumbral or Ninth-Amendment Right About to Arise from the Nineteenth-Century Legislative Ashes of a Fourteenth Century Common-Law Liberty? 17 N.Y.L.F. 335 (1971) 8

J. Mohr, Abortion in America: The Origins and Evolution of National Policy, 1800-1900 (1978) 10

New Perspectives on Human Abortion (T. Hilgers, D. Horan, and D. Mall, eds. 1981) 11

Note: A Survey of the Present Statutory and Case Law on Abortion: The Contradictions and the Problems, 1972 U. Ill. L. Forum 177 28

C. Scholten, Childbearing In American Society 1650-1850 (1985) 10

J. Spruill Women's Life and Work in the Southern Colonies (1938) 10

Witherspoon, Reexamining Roe: Nineteenth-Century Abortion Statutes And The Fourteenth Amendment, 17 St. Mary's L.J. 29 (1985) 2, 24, 27-28

12 Trans. of the Am. Med. Assn. (1859) 22-23

22 Trans. of the Am. Med. Assn. (1871) 23

BRIEF OF CERTAIN AMERICAN STATE LEGISLATORS AS AMICI CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

INTEREST OF THE AMICI

Amici Curiae are more than 250 state senators and representatives.* Amici do not all share the same convictions regarding the manner and extent to which the practice of abortion should be regulated. But all are in agreement that the regulation of abortion is properly a matter for the legislative, not the judicial, branch of government, and that the States should have the constitutional authority to protect unborn human life throughout pregnancy. By virtue of this Court's decision in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), however, that authority can no longer be exercised in any meaningful fashion.

The regulation of abortion poses difficult and complex legal, moral, social, medical, technological and political problems which the judiciary is uniquely ill-suited to resolve. From 1787 until 1973, these questions were raised, freely debated and answered in the public forums of the state legislatures, where the will of the people could be expressed through their popularly elected representatives. hat debate has been silenced and those forums have been closed for more than sixteen years. The voice of the people will not be heard until Roe v. Wade is overruled and the authority to regulate abortion is restored to the States.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

In Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), this Court held that "[the] right of privacy . . . founded in the Fourteenth Amendment's concept of personal liberty . . . is broad enough to encompass a woman's decision whether or not to terminate her pregnancy." 410 U.S. at 153. The Court acknowledged that "[t]he Constitution does not explicitly mention any right of privacy." Id. at 152. Nevertheless, "the Court has recognized that a right of personal privacy, or a guarantee of certain areas or zones

---

* See List of Amici in the attached Appendix.

of privacy, does exist under the Constitution." Id. However, "only personal rights that can be deemed 'fundamental' or 'implicit in the concept of ordered liberty,' . . . are included in this guarantee of personal privacy." Id.

In determining that abortion is a "fundamental right," the Court in Roe discussed at length the treatment of abortion in English and American law. 410 U.S. at 129, 132-41, 147-52. Based upon that review, the Court came to the following conclusions:

> It is . . . apparent that at common law, at the time of the adoption of our Constitution, and throughout the major portion of the 19th century, abortion was viewed with less disfavor than under most American statutes currently in effect. Phrasing it another way, a woman enjoyed a substantially broader right to terminate a pregnancy than she does in most States today. At least with respect to the early stage of pregnancy, and very possibly without such a limitation, the opportunity to make this choice was present in this country well into the 19th century. Even later, the law continued for some time to treat less punitively an abortion procured in early pregnancy.

Id. at 140-41.

Amici Curiae respectfully submit that these conclusions, which are central to the Court's decision in Roe, are erroneous. The Court's historical excursus was seriously flawed and failed to take into account the medical and technological context in which the law of abortion evolved. As this brief attempts to demonstrate, both the English common law, as received by the American states, and the anti-abortion statutes enacted by state legislatures in the nineteenth century, sought to protect unborn human life to the extent that contemporary medical science could establish the existence of that life. This evidence undermines the foundations of Roe and suggests that abortion has never been regarded as a "right" in English or American law. Accordingly, abortion cannot be considered a "fundamental right" under the Constitution.

ARGUMENT

> Abortion is a hotly contested moral and political issue. Such issues, in our society, are to be resolved by the will of the people, either as expressed through legislation or through the general principles they have already incorporated into the Constitution they have adopted. Roe v. Wade implies that the people have already resolved the debate by weaving into the Constitution the values and principles that answer the issue. As I have argued, I believe it is clear that the people have never—not in 1787, 1791, 1868, or at any time since—done any such thing. I would return the issue to the people by overruling Roe v. Wade.

Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 at 796-97 (1986) (White, J., dissenting).

I. ONLY FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS, IMPLICIT IN THE CONCEPT OF ORDERED LIBERTY AND HISTORICALLY AND TRADITIONALLY CONSIDERED BEYOND THE PROPER SCOPE OF GOVERNMENT REGULATION, ARE PROTECTED BY THE RIGHT OF PRIVACY.

This Court has recognized that there are certain fundamental rights protected by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Due process of law protects those rights which are "so rooted in the traditions and conscience of our people as to be ranked as fundamental," Snyder v. Massachusetts, 291 U.S. 97, 105 (1934), or which are "implicit in the concept of ordered liberty." Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U.S. 319, 325 (1937).

For any right to be considered fundamental, it must be grounded in the history and traditions of our society and be basic to our civil and political institutions. See Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U.S. 319, 328 (1937), and Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390, 400-02 (1923). In Duncan v. Louisiana, 391 U.S. 145 (1968), for example, the Court, in holding that the right to jury trial is fundamental, emphasized the historical role of jury trials in the "Anglo-American regime of ordered liberty." Id. at 149 n.14.

In Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986), the Court forcefully reiterated these principles in rejecting the claim that the Constitution confers a fundamental right upon homosexuals to engage in sodomy. The Court noted that "the Due Process Clauses of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments . . . have been interpreted to have substantive content, subsuming rights that to a great extent are immune from federal or state regulation or proscription." Id. at 191. The Court has often recognized "rights that have little or no textual support in the constitutional language." Id. To guard against the danger of "the imposition of the Justices' own choice of values on the States and the Federal Government, the Court has sought to identify the nature of the rights qualifying for heightened judicial protection." Id.

Thus, in Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U.S. 319, 325, 326 (1937), the Court stated that this category of rights includes those fundamental liberties that are "implicit in the concept of ordered liberty," such that "neither liberty nor justice would exist if [they] were sacrificed." A broader formulation of fundamental liberties was set forth in Justice Powell's opinion in Moore v. East Cleveland, 431 U.S. 494, 503 (1977) (opinion of Powell, J.), where they are characterized as those liberties that are "deeply rooted in this Nation's history and tradition." Id. at 503 (Powell, J.). In Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), this Court acknowledged that "only personal rights that can be deemed 'fundamental' or 'implicit in the concept of ordered liberty,' . . . are included in this guarantee of personal privacy." Id. at 152.

In responding to the argument that homosexuals have a fundamental right to engage in acts of consensual sodomy, the Court in Bowers noted that "[s]odomy was a criminal offense at common law and was forbidden by the laws of the original 13 States when they ratified the Bill of Rights." 478 U.S. at 192. The Court noted further that in 1868, when the Fourteenth Amendment was ratified, "all but 5 of the 37 States in the Union had criminal sodomy laws." Id. at 192-93. Finally, the Court pointed out that until 1961, "all 50 States outlawed sodomy, and today, 25 States and the District of Columbia continue to provide criminal penalties for sodomy performed in private and between consenting adults." Id. at 193-94. In light of the law's longstanding prohibition of sodomy, "to claim that a right to engage in such conduct is 'deeply rooted in this Nation's history and tradition' or 'implicit in the concept of ordered liberty,' is, at best, facetious." 479 U.S. at 194.

In Bowers, the Court declined to take a more expansive view of its authority "to discover new fundamental rights imbedded in the Due Process Clause." 478 U.S. at 194.

> The Court is most vulnerable and comes nearest to illegitimacy when it deals with judge-made constitutional law having little or no cognizable roots in the language or design of the Constitution. . . . There should be . . . great resistance to expand the substantive reach of those Clauses, particularly if it requires redefining the category of rights deemed to be fundamental. Otherwise, the Judiciary takes to itself further authority to govern the country without express constitutional authority. The claimed right pressed on us today falls far short of overcoming this resistance.

478 U.S. at 194-95

When the well-established principles of constitutional analysis enunciated by this Court in Bowers v. Hardwick are applied to the question of abortion, it becomes clear that Roe v. Wade was wrongly decided. Contrary to the Court's conclusion in Roe, there was no "right" to an abortion at common law or under the statutes enacted by the State legislatures in the nineteenth century. The uniform and consistent condemnation of abortion as a crime in English and American law contradicts the critical historical findings on which Roe v. Wade was based and calls for reappraisal and rejection of the "abortion right."

II. THE COMMON LAW OF ENGLAND PUNISHED ABORTION AFTER QUICKENING AS A CRIMINAL OFFENSE.

An understanding of the development of the common law crime of abortion in England is essential to any analysis of the status of abortion in American law prior to the gradual replacement of common law crimes by statutory crimes in the nineteenth century. Those statutes were enacted because the English common law, as received by the American states, was unable to keep pace with the medical and technological advances in the nineteenth century. Although a comprehensive review of this history is beyond the scope of this brief, the following is offered as a summary.[1]

The thirteenth century commentators Bracton and Fleta classified abortion as homicide if the fetus was "formed and animated." 2 H. Bracton, The Laws And Customs Of England 279 (Twiss ed. 1879); 2 Fleta 60-61, Book I, ch. 23 (Selden Soc. ed. 1955). Neither Bracton nor Fleta expressly required that the child be born alive for the killing to constitute a homicide. The sixteenth and seventeenth century jurist, Sir Edward Coke, declared that, while not "murder," abortion of a woman "quick with childe" was a "great misprision." E. Coke, Third Institute of the Laws of England at 50 (1644). If, however, "the childe be born alive, and dieth of the Potion, battery, or other cause, this is murder: for in law it is accounted a reasonable creature, in rerum natura, when it is born alive." Id. In his Commentaries On The Laws Of England, William Blackstone closely followed Coke:

> [T]he person killed must be "a reasonable creature in being and under the king's peace," at the time of the killing . . . To kill a child in its mother's womb, is now no murder, but a great misprision; but if the child be born alive, and dieth by reason of the potion or bruises it received in the womb, it seems, by the better opinion, to be murder in such as administered or gave them.

4 W. Blackstone, Commentaries On the Laws Of England 198 (emphasis in original). Blackstone held that the killing of a child in the womb was "a very heinous misdemeanor." 1 W. Blackstone at 126.

"Quickening" (i.e., the point in a pregnancy at which the mother begins to detect fetal movement) was used in the common law as a practical evidentiary test to determine whether the abortion had been performed upon a live human being in the womb and whether the abortion had caused the child's death. Byrn, An American Tragedy: The Supreme Court On Abortion, 44 Fordham L.Rev. 807, 815-16 (1973); Forsythe, Homicide of the Unborn Child: The Born Alive Rule and Other Legal Anachronisms, 21 Val. U.L. Rev. 563, 580-92 (1987). "[T]his evidentiary test was never intended as a judgment that before quickening the child was not a live human being." Byrn at 816.

In Rex v. Bourne, 1 K.B. 687 (1939), Justice Macnaghten recognized that "long before then [the enactment of the first English abortion statute of 1803], before even Parliament came into existence, the killing of an unborn child was by the common law of England a grave crime . . . . The protection which the common law afforded to human life extended to the unborn child in the womb of its mother." 1 K.B. 687, 690. A recent review of the English cases and commentaries concludes that "the common law prohibited abortion and did so predominantly for the protection of fetal life." J. Keown, Abortion, doctors and the law: Some aspects of the legal regulation of abortion in England from 1803 to 1982 at 11 (Cambridge University Press 1988). This was the status of the common law crime of abortion in England at the time of the American Revolution.

[1] The Court is referred to the brief of Value of Life Committee, et al., as amici curiae in support of Appellants, for a fuller presentation of this history.

III. THE AMERICAN COLONIES AND STATES ACCEPTED THE COMMON LAW OF ENGLAND AND PUNISHED ABORTION AFTER QUICKENING AS A CRIMINAL OFFENSE.

Notwithstanding the attempts of some scholars to disparage the authority of Coke and Blackstone (see Means, The Law of New York Concerning Abortion and the Status of the Foetus, 1664-1968: A Case of Cessation of Constitutionality (pt. 1), 14 N.Y.L.F. 411 (1968); and Means, The Phoenix of Abortional Freedom: Is a Penumbral or Ninth-Amendment Right About to Arise from the Nineteenth-Century Legislative Ashes of a Fourteenth Century Common-Law Liberty?, 17 N.Y.L.F. 335 (1971)), what is important is that their views were accepted by American courts in the nineteenth century as accurate statements of the common law regarding the criminality of abortion. See, e.g., Abrams v. Foshee, 3 Iowa 274, 278-80 (1856); Smith v. State, 33 Me. 48, 55 (1851); Lamb v. State, 67 Md. 524, 533, 10 A. 208 (1887); Commonwealth v. Parker, 50 Mass. (9 Met.) 263, 264-68 (1845); People v. Sessions, 58 Mich. 594, 596, 26 N.W. 291, 293 (1886); State v. Cooper, 22 N.J.L. 52, 53-58 (1849).

In conformity with those views, state courts uniformly recognized abortion after quickening as a common law crime.[2] At least two state courts determined

---

[2] Smith v. Gaffard, 31 Ala. 45, 51 (1857) (dictum in slander case); State v. Reed, 45 Ark. 333, 334-36 (1885) (reversing dismissal of indictment charging defendant with post-quickening abortion); Eggart v. State, 40 Fla. 527, 532, 25 So. 144, 145 (1898) (dictum in case decided under statute abolishing quickening distinction); Abrams v. Foshee, 3 Iowa 274, 278-80 (1856) (dictum in slander case); Mitchell v. Commonwealth, 78 Ky. 204, 205-10 (1879) (reversing conviction where indictment failed to allege that "the woman was quick with child"); Smith v. State, 33 Me. 48, 55 (1851) (dictum in case decided under statute abolishing quickening distinction); Lamb v. State, 67 Md. 524, 532-34, 10 A. 208, 208-09 (1887) (dictum in case decided under statute abolishing quickening distinction); Commonwealth v. Parker, 50 Mass. (9 Met.) 263, 264-68 (1845) (reversing conviction where indictment failed to allege that "the woman was quick with child"); Commonwealth v. Bangs, 9 Mass. 387, 387-88 (1812) (arresting judgment where indictment failed to allege that "the woman was quick with child"); State v. Emerich, 13 Mo. App. 492, 495-98 (1883) (dictum in case decided under statute); State v. Cooper, 22 N.J.L. 52, 54-58 (1849) (dictum in case upholding indictment charging defendant with assault); Evans v. People, 49 N.Y. 86, 88 (1872) (dictum in case reversing conviction under manslaughter statute).

Four of these decisions acknowledged the arbitrary nature of the quickening distinction and recommended corrective legislative action. See Mitchell v. Commonwealth, 78 Ky. 204, 209-10 (1879); Commonwealth v. Parker, 50 Mass. (9 Met.) 263, 268; State v. Emerich, 13 Mo. App. 492, 495 (1883); State v. Cooper, 22 N.J.L. 52, 58 (1849).

that abortion at any state of pregnancy was a common law crime. State v. Slagle, 83 N.C. 630, 632 (1880) (dictum); Mills v. Commonwealth, 13 Pa. 630, 632-33 (1850) (indictment need not allege that woman had become quick). The Maryland Court of Appeals may have had these cases in mind when it recorded widespread abandonment of the medically obsolete quickening distinction:

> [A]s the life of an infant was not supposed to begin until it stirred in the mother's womb, it was not regarded as a criminal offence to commit an abortion in the early stages of pregnancy. A considerable change in the law has taken place in many jurisdictions by the silent and steady progress of judicial opinion; and it has been frequently held by Courts of high character that abortion is a crime at common law without regard to the stage of pregnancy.

Lamb v. State, 67 Md. 524, 533, 10 A. 208, 208 (1887) (emphasis added).

These decisions, together with the dozens of abortion prosecutions reported in the Century Digest and each volume of the Decennial Digests, lay to rest the doubt expressed in Roe that "abortion was never firmly established as a common-law crime even with respect to the destruction of a quick fetus." 410 U.S. at 136. No American court ever held that post-quickening abortion was not a crime at common law.

Moreover, there is evidence that abortion was prosecuted as a common law crime in the colonial period. Julia Cherry Spruill, in her study of women in the South, cites the 1652 case of Captain Mitchell, who "was accused of a number of crimes, among which was attempted abortion," and of Elizabeth Robins, who was accused of "taking medicine to destroy her child." J. Spruill, Women's Life and Work in the Southern Colonies at 325-26 (1938). Another historian, Lyle Koehler, records the case of Deborah Allen, who was indicted on September 4, 1683, by the "Gen. Attorney . . . for, fornication, and for Indeavoringe the Dithruction of the Child in her womb." L. Koehler, A Search For Power: The "Weaker Sex" in Seventeenth-Century New England at 329, n.132 (1980).

Admittedly, there are few reported cases of prosecutions for abortions in America prior to the mid-nineteenth century. This was not because abortion was not regarded as a crime at common law, however, but because "[f]ew [women] tried to limit their pregnancies by birth control or abortion," (C. Scholten, Childbearing In American Society 1650-1850 at 9 (1985)), and because primitive medical understanding prevented proof of abortion until after quickening and unless there were direct witnesses who would testify. J. Mohr, Abortion in America: The Origins and Evolution of National Policy, 1800-1900 at 72 (1978). Mohr notes that abortion after quickening, "late in the fourth or early in the fifth month," was a common law crime in the United States. Id. at 3. In Evans v. People, 49 N.Y. 86 (1872), the New York Court of Appeals confirmed the evidentiary basis of the quickening rule:

> But until the period of quickening there is no evidence of life; and whatever may be said of the foetus, the law has fixed upon this period of gestation as the time when the child is endowed with life, and for the reason that the foetal movements are the first clearly marked and well defined evidences of life.

Id. at 90.

Prior to the codification of common law crimes in the nineteenth century, regulations on midwives prohibited abortions. In 1716, for example, New York City adopted an ordinance directed at midwives which provided:

> You Shall not Give any Counsel or Administer any Herb Medicine or Potion, or any other thing to any Woman being with Child whereby She Should Destroy or Miscarry of that she goeth withall before her time.

Horan and Marzen, "Abortion and Midwifery: A Footnote in Legal History," in New Perspectives on Human Abortion, at 199 (T. Hilgers, D. Horan, and D. Mall, eds. 1981). Violation of this ordinance, which remained in effect at least until 1776, was punishable by fines, forfeiture or jail. Id. at 199-200. Virginia, in the seventeenth century, passed an ordinance by which "[m]idwives were pledged to expose infanticide, to summon other midwives in suspicious cases and not to induce abortion or charge exorbitantly." S. Massengill, A Sketch of Medicine and Pharmacy at 294 (2d ed. 1942).

The law could not prove pregnancy before quickening because of the primitive state of medical technology. But as a prophylactic measure it sought to prevent the induction of abortion throughout pregnancy by regulating the practices of midwives. This regulation is significant because well into the nineteenth century, midwives, not physicians, attended women during pregnancy and childbirth and performed most abortions. Horan and Marzen, "Abortion and Midwifery: A Footnote in Legal History," in New Perspectives on Human Abortion, at 200 (T. Hilgers, D. Horan, and D. Mall, eds. 1981).

Abortion was not a "right" at common law, either in England or America. Abortion was a crime and was punished accordingly.

IV. THE ABORTION STATUTES ENACTED BY THE STATE LEGISLATURES IN THE NINETEENTH CENTURY, WHICH ABOLISHED THE QUICKENING DISTINCTION AND PROHIBITED ABORTION THROUGHOUT PREGNANCY EXCEPT TO SAVE THE LIFE OF THE MOTHER, WERE INTENDED TO PROTECT UNBORN HUMAN LIFE.

In Roe v. Wade, the Court found that "the pre-existing English common law" of abortion remained in effect in this country "in all but a few States until [the] mid-19th century" and that "[i]t was not until after the War Between the States that legislation began generally to replace the common law." 410 U.S. at 138-139. These findings do not appear to be supported by the historical record. By the end of 1849, eighteen of the thirty States had enacted statutes restricting abortion, and by the end of the Civil War, twenty-seven of the thirty-six States had done so.[3] By the end of 1868, the year in [3] See, generally, Witherspoon, Reexamining Roe: Nineteenth-Century Abortion Statutes And The Fourteenth Amendment, 17 St. Mary's L.J. 29, 32 et seq. (1985). The following eighteen states adopted anti-abortion statutes before 1850: Alabama, Ala. Acts, ch. 6, sec. 2 (1840); Arkansas, Ark. Rev. Stat., ch. 44, div. III, art. II, secs. 5, 6 (1838); Connecticut, Conn. Stat., tit. 22, sec. 14 at 152 (1821) (in 1860 this statute was replaced by Conn. Pub. Acts, ch. LXXI, secs. 1, 2, p. 65 (1860), which made abortion at any stage of pregnancy a crime); Illinois, Ill. Rev. Crim. Code, div. 5, sec. 46, p. 131 (1833) (this statute was replaced by a subsequent enactment in 1867, Act of Feb. 28, 1867, Ill. Pub. Laws, p. 89 (1867)); Indiana, Ind. Rev. Stat., sec. 3 at 224 (1838) (by 1859, this statute had been superseded by a subsequent enactment, Ind. Laws ch. LXXXI, sec. 2 at 130-31 (1958)); Iowa (admitted to statehood Dec. 28, 1846), Iowa (Terr.) Rev. Stat. ch. 49, secs. 10, 13 at 167 (1843 (an act of March 15, 1858, made abortion at any stage of pregnancy a crime, Iowa Rev. Stat., sec. 4221 (1860)); Maine, Me. Rev. Stat., ch. 160, secs. 11-14 (1840); Massachusetts, Mass. Acts & Resolves, ch. 27 (1845); Michigan, Mich. Rev. Stat., ch. 153, secs. 32-34, p. 662 (1846); Mississippi, Miss. Code, ch. 64, secs. 8, 9, p. 958 (1848); Missouri, Mo. Rev. Stat., art. II, secs. 9, 10, 36 at 168-69, 172 (1835); New Hampshire, N.H. Laws, ch. 743, sec. 1, p. 708 (1848); New Jersey, N.J. Laws, pp. 266-27 (1849); New York, N.Y. Laws, ch. 22, sec. 1, p. 19 (1846), N.Y. Laws, ch. 260, secs. 1-6 at 285-86 (1845); Ohio, Ohio Gen. Stat., ch. 35, secs. 111, 112 at 252 (1841); Vermont, Vt. Acts No. 33, sec. 1 (1846); Virginia, Va. Acts, tit. II, ch. 3, sec. 9, p. 96 (1848); Wisconsin, Wis. Rev. Stat., ch. 133, secs. 10, 11 (1849) (by 1858, this statute had been superseded by a subsequent enactment, Wis. Rev. Stat., ch. 164, sec. 11, ch. 169, secs. 58, 59 (1858)).

The following nine states adopted such statutes between 1850 and 1865: California (admitted to statehood Sep. 9, 1850), Cal. Sess. Laws, ch. 99, sec. 45, p. 233 (1849-1850) (section 45 was amended by an act of May 20, 1861, ch. DXXI, 1861 Cal. Stat. 588); Kansas (admitted to statehood Jan. 29, 1861), Kan. (Terr.) Stat., ch. 48, secs. 9, 10, 39 at 238, 243 (1855) (by 1859, this statute had been superseded by a subsequent enactment, Kan. (Terr.) Laws, ch. 28, secs. 9, 10, 37 (1859)); Louisiana, La. Crimes & Offences, sec. 24 at 138 (1856); Minnesota (admitted to statehood May 11, 1858), Minn. (Terr.) Rev. Stat. ch. 100, secs. 10, 11, p. 493 (1851); Nevada (admitted to statehood Oct. 31, 1864), Nev. (Terr.) Laws, ch. 28, div. 4, sec. 42, p. 63 (1861); Oregon (admitted to statehood Feb. 14, 1859), Act of Oct. 19, 1864, Ore. Gen. Laws, Crim. Code, ch. 43, sec. 509, p. 528 (1845-1864); Pennsylvania, Pa. Laws No. 374, secs. 87-89 (1860), 1860 Pa. Laws 404-05; Texas, Tex. Gen. Stat. Dig., ch. VII, articles 531-536, p. 524 (Oldham & White 1959); West Virginia (admitted to statehood June 20, 1863), see Va. Acts, tit. II, ch. 3, sec. 9, p. 96 (1848), W. Va. Const., art. XI, par. 8 (1863).

[4] In addition to the twenty-seven states listed in note 3, the following three states adopted anti-abortion statutes between 1865 and 1868: Florida, Fla. Acts, 1st Sess., ch. 1637, No. 13, ch. 3, secs. 10, 11, ch. 8, secs 9-11 (1868), 1868 Fla. Laws 64, 97; Maryland, Md. Laws, ch. 179, sec. 2, p. 315 (1868); Nebraska (admitted to statehood March 1, 1867), Neb. (Terr.) Stat., tit. 4, ch. 4, sec. 42 (1866). Of the thirty states ratifying the fourteenth amendment as of July 21, 1868, all but Georgia, North Carolina, Rhode Island, South Carolina and Tennessee had adopted such statutes.

which the Fourteenth Amendment was ratified, thirty of the then thirty-seven States had enacted such statutes, including twenty-five of the thirty-ratifying States,[4] together with six of the ten federal territories.[5] The territorial enactments are significant because laws passed by territorial legislatures were subject to Congressional annulment. U.S. Const., art. IV, sec. III, cl. 2; National Bank v. County of Yankton, 101 U.S. 129, 133 (1880). No abortion statute enacted by any territorial legislature was ever nullified by Congress, including the 39th Congress which approved the Fourteenth Amendment in June 1866.

The widespread adoption of these laws prior to the ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment in 1868 undermines the Court's conclusion in Roe that the "right of privacy . . . founded in the Fourteenth Amendment's concept of personal liberty . . . encompass[es] a woman's decision whether or not to terminate her pregnancy." 410 U.S. at 153. As Justice Rehnquist observed in dissent, "[t]o reach its result, the Court necessarily . . . had to find within the scope of the Fourteenth Amendment a right that was apparently completely unknown to the drafters of the Amendment." Id. at 174 (Rehnquist, J., dissenting). After reciting the statutory history set out above, Justice Rehnquist stated:

> There apparently was no question concerning the validity of this provision [the Texas statute] or of any of the other state statutes when the Fourteenth Amendment was adopted. The only conclusion possible from this history is that the drafters did not intend to have the Fourteenth Amendment withdraw from the States the power to legislate with respect to this matter.

Id. at 177 (Rehnquist, J., dissenting).

---

[5] The following federal territories adopted anti-abortion statutes by the end of 1868: Arizona, Ariz. Code, ch. 10, div. 5, sec. 45 (1865); Colorado, Act of Nov. 5, 1861, div. 4, sec. 42, 1861 Colo. Laws 296-97, Colo. Rev. Stat., ch. XXII, sec. 42 (1868); Idaho, Act of Feb. 4, 1864, ch. 4, sec. 42, 1864 Idaho Laws 443; Montana, 1864 Mont. Laws 184; New Mexico, Act of Feb. 15, 1854, No. 28, ch. 3, secs. 10, 11, 1854 N.M. Laws 88; Washington, Wash. (Terr.) Stat., ch. 2, secs. 37, 38 at 81 (1854).

The Court dismissed the importance of this legislation, concluding that the nineteenth century statutory prohibitions of abortion were enacted not to protect prenatal life but to guard maternal health against the dangers of unsafe operations. 410 U.S. at 151-52. Three reasons were offered in support of this conclusion, all of which have been shown by "the lessons of experience and the force of better reasoning," (Burnet v. Coronado Oil & Gas Co., 285 U.S. 393, 407-08 (1932) (Brandies, J., dissenting)), to be erroneous.

First, citing only one New Jersey decision, the Court stated that "[t]he few state courts called upon to interpret their laws in the late 19th and early 20th centuries did focus on the State's interest in protecting the woman's health rather than in preserving the embryo and fetus." 410 U.S. at 151 & n. 48, citing State v. Murphy, 27 N.J.L. 112 (1858). The Court not only misread the holding in Murphy (see Destro, Abortion and the Constitution: The Need for a Life-Protective Amendment, 63 Calif. L. Rev. 1250, 1273-74 (1975)),[6] but also overlooked eighteen decisions from thirteen jurisdictions expressly affirming that protection of the unborn was a purpose of their nineteenth century statutes,[7] and [6] In Murphy, the court recited the common law rule that "the procuring of an abortion, or the attempt to procure an abortion, by the mother herself, or by another with her consent, was not indictable, unless the woman were quick with child." 27 N.J.L. at 114. The court noted that "[t]he act was purged of its criminality, so far as it affected the mother by her consent. It was an offence only against the life of the child. . . . [T]he statute does not make it criminal for the woman to swallow the potion, or to consent to the operation or other means to procure an abortion. . . . Her guilt or innocence remains as at common law. Her offence at the common law is against the life of the child." Id. at 114 (emphasis added). See State v. Gedicke, 43 N.J.L. 86 (1861), discussed in the text, and State v. Siciliano, 21 N.J. 249, 257-58, 121 A.2d 490, 495 (1956).

---

[7] Trent v. State, 15 Ala. App. 485, 488, 73 So. 834, 836 (1916); Dougherty v. The People, 1 Colo. 514, 522-23 (1872); Passley v. State, 194 Ga. 327, 329, 21 S.E.2d 230, 232 (1942); Nash v. Meyer, twelve other decisions from ten additional jurisdictions strongly implying the same position.[8] In every decade since the 1840's, there has been at least one American state court decision recognizing this purpose.

Thus, in 1849, the Supreme Court of Vermont held that "the preservation of the life of the child" was one of the "important considerations" underlying the state's 1846 abortion statute. State v. Howard, 32 Vt. 380, 399 (1859).

In 1851, the Supreme Court of Maine explained that its 1840 abortion statute had abolished the common law quickening distinction:

---

54 Idaho 283, 301, 31 P.2d 273, 280 (1934); State v. Alcorn, 7 Idaho 599, 613-14, 64 P. 1014, 1019 (1901); Joy v. Brown, 173 Kan. 833, 839-40, 252 P.2d 889, 893 (1953); State v. Miller, 90 Kan. 230, 233, 133 P. 878, 879 (1913); State v. Watson, 30 Kan. 281, 284, 1 P. 770, 771-72 (1883); State v. Siciliano, 21 N.J. 249, 257-58, 121 A.2d 490, 495 (1956); State of Gedicke, 43 N.J.L. 86, 89-90, 96 (1881); State v. Hoover, 252 N.C. 113, 133, 135, 113 S.E.2d 281, 283 (1960); State v. Tippie, 89 Ohio St. 35, 39-40, 105 N.E. 75, 77 (1913); Bowlan v. Lunsford, 176 Okla. 115, 117, 54 P.2d 666, 668 (1936); State v. Ausplund, 86 Ore. 121, 131-32, 167 P. 1019, 1022-23 (1917); State v. Howard, 32 Vt. 380, 399-401 (1859); Anderson v. Commonwealth, 190 Va. 665, 673, 58 S.E.2d 72, 75 (1950); Miller v. Bennett, 190 Va. 162, 169, 56 S.E.2d 217, 221 (1949); State v. Cox, 197 Wash. 67, 77, 84 P.2d 357, 361 (1938). But see State v. Carey, 76 Conn. 342, 352-53, 56 A. 632, 636 (1904); People v. Nixon, 42 Mich. App. 332, 335-41, 201 N.W.2d 635, 638-41 (1972); State v. Jordan, 227 N.C. 579, 580, 42 S.E.2d 674, 675 (1947); Foster v. State, 182 Wis. 298, 300, 196 N.W. 233, 234 (1923) (contra).

[8] McClure v. State, 214 Ark. 159, 170, 215 S.W.2d 524, 530 (1949); Montgomery v. State, 80 Ind. 338, 345 (1881); State v. Moore, 25 Iowa 128, 131-32, 135-36 (1866); Abrams v. Foshee, 3 Iowa 274, 278 (1856); Smith v. State, 33 Me. 48, 57-59 (1851); Worthington v. State, 92 Md. 222, 237-238, 48 A. 355, 356-57 (1901); Lamb v. State, 67 Md. 524, 532-33, 10 A. 208 (1887); People v. Sessions, 58 Mich. 594, 595-96, 26 N.W. 291, 292-93 (1886); Edwards v. State, 79 Neb. 251, 254-55, 112 N.W. 611, 612-13 (1907); Bennett v. Hymers, 101 N.H. 483, 484-85, 147 A.2d 108, 109-110 (1958); State v. Powell, 181 N.C. 515, 106 S.E.133 (1921); State v. Crook, 16 Utah 212, 216-17, 51 P. 1091, 1093 (1898).

> There is a removal of the unsubstantial distinction, that it is no offence to procure an abortion, before the mother becomes sensible of the motion of the child, notwithstanding it is then capable of inheriting an estate; and immediately afterwards is a great misdemeanor. It is now equally criminal to produce abortion before and after quickening. And the unseccessful attempt to cause the destruction of an unborn child is a crime, whether the child be quick or not.

Smith v. State, 33 Me. 48, 57 (1851).

In 1868, the Supreme Court of Iowa affirmed a conviction of murder for causing the death of a woman by an illegal abortion under an 1858 anti-abortion statute, and approved of the following charge to the jury as an accurate statement of the law:

> To attempt to produce a miscarriage, except when in proper professional judgment it is necessary to preserve the life of the woman, is an unlawful act. It is known to be a dangerous act, generally producing one and sometimes two deaths,—I mean the death of the unborn infant and the death of the mother."

State v. Moore, 25 Iowa 128, 131-32 (1868).

In Moore, the court condemned abortion as "an act highly dangerous to the mother, and generally fatal, and frequently designed to be fatal, to the child." Id. at 136.

In 1872, the Supreme Court of the Territory of Colorado held that its 1868 abortion statute was "intended specially to protect the mother and her unborn child from operations calculated and directed to the destruction of the one and the inevitable injury of the other." Dougherty v. The People, 1 Colo. 514, 522.

In 1881, the Supreme Court of New Jersey declared that its original 1849 abortion statute had been amended in 1872 "to protect the life of the child also, and inflict the same punishment, in case of its death, as if the mother should die." State v. Gedicke, 43 N.J.L. 86, 89-90 (1881). The court described abortion as "a heinous crime, which in almost every case endangers the life and health of the woman, and the destruction of the foetus or child, which may be quickened or instinct with the beginning of life." Id. at 90.

In 1898, the Supreme Court of Utah characterized abortion under its 1876 statute as "the criminal act of destroying the foetus at any time before birth." State v. Crook, 16 Utah 212, 217, 51 P. 1091, 1093 (1898).

In 1901, the Maryland Court of Appeals explained that American anti-abortion statutes had been strengthened and the penalties for their violation increased precisely because the medical procedures for inducing abortions had become safer:

> It is common knowledge that death is not now the usual, nor, indeed, the always probable, consequence of an abortion. The death of the mother . . . more frequently resulted in the days of rude surgery, when the character and properties of powerful drugs were but little known, and the control over their application more limited. But, in these days of advanced surgery and marvelous medical science and skill, operations are performed and powerful drugs administered, by skillful and careful men without danger to the life of the patient. Indeed, it is this comparative immunity from danger to the woman which has doubtless led to the great increase of the crime, to the establishment of a class of educated professional abortionists, and to the enactment of the severe statutes almost everywhere found to prevent and punish this offense. The woman takes her life in her hands when she submits to an abortion . . . but her death is no necessary element in the procuring of an abortion, and the application of the harsh rule here contended for [that defendant should have been indicted for murder instead of manslaughter] would have no effect in the repression of that abhorrent crime, which can ony be efficiently dealt with by severity in the enactment and administration of the law punishing the attempt upon the life of the unborn child.

Worthington v. State, 92 Md. 222, 237-38, 48 A. 355, 356-57 (1901).

In 1916, the Alabama Court of Appeals held that the "manifest purpose" of its anti-abortion statute, first adopted in 1840, was "to restrain after conception an unwarranted interference with the course of nature in the propagation and reproduction of human kind . . . ." Trent v. State, 15 Ala. App. 485, 488, 73 So. 834, 836 (1916) (emphasis added). Quoting from the 1911 Transactions of the Medical Association of Alabama, the court asked, "'[D]oes not the new being, from the first day of its uterine life, acquire a legal and moral status that entitles it to the same protection as that guaranteed to human beings in extrauterine life?'" Id. at 488, 73 So. at 836.

In a 1917 case, a defendant convicted under Oregon's 1864 abortion statute argued that he could not be prosecuted for performing an abortion on a woman prior to quickening because an abortion at that stage of pregnancy was not a crime at common law. After noting that common law crimes had been abolished in the State, the Oregon Supreme Court rejected this argument, stating:

> The statute refers to "any woman pregnant with a child" without reference to the stage of pregnancy. When a virile spermatozoon unites with a fertile ovum in the uterus, conception is accomplished. Pregnancy at once ensues, and under normal circumstances continues until parturition. During all this time the woman is "pregnant with a child" within the meaning of the statute. She cannot be pregnant with anything else than a child. From the moment of conception a new life has begun, and is protected by the enactment. The product of conception during its entire course is imbued with life, and is capable of being destroyed as contemplated by the law. By such destruction the death of a child is produced and often that of its mother as well. The Legislature did not waste time with refinements about quickening. but applied the law to all stages of pregnancy, and we would usurp its prerogative > if we read into the statute something not found there.

State v. Ausplund, 86 Ore. 121, 131-32, 167 P. 1019, 1022-23 (1917).

In 1921, the Supreme Court of North Carolina held that "[t]he essential fact charged [under an 1881 statute], is that the defendant advised the woman to take the drug, or other substance, with intent thereby to destroy the child." State v. Powell, 181 N.C. 515, 515, 106 S.E. 133, 133 (1921). The court added that the act "denounced by the statute" is the administration of a drug with the intent "to destroy the child." Id.

In 1934, the Supreme Court of Idaho determined that the state abortion statute, first adopted in 1854, was designed "not for the protection of the woman, but to discourage abortions because thereby the life of a human being, the unborn child, is taken." Nash v. Meyer, 54 Idaho 283, 301, 31 P.2d 273, 280 (1934). In 1936, the Oklahoma Supreme Court expressly held that "the anti-abortion statutes in Oklahoma were enacted and designed for the protection of the unborn child and, through it, society." Bowlan v. Lunsford, 176 Okla. 115, 117, 54 P.2d 666, 668 (1936). And in 1938, the Washington Supreme Court acknowledged that the state anti-abortion statute, first adopted in 1854, was "designed to protect the life of the mother as well as that of her child." State v. Cox, 197 Wash. 67, 77, 84 P.2d 357, 361 (1938).

In 1942, the Supreme Court of Georgia declared that in enacting its anti-abortion statute in 1876, "the legislature was undertaking to provide by penal law appropriate penalties for the destruction of an unborn child." Passley v. State, 194 Ga. 327, 329, 21 S.E.2d 230, 232 (1942). In 1950, the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals, interpreting its 1849 abortion statute, explained that the "[t]he intention of the lawmakers was to protect the health and lives of pregnant women and their unborn children from those who intentionally and not in good faith would thwart nature by performing or causing abortion and miscarriage." Anderson v. Commonwealth, 190 Va. 665, 673, 58 S.E.2d 72, 75.

In 1953, the Kansas Supreme Court held that the next of kin of a woman who had died as a result of a negligently performed abortion could sue the abortionist for damages. Joy v. Brown, 173 Kan. 833, 252 P.2d 889 (1953). Rejecting the defendant's argument that the decendent's consent to an illegal act barred recovery, the court said, "[w]e are of the opinion that no person may lawfully and validly consent to any act the very purpose of which is to destroy human life." Id. at 839-40, 252 P.2d at 892. And in 1960, the Supreme Court of North Carolina declared that its abortion statute, which had remained essentially unchanged since it was first enacted in 1881, was "designed to protect the life of a child in ventre sa mere." State v. Hoover, 252 N.C. 133, 135, 113 S.E.2d 281, 283 (1960).

State court decisions affirming the protection of unborn human life as one purpose of their statutes prohibiting abortion continued to be handed down until Roe v. Wade. In the fifteen months before Roe v. Wade was decided, no less than six state courts upheld the constitutionality of their respective abortion statutes, expressly holding that their laws were intended to protect the lives of unborn children.[9] [9] See Nelson v. Planned Parenthood Center of Tucson, Inc., 19 Ariz. App. 142, 505 P.2d 580 (1973), modified on rehearing pursuant to Roe; Cheaney v. State, 259 Ind. 138, 140-47, 285 N.E.2d 265, 266-70 (1972), cert. den. for want of standing of petitioner, sub nom. Cheaney v. Indiana, 410 U.S. 991 (1973); Sasaki v. Commonwealth, 485 S.W.2d 897, 900-04 (Ky. 1972), judgment vacated and cause remanded for further consideration in light of Roe v. Wade, sub nom. Sasaki v. Kentucky, 410 U.S. 951 (1973); Rodgers v. Danforth, 486 S.W.2d 258, 259 (Mo. 1972); Thompson v. State, 493 S.W.2d 913, 917-20 (Tex. Cr. App. 1971), judgment vacated and cause remanded for further consideration in light of Roe v. Wade, sub nom. Thompson v. Texas, 410 U.S. 950 (1973); State v. Munson, 86 S.D. 663, 201 N.W.2d 123 (1972), judgment vacated and cause remanded for further consideration in light of Roe v. Wade, sub nom. Munson v. South Dakota, 410 U.S. 950 (1973). But see People v. Belous, 71 Cal.2d 954, 458 P.2d 194 (1969), cert.

---

In sum, more than thirty-five decisions from almost thirty States recognized that their abortion statutes were enacted primarily to protect unborn human life. These opinions forge an unbroken chain of precedent linking the 1840's to the early 1970's. Given this wealth of case authority, the Court's belief that state court decisions "focus[ed] on the State's interest in protecting the woman's health rather than in preserving the embryo and fetus," (410 U.S. at 151), is ill-founded.

Further evidence of the legislatures' intent to protect fetal life may be found in the report of the American Medical Association's Committee on Criminal Abortion to the Twelfth Annual Meeting of the AMA in 1859, from which the Court in Roe quoted extensively. 410 U.S. at 141-42. That report, and the subsequent action taken by the AMA, supports the view that in restricting the availability of abortions, the nineteenth century legislatures intended to recognize the humanity of unborn children and protect them from the violence of abortion.

The Committee on Criminal Abortion was appointed in 1857 to investigate criminal abortion "with respect to its general suppression." In its report, the Committee deplored abortion and its frequency and listed three causes of "this general demoralization":

> The first of these causes is a wide-spread popular ignorance of the true character of the crime—a belief, even among mothers themselves, that the foetus is not alive till after the period of quickening.
>
> The second of the agents alluded to is the fact that the profession[s] themselves are frequently supposed careless of foetal life . . . .
>
> The third reason of the frightful extent of this crime is found in the grave defects of our laws, both den., 397 U.S. 915 (1970), and State v. Barquet, 262 So.2d 431 (Fla. 1972) (striking down abortion statutes on vagueness grounds); and People v. Nixon, 42 Mich. App. 332, 201 N.W.2d 635 (1972) (holding that statute could not constitutionally be applied to a licensed physician performing an abortion before quickening in an antiseptic clinical environment).

> common and statute, as regards the independent and actual existence of the child before birth, as a living being. These errors which are sufficient in most instances to prevent conviction, are based, and only based, upon mistaken and exploded medical dogmas. With strange inconsistency, the law fully acknowleges the foetus in utero and its inherent rights, for civil purposes; while personally and as criminally affected, it fails to recognize it, and to its life as yet denies all protection.

12 Trans. of the Am. Med. Assn. 75-76 (1859).

The American Medical Association adopted resolutions protesting "against such unwarrantable destruction of human life," calling upon state legislatures to revise their abortion laws, and requesting the cooperation of state medical societies "in pressing the subject." Id. at 28, 78. The Committee submitted another detailed report in 1871 which concluded with the observation, "We had to deal with human life. In a matter of less importance we could entertain no compromise. An honest judge on the bench would call things by their proper names. We could do no less." 22 Trans. of the Am. Med. Assn. 258 (1871). In Roe, the Court acknowledged that "the attitude of the profession may have played a significant role in the enactment of stringent criminal abortion legislation during that period." 410 U.S. at 141.

That the nineteenth century abortion statutes were enacted, at least in part, to protect the lives of unborn children is evident from the therapeutice exception to the absolute ban on abortions. Almost all of the States prohibited abortions except those that were necessary to save the life of the mother. 410 U.S. at 139. Abortions were not allowed for health reasons, unless the life of the mother was endangered. This narrow exception, which was consistent with the common law rule (People v. Sessions, 58 Mich. 594, 596, 26 N.W. 291, 293 (1886)) suggests that the laws were not designed solely to guard women against the dangers of unsafe medical and surgical procedures:

> By prohibiting all abortions except those necessary or thought to be necessary to preserve the life of the mother, the state legislatures manifested their belief that no lesser beneficial consequence could justify the destruction of the unborn child. If the legislatures did not consider the child to be a person in the whole sense, undoubtedly they would not have required the mother to bear serious health risks and heavy burdens in order to preserve the life of the child. Furthermore, if the legislatures had not considered the child to be a "person," surely their overriding concern in regulating abortion would have been to protect the health of pregnant women. Legislatures would have defined the thereapeutic exception so as to minimize the number and gravity of injuries to women resulting from pregnancy, childbirth, and induced abortion. If it would have reduced the number and severity of such injuries to permit physicians, after due consultation, to perform abortions found necessary to prevent serious health injury to the woman, and not just those necessary to save her life, the legislatures would have done so.

Witherspoon, Reexamining Roe: Nineteenth-Century Abortion Statutes And The Fourteenth Amendment, 17 St. Mary's L.J. 29, 45-46 (1985) (emphasis in original).

As a second reason offered in support of its conclusion that the nineteenth century abortion statutes were intended solely to protect maternal health and not prenatal life, the Court in Roe observed that "[i]n many States . . . by statute or judicial interpretation, the pregnant women herself could not be prosecuted for self-abortion or for cooperating in an abortion performed upon her by another." 410 U.S. at 151. The Court, however, failed to note that at least seventeen states enacted statutes which expressly incriminated the woman's participation in her own abortion.[10] [10] Arizona, Ariz. Pen. Code, sec. 455 (1887); California, Act of May 20, 1861, ch. DXXI, 1861 Cal. Stat. 588; Act of February 14, 1872, Cal. Pen. Code, sec. 275 (1872); Connecticut, Conn. Pub. Acts, ch. LXXI, sec. 3, pp. 65-66 (1860); Idaho, Idaho Rev. Stat., sec. 6795 (1887); Indiana, Act of April 14, 1881, ch. XXXVII, sec. 23, 1881 Ind. Laws 177; Minnesota, Act of March 10, 1873, ch. 9, 1873 Minn. Laws 117-19; Montana, Mont. Rev. Code, sec. 94-402 (1947); Nevada, Act of Feb. 16, 1869, ch. 22, sec. 1, 1869 Nev. Laws 64-65; Nev. Rev. Stat., sec. 200.220 (1959); New Hampshire, Act of Jan. 4, 1849, ch. 743, sec. 4, 1848 N.H. Laws 708-09; New York Act of May 13, 1845, ch. 260, sec. 3, 1845 N.Y. Laws 285-86; Act of April 6, 1872, ch. 181, sec. 2, 1872 N.Y. Laws 509-10; North Dakota, Dak. Pen. Code, sec. 338 (1877); Oklahoma, Okla. Stat., sec. 2188 (1890); Okla. Rev. Laws, sec. 2437 (1910); South Carolina, Act of March 24, 1883, No. 354, 1883 S.C. Acts 547-58; South Dakota, Dak. Pen. Code, sec. 338 (1877); Utah, Utah Code Ann., sec. 86-2-2 (1953); Wisconsin, Wis. Rev. Stat., ch. 169, sec. 59 (1859); Wyoming, ch. 73, sec. 32, 1890 Wyo. Laws 131.

---

Moreover, with respect to those States that did not criminalize the woman's conduct, the Court did not consider the reasons why the woman was exempt from prosecution. Traditionally, abortion was viewed as an assault upon the woman because she "was not deemed able to assent to an unlawful act against herself . . . ." State v. Farnam, 82 Ore. 211, 217, 161 P. 417, 419 (1916). As a result, the woman was seen as a victim, rather than an accomplice in, the abortion. State v. Murphy, 27 N.J.L. 112, 114-15 (1858); Dunn v. People, 29 N.Y. 523, 527 (1864). Moreover, as a practical matter, conviction of the abortionist often depended upon the testimony of the aborted woman. Absent a grant of immunity, however, her testimony could not be compelled if she were regarded as an accomplice in the offense. People v. Nixon, 42 Mich. App. 332, 343, 201 N.W.2d 635, 646 (1972) (opinion of Burns, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part). In most States, a criminal conviction cannot be based on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. Thus, for both principled and practical reasons, the woman who underwent an abortion was considered a victim, not a perpetrator, of the offense. See, Annot., Woman Upon Whom Abortion Is Committed As Accomplice For Purposes Of Rule Requiring Corroboration Of Accomplice Testimony, 34 A.L.R.3d 858 (1970).

Finally, the Court stated that "most of [the] initial statutes dealt severely with abortion but were lenient with it before quickening." 410 U.S. at 139. The Court concluded that "adoption of the 'quickening' distinction through received common law and state statutes tacitly recognizes the greater health hazards inherent in late abortion and impliedly repudiates the theory that life begins at conception." Id. at 151-52. Again, the history of the nineteenth century statutes restricting abortion calls this conclusion into question.

As of the end of 1868, thirty of the then thirty-seven States had enacted anti-abortion statutes. All but three of those States—Arkansas, Minnesota and Mississippi—prohibited abortions at any stage of pregnancy. Although seven of the twenty-seven States that prohibited abortions throughout pregnancy punished post-quickening abortions more severely than pre-quickening abortions, the other twenty States with such laws punished abortions equally, regardless of the stage of pregnancy.[11] By the end of 1883, twenty-seven of the thirty-six States that had enacted anti-abortion statutes had abolished any distinction between pre-quickening and post-quickening abortions in determining the range of possible penalties.[12]

---

[11] The statutes are set forth in notes 3 and 4, supra.

[12] Alabama, Ala. Code, sec. 3605 (1867); California, Act of May 20, 1861, ch. DXXI, 1861 Cal. Stat. 588; Colorado, Colo. Rev. Stat. ch. XXII, sec. 42 (1868); Connecticut, Conn. Gen. Stat., tit. XII, ch. II, sec. 22-25 (1866); Delaware, Act of February 13, 1883, ch. 226, secs. 1, 2, 1883 Del. Laws 522; Georgia, Act of February 25, 1876, ch. CXXX, sec. I-III, 1876 Ga. Laws 113; Illinois, Act of February 28, 1867, sec. 1, 1867 Ill. Pub. Laws 89; Indiana, Ind. Laws, ch. LXXXI, sec. 2; Iowa, Act of March 15, 1858, sec. 1, Iowa Rev. Stat., sec. 4221 (1860); Louisiana, La. Crimes & Offences, sec. 24 at 138 (1856); Maine, Me. Rev. Stat., tit. XI, ch. 124, sec. 8, at 685 (1857); Maryland, Md. Laws, ch. 179, sec. 2, p. 315 (1868); Massachusetts, Mass. Gen. Stat., ch. 165, sec. 9-11 (1860); Minnesota, Act of March 10, 1873 Minn. Laws 117-19; Nebraska, Neb. Rev. Stat., tit. 4, ch. 4, sec. 42 (1866); Nevada, Nev. (Terr.) Laws, ch. 28, div. 4, sec. 42, p. 63 (1861); New Jersey, N.J. Laws 266-67 (1849); North Carolina, Act of March 12, 1881, ch. 351, 1881 N.C. Laws 584-85; Ohio, Act of

Rather than the occurrence of quickening, "the crucial factor which determined the range of punishment applicable to an attempted abortion was whether the attempt caused the death of the child." Witherspoon, Reexamining Roe: Nineteenth-Century Abortion Statutes And The Fourteenth Amendment, 17 St. Mary's L.J. 29, 36 (1985). Twenty of the thirty-six States that had enacted abortion statutes by the end of 1883 provided for a higher range of punishment if it were proved that the abortion caused the death of the unborn child.[13] This con-

---

April 13, 1867, 1867 Ohio Laws 135-36; Oregon, Act of October 19, 1864, Ore. Gen. Laws, Crim. Code, ch. 43, sec. 509, p. 528 (1845-1864); South Carolina, Act of December 24, 1883, No. 354, secs. 1-3, 1883 S.C. Acts 547-58; Tennessee, Act of March 26, 1883, ch. CXL, 1883, ch. CXL. 1883 Tenn. Acts 188-89; Texas, Tex. Pen. Code arts. 531-536 (1856), 1858 Tex. Gen. Laws 172; Vermont, Act of Nov. 21, 1867, No. 57, secs. 1, 3 (1867), 1867 Vt. Acts 64-66; Virginia, Va. Acts, tit. II, ch. 3, sec. 9, p. 96 (1848); West Virginia, Va. Acts. tit. II, ch. 3, sec. 9, p. 96 (1848); W. Va. Const., art. XI, par. 8 (1863); Wisconsin, Wis. Rev. Stat. ch. 164, sec. 11, ch. 169, secs. 58, 59 (1858).

[13] Arkansas, Ark. Rev. Stat., ch. 44, div. III, art. II, secs. 5, 6 (1838); Act of Nov. 8, 1875, No. 4, 1875 Ark. Acts 5-6; Florida, Fla. Acts, 1st Sess., ch. 1647, no. 13, ch. 3, sec. 11, ch. 8, sec. 9, 1868 Fla. Laws 64, 97; Georgia, Act of Feb. 25, 1876, ch. CXXX, secs. I-III, 1876 Ga. Laws 113; Indiana, Act of April 14, 1881, ch. XXXVII, sec. 22, 1881 Ind. Laws 177; Maine, Me. Rev. Stat., tit. XI, ch. 124, sec. 8 at 165 (1857); Michigan, Mich. Rev. Stat., ch. 153, secs. 33-34 (1846); Minnesota, Act of March 10, 1873, ch. 9, 1873 Minn. Laws 117-19; Missouri, Mo. Gen. Stat., pt. IV, tit. XLV, ch. 200, secs. 10, 34 at 778-79, 781 (1866); Nebraska, Act of March 4, 1873, Neb. Gen. Stat., ch. 58, secs. 6, 39 at 720, 727-28 (1873); New Jersey, Act of March 25, 1881, CXCI, N.J. Gen. Pub. Laws, ch. CXCI at 240; New York, Act of July 26, 1881, N.Y. Pen. Code, ch. 676, tit. 9, ch. 2, secs. 191, 194, tit. 10, ch. 4, sec. 295, ch. 7, secs. 318-21, 3 N.Y. Rev. Stat., at 2478-80 (1881); Ohio, Act of April 13, 1867, 1867 Ohio Laws 135-36; Oregon, Act of Oct. 19, 1864, Ore. Gen. Laws, Crim. Code, ch. 43, sec. 509, p. 528 (1845-1864); Pennsylvania, Pa. Laws, No. 374, tit. 6, secs. 87-88, (1860), 1860 Pa. Laws 404-05; South Carolina, Act of Dec. 24, 1883, No. 354, secs. 1-3, 1883 S.C. Acts 547-58; Tennessee, Act of March 26, 1883, ch. CXL, 1883 Tenn. Acts 188-89; Texas, Tex. Pen. Code, arts. 531, 535 (1856), 1858 Tex. Gen. Laws 172; Virginia, Act of March 14, 1878, tradicts the theory that the laws were passed only for reasons of maternal health.

> The death of the fetus is totally irrelevant to the health of the mother. If the state antiabortion statutes were intended solely to protect the health of the pregnant woman, there would be no reason whatsoever for the state legislatures to authorize the judge or jury to assess a greater punishment if it were proven that the attempted abortion killed the fetus.

Id. at 36.

Witherspoon concludes that "[t]he only explanation of this element of these statutes is that the enacting legislatures attributed value to the life of the unborn child." Id.

Abortion can be regarded as a "fundamental right" only if it is "implicit in the concept of ordered liberty" or "deeply rooted in this Nation's history and tradition." Abortion, however, was a crime at common law and under the laws of all fifty States until Roe v. Wade was decided. Jesse Choper has noted that "[a]s recently as 1967, just six years before the foundational ruling in Roe v. Wade, no state in the nation permitted an abortion except to save the life of the mother." J. Choper, Judicial Review and the National Political Process: A Functional Reconsideration of the Role of the Supreme Court at 118 (1980). Although, prior to Roe, fourteen States had relaxed their restrictions on abortion and had adopted some form of the American Law Institute's Model Penal Code (Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 140 & n.37), a clear majority of the States continued to prohibit all abortions except those necessary to save the life of the mother. See Note, A Survey of the Present Statutory and Case Law on Abortion: The Contradictions and the Problems, ch. 311, ch. 2, sec. 8, 1878 Va. Acts 281-82; West Virginia, ch. 118, sec. 8, 1882 W. Va. Acts; Wisconsin, Act of May 17, 1858, Wis. Rev. Stat., ch. 164, sec. 11, ch. 169, sec. 58 (1858). Of these states, only Arkansas, Florida, Michigan, Missouri, New York and Pennsylvania also required proof of quickening.

---

1972 U. Ill. L. Forum 177, 179-80 & nn. 21-30. And no State had adopted the "trimester" approach enunciated in Roe.

In his dissent in Roe v. Wade, Justice Rehnquist noted the significance of this uniform and consistent condemnation of abortion:

> The fact that a majority of the States reflecting, after all, the majority sentiment in those States, have had restrictions on abortion for at least a century is a strong indication . . . that the asserted right to an abortion is not "so rooted in the traditions and conscience of our people as to be ranked as fundamental," Snyder v. Massachusetts, 291 U.S. 97, 105 (1934).

410 U.S. at 174 (Rehnquist, J., dissenting).

Abortion is not mentioned in the Constitution and there is no evidence that either the framers or ratifiers of the Fourteenth Amendment intended to incorporate a right of abortion into the Constitution. Under this Court's analysis in the Due Process Clause cases, culminating in Bowers v. Hardwick, abortion cannot be considered a "fundamental right." Accordingly, Roe v. Wade should be overruled and the authority to regulate the practice of abortion should be returned to the States.

CONCLUSION

Amici respectfully submit that Roe v. Wade was an unfortunate venture in substantive due process which should be recognized and discarded as constitutional error. By its decision, the Roe Court, without textual or historical support, reached out and struck down the abortion laws of all fifty States, thereby establishing as a constitutional right what had long been regarded in English and American law as a serious crime—the intentional destruction of unborn human life. The Roe Court misapprehended the development of the common law on abortion and, as this brief has attempted to demonstrate, misinterpreted the reasons underlying the enactment of the nineteenth century statutes prohibiting abortion. Those laws were passed to protect unborn human life. The Constitution does not deprive the people of their rightful authority, acting through their State legislatures, to restrict the practice of abortion. That authority should be restored to its legitimate source—the American people. Roe v. Wade should be overruled.

Respectfully submitted,

PAUL BENJAMIN LINTON *
CLARKE D. FORSYTHE
AMERICANS UNITED FOR LIFE
Legal Defense Fund
Suite 1804
343 S. Dearborn St.
Chicago, Illinois 60604
(312) 786-9494
Counsel for Amici Curiae

* Counsel of Record

February 23, 1989

APPENDIX

APPENDIX

LIST OF AMICI

Delaware

Sen. Robert T. Connor	(R)	12th District
Sen. Ruth Ann Minner	(D)	18th District
Rep. Al O. Plant, Sr.	(D)	2nd District
Rep. Joseph G. DiPinto	(R)	4th District
Rep. Jeffrey G. Mack	(R)	17th District
Rep. Terry A. Spence Speaker of the House	(R)	18th District
Rep. Robert F. Gilligan	(D)	19th District
Rep. Steven C. Taylor	(R)	21st District
Rep. Richard F. Davis	(R)	26th District
Rep. G. Wallace Caulk	(R)	33rd District
Rep. Gerald A. Buckworth Majority Whip	(R)	34th District
Rep. V. George Carey	(R)	36th District
Rep. Clifford F. Lee	(R)	40th District
Rep. Charles P. West	(D)	41st District

Illinois

Sen. Forest D. Etheredge	(R)	21st District
Sen. Richard F. Kelly, Jr.	(D)	39th District
Sen. George Ray Hudson	(R)	41st District
Sen. William L. O'Daniel	(D)	54th District
Sen. Frank Watson	(R)	55th District
Rep. Ralph C. Capparelli	(D)	13th District
Rep. Jeremiah E. Joyce	(D)	14th District
Rep. John P. Daley	(D)	21st District
Rep. Andrew J. McGann	(D)	29th District
Rep. James R. Stange	(R)	44th District
Rep. Kathleen L. Wojcik	(R)	45th District
Rep. Donald N. Hensel	(R)	50th District
Rep. Bernard E. Pedersen	(R)	54th District
Rep. Penny Pullen	(R)	55th District
Rep. E.J. "Zeke" Giorgi	(D)	68th District
Rep. Marcel "Bob" DeJaegher	(D)	72nd District
Rep. Robert P. Regan	(R)	80th District
Rep. Thomas J. McCracken, Jr.	(R)	81st District
Rep. Edward Petka	(R)	82nd District
Rep. Larry Wennlund	(R)	84th District

Rep. Gerald C. "Jerry" Weller	(R)	85th District
Rep. J. Philip Novak	(D)	86th District
Rep. Gary Hannig	(D)	98th District
Rep. Michael D. Curran	(D)	99th District
Rep. Charles A. Hartke	(D)	107th District
Rep. Ron Stephens	(R)	110th District
Rep. David D. Phelps	(D)	118th District

Indiana

Sen. Richard W. Worman	(R)	14th District
Sen. Thomas J. Wyss	(R)	15th District
Sen. Richard A. Thompson	(R)	24th District
Sen. Joseph V. Corcoran	(R)	44th District
Sen. Lindel O. Hume	(D)	48th District
Rep. Philip T. Warner	(R)	4th District
Rep. Michael A. Dvorak	(D)	8th District
Rep. John S. Matonovich	(D)	11th District
Rep. Paul J. Hric	(D)	11th District
Rep. Jerome J. Reppa	(R)	15th District
Rep. Robert K. Alderman	(R)	19th District
Rep. Claire M. Leuck	(D)	25th District
Rep. Richard M. Dellinger	(R)	38th District
Rep. Frank Newkirk	(D)	65th District
Rep. David G. Cheatham	(D)	69th District

Kansas

Sen. James Francisco	(D)	26th District
Sen. Eric Yost	(R)	30th District

Kentucky

Sen. William L. Quinlan	(D)	7th District
Sen. Delbert S. Murphy	(D)	8th District
Sen. Arthur L. Schmidt	(R)	11th District
Sen. H. Edward O'Daniel, Jr.	(D)	14th District
Sen. David Williams	(R)	16th District
Rep. Louis E. Johnson	(D)	13th District
Rep. Richard A. Turner	(R)	22nd District
Rep. Mark O'Brien	(D)	31st District
Rep. Bob Heleringer	(R)	33rd District
Rep. Carl A. Nett	(D)	35th District

Rep. Tom Riner	(D)	41st District
Rep. James B. Yates	(D)	44th District
Rep. John Harper	(R)	49th District
Rep. Kenneth F. Harper	(R)	63rd District
Rep. Tom Kerr	(D)	64th District
Rep. James P. Callahan	(D)	67th District
Rep. Bill Donnermeyer	(D)	68th District
Rep. Tommy Todd	(R)	83rd District

Massachusetts

Sen. Francis D. Doris	(D)	Suffolk, Essex, Middlesex Counties
Rep. Marie J. Parente	(D)	10th District
Rep. Gregory W. Sullivan	(D)	12th District

Michigan

Sen. Jack Welborn	(R)	13th District
Sen. Ed Fredricks	(R)	23rd District
Sen. Fred Dillingham	(R)	30th District
Sen. James Barcia	(D)	34th District
Rep. Joseph Palamara	(D)	30th District
Rep. Michael Grffiin	(D)	50th District
Rep. Margaret O'Connor	(R)	52nd District
Rep. William VanRegenmorter	(R)	55th District
Rep. Joanne Emmons	(R)	99th District

North Carolina

Rep. Frank Sizemore III	(R)	27th District
Rep. Paul Stam, Jr.	(R)	62nd District

Ohio

Sen. Ben M. Gaeth	(R)	1st District
Sen. Robert R. Cupp	(R)	12th District
Sen. Richard P. Schafrath	(R)	19th District
Sen. Robert Ney	(R)	20th District
Sen. Grace Drake	(R)	22nd District
Sen. Gary C. Suhadolnik	(R)	24th District
Sen. Scott W. Oelslager	(R)	29th District

Rep. William Thompson	(R)	1st District
Rep. William G. Batchelder	(R)	4th District
Rep. Randall Gardner	(R)	5th District
Rep. Rocco J. Colonna	(D)	7th District
Rep. Patrick A. Sweeney	(D)	9th District
Rep. Ronald Mottle, Sr.	(D)	10th District
Rep. Troy James	(D)	12th District
Rep. Suzanne Bergansky	(D)	17th District
Rep. Ronald J. Suster	(D)	19th District
Rep. Thomas A. Pottenger	(R)	20th District
Rep. Jerome F. Luebbers	(D)	21st District
Rep. Louis W. Blessing, Jr.	(R)	22nd District
Rep. Jacquelyn O'Brien	(R)	26th District
Rep. Dale N. VanVyven	(R)	27th District
Rep. E. J. Thomas, Jr.	(R)	28th District
Rep. Bill Schuck	(R)	35th District
Rep. Robert E. Hickey	(D)	39th District
Rep. Russell E. Guerra, Jr.	(R)	40th District
Rep. Barney J. Quilter	(D)	47th District
Rep. Charles Red Ash	(R)	49th District
Rep. David W. Johnson	(R)	51st District
Rep. John V. Bara	(D)	54th District
Rep. John A. Boehner	(R)	57th District
Rep. Daniel P. Troy	(D)	60th District
Rep. Raymond Sines	(R)	61st District
Rep. Samuel T. Bateman, Jr.	(R)	66th District
Rep. James G. Bucky	(R)	73rd District
Rep. Robert W. Clark	(R)	74th District
Rep. Joseph E. Haines	(R)	75th District
Rep. Steven O. Williams	(R)	78th District
Rep. Larry W. Manahan	(R)	79th District
Rep. Lynn R. Wachtmann	(R)	80th District
Rep. James D. Davis	(R)	81st District
Rep. John P. Stozich	(R)	82nd District
Rep. Corwin M. Nixon	(R)	84th District
Rep. Larry J. Adams	(R)	86th District
Rep. Michael C. Shoemaker	(D)	88th District
Rep. Richard E. Rench	(R)	90th District
Rep. Paul P. Mechling	(D)	91st District
Rep. Ronald D. Amstutz	(R)	93rd District
Rep. Thomas W. Johnson	(R)	96th District
Rep. Jerry Krupinski	(D)	98th District

Texas

Sen. Ted Lyon	(D)	2nd District
Sen. Gene Green	(D)	6th District
Sen. Bob McFarland	(R)	10th District
Sen. John Leedom	(R)	16th District
Sen. J.E. "Buster" Brown	(R)	17th District
Sen. Ken Armbrister	(D)	18th District
Rep. Bill Hollowel	(D)	5th District
Rep. Jerry Yost	(R)	7th District
Rep. L.B. Kubiak	(D)	13th District
Rep. Keith Valigura	(R)	16th District
Rep. Billy Clemons	(D)	17th District
Rep. Mark Stices	(D)	21st District
Rep. John Willy	(R)	28th District
Rep. Tom Uher	(D)	29th District
Rep. Robert Saunders	(D)	30th District
Rep. Phyllis M. Robinson	(D)	31st District
Rep. Steve Holzheauser	(R)	32nd District
Rep. M.A. Taylor	(R)	55th District
Rep. Jim Horn	(R)	59th District
Rep. Ben Campbell	(R)	61st District
Rep. Sam Johnson	(R)	60th District
Rep. Pat Haggerty	(R)	71st District
Rep. Tom Craddick	(D)	76th District
Rep. Bob Hunter	(R)	79th District
Rep. Warren Chisum	(D)	84th District
Rep. John Smithee	(R)	86th District
Rep. Carolyn Park	(R)	92nd District
Rep. Kent Grusendorf	(R)	94th District
Rep. Kim Brimer	(R)	96th District
Rep. Anna Mowery	(R)	97th District
Rep. Ken Marchant	(R)	99th District
Rep. Glenn Repp	(R)	104th District
Rep. Bill Blackwood	(R)	105th District
Rep. Bill Hammond	(R)	109th District
Rep. Fred Hill	(R)	112th District
Rep. A.R. Ovard	(R)	113th District
Rep. Barry Connelly	(R)	126th District
Rep. Dan Shelley	(R)	127th District
Rep. Tony Polumbo	(D)	128th District
Rep. Mike Jackson	(R)	129th District

Rep. Erwin W. Barton	(D)	144th District
Rep. Talmadge Heflin	(R)	149th District
Rep. Paul Hilbert	(R)	151st District

Washington

Sen. Leo Thorsness	(R)	11th District
Sen. Linda Smith	(R)	18th District
Sen. Ellen Craswell	(R)	23rd District
Sen. Brad Owen	(D)	35th District
Rep. Bill Day	(D)	3rd District
Rep. Charles R. Wolfe	(R)	4th District
Rep. Mike Padden	(R)	4th District
Rep. Duane Sommers	(R)	6th District
Rep. Steve Fuhrman	(R)	7th District
Rep. Clyde Ballard	(R)	14th District
Rep. Glyn Chandler	(R)	13th District
Rep. Jeannette Wood	(R)	21st District
Rep. John Beck	(R)	21st District
Rep. James Hargrove	(D)	24th District
Rep. Jim Youngsman	(R)	40th District
Rep. Michael E. Patrick	(R)	47th District

Wisconsin

Sen. Alan J. Lasee	(R)	1st District
Sen. John R. Plewa	(D)	7th District
Sen. Lloyd H. Kincaid	(D)	12th District
Sen. Timothy Weeden	(R)	15th District
Sen. Richard Kreul	(R)	17th District
Sen. Carol A. Buettner	(R)	18th District
Sen. Donald K. Stitt	(R)	20th District
Sen. Marvin J. Roshell	(D)	23rd District
Sen. Walter J. Chilsen	(R)	29th District
Sen. Jerome VanSistine	(D)	30th District
Sen. Brian D. Rude	(R)	32nd District
Rep. Larry J. Swoboda	(D)	1st District
Rep. Dale J. Bolle	(D)	2nd District
Rep. Alvin R. Ott	(R)	3rd District
Rep. Richard Grobschmidt	(D)	21st District
Rep. Thomas A. Hauke	(D)	23rd District
Rep. Margaret Krusick	(D)	24th District

Rep. Vernon W. Holschbach	(D)	25th District
Rep. Wilfrid J. Turba	(R)	27th District
Rep. Thomas D. Ourada	(R)	35th District
Rep. Robert G. Goetsch	(R)	39th District
Rep. Robert T. Welch	(R)	41st District
Rep. Charles W. Coleman	(R)	43rd District
Rep. Wayne W. Wood	(D)	44th District
Rep. Dale W. Schultz	(R)	50th District
Rep. Joseph E. Tregoning	(R)	51st District
Rep. Judith Klusman	(R)	56th District
Rep. Steven Loucks	(R)	58th District
Rep. Michael A. Lehman	(R)	59th District
Rep. Susan B. Vergeront	(R)	60th District
Rep. Cloyd A. Porter	(R)	66th District
Rep. Leo Richard Hamilton	(D)	67th District
Rep. Heron A. VanGorden	(R)	69th District
Rep. Donald W. Hasenohrl	(D)	70th District
Rep. David J. Lepak	(R)	83rd District
Rep. Marc Duff	(R)	84th District
Rep. Robert J. Larson	(R)	87th District
Rep. John Gard	(R)	88th District
Rep. Cletus Vanderperren	(D)	89th District
Rep. Terry M. Musser	(R)	92nd District
Rep. John D. Medinger	(D)	95th District
Rep. DuWayne Johnsrud	(R)	96th District
Rep. Margaret A. Farrow	(R)	99th District

Wyoming

Sen. James Applegate	(D)	Laramie County
Sen. Elizabeth Byrd	(D)	Laramie County
Sen. Jim Geringer	(R)	Platte County
Sen. Winifred Hickey	(D)	Laramie County
Sen. Allan Howard	(R)	Laramie County
Sen. Kelly Mader	(R)	Campbell & Johnson Counties
Sen. James Norris	(D)	Laramie County
Sen. John Turner	(R)	Sublette-Teton County
Rep. Douglas Chamberlain	(R)	Goshen County
Rep. Rory Cross	(R)	Converse County
Rep. Richard Honaker	(D)	Sweetwater County

Rep. Bill McIlvain	(R)	Laramie County
Rep. Ron Micheli	(R)	Vinta County
Rep. Dorothy Perkins	(R)	Natrona County
Rep. Mary Kay Schwope	(D)	Laramie County
Rep. William Tibbs	(R)	Congress County
Rep. Clyde Wolfley	(R)	Lincoln County
Rep. Melvin L. ZumBrunnen	(R)	Niobrara County

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

38

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

In The

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER;
STATE OF MISSOURI,

Appellant,

vs.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES; PLANNED PARENTHOOD OF GREATER KANSAS CITY; HOWARD I. SCHWARTZ, M.D.; ROBERT L. BLAKE, M.D.; CARL C. PEARMAN, M.D.; CARROLL METZGER, R.N.C.; MARY L. PEMBERTON, B.S.W.,

Appellees.

On Appeal From The United States Court Of Appeals, Eighth Circuit

BRIEF AMICUS CURIAE OF AMERICAN FAMILY ASSOCIATION, INC. IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

PEGGY M. COLEMAN
P.O. Drawer 2440
107 Parkgate Drive
Tupelo, Mississippi 38803
(601) 844-5036

Counsel of Record
For Amicus Curiae

25 pp

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES	ii
INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE	1
SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT	4
LAW AND ARGUMENT
I. THE MISSOURI LEGISLATIVE FINDINGS IN THE PREAMBLE STATING THAT "THE LIFE OF EACH HUMAN BEING BEGINS AT CONCEPTION" AND THAT "UNBORN CHILDREN HAVE PROTECTABLE INTERESTS IN LIFE, HEALTH, AND WELL BEING" IS FACIALLY CONSTITUTIONAL	6
II. THE TRIMESTER APPROACH SET FORTH IN ROE V WADE, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), SHOULD BE SET ASIDE IN FAVOR OF A RATIONAL BASIS APPROACH . . .	12
CONCLUSION	20
CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE	22

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

	Page
Bowers v Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986)	14
Gates v Siebert, 157 No. 254, 57 S.W. 1065 (1900)	6, 7
Harris v McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980)	10
Maher v Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977)	9
Roe v Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973)	5, 7, 8, 12, 13, 15
Thornburgh v American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986)	17, 18
Mo. Rev. Stat. §474.050 (1988) . .	6
Mo. Rev. Stat. §474.240 (1988) . .	7

INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE

Consent

American Family Association, Inc. (AFA), has received consent of the parties to the filing of this Brief Amicus Curiae. Consent of Appellee, Planned Parenthood Federation of America, Inc., was received from its attorney Mr. Roger K. Evans, Esq., and of Appellant, Attorney General, William L. Webster, from his attorneys Mr. Michael L. Boicourt, Esq. and Mr. Jerry L. Short, Esq.

American Family Association's Interest

The American Family Association, Inc., is a non-profit organization incorporated in 1977 under its original name of National Federation for Decency, Inc. (NFD). AFA continues to operate as a leader of citizen and church participation to promote traditional American values and apply the Biblical ethic in society. As Amicus, American Family Association, Inc., has members in all 50 states; over 480 chapters of local citizens who are active in offering individuals alternatives to abortions; and over 360,000 subscribers to its monthly newsletter, AFA Journal. Amicus also provides a counseling and referral services to pregnant women who seek alternatives to abortion.

The ability of a state to protect the welfare of all its citizens, including the unborn, is vital to the efforts of the American Family Association membership. American Family Association, Inc., seeks to promote a healthful family environment for all Americans and it recognizes the need to afford the unborn such an opportunity. The position of the American Family Association, Inc., will support the interest of the State of Missouri to protect the lives of the unborn and to use tax revenues in a manner which will support the interests of citizens within the state.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

I. THE MISSOURI LEGISLATIVE FINDINGS IN THE PREAMBLE STATING THAT "THE LIFE OF EACH HUMAN BEING BEGINS AT CONCEPTION" AND THAT "UNBORN CHILDREN HAVE PROTECTABLE INTERESTS IN LIFE, HEALTH, AND WELL BEING" IS FACIALLY CONSTITUTIONAL

The findings made by the Missouri legislature to support the abortion statute now before this Court are consistent with the State's position in recognizing the rights of the unborn under other statutes. Specifically, the State has consistently recognized the rights of an unborn child in testamentary and common law inheritance actions.

In this preamble to the abortion statute, the Missouri legislature was merely articulating a standard that had previously been in force, but unspoken, in other legal situations.

II. THE TRIMESTER APPROACH SET FORTH IN ROE V WADE, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), SHOULD BE SET ASIDE IN FAVOR OF A RATIONAL BASIS APPROACH

The decision in Roe v Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), continues to stand as an aberration in the application of legal reasoning. The Court needlessly intruded upon a state's ability to protect its citizens. In doing so, the Court created new, previously unfounded rights, to reach a seemingly unprecedented result.

LAW AND ARGUMENT

I. THE MISSOURI LEGISLATIVE FINDINGS IN THE PREAMBLE STATING THAT "THE LIFE OF EACH HUMAN BEING BEGINS AT CONCEPTION" AND THAT "UNBORN CHILDREN HAVE PROTECTABLE INTERESTS IN LIFE, HEALTH, AND WELL BEING" IS FACIALLY CONSTITUTIONAL.

A. The Missouri Legislature Has Previously Recognized Legal Rights For Unborn Children

The recognition of legal rights for unborn children is not new to the Missouri statutory scheme. This concept is well rooted in the Missouri laws of testate succession. Specifically, §474.050 provides, in part, "All posthumous children, or descendants, of the intestate shall inherit in like manner, as if born in the lifetime of the intestate;. . . ." In Gates v Seibert, 157 Mo. 254, 57 S.W. 1065 (1900), the Missouri Supreme Court held that a child born to a widow within ten months of the decedent-father's death is entitled to inherit posthumously. In addition, §474.240 provides, in part, "If a testator fails to provide in his will for any of his children born or adopted after the execution of his will, the omitted child receives a share in the estate equal in value to that which he would have received if the testator had died intestate . . . ." Clearly, the State of Missouri has recognized certain potential property rights of the unborn child from the moment of conception. Additionally, the Court in Roe, although disclaiming any particular legal significance, recognized the historical legal rights of unborn children when it stated, "Similarly, unborn children have been recognized as acquiring rights or interests by way of inheritance or other devolution of property, and have been represented by guardians ad litem." 410 U.S. at 162.

The recognition by the legislature of basic interests of an unborn child is merely a recitation of long held statutory and common law doctrine. This statute confers to an unborn child no rights that he had not previously had. The Missouri statutory scheme recognizes the unborn child's potential property rights and by implication the liberty and life interests necessary to the enjoyment of such property rights.

B. The State Has a Legitimate Interest in Favoring Childbirth Over Abortion

The State of Missouri has stated, by means of a legislative preamble, that it recognizes the value of life at conception implicitly in favor of abortion. In recognizing a state's right to make such value judgments, this Court in Maher v Roe, 432 U.S. 464, 473-74 (1977), stated that "Roe did not declare an unqualified 'constitutional right to an abortion', as the District Court seemed to think. Rather, the right protects the woman from unduly burdensome interference with her freedom to decide whether to terminate her pregnancy. It implies no limitation on the authority of a State to make a value judgment favoring childbirth over abortion, and to implement that judgment by the allocation of public funds."

Additionally, this Court has recognized the federal government's rational interest in the protection of unborn children. In Harris v McRae, 448 U.S. 297, 325 (1980), the Court stated that "[i]t follows that the Hyde Amendment, by encouraging childbirth except in the most urgent circumstances is rationally related to the legitimate governmental objective of protecting potential life. * * *. Nor is it irrational that Congress has authorized federal reimbursement for medically necessary services generally, but not for certain medically necessary abortions. Abortion is inherently different from other medical procedures, because no other procedure involves the purposeful termination of potential life."

The recognition by this Court of the authority of states to place a greater value on the protection of potential life supports the decision by the State of Missouri to make such legislative findings. Consequently, these findings are merely the expression of a legitimate interest on the part of the State in protecting life.

II. THE TRIMESTER APPROACH SET FORTH IN ROE V WADE, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), SHOULD BE SET ASIDE IN FAVOR OF A RATIONAL BASIS APPROACH

A. The Decision in Roe v Wade, Represents an Untenable Legal and Scientific Position With Respect To Abortion

The Court's decision in Roe v Wade, represents a quantum leap in the expansion of individual rights under the Fourteenth Amendment. In one fell swoop and without precedent, the Court stated that, "[t]his right of privacy, whether it be founded in the Fourteenth Amendment's concept of personal liberty and restrictions upon state action, as we feel it is, or, as the District Court determined, in the Ninth Amendment's reservation of rights to the people, is broad enough to encompass a woman's decision whether or not to terminate her pregnancy." 410 U.S. at 153.

The foundation for this conclusion is the Court's recitation of cases that stand for the proposition that "only personal rights that can be deemed 'fundamental' or 'implicit in the concept of ordered liberty', . . . are included in this guarantee of personal privacy." 410 U.S. at 152. Clearly, a woman's ability to procure an abortion is not "fundamental" nor is it "implicit in the concept of ordered liberty." In the case now before this Court, the Appellees are a group of medical professionals and abortion facility operators. The procedure contemplated and carried out by these individuals and facilities is by no stretch of the imagination "private." The abortions take place in a facility open to the public and often financed by public monies, as was the case in Missouri.

The litany of privacy cases recited by the Roe Court each involved actions that were confined to the privacy of an individual's home. In a recent decision, however, this Court made clear that not all matters relating to sexual intercourse or even intimate relationships taking place within the home were constitutionally protected "private" actions. In Bowers v Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186, 191 (1986). the Court stated, "any claim that these cases nevertheless stand for the proposition that any kind of private sexual conduct between consenting adults is constitutionally insulated from state proscription is unsupportable." Clearly, the right to privacy is limited even when it involves the most intimate actions.

In circumstances that involve a commercial, often publicly financed, transaction any semblance of privacy evaporates. The actions of the pregnant woman seeking an abortion are taken from the home into the marketplace.

The identification of abortion as "fundamental" was also questioned by Mr. Justice Rehnquist in dissent in Roe, when he stated, "[t]he fact that a majority of the States reflecting, after all, the majority sentiment in those States, have had restrictions on abortions for at least a century is a strong indication, it seems to me, that the asserted right to an abortion is not 'so rooted in the traditions and conscience of our people as to be ranked as fundamental'." 410 U.S. at 174. Clearly, abortion is a "right" created only by the Roe Court and unfounded on any legal or scientific evidence.

B. The Trimester Approach is Not Based Upon Credible Medical Evidence

The trimester approach developed by the Roe Court relies upon an arbitrary scale based upon the woman's fictitious right to privacy in obtaining an abortion. The trimester approach developed by the Court is less a recognition of medical discernment as to the quantitative identification of human life as it is a qualitative valuation of certain human beings. In the most simple terms, the Roe Court identified that particular human beings, selected because of their mothers' ability to quickly procure an abortion, are less valuable than those whose mothers are less informed or less decisive.

If all humans are, in fact, "created equal," then each has equal value from the point of creation and does not become more or less valuable depending upon his or her identification at a particular point in the gestation period. The Missouri legislature should be free to recognize the value of each of the individuals created in Missouri. Consequently, the Roe notion of viability is misguided. In Thornburgh v American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986), Justice White, in dissent, stated, "[t]he State's interest is in the fetus as an entity in itself, and the character of this entity does not change at the point of viability under conventional medical wisdom. Accordingly, the State's interest, if compelling after viability, is equally compelling before viability." 476 U.S. at 795.

Roe prevents a state, such as Missouri, from recognizing medical information supporting the position that life begins at conception and enacting legislation to preserve that life. As Mr. Justice White stated in Thornburgh, "Abortion is a hotly contested moral and political issue. Such issues, in our society, are to be resolved by will of the people, either as expressed through legislation or through the general principles they have already incorporated into the Constitution they have adopted. Roe v Wade implies that the people have already resolved the debate by weaving into the Constitution the values and principles that answer the issue. As I have argued, I believe it is clear that the people have never--not in 1787, 1791, 1868, or at any time since--done any such thing. I would return the issue to the people by overruling Roe v Wade." 476 U.S. at 797.

Mr. Justice White was precisely correct in this analysis and Missouri has attempted to do just that. The decision in Roe, resulted in the usurpation of legislative authority in a majority of Statehouses. At best, Roe is based on tenuous legal and medical grounds. As technology advances, the sliding scale of "viability" is rendered meaningless.

CONCLUSION

The Court has before it a clear opportunity to recognize a state's ability to protect all human life. Missouri seeks to protect the life of all of the individuals within its state, even the unborn. There is no constitutional impediment to this legitimate exercise of state power.

In addition, this Court has the opportunity to articulate a discernible solution to the legal morass surrounding the abortion issue created in Roe. In reversing Roe, this Court will return to the states the authority they rightfully hold to enact legislation based upon the will of its citizenry.

For these reasons, in addition to those urged by Appellant herein, the decision below should be corrected and reversed.

Respectfully submitted,
American Family
Association, Inc.

Peggy M. Coleman

Peggy M. Coleman
Legal Counsel
Attorney for Amicus

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I hereby certify that three copies of the foregoing Brief Amicus Curiae of American Family Association, Inc., have been mailed this twenty-third day of February, 1989, to the following counsel of record:

Mr. Michael L. Boicourt
Mr. Jerry L. Short
Assistant Attorneys General
P.O. Box 899
Jefferson City, Missouri 65102
(314) 751-3321

Mr. Roger K. Evans
Planned Parenthood Federation of America
810 Seventh Avenue
New York, New York 10019
(212) 541-7800

All parties required to be served have been served.

Peggy M. Coleman
Attorney for Amicus Curiae

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

No. 88-605

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

---

BRIEF AMICI CURIAE OF FOCUS ON THE FAMILY, AND FAMILY RESEARCH COUNCIL OF AMERICA, IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

H. ROBERT SHOWERS
Counsel of Record
RICHARD M. CAMPANELLI
GAMMON & GRANGE
1925 K Street, N.W.
Suite 300
Washington, D.C. 20006
(202) 862-2000
Attorneys for Amici Curiae

WILSON - EPES PRINTING CO., INC. - 789-0096 - WASHINGTON, D.C. 20001

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES	iii
SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT	1
ARGUMENT	2
I. MISSOURI'S LEGISLATIVE FINDINGS THAT LIFE BEGINS AT CONCEPTION AND UNBORN CHILDREN HAVE PROTECTABLE INTERESTS IN LIFE, HEALTH AND WELL-BEING ARE A CONSTITUTIONALLY LEGITIMATE EXERCISE OF STATE AUTHORITY	2
II. MISSOURI IS NOT CONSTITUTIONALLY PROHIBITED FROM REQUIRING PHYSICIANS TO EVALUATE WHETHER A FETUS IS VIABLE, OR FROM REQUIRING PHYSICIANS TO MAKE SPECIFIC MEDICAL FINDINGS TO DETERMINE VIABILITY, SINCE THESE ACTIVITIES REASONABLY IMPLEMENT MISSOURI'S CONSTITUTIONAL INTERESTS IN PROTECTING VIABLE UNBORN CHILDREN	5
III. SOUND CONSTITUTIONAL PRINCIPLES, A GROWING BODY OF SCIENTIFIC INFORMATION ABOUT ABORTION'S EFFECTS, AND INCREASINGLY ARBITRARY APPLICATION OF THE TRIMESTER FRAMEWORK REQUIRE THAT ROE v. WADE BE RECONSIDERED AND THAT STATE LEGISLATURES BE PERMITTED TO PROTECT THE PUBLIC HEALTH OF ALL THEIR CITIZENS	9
A. The Roe trimester framework is based on an arbitrary and limited review of outdated scientific information, not constitutional principles, and is unrelated to the constitutional interests Roe purported to balance	9

TABLE OF CONTENTS—Continued

	Page
B. A Substantial Body Of Scientific Data Exists That Concludes That Abortion Is Associated With Wide-Ranging Detrimental Effects On Women And Their Families, Effects That Are Not Reflected In The Mortality Rates Relied Upon In Roe v. Wade	13
1. Physical Impact on Women Having Abortions	14
2. Adverse Psychological Effects of Induced Abortion	18
3. Adverse Effects of Abortion on the Family	24
C. Roe v. Wade Has Resulted In Arbitrariness and Disarray In Federal Law, Embarked This Court On A Course Of Inappropriate Legislative Oversight, And Denied Citizens The Ability To Decide Controversial Issues In The Democratic Process, And Should Be Overturned	28
CONCLUSION	30
APPENDIX	1a
Appendix A: Interest of the Amici Curiae	1a
Appendix B: Tables and Bibliography of Scientific Studies	2a
Appendix C: Abortion in the United States	25a
Appendix D: Index of Lodging Filed by Amici Curiae	26a

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases:	Page
Beal v. Doe, 432 U.S. 438 (1977)	5, 10
Bergstresser v. Mitchell, 448 F. Supp. 10, aff'd, 577 F.2d 22 (8th Cir. 1977)	3
City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416 (1983)	11, 12, 29
Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979)	6, 7, 12
Connecticut v. Menillo, 423 U.S. 9 (1975)	11
Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973)	12
H.L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398 (1981)	12, 13, 28
Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977)	4, 29
Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway Company v. May, 194 U.S. 267 (1904)	29
Planned Parenthood Ass'n of Mo. v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476 (1983)	7, 8
Planned Parenthood of Central Mo. v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976)	8, 10
Reproductive Health Service v. Webster, 662 F. Supp. 407 (D.C. Mo. 1987), aff'd, 851 F.2d 1071 (8th Cir. 1988)	4
Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973)	passim
Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986)	5, 28, 30
Williamson v. Lee Optical, 348 U.S. 483 (1955)	29
Other Authorities:
Letter from Surgeon General Koop to President Reagan (January 9, 1989)	13
S. Rep. No. 98-149, 98th Con. 1st Sess. 44 (1983)	24
W. Prosser, LAW OF TORTS (1971)	3
Wardle, Rethinking Roe v. Wade, 1985 B.Y.U.L. Rev. 231	3
Books and Scientific Materials:
Ashton, The Psychosocial Outcome of Induced Abortion, 87 BR. J. OF OBSTETRICS AND GYNECOLOGY 1115 (1980)	20
Atrash, Ectopic Pregnancy in the United States, 1970-1983, 35 MORBIDITY AND MORALITY WEEKLY REPORT 225 (1986)	17

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

	Page
Barber, Ectopic Pregnancy: A Diagnostic Challenge, 9 THE FEMALE PATIENT 10 (1984)	16
Barron, Sexual Activity in Girls Under 16 Years of Age, 93 BR. J. OF OBSTETRICS AND GYNECOLOGY 787 (1986)	14
Burkman, Culture and Treatment—Results in Endometritis Following Elective Abortion, 128 AM. J. OF OBSTETRICS AND GYNECOLOGY 556 (1977)	15
Cavenar, Maltbie and Sullivan, Psychiatric Sequelae of Therapeutic Abortion, 39 N.C. MEDICAL J. 101 (1978)	27
Conger, Cluster of Uterine Perforations Related to Suction Curettage, 40 OBSTETRICS AND GYNECOLOGY 551 (1972)	15
Crell and Rabon, The Effects of Sibling Death on Surviving Child, A Family Perspective, 18 FAMILY PROCESS 471 (1979)	26
Ewing and Rouse, Therapeutic Abortions and a Prior Psychiatric History, 130 AM. J. OF PSYCHIATRY 37 (1973)	20
K. Franco, Dysphoric Reactions in Women After Abortion (1984) (unpublished paper, Medical College of Ohio)	21
Genital Tract Infection, 20 OBSTET. AND GYN. NEWS 42 (1985)	15
Gerrard, Sex Guilt in Abortion Patients, 45 J. OF CONSULTING AND CLINICAL PSYCHOLOGY 708 (1977)	24
D. GOLD, THE ABORTION CHOICE: PSYCHOLOGICAL DETERMINANTS AND CONSEQUENCES (1984)	20
Gould, Postabortion Depressive Reactions in College Women, 28 J. OF AM. COLLEGE HEALTH ASSOC. 316 (1980)	21
Greenglass, Therapeutic Abortion and Psychiatric Disturbance in Canadian Women, 21 CANADIAN PSYCHIATRIC ASSOC. J. 45 (1976)	21

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

	Page
Handy, Psychological and Social Aspects of Induced Abortion, 22 BR. J. OF CLINICAL PSYCHOLOGY 29 (1982)	20
Harlap and Davies, Late Sequelae of Induced Abortion: Complications and Outcome of Pregnancy and Labor, 102 AM. J. OF EPIDEMIOLOGY 217 (1975)	17
Hittner, Feelings of well-being before and after abortion, 9 AM. MENTAL HEALTH COUNSELOR'S ASSOC. J. 98 (1987)	20
Houge, Cates and Tietze, Impact of Vacuum Aspiration Abortion on Future Childbearing: A Review, 15 FAM. PLANNING PERSPECTIVE 119 (1983)	14
I. Kent, Emotional Sequelae of Therapeutic Abortion, presented at 27th Annual Meeting of the Canadian Psychiatric Association, Saskatoon (September 1977)	19, 22
Kumar and Robson, Previous Induced Abortion and Ante-Natal Depression in Primiparae: Preliminary Report of a Survey of Mental Health in Pregnancy, 8 PSYCHOLOGICAL MEDICINE 711 (1978)	19-20
Leong, Duby and Kinch, Fetal Maternal Transfusion Following Early Abortion, 54 OBSTETRICS AND GYNECOLOGY 424 (1979)	17
Levin, Ectopic Pregnancy and Prior Induced Abortion, 72 AM. J. OF PUBLIC HEALTH 253 (1982)	17
Levin, Schoenbaum, Monson, Stubblefield and Ryan, Association of Induced Abortion with Subsequent Pregnancy Loss, 243 J. OF A.M.A. 2495 (1980)	14
Lyons, Larson, Huckeba, Rogers and Mueller, Research on the Psychosocial Impact of Abortion: A Systematic Review of the Literature 1966-1985, in VALUES AND PUBLIC POLICY 77 (1988)	13
Mattinson, The Effects of Abortion on a Marriage. Abortion: Medical Progress and Social Implications, 115 CIBA FOUND. SYMP. 165 (1985)	25

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

McCoy, Emotional Reaction of Women to Sterilization and Therapeutic Abortion, 75 J. OF OBSTET. & GYN. OF THE BR. COM. 1054 (1968).. 26

Mester, Induced Abortion in Psychotherapy, 30 PSYCHOTHERAPY AND PSYCHOSOMATICS 98 (1978) 20, 22

E. Milling, The Men Who Wait, WOMEN'S LIFE, Apr. 1975 at 48 24

E. Moore-Caver, The International Inventory on Information on Induced Abortion, International Institute for the Study of Human Reproduction (1974) 19

Ney, A Consideration of Abortion Survivors, 13 CHILD PSYCHIATRY AND HUMAN DEV. 168 (1983) 26, 27

Ney, Relationship Between Abortion and Child Abuse, 24 CAN. J. OF PSYCHIATRY 610 (1979) 26, 27

P. Ney, Mental Health and Abortion (March 1988) (unpublished paper) 19, 20, 26, 27

Osofsky and Osofsky, The Psychological Reaction of Patients to Legalized Abortions, 42 AM. J. OF ORTHOPSYCHIATRY 48 (1972) 19

Pike, Oral Contraceptive Use and Early Abortion as Risk Factors for Breast Cancer in Young Women, 43 BR. J. OF CANCER 72 (1981) 17

S. Plattner, Conceptual systems and sex role attitudes and beliefs and their effect on short-term abortion outcome (1979) (unpublished doctoral dissertation, Univ. of Colorado) 24

Ratten and Beischer, The Effect of Termination of Pregnancy on Maturity of Subsequent Pregancy, 1 MED. J. AUST. 479 (1979) 14

D. REARDON, WOMEN EXPLOITED: A NATION DECEIVED (1986) 23, 27

Roht, Fonner, Aoyama and Fonner, Increased Reporting of Menstrual Symptoms among Women Who Used Induced Abortion, 127 AM. J. OF OBSTETRICS AND GYNECOLOGY 356 (1977) 17

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

V. Rue, Abortion in Relationship Context: How Abortion Affects Males, ASSOC. FOR INTERDISCIPLINARY RESEARCH NEWSLETTER, Summer 1988 at 3 26

V. Rue, Pelvic Inflammatory Disease and the Role of Induced Abortion, ASSOC. FOR INTERDISCIPLINARY RESEARCH NEWSLETTER, Summer 1988 at 4 16

V. Rue, The Impact of Induced Abortion on Surviving Siblings: Case Studies, ASSOC. FOR INTERDISCIPLINARY NEWSLETTER, Fall 1988 at 2 ..... 26, 27

Schulz, Grimes and Cates, Measures to Prevent Cervical Injuries During Suction Curettage Abortion, LANCET, May 28, 1983 at 1182 17

Spaulding and Cavenar, Psychoses Following Therapeutic Abortion, 135 AM. J. OF PSYCHIATRY 364 (1978) 21

A. SPECKHARD, POST-ABORTION COUNSELING (1987) 22, 23

A. SPECKHARD, PSYCHO-SOCIAL ASPECTS OF STRESS FOLLOWING ABORTION (1987) 18, 19, 20, 24

Tietze and Lewis, Joint Program for the Study of Abortion, 3 STUD. FAMILY PLANNING 97 (1971) 15

Tishler, Adolescent Suicide Attempts Following Elective Abortion: A Special Case of Anniversary Reaction, 68 PEDIATRICS 670 (1981) 21

Trichopoulos, Induced Abortion and Secondary Infertility, 83 BR. J. OF OBSTETRICS AND GYNECOLOGY 645 (1976) 17-18

U.S. Dept. HHS, 15 MORBIDITY AND MORTALITY WEEKLY REPORT 33 (1984) 17

T. Wall, PSYCHOLOGICAL AFTER-EFFECTS OF ABORTION (1986) (Unpublished master's thesis, Wayne State University) 21

Washington, The Economic Cost of Pelvic Inflammatory Disease, 255 J. of A.M.A. 1735 (1986).. 16

W.H.O. Task Force, Gestation, Birth Weight and Spontaneous Abortion in Pregnancy after Induced Abortion, LANCET, Jan. 20, 1979 at 142.... 14

INTEREST OF AMICI CURIAE *

The issues in this case directly affect the physical, psychological and emotional health of unborn children, mothers, fathers and families in the United States. Amici Focus on the Family and Family Research Council of America, who work to preserve and protect the family, have particular knowledge about the impact of abortion that will be helpful to the Court in this case.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

The Missouri General Assembly passed legislation to advance its interests in protecting the health and well-being of unborn children. One provision, applying generally to the laws of the state, included findings that human life begins at conception, and that unborn children have protectable interests in life, health and well-being. Another, applying when an abortion is considered, requires that physicians undertake tests that are necessary to make three specific findings about the development of the unborn child.

Both provisions legitimately implement the State's authority to protect its citizens. The former protects unborn children in areas of law that Roe v. Wade was never intended to influence. The latter protects the State's interest in the health of viable unborn children. Both were challenged in the hope that federal courts would draw yet two more lines originating from the Roe trimesters.

The trimester framework constitutionalized in Roe was based on the Court's 1973 belief that maternal mortality rates for abortion were better than those for childbirth. Safety of the fetus was not considered, since the Court decided not to recognize any state interest in protecting the life of unborn children until after viability. The scientific assumptions upon which the trimester framework was premised were fatally narrow, and do not reflect subsequent advances in medical science. Particularly, Roe's reliance on mortality rate comparisons is unjustifiable, since mortality rates do not reflect the array of serious psychological, physical, and familial harm caused by abortion. A significant body of scientific evidence, and the personal experiences of women who have suffered severe post-abortion trauma, show the extent of this harm.

---

* A description of the Amici appears at Appendix 1a. This brief is submitted with the written consent of both parties, filed with the Clerk of this Court.

Roe v. Wade embarked this Court on a road of legislative line drawing, scientific and medical review, and judicial rule-making unmoored to constitutional principle. This Court has long recognized that the state legislatures are constitutionally competent and better situated to protect the health and safety of all their citizens. Amici respectfully urge this Court to abandon the outmoded, unscientific and constitutionally unworkable trimester framework, or any other framework based on evolving scientific evidence. When there is a rational basis for a State abortion regulation, the States should be permitted to effectuate their interests in protecting the life and health of the unborn, their mothers, and their famiiles.

ARGUMENT

I. MISSOURI'S LEGISLATIVE FINDINGS THAT LIFE BEGINS AT CONCEPTION AND THAT UNBORN CHILDREN HAVE PROTECTABLE INTERESTS IN LIFE, HEALTH AND WELL-BEING ARE A CONSTITUTIONALLY LEGITIMATE EXERCISE OF STATE AUTHORITY.

The laws of the fifty states recognize that unborn children are deserving of protection throughout the spectrum of statutory and decisional law. While this Court has limited the implementation of the state interests in protecting unborn children in the abortion context, it only did so because Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), and its progeny found a countervailing privacy right in a woman's choice of whether to have an abortion. This Court has not precluded the state legislatures from finding that life begins at conception and that unborn children have protectable interests where, as here, no constitutional interest is impinged.

The Missouri General Assembly made just such a finding in passing RSMo. 1.205.1 (1986). Rights of unborn children have long been recognized in tort, criminal, inheritance, trusts, insurance, welfare, civil rights, and public health law, and laws protecting children from child abuse. See Wardle, Rethinking Roe v. Wade, 1985 B.Y.U.L.Rev. 231, 252-254. All fifty states recognize tort actions for injury to the unborn. See generally W. Prosser, Law of Torts 335-338 (1971). Causes of actions have been recognized for negligence occurring prior to conception as well as for prenatal personal injuries after conception. See e.g., Bergstresser v. Mitchell, 448 F. Supp. 10, aff'd, 577 F.2d 22 (8th Cir. 1977). It is against this backdrop of pervasive state activity that this Court's abortion decisions must be considered.

In Roe, the Court posed some of the medical, philosophical and legal questions surrounding the legal status of unborn children, but tried not to "resolve the difficult question of when life begins." 410 U.S. at 159.

Of course, Roe did effectively answer the question of when, in the abortion context, a protectable interest in unborn life begins. It did so, "in light of present medical knowledge," id., at 163, by balancing the newly-recognized right to privacy with the State's compelling interests in the health and well-being of both the mother and unborn child. The Court found that, "[w]ith respect to the State's important and legitimate interest in potential life, the 'compelling point' is at viability." Id. at 162-163. Prior to viability, the unborn child receives no protection when a woman and her doctor agree that an abortion will be performed.

In 1986 the Missouri General Assembly, having the benefit of the thirteen years of profound advances in medical knowledge since Roe was passed, made a determination about when life begins, and opted to recognize that unborn children have protectable interests in life, health and well-being. Although these findings did not alter the State's regulation of the performance of abortions, the court of appeals held that these provisions were unconstitutional. That court reasoned that "the statute is simply an impermissible state adoption of a theory of when life begins to justify its abortion regulations", and that these findings could not be considered "abortion-neutral" as the State contends, since they were "contained in a bill that relates almost exclusively to abortion." Reproductive Health Service v. Webster, 851 F.2d 1071, 1076 (8th Cir. 1988).

The holding of the court below was erroneous in a number of ways. First, the court did not show that the right to seek an abortion would be unduly burdened, or even burdened at all, by operation of the General Assembly's findings, although this Court has held that such a showing must be made before a state statute is held unconstitutional in the abortion context. Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464, 473 (1977).

Indeed, no constitutional interest is impinged. Although the provisions in question were passed along with other provisions relating to abortion, see RSMo. 188.010, 188.029, 188.200, 188.205, 188.210, 188.215, 188.220, Jurisdictional Statement App. at A88-A91, none of these other provisions is affected by 1.205.1 (1) and (2). There are two reasons for this: (1) The abortion-related provisions deal with the viability determination and restrictions on state assistance for abortions, and thus have nothing to do with the question of when life begins; and (2) Sections 1.205.2 and 188.010 specifically recognize that the reach of all of these provisions are limited by the Constitution and the decisions of this Court.

Second, these findings clarify and extend protections for unborn children in areas of the law that Roe and its progeny never purported to affect, such as tort, criminal and property law. Roe noted that state law offers protection to the unborn in areas such as tort and probate, 410 U.S. at 161-162, but never suggested that those areas of the law would have to be conformed to its rulings on abortion. Neither do any other decisions of this Court suggest that in arriving at the balance it struck in Roe, the Court intended to supercede the long-established right of the states to protect the health and well-being of unborn children in other areas of the law.

Finally, Missouri code sections 1.205.1(1) and (2) should be upheld as rational findings of the State legislature regarding the status of unborn children: [1]

> "[O]ne must recognize first, that the fetus . . . bears in its cells all the genetic information that characterizes a member of the species homo sapiens . . . and second, that there is no nonarbitrary line separating a fetus from a child. . . ."

Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747, 792 (1986) (White, J., dissenting).

II. MISSOURI IS NOT CONSTITUTIONALLY PROHIBITED FROM REQUIRING PHYSICIANS TO EVALUATE WHETHER A FETUS IS VIABLE, OR FROM REQUIRING PHYSICIANS TO MAKE SPECIFIC MEDICAL FINDINGS TO DETERMINE VIABILITY, SINCE THESE ACTIVITIES REASONABLY IMPLEMENT MISSOURI'S CONSTITUTIONAL INTERESTS IN PROTECTING VIABLE UNBORN CHILDREN.

This Court's abortion decisions have recognized the states' "unquestionably strong and legitimate interest in encouraging normal childbirth", and in "protecting the potentiality of human life", interests that exist "throughout the course of a woman's pregnancy". Beal v. Doe, 432 U.S. 438, 445-446 (1977) (citing Roe, 410 U.S. at 162). Roe and its progeny have thus far limited the effectuation of that right until the fetus is viable, the point after which Roe elected to recognize a "compelling" state interest in the right of the unborn child. Roe, id., at 163.[2]

---

[1] A videotape account of various stages of fetal development, and personal experiences of women who have had abortions, is provided in "Eclipse of Reason", filed with the lodging of Amici Curiae.

[2] The Court's election of viability as the compelling point to effectuate the states' interests in the unborn child is not challenged

The Missouri statute under consideration here is fully consistent with this Court's decisions concerning viability. Avoiding a fixed definition of viability, it requires a physician to determine viability before performing an abortion on a woman he has reason to believe is twenty or more weeks pregnant, and requires that:

> In making this determination of viability, the physician shall perform or cause to be performed such medical examinations and tests as are necessary to make a finding of the gestational age, weight, and lung maturity of the unborn child. . . .

RSMo. 188.029 (1986).

The court of appeals, 851 F.2d at 1075, held that Missouri could not constitutionally require physicians to perform tests necessary to make findings of gestational age, weight, and lung maturity. The court relied on Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979), which stated:

> "[N]either the legislature nor the courts may proclaim one of the elements entering into the ascertainment of viability—be it weeks of gestation or fetal weight or any other single factor—as the determinant of when the State has a compelling interest in the life or health of the fetus". Id., at 388-389.

Colautti does not prohibit Missouri from requiring physicians to perform tests that are necessary to make the three listed findings. In Colautti, the Court found a Pennsylvania statute to be unconstitutionally vague, and therefore devoid of the scienter requirement necessary for imposing a criminal penalty. 439 U.S. at 390. In the civil case now before the Court, however, the district court upheld Mo. 188.029 against appellees' challenge that it was unconstitutionally vague. 662 F. Supp. 407, 422 (W.D. Mo. 1987).

---

here, since the Missouri statute at issue is permissible under Roe and its progeny. In the discussion supporting reversal of Roe, infra, the basis of the viability standard is briefly discussed. See footnote 2, infra at 13.

The Missouri statute does not forbid physicians from reviewing these or any other factors, or from making other findings, to assess viability. It makes no attempt to proclaim or fix the elements of viability. The statute only requires physicians to perform tests that are necessary to make three specific findings, to ensure at least that something more than a conjectural attestation of viability is made. Hence, the statute is fully consistent with Colautti, and should be upheld by the Court.

Further, given the context in which abortions are provided in the United States, it is rational for the Missouri legislature to require specific findings to give effect to its compelling interest in protecting the life of viable unborn children. Abortion is big business. Abortions are conducted in the United States under conditions that may promote disinterest or even hostility toward an objective viability assessment. In 1982, abortions cost $484 million; in 1983, abortions of 1.068 million first trimester pregnancies averaged $200 per procedure. See Appendix B. The very individuals who must be relied upon by the State to make the viability determination may own or be paid for services by abortion clinics, and hence their income is adversely affected any time they find that a fetus is viable. Even assuming the good faith of the person who will perform the abortion, the State would be justified in ensuring that unconscious bias does not influence the viability determination.

Unfortunately, as the Court is aware, objectivity on the part of persons making the viability determination and performing the abortion cannot always be assumed. In Planned Parenthood Association of Kansas City, Mo. v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476 (1983), the Court described the background of one abortion practitioner who served as a witness at trial in that case:

> He is a member of the National Abortion Federation, "an organization of abortion providers and people interested in the pro-choice movement." . . . His disinterest in protecting fetal life is evidenced by his > agreement "that the abortion patient has a right not only to be rid of the growth, called a fetus in her body, but also has a right to a dead fetus." He also agreed that he "[n]ever ha[s] any intention of trying to protect the fetus, if it can be saved," and finally that "as a general principle" "[t]here should not be a live fetus."

Id., at 483, 484 n.7.

While this physician's background may not be generalizable to all physicians who perform abortions, it is highly significant to the case that is before the Court today. This same witness testified for appellees in the instant case, and claimed to have performed 50,000 abortions since 1969, 60% of which were in the second trimester. Trial Transcript at 1-80, 1-81.

This Court is also already aware that the settings under which many abortions are performed in the United States may not be conducive to an objective finding of viability:

> The abortion itself takes five to seven minutes. . . . The physician has no prior contact with the minor, and on the days that abortions are being performed at the [clinic], the physician . . . may be performing abortions on many other adults and minors . . . . On busy days patients are scheduled in separate groups, consisting usually of five patients . . . . After the abortion [the physician] spends a brief period with the minor and others in the group in the recovery room . . . .

Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 91-92 (1976) (Stewart, J., concurring) (citations omitted). Such a setting is hardly conducive to a thorough, objective viability determination.

Given the financial stake and dominant business purpose of abortion centers, the bias that might reasonably be expected on the part of some of those performing abortions, and the settings under which abortions often occur, there is clearly a rational basis for Missouri to require minimal testing in making the viability determination.

Under these circumstances, it might be unreasonable for states not to require that some specific findings be made to ensure that the viability determination actually occurs.

III. SOUND CONSTITUTIONAL PRINCIPLES, A GROWING BODY OF SCIENTIFIC INFORMATION ABOUT ABORTION'S EFFECTS, AND INCREASINGLY ARBITRARY APPLICATION OF THE TRIMESTER FRAMEWORK REQUIRE THAT ROE v. WADE BE RECONSIDERED AND THAT STATE LEGISLATURES BE PERMITTED TO PROTECT THE PUBLIC HEALTH OF ALL THEIR CITIZENS.

Roe v. Wade decided that a woman's choice to abort in the first trimester could not be constrained by state abortion regulations. The Court premised this decision upon its 1973 understanding that mortality rates were more favorable for women aborting in the first trimester than for women whose pregnancies continue to term. This premise did not reflect the serious psychological, emotional and physical but non-fatal harm experienced by women who abort, and the harm suffered by their families. A significant body of scientific evidence calls into question the premise of Roe, and indicates that this Court should permit the states to legislate rational measures to protect women, unborn children, and their families.

A. The Roe Trimester Framework Is Based On An Arbitrary And Limited Review Of Outdated Scientific Information, Not Constitutional Principles, And Is Unrelated To The Constitutional Interests Roe Purported To Balance.

Roe v. Wade held that a woman has a right of privacy, founded in the Fourteenth Amendment, that is broad enough to encompass her decision whether to terminate her pregnancy, 410 U.S. at 153. That privacy right is not "absolute" or "unqualified." Id., at 154.

> The pregnant woman cannot be isolated in her privacy. She carries an embryo and, later, a fetus . . . . The situation therefore is inherently different from > marital intimacy, or bedroom possession of obscene material, or marriage, or procreation, or education, with which Eisenstadt and Griswold, Stanley, Loving, Skinner, and Pierce and Meyer were respectively concerned."

Id., at 159.

Roe and its progeny confirmed that this newly-recognized privacy right must also "be considered against important state interests in regulation", id., at 154, and that these state interests encompass an "important and legitimate interest in the health of the mother . . .", id. at 163, and the protection of "potential human life", id. at 159. The significant state interests in protecting potential life, and the states' "unquestionably strong and legitimate interest in encouraging normal childbirth", exist throughout the woman's pregnancy, Beal v. Doe, 432 U.S. 438, 446 (1977), just as they do where the state interests in protecting the mother's health is concerned. Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 80-81 (1976).

Rather than reviewing state abortion regulations to see if they were rationally related to a legitimate state purpose, the Court in Roe attempted to balance the new privacy right against the state interests in the health of the mother. To strike this balance, the Court focused only on its 1973 understanding of mortality rates:

> Mortality rates for women undergoing early abortions, where the procedure is legal, appear to be as low as or lower than the rates for normal childbirth. Consequently, any interest of the State in protecting the woman from an inherently dangerous procedure, except when it would be equally dangerous for her to forgo it, has largely disappeared.

Roe, 410 U.S. at 149 (emphasis added).

Convinced that the mortality rate comparison had provided a clear point in pregnancy before which no state could logically claim a compelling interest in the health of the mother, the Court held that the state interest in the health of the mother did not become "compelling" until approximately the end of the first trimester. Id. at 163. Prior to the second trimester, states are permitted only to retain "an interest in ensuring the validity of Roe's factual assumption that 'the first trimester abortion [is] as safe for the woman as normal childbirth at term' ". City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416, 430, n.12 (1983) (discussing the State's right to regulate conditions and qualifications in first trimester abortion decisions) (citing Connecticut v. Menillo, 423 U.S. 9, 11 (1975) (per curiam).

Roe's reliance on maternal mortality, to the exclusion of other effects on the pregnant woman, in fashioning the trimester approach is completely unjustifiable. First, in conjunction with the Court's focus on "viability", the trimester framework completely discounted any state interest in protecting the unborn child for all of the first and most of the second trimester.[3] Second, having found that the compelling state interest in maternal health only arises at the second trimester, it failed to give effect to any state interest in the first trimester:

> The fallacy inherent in the Roe framework is apparent: just because the State has a compelling interest

---

[3] When abortion occurs in the first, second or third trimester, amici believe two human beings are affected. For one, the pregnant woman, the Court has established a right of privacy, and has engaged in balancing complicated and often conflicting scientific evidence to protect her health. For the other, the unborn child, no right of privacy has been accorded, even though the outcome is, in the vast majority of cases, death. Although it recognized the state interest in protecting potential life, Roe foreclosed state implementation of this interest until late in the pregnancy. After providing a short review of the complex philosophical, medical, historical and legal questions posed on the issue of protectable life of unborn children, Roe arbitrarily fixed the "compelling" point for the state interest at viability. The only rationale Roe stated for this arbitrary decision was an assertion, without further explanation, that "State regulation protective of fetal life after viability has both logical and biological justification." Roe, 410 U.S. at 163.

> in ensuring maternal safety once an abortion may be more dangerous than childbirth, it simply does not follow that the State has no interest before that point that justifies state regulation to ensure that first-trimester abortions are performed as safely as possible.

Akron, 462 U.S. at 460 (O'Connor, J., dissenting) (emphasis in original).

Third, the reliance on maternal mortality rates alone is unjustifiable because these rates do not reflect severe but non-fatal effects of abortion that are well within the constitutional ambit of state regulation to protect the health of their citizens. As Roe, its progeny, and other well-settled opinions of the Court agree, there are significant and wide-ranging morbidity effects of abortion, which are not reflected in mortality statistics, and which must be taken into account in evaluating the effects of abortion: "[M]edical judgment may be exercised in the light of all factors—physical, emotional, psychological, familial, and the woman's age—relevant to the well-being of the patient", Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, 192 (1973). See also Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379, 394 (1979), H.L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398, 405-406 (1981). The Court's cognizance of the wide-ranging, complex effects of abortion that it deemed appropriate for consideration in the physician/client relationship reflects an understanding of the scientific evidence available at the time, and which has grown since Roe was decided. These "[h]ealth-related factors that may legitimately be considered by the State go well beyond what various medical organizations have to say about the physical safety of a particular procedure". Akron, 462 U.S. at 467 (O'Connor, J., dissenting) (emphasis in original). Yet this understanding was inexplicably ignored when Roe relied on mortality rates alone to establish the trimester framework.

B. A Substantial Body Of Scientific Data Exists That Concludes That Abortion Is Associated With Wide-Ranging Detrimental Effects On Women And Their Families, Effects That Are Not Reflected In The Morality Rates Relied Upon In Roe v. Wade.

The Roe focus on the relative maternal mortality rates in abortion and childbirth reflects only a narrow subset of the medical and health effects of abortion on the pregnant mother. Numerous studies by independent medical sources have concluded that abortion frequently results in significant, negative and often permanent physical, psychological, social and familial effects. The studies of abortion's effects often reach conflicting conclusions, and many suffer from methodological limitations.[4] However, these studies demonstrate that mortality rates alone do not reflect the scope of the negative health impact of abortion cognizable by the state. The Court need not find these studies conclusive to recognize the significant

---

[4] Surgeon General Koop's January 9, 1989 letter to President Reagan laments the difficulty inherent in documenting the adverse physical effects of abortion for two reasons: (1) approximately half of the total abortions are done in free-standing abortion clinics where records are not kept, and (2) 50 percent of the women who have an abortion deny having one when questioned.

Collection of post-abortion morbidity data can also be flawed because it is obtained on a voluntary basis from abortion providers, whose business and reputation would be adversely affected by negative data. As the Court has noted, "Abortion clinics, now readily available in most urban communities, [are] operated on a commercial basis . . .". H.L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 418, 420 n.8 (1981). Abortion providers often conduct little follow-up of women having abortions, and physicians, mental health care providers and emergency room personnel often are not told of prior abortion experiences. C.f. Lyons, Larson, Huckeba, Rogers and Mueller, Research on the Psychosocial Impact of Abortion: A Systematic Review of the Literature 1966-1985 in VALUES AND PUBLIC POLICY 77 (1988). The incidence and severity of negative physical effects documented to date may thus be seriously under-reported.

[5] See Appendix B, Table 2: Adverse Physical Effects of Induced Abortion, and corresponding bibliography.

disagreement that exists over the validity of the scientific premise of Roe.

1. Physical Impact on Women Having Abortions.

The following physical reactions have been associated with abortion: hemorrhaging, subsequent fetal malformations, cervical trauma, ectopic pregnancy, breast cancer, pelvic inflammatory disease, infertility, RH isoimmunization, subsequent miscarriage and death.[5]

a. Low Birth Weight, Pre-Term Deliveries and Spontaneous Abortion in Subsequent Pregnancies From Induced Abortion. A 1980 study conducted by the World Health Organization in nine cities worldwide indicates a significant increase in these three areas among women whose only previous pregnancy ended in abortion. W.H.O. Task Force, Gestation, Birth Weight and Spontaneous Abortion in Pregnancy After Induced Abortion, LANCET, Jan. 20, 1979 at 142. Therapeutic abortions performed in the first trimester have been linked to a significant increase in second trimester spontaneous abortions in the next pregnancy. Ratten and Beischer, The Effect of Termination of Pregnancy on Maturity of Subsequent Pregnancy, 1 MED. J. OF AUST. 479 (1979). Women whose first pregnancies were terminated were reportedly 3.4 times more likely to have a mid-trimester spontaneous abortion during their second pregnancy than women whose first pregnancy had resulted in a live birth. Houge, Cates and Tietze, Impact of Vacuum Aspiration Abortion on Future Childbearing: A Review, 15 FAM. PLANNING PERSPECTIVE 119 (1983). Women who have had two or more abortions reported a two- to threefold increased risk in miscarrying a subsequent wanted pregnancy. Levin, Schoenbaum, Monson, Stubblefield and Ryan, Association of Induced Abortion with Subsequent Pregnancy Loss, 243 J. OF A.M.A. 2495 (1980). A perspective study of teenagers also found a high rate of fetal loss in pregnancies that followed abortion. Barron, Sexual Activity in Girls Under 16 Years of Age, 93 BR. J. OF OBSTET. & GYN. 787 (1986).

b. Infections, Excessive Bleeding and Perforation of the Uterus From Induced Abortion. Although claims have been made about the relative safety of the abortion procedure, medical problems can still occur. A 1971 study found that among immediate complications of induced abortion were hemorrhages, laceration of the cervix and perforation of the uterus; the three combined were found in 1-2 percent after eight weeks gestation, and in 3.6 percent after 15 weeks or longer. Tietze and Lewis, Joint Program for the Study of Abortion, 3 STUDENT FAMILY PLANNING 97 (1971). A study of over 1500 women in 1972 also found that almost 10 percent (96.8 per 1,000 abortions) at 15 weeks gestation or more had perforation of the uterus occurring using suction curettage. Conger, Cluster of Uterine Perforations Related to Suction Curettage, 40 OBSTET. & GYN. 551 (1972).

In 1985 the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta, Georgia, estimated that 13,000 post-abortion women per year developed post abortal upper genital tract infection, which is associated with long-term morbidity, including, occasionally, infertility and ectopic pregnancy. Genital Tract Infection, 20 OBSTET. & GYN. NEWS 42 (1985) (quoting Kenneth Schulz, Center for Disease Control). In a 1977 Johns Hopkins Medical University study, 5.2 percent of first trimester induced abortion patients and up to 18.5 percent of second trimester patients suffered subsequent genital tract infections. "Occurrence of genital tract infection following elective abortion is a well-known complication." Burkman, Culture and Treatment Results in Endometritis Following Elective Abortion, 128 AM. J. OF OBSTET. & GYN. 556 (1977).

Infection from induced abortion in the uterus and fallopian tubes can have severe and permanent effects. A typical infection involving these organs is pelvic inflammatory disease (PID). PID, which is an inflammation of the female genital tract, starts in the cervix and may spread to other female organs and pelvic cavity, and is a major direct cause of permanent sterility, chronic abdominal pain and an increased risk of extra-uterine pregnancy. V. Rue, Pelvic Inflammatory Disease and the Role of Induced Abortion, ASSOC. FOR INTERDISCIPLINARY RESEARCH NEWSLETTER, Summer 1988 at 4. Induced abortion is responsible for an estimated 150,000 to 250,000 cases of the over 1 million PID cases occurring annually in the United States. Id., at 4. The total cost of PID and PID-associated ectopic pregnancy and infertility in the United States exceeded $2.6 billion in 1984 and will exceed $3.5 billion by 1990. Washington, Economic Cost of Pelvic Inflammatory Disease, 255 J. OF A.M.A. 1735 (1986).

Numerous personal accounts received by Amici Curiae and others from abortion victims lend support to the above findings.[6]

> "I had to go into the hospital four days after my second abortion for acute Pelvic Inflammatory Disease (PID), a painful infection in my fallopian tubes. The infection spread into my ovary, and seven days after the abortion there was no way to control the infection. One tube and ovary, about to rupture, had to be removed . . . In February, 1978, at 19 years of age, my doctor performed a complete hysterectomy, taking all reproductive organs and cervix." L-1.1.

c. Ectopic Pregnancies from Induced Abortions. "Moreover, the increased incidence of PID—especially from chlamydia—in induced abortion appear to play a leading role in the dramatic rise in ectopic pregnancies." Barber, Ectopic Pregnancy: A Diagnostic Challenge, 9 THE FEMALE PATIENT 10 (1984). In 1970, the incidence of ectopic or tubal pregnancy was 4.8 per thousand live births; by 1980 it was 14.5 per thousand births, a 300 percent increase in only a decade. U.S. Dept. HHS, 15 MORBIDITY AND MORTALITY WEEKLY REPORT 33 (1984). Though the death rate from ectopic pregnancies has fallen during this time span due to medical technological advances, it still accounts for over 10 percent of all maternal mortality. Atrash, Ectopic Pregnancy in the United States, 1970-1983, 35 MORBIDITY AND MORTALITY WEEKLY REPORT 225 (1986). A 1982 study found that the crude relative risk of ectopic pregnancies after one prior induced abortion is 1.6 and after two or more induced abortions is 4, which was significantly higher than the control group. Levin, Ectopic Pregnancies and Prior Induced Abortions, 72 AM. J. OF PUBLIC HEALTH 253 (1982).

[6] For the Court's convenience, the personal accounts from which excerpts have been taken, together with other accounts, are reproduced in a volume lodged with the Court. Letters or documents that appear in this volume are designated as "L-1" and "L-2". The letters and excerpts have been quoted and reproduced as sent, without corrections in punctuation, grammar or spelling.

d. Sterility and Other Physical Complications From Induced Abortion. Out of 752 mothers interviewed during a subsequent pregnancy, a study revealed an excess in malformations in birth and other pregnancy complications, such as bleeding, low birth weight, manual removal of placenta, and a two- to threefold increase in neonatal deaths. Harlap and Davies, Late Sequelae of Induced Abortions: Complications and Outcome of Pregnancy and Labor, 102 AM. J. OF EPIDEMIOLOGY 217 (1975).[7] "A 1976 study showed that the relative risk of secondary infertility among women with at least one induced abortion and with no spontaneous miscarriages was three to four times that among non-aborted women." Trichopoulos, Induced Abortion and Secondary Infertility, 83 BR. J. OF OBSTET. & GYN. 645 (1976).

[7] Other documented complications for induced abortion have been RH isoimmunization, breast cancer, cervical injuries, and a history of multiple menstrual problems. Leong, Duby and Kinch, Fetal Maternal Transfusion Following Early Abortion, 54 OBSTET. & GYN. 424 (1979); Pike, Oral Contraceptive Use and Early Abortion as Risk Factors for Breast Cancer in Young Women, 43 BR. J. OF CANCER 72 (1981); Schulz, Grimes and Cates, Measures to Prevent Cervical Injuries During Suction Curettage Abortion, LANCET, May 28, 1983 at 1182; Roht, Fonner, Aoyama and Fonner, Increased Reporting of Menstrual Symptoms among Women Who Used Induced Abortion, 127 Am. J. OF OBSTET. & GYN. 356 (1977), respectively.

The following letters received by Amici recount the physical impact of abortion on two women:

> "Well, I can't have kids now. It's really hard at times to know I gave up my only chance of having a family of my own. At least two times a year I cry my eyes out all night long over that fact. I know that God has forgave me. But it's hard to forgive myself. Everytime I see a baby I want one. And I know I can't have one. Cause, I had a abortion when I was just 14 years old." L-1.2.
>
> "My post abortion trauma is as painful to me today as it was 13 years ago when I realized what I had done to a human life . . . . I am married and struggling to conceive. The abortion market has devastated the adoption market." L-1.3.

Medical complications from induced abortions thus can be severe and permanent and repeat aborters increase their risk of physical complications. Since 1972, the number of abortions has dramatically increased from 587,000 to 1,589,000 in 1985, a 260 percent increase. See Appendix C. If only a small percentage of women having induced abortions experience one or more of those physical problems, the overall effect on women is significant, and worthy of state regulation and protection.

2. Adverse Psychological Effects of Induced Abortion.

A significant number of women who have abortions experience one or more negative psychiatric sequelae. See A. SPECKHARD, PSYCHO-SOCIAL ASPECTS OF STRESS FOLLOWING ABORTION (1987) (hereinafter cited as SPECKHARD).

a. Mental Illness Symptoms Following Abortion. In the psychological studies enumerated (Appendix B, Table 1 at 1a-7a), the mental illness symptomology following abortion are quite varied. They range from adjustment reactions to grief reactions to anniversary reactions to symptoms of guilt, anxiety, depression and psychoses. Approximately 20 percent of post-abortion patients in a 1972 study expressed immediate negative reactions which included guilt, depression, grief, anxiety, sadness, shame, helplessness, hopelessness, sorrow, lower self-esteem, distrust and hostility toward self and others. Osofsky and Osofsky, The Psychological Reaction of Patients to Legalized Abortion, 42 AM. J. OF ORTHOPSYCHIATRY 48 (1972) (hereinafter cited as Osofsky) (73 of 742 studied expressed guilt feelings); see also I. Kent, Emotional Sequelae of Therapeutic Abortion, presented at 27th Annual Meeting of the Canadian Psychiatric Association, Saskatoon (September 1977) (hereinafter cited as Kent) (43 percent expressed anxiety); and P. Ney, Mental Health and Abortion (1988) (unpublished manuscript) (hereinafter cited as Ney 1988).

Guilt is a frequently documented emotional reaction to abortion. A review of the abortion literature found severe guilt occurring in up to 23 percent of the post-abortion patients. E. Moore-Caver, The International Inventory on Information on Induced Abortion, International Institute for the Study of Human Reproduction (1974). "Clinicians have documented many cases of women who function well before their abortion, but subsequent to their abortion they experience severe psychological problems precipitated by guilt over the abortion." SPECKHARD at 5.

In a recent in-depth case identification study, "the emotional responses to abortion as a 'stressor event' were most dramatic, with grief, guilt, anger, fear and depression being most predominant, with a large portion (over 85 percent) of the sample reporting experience with all five of these emotions." SPECKHARD at 67. Dr. Speckhard, as well as many other researchers, found that the most serious psychological complications sometimes were delayed as much as 20 years post abortion. Id. at 101-103; see also Kumar and Robson, Previous Induced Abortion and Ante-Natal Depression in Primiparae: Preliminary Report of a Survey of Mental Health in Pregnancy, 8 PSYCHOLOGICAL MEDICINE 711 (1978); Mester, Induced Abortion in Psychotherapy, 30 PSYCHOTHERAPY AND PSYCHOSOMATICS 98 (1978); Ashton, The Psychological Outcome of Induced Abortion, 87 BR. J. OF OBSTET. & GYN. 1115 (1980); and Hittner, Feelings of Well-Being Before and After Abortion, 9 AM. MENTAL HEALTH COUNSELORS ASSOC. J. 98 (1987). "[P]re-occupation with the characteristics of the aborted child (experienced by 89 percent of the subjects), along with nightmares, flashbacks, hallucinations and perceived visitations related to the abortion, were viewed in this research as indicators that subjects had a high degree of psychological presence regarding the aborted fetus." SPECKHARD at 101. "Although this grief process was often found to be delayed, all of the subjects reported having one or more symptoms of grief which occurred either immediately or in the long term." Id.

b. Delayed Psychological Consequences of Abortion. While a number of studies show immediate adjustment or mental illness reactions to induced abortions, most of the more serious effects were the long-term and delayed psychiatric symptoms. A study conducted four weeks after the termination found that abortion patients had much poorer psychological adjustments than maternity patients. D. GOLD, THE ABORTION CHOICE: PSYCHOLOGICAL DETERMINANTS AND CONSEQUENCES (1984). See Ewing and Rouse, Therapeutic Abortions and a Prior Psychiatric History, 130 AM J. OF PSYCHIATRY 37 (1973); Handy, Psychological and Social Aspects of Induced Abortion, 22 BR. J. OF CLINICAL PSYCHOLOGY 29 (1982). In one study 12 to 18 months after initial presentation, a significantly greater proportion of the women who had abortions were under psychiatric treatment, admitted to a greater increase in use of alcohol and tobacco, used more tranquilizers and experienced more adverse personality changes than those whose pregnancies were not terminated. Ney 1988 at 3.

Some of the long-term and delayed negative psychological effects for women who had abortion can also include severe grief, isolation from social settings, suicide attempts, abdominal pains and severe depression, especially on the abortion or birth anniversary dates. See Greenglass, Therapeutic Abortion and Psychiatric Disturbance in Canadian Women, 21 CANADIAN PSYCHIATRIC ASSOC. J. 45 (1976); Tischler, Adolescent Suicide Attempts Following Elective Abortion: A Special Case of Anniversary Reaction, 68 PEDIATRICS 670 (1981); T. Wall, PSYCHOLOGICAL AFTER-EFFECTS OF ABORTION (1986) (unpublished master's thesis, Wayne State University); Spaulding and Cavenar, Psychoses Following Therapeutic Abortion, 135 AM. J. OF PSYCHIATRY 364 (1978); and Gould, Post-Abortion Depressive Reactions in College Women, 28 J. OF AM. COLLEGE HEALTH ASSOC. 316 (1980).

Reports of long-term guilt and grief, similar to the one quoted here, have been frequently received by Amici.

> "Little did I know at 19 years old that my abortion was the beginning of years of pain, heartache, guilt, such trama that led me to drinking and drug abuse to numb the pain, tnat I couldn't change what I did . . . The grieving process is undescribable. The mourning for a child you killed out of immaturity, fear, no where to turn. To block some thing like this out, you can't." L-1.4.

As repeat aborters show higher levels of medical sequelae, repeat aborters demonstrated significantly higher emotional distress scores in interpersonal relationships than other women. A study of 71 women with multiple abortions showed that they had more often considered suicide and scored higher on borderline personality pathology and depression than the comparison sample. K. Franco, Dysphoric Reactions in Women After Abortion (1984) (unpublished paper, Medical College of Ohio). Forty percent of the women reported anniversary reactions and half of the women aborting sought psychotherapy months or even years after the procedure. Id.

Although some psychotherapists may be minimizing the impact of abortion's stress, Mester, Induced Abortion in Psychotherapy, 30 PSYCHOTHERAPY AND PSYCHOSOMATICS 98 (1978), many describe findings of women who did not enter psychotherapy on account of any perceived emotional after-effects of abortion but who were suffering from post-abortion trauma. See Kent at 2. Once alerted to the abortion history, psychotherapists found that a high percentage of these patients had many emotional symptoms due to an induced abortion. Id.

c. Post-Abortion Stress Including Post-Abortion Syndrome. Some clinicians are now using the term Post-abortion syndrome (PAS) to describe a family of psychiatric symptoms related to abortion. PAS is being discovered in a significant percentage of women who have had abortions, especially multiple abortions. The symptoms of PAS fall primarily into three main categories of response: (1) re-experience of the abortion trauma, (2) avoidance behaviors, (3) associated symptoms not present prior to abortion. A. SPECKHARD, POST-ABORTION COUNSELING 3-4 (1987). Clinicians, counseling those with past abortions, often equate PAS with a type of the well-recognized post traumatic stress disorder (PTSD). Id. "Like the Vietnam veterans who returned from their military experiences severely scarred psychologically, post-abortive women have experienced an event that they perceive to be both traumatic and outside the realm of general experience." Id. at 4.

A central component of long-term development of PAS is a woman's reliance upon the emotional defenses of denial and repression, alongside the use of avoidance behaviors, to cope with the post-abortion stress. A. SPECKHARD, POST-ABORTION COUNSELING at 2, 9-10. In time, the symptoms cannot be repressed, denied or avoided and PAS will become apparent. Id. at 11. Many women who experience PAS present themselves for therapy on the anniversary due date of the aborted child. Id. Of 230 women studied, 80 percent suffered chronic negative psychological sequelae which clearly could be classified as severe post-abortion stress. D. REARDON, WOMEN EXPLOITED: A NATION DECEIVED (1986) (hereinafter cited as REARDON). Post-abortion stress (PAS), if not adequately treated, may evolve into a disabling mental illness of chronic and long-term duration. A. SPECKHARD, POST-ABORTION COUNSELING at 11.

Recently Amici received the following letter:

> "About Post-Abortive Stress. It is real. Like a person who goes to war and comes home only to have people tell him, 'Oh. That's behind you. You have to go on and forget about it.' A woman who undergoes an abortion can no more follow that kind of shallow advice than a veteran suffering from post-war stress. You don't just 'put' the taking of a human life from inside your womb, 'behind you.' It never leaves your memory. No matter how hard you try you don't forget. No one told me that I would experience the guilt and sadness that I do now, at the time of my abortion. I get depressed more than I ever have before, especially when the anniversary of my pregnancy, abortion and the time when my child would have been born, comes around. I always think about my baby. Even if the Lord grants me another child, it will never replace the child I carried for 11 weeks or more." L-1.5.

A psychiatrist and abortion doctor who has performed over 20,000 abortions describes the psychological effects of induced abortion as follows:

> " 'There is no question . . . about the emotional grief and mourning following an abortion. It shows up in various forms. I've had patients who had abortions a year or two ago—women who did the best thing at the time for themselves—but it still bothers them. Many burst out crying . . . . There is no question in my mind that we are disturbing a life process . . . . A psychological price is paid . . . . Something happens on the deeper levels of a woman's consciousness when she destroys a pregnancy. I know that as a psychiatrist.' " The Washington Post, Feb. 14, 1989 at F2.

Both physical complications like PID, miscarriage and sterility, and psychological effects such as PAS, guilt, depression and suicidal tendencies, have one overriding similarity: unless treated effectively, they will have profound and lasting adverse effects on the women and quite probably her family.

3. Adverse Effects of Abortion on the Family.

Large-scale negative psychosocial effects of abortion often become more visible when attention shifts from the pregnant women herself to relationshps with others, especially those family relationships, which comprise the basic unit of American society. S. Rep. No. 98-149, 9th Cong., 1st Sess. 44 (1983). See Appendix B, Table 3 and accompanying bibliography. Abortion and a stable marriage seem particularly incompatible: marriage status makes the abortion decision even more difficult and according to the research, abortion seems to signal the beginning of the end for many conjugal relationships.

a. Abortion's effects on spousal relationship. In a 1979 study, nearly half of the 150 women who elected abortion ended their relationships with the putative father. S. Plattner, Conceptual systems and sex role attitudes and beliefs and their effect on short-term abortion outcome (1979) (unpublished doctoral dissertation, Univ of Colorado). Interviews with over 400 men at an eastern abortion clinic also revealed that most of their relationships (70 percent) with the aborting women failed within one month after the abortion. E. Milling, The Men Who Wait, WOMEN'S LIFE, Apr. 1975 at 48-71. Many researchers identified serious sexual problems experienced by women who had abortions. See Gerrard, Sex Guilt in Abortion Patients, 45 J. OF CONSULTING AND CLINICAL PSYCHOLOGY 708 (1977). In a recent study, "many (69 percent) of the subjects reported becoming sexually inhibited, and having feelings of sexual anxiety (35 percent) following their abortions." SPECKHARD at 103.

Two women's personal stories bring these findings into focus:

> "At the time of my pregnancy I thought that the councel I received was easiest to believe—which was 'that the contents of my uterus was only tissue and that aborting the product of our conception was the best choice for my life.' . . . The death of my child created intense relational problems with the baby's father and within one year our relationship ended. The end to our love did not end the pain, the nightmares, the emotional tie with the baby's father, the extremes of drug and alcohol use, the guilt and regret and the confused running from the tragic murder." L-1.6.
>
> "Jeff reacted to it by trying to commit suicide. Later, when I became pregnant again, he didn't want to feel the baby kick or anything. He said that it reminded him too much of the baby that was aborted and five days after I gave birth to our son, Jeff left and I divorced him. He has only seen Jason once since he was born." L-1.7.

Many of the married couples in a recent clinical report showed that many years after the abortion they were still troubled by a past abortion, and were largely unaware at the time of the abortion of the intensity of their feelings and personal meaning of this death experience. Mattinson, The Effects of Abortion on a Marriage. Abortion: Medical Progress and Social Implications, 115 CIBA FOUN. SYMP. 165 (1985). "Sometimes, apparently having been unable to mourn the loss of a child at the time of the abortion, the spouses show a delayed grief reaction, maybe mild, but persistent, or may occur in more extreme form only many years later when a subsequent loss of a different nature triggers off repressed or conflicting feelings related to the earlier loss of the baby." Id. at 165. "Because of the basic inequality between partners in the abortion decision, the capacity to develop trust, enhance communication and problem solving skills, and to build intimacy, honesty and companionship is severely handicapped and restricted."

V. Rue, Abortion in Relationship Context: How Abortion Affects Males, ASSOC. FOR INTERDISCIPLINARY RESEARCH NEWSLETTER, Summer 1988 at 3 (hereinafter cited as Rue 1988).

b. Abortion's effects on "surviving children". Approximately 50 percent of children in North America are or soon will be abortion survivors, i.e., children who have had siblings terminated by induced abortion. Ney, A Consideration of Abortion Survivors, 13 CHILD PSYCHIATRY AND HUMAN DEVELOPMENT 168, 169 (1983) (hereinafter cited as Ney 1983). "If abortion is selected as a solution to the immediate problem of unwanted pregnancy, older children in the family may misinterpret the act as a great threat and may require psychiatric treatment." McCoy, Emotional Reaction of Women to Sterilization and Therapeutic Abortion, 75 J. OF OBSTET. & GYN. OF THE BRITISH COMMONWEALTH 1054 (1968). Children are becoming increasingly aware when potential siblings are aborted that they are the survivors. Ney, 1988 at 15. "[K]nowing that the child is chosen to live makes life difficult for a child. He may feel tightly bound by obligations to the one who saved him from termination. Knowing that he was allowed to exist because he was desired may make him try too hard to stay desirable. If he becomes aware of the fact that siblings were terminated, and he is the survivor, he also may feel guilty for existence." Id. at 16. See Crell and Rabon, The Effects of Sibling Death on Surviving Child, A Family Perspective, 18 FAMILY PROCESS 471 (1979); V. Rue, The Impact of Induced Abortion on Surviving Siblings: Case Studies, Association for Interdisciplinary Research Newsletter, Fall 1988 at 2-6. Evidence indicates that post-abortion depression also hinders mother-infant bonding in a subsequent pregnancy and can lead to child abuse. Ney, Relationship Between Abortion and Child Abuse, 24 CAN. J. OF PSYCHIATRY 61 (1979).[8] The guilt and depression following an induced abortion has been identified in many case studies as a factor in neglect and abuse of the subsequent child. Ney 1988 at 15.

[8] A 1979 report outlined eight methods of how an increasing rate of therapeutic abortion is leading to an increasing rate of child abuse. Ney, Relationship Between Abortion and Child Abuse, 24 CAN. J. OF PSYCHIATRY 610 (1979), 610-612. Ney's reports also underscore the fact that no evidence indicates elective abortions will reduce prevalence of child abuse, contrary to popular assertion that elective abortion decreases child abuse by making sure children are wanted. Id., at 617.

For children who have siblings terminated by abortion, the children may have similar psychological conflicts to those children who survived disasters or illness which kill another sibling, such as unresolved guilt, fear of parents, obsession to please parents, blatant hostility. Ney, 1983 at 168.

c. Abortion's effects on the family unit. For women, abortion sometimes provides immediate relief, but generally guilt, secrecy, depression, denial and delayed psychological stress follow. For men, it increases masculine insecurity and promotes guilt, alienation, role conflict and lack of communication. See Rue, 1988 at 3. For children, abortions have been known to produce intrapsychic conflict, insecurity and mother-child bonding problems. See Cavenar, Maltbie and Sullivan, Psychiatric Sequelae of Therapeutic Abortions, 39 N.C. MED. J. 101 (1978); Ney, 1983 at 168; and REARDON, 1986 at 2. One particular result rises clearly from the studies and letters—relationships end after abortions. While other predisposing factors certainly affect some of these familial problems subsequent to abortions, abortions do not assist in strengthening the bonds of marriage and family. Indeed, it is a stressful precipitant and often leads to the unraveling of these important support systems.

While the claim that abortions are safer than childbirth is questionable at best when the focus is only on mortality rates (see Amici Curiae Brief of Feminists for Life, Women Exploited by Abortion et al.), it is particularly erroneous in light of the broad, adverse medical complications, psychological effects and impact on the family that result from induced abortions. Conservatively, 22.5 million abortions have occurred since 1973. If only 10 percent of the women experience any one of these adverse effects, 2.25 million women would be affected. Abortions harm women and families.

Any analytical framework, such as Roe's trimester scheme, which seeks to balance the women's rights and the state's interests, must be capable of considering all health interests of the mother, including psychological, physical and psychosocial effects, as well as the important and legitimate state interests of protecting "familial integrity and health of the mother" in the abortion context, see e.g., H.L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398, 411 (1981), Roe, 410 U.S. at 162, as well as of the "potential human life." Id. at 159-160. Roe and its progeny unfortunately ignore the serious but non-mortality impact of abortion on women. With 15 years of developing scientific evidence about the effects of abortion, the Court must, at this critical juncture, examine evidence of morbidity in its reconsideration of Roe's trimester approach and its determination of who should draw the line to protect the health of the women along with the family—the state legislature or the courts.

C. Roe v. Wade Has Resulted In Arbitrariness And Disarray In Federal Law, Embarked This Court On A Course Of Inappropriate Legislative Oversight, And Denied Citizens The Ability To Decide Controversial Issues In The Democratic Process, And Should Be Overturned.

The trimester framework embraced in Roe and its progeny was rooted in science, not the Constitution. Having been a "major distortion in the Court's constitutional jurisprudence", this "unworkable scheme for constitutionalizing the regulation of abortion has . . . [an] institutionally debilitating effect", Thornburgh v. American College of Obstretricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747, 814 (1986) (O'Connor, J., dissenting).

The Roe line drawing contravenes this Court's long-standing recognition of State competence to regulate in the health arena. "We should not forget that 'legislatures are ultimate guardians of the liberties and welfare of the people in quite as great a degree as the courts', Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. May, 194 U.S. 267, 270 (Holmes, J.)." Maher v. Roe, 432 US 464, 479-480 (1977) This recognition is particularly compelling in the context of abortion, where the analysis turns on a contemporary understanding of science: "[L]egislatures, with their superior factfinding capabilities, are certainly better able to make the necessary judgments than are courts." Akron, 462 U.S. at 456, n.4 (O'Connor, J., dissenting).

Changes in understanding and medical science will always outpace the Court's ability to respond. When this Court's precedents are rooted in science and not in the Constitution, as was Roe's trimester framework, science is pitted against precedent, and the prestige of this honorable institution suffers.

Amici Curiae respectfully suggest that this Court can best protect the interests of our citizens by abandoning the trimester approach as outmoded, unscientific, and constitutionally unworkable, and by recognizing that the states have legitimate interests, existing throughout pregnancy, in protecting the life of the mother and the unborn child. Adoption of the "rational basis" standard of review, Williamson v. Lee Optical, 348 U.S. 483, 486 (1955), will ensure that State activities comport with a constitutional purpose. Where the Court recognizes a countervailing constitutional interest, a state may have to demonstrate that its regulation does not unduly burden another protected right. No constitutional interest is served, however, by arbitrarily severing the legitimate safety interests of the state legislatures and the electorate to whom they are responsible:

> Abortion is a hotly contested moral and political issue. Such issues, in our society, are to be resolved by the will of the people. . . . I would return the issue to the people by overruling Roe v. Wade.

Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 796-797 (White, J., dissenting).

CONCLUSION

The portions of the court of appeals' judgments that invalidate appellants' abortion regulations should be reversed, and Roe v. Wade should be overruled.

Respectfully submitted,

H. ROBERT SHOWERS
Counsel of Record
RICHARD M. CAMPANELLI
GAMMON & GRANGE
1925 K Street, N.W.
Suite 300
Washington, D.C. 20006
(202) 862-2000
Attorneys for Amici Curiae

APPENDICES

APPENDIX A

DESCRIPTION OF AMICI

Amicus Focus on the Family is a Christian, non-profit organization that is committed to strengthening the emotional, psychological and spiritual health of families in the United States and throughout the world. Amicus believes that human life, from conception to death, is of inestimable worth. Its daily radio broadcasts dealing with family concerns and interests are heard by more than one million people daily over 1300 stations. Its monthly magazine has a circulation of 1.7 million. It receives an average of more than 8000 letters daily, many of which describe the causes and results of past trauma, including the abortion experience.

Amicus Family Research Council of America, a division of Focus on the Family, is a voice for the pro-family movement in Washington, D.C., and provides policy analysis and research support for Focus on the Family. As such, it studies matters affecting the family, including the effects of abortion.

This case raises questions about the extent to which all states can protect the health and well-being of unborn children, mothers, fathers, and all family members who may be affected by abortion. The Court will review whether state legislatures may make findings about when human life begins, findings which have an impact in many areas of the law other than abortion. This case also presents an opportunity for the Court to reconsider the basis and holdings of its previous abortion decisions. Because the Court's decision will have a significant impact on millions of American families, Amici wish to present their views to the Court.

APPENDIX B

TABLE 1

Adverse Psychological, Psychosocial and Social Effects of Induced Abortion (By Year)

Researcher(s)	Date	Major Findings
Jansson	1965	An analysis of numerous major studies, i.e. Ekblad (1955), Aren & Amark (1957), Hultin & Ottosson (1962), Lindberg (1948), Hook (1963), Jansson (1963) and Freundt (1964), showed mental insufficiencies strikingly more common after induced abortions than other abortions or delivery. Induced abortion adjudged fairly ineffective as a psychiatric therapeutic means.
Bracken and Suigar	1972	Self-reported negative abortion reactions were associated with being unmarried, young and lacking support from partner and parents.
Osofsky and Osofsky	1972	16% of abortion patients were judged unhappy and 25% expressed guilt.
Kaltreider	1973	Reported on the increased emotional difficulties in midtrimester abortion patients, noting that those women who perceived the fetus as a human being, i.e. baby, felt more guilty or sad.
Ewing and Rouse	1973	19% of post-abortion patients expressed immediate negative reactions, especially if there was a prior history of emotional disturbance.
Moore-Caver	1974	Review of abortion literature found severe guilt in 2 to 23% of patients.
Blumberg, Golbus and Hanson	1975	Selective abortions for genetic defects produced depression in 92% of women and 82% men and had severe psychological effects on families. Negative effects for selective abortions far greater than for delivery of stillborn.

TABLE 1—Continued

Researcher(s)	Date	Major Findings
Lask	1975	Of 50 abortion patients, 32% had adverse outcomes, reporting moderate to severe feelings of guilt, regret, loss and self-reproach.
Greenglass	1976	12% of aborted women experienced negative psychological reactions with 3% attempting suicide. Psychiatric patients pre-abortion were three times as likely to require therapy post-abortion.
Kent	1977	Abortions in patients' histories were major precipitants in seeking psychotherapy.
Gerrard	1977	Sexual inhibition and guilt was found to be significantly higher for women who have undergone abortions than for nonpregnant women.
Belsey, Greer, Lal, Lewis and Beard	1977	An emotional attitude study of 360 women before and three months after first trimester abortion revealed 161 women displaying one or more features of emotional disturbance. Degree of adjustment before pregnancy was the dominant influence and major factor in predicting emotional disturbances.
Bracken	1978	15% of the sample experienced a difficult abortion decision, anxiety, depression and pain.
Spaulding and Cavenar	1978	Reported significant post-abortion guilt, psychoses, consternation and anniversary reactions.
Brewer	1978	20% of sample reported negative psychic trauma from induced abortion.
Kumar and Robson	1978	119 primiparae were interviewed during the 12th and 36th week of pregnancy. In a significant proportion of these expectant mothers there was an association between depression and anxiety early in pregnancy and a previous history of induced abortion, suggesting a reactivation of mourning which was previously suppressed.

TABLE 1—Continued

Researcher(s)	Date	Major Findings
Mester	1978	Induced abortion is a stressing experience and for some women may be traumatic. Psychotherapists may be ignoring or minimizing the importance of the abortion experience for certain kinds of patients in pain.
Morrissey and Schuckit	1978	Problem drinkers and secondary alcoholics were more likely to have experienced an alcohol-related problem subsequent to an abortion.
Liebman and Zimmer	1979	Reported 24 immediate and long-term post-abortion abreactions affecting self image, relationships, and future coping abilities.
Proud	1979	Women who have aborted reported lower total self concept including moral ethical self, physical self perspective, social self and were significantly more defensive than those not aborting. In addition, post-abortion women had higher neurotic scores and lower personality integration. In short, in all areas except personal self, aborting women reported lower levels of self concept.
Somers	1979	Of 597 Denmark women, aborting women under 30 exhibited higher psychiatric admission rates than did women of this age in general. Teen aborters had the highest rate of psychiatric admission (2.9 times the rate of teenagers in general).
Adler	1979	Abortion is a stress experience. A sense of loss influences stressful, negative emotions. Responses to the experience will be a function of the nature and meaning of the pregnancy to the individual, her defensive and coping style, and her social environment.
George	1980	Women who sought abortions scored higher than controls on neuroticism and manifest anxiety.

TABLE 1—Continued

Researcher(s)	Date	Major Findings
Freeman, Rickels, Huggins, Garcia and Polin	1980	Study of 413 women revealed elevated stress levels prior to abortion, particularly depression, anxiety and somatization, and after abortion, repeat aborters continued to have significantly higher emotional distress scores in interpersonal relationships.
Ashton	1980	A study of 64 women after eight weeks and 86 women after eight months revealed short-term psychiatric disturbances, including guilt, regrets and sensitivity to comments about the abortion, and 5% suffered enduring severe psychiatric problems post-abortion.
Cates	1980	Relatively more teenagers than older women suffered anxiety, depression, sadness, guilt and regret.
Gould	1980	A study examining health experiences of Harvard women post abortion revealed post-abortion depression, anniversary reactions, guilt and despair.
David, Rasmussen and Holst	1981	In a nationwide hospital study in Denmark, psychiatric problems were significantly higher in women who had abortions than women who delivered or women in general. Negative post-abortion reaction worse for women not in a relationship.
Tishler	1981	Case studies of two adolescent females who had elective abortions illustrate increased psychosocial stress of adolescent abortion which could include suicide on the anniversary date the fetus would have been born.
Williams and Ventimiglia	1981	To minimize negative post-abortion reaction, women should seek support from significant others, be apprised of procedures, be familiar with alternatives and recognize medical and emotional costs.

TABLE 1—Continued

Researcher(s)	Date	Major Findings
Handy	1982	Women seeking termination demonstrated more psychological disturbance than other women. Few women found the decision to terminate easy.
Baker and Quinkert	1983	Data from 252 women who experienced reproductive problems (including abortion). Depression and increased stress were found which improved as the subjects learned more about the problem and drew closer to their families and others with similar problems.
Cohen and Roth	1984	From a study of 55 women, post-abortion stress was displayed at fairly high levels. Evidence revealed a "generalized stress response syndrome." "Avoiders" were found to experience more distress than "nonavoiders."
Bradley	1984	Women who had a prior abortion scored higher on levels of depressive effect in the third trimester of pregnancy and in the postpartum period.
Franco	1984	Women reporting multiple abortions had more often considered suicide and scored higher on borderline personality pathology and depression. 40% of the 71 women studied reported anniversary reactions. Half of the women aborting sought psychotherapy after the procedure.
Gold	1984	At the four-week follow-up, abortion patients had poorer psychological adjustment than maternity patients; married abortion group reported less satisfying relationships with their husbands, and also reported poorer psychological adjustment.
Frank	1985	Morbidity within 21 days after induced abortion which was related to that event was found in 10% of 6105 women who had induced abortions.

TABLE 1—Continued

Researcher(s)	Date	Major Findings
Jorgensen, Uddenberg and Ursing	1985	All women in study who had abortions because of fetal malformation experienced severe psychological trauma and about half suffered long-term inability to cope with their personal crises.
Lloyd and Laurence	1985	A retrospective study of 48 women who had abortions for fetal malformation revealed 77% experienced an acute grief reaction with 46% suffering psychiatric symptoms six months post abortion.
Reardon	1986	Of 230 women studied, majority felt "forced" to have abortion; 83% felt "rushed" to make decision; 71% believed their abortion counselors were biased; 80% suffered chronic negative psychological sequelae; 19% reported suicidal ideation; and 20% reported chemical dependencies.
Selby	1986	Study of 92 women who had past abortions who were treated on an in-patient basis revealed majority had been sexually abused in their past; post-abortion delayed reaction common; denial and depression experienced by most women; most had sexual adjustment issues and had experienced primary relationship terminated. Case studies identified post-abortion trauma and unresolved grieving such as denial, anger, bargaining, depression and guilt/shame.
Speckhard	1986	Found abortion a stressor event for most women interviewed and that delayed psychological complications occurred for most of the women studied 5-10 years post abortion. 85% were surprised by the intensity of their negative emotional reactions. 81% felt victimized by their abortions.

TABLE 1—Continued

Researcher(s)	Date	Major Findings
Wall	1986	Examined 34 women post abortion. Majority reported chronic emotional problems in the abortion aftermath, including guilt, depression, alcohol and drug abuse, difficulty in relationships, and anxiety in subsequent pregnancies. 26% reported making some suicidal gesture since their abortion.
Hittner	1987	Of 217 women studied, 30% reported one previous abortion. Women with children are more likely to be negatively affected by abortion. Delayed grief was found and nearly 1/3 reported post-abortion unhappiness. "The findings of this study should indicate to mental health counselors that women who choose to have an abortion are more likely to be depressed and lonely than are those in the general population, both before and immediately after the procedure. These findings raise questions about the beliefs that only a few women experience post-abortion emotional difficulties."
Lyons, Larson, Huckeba, Rogers and Mueller	1988	A systematic review of research on post-abortion psychological sequelae concluded that all studies suffer from significant methodological shortcomings but did reveal numerous studies showing negative psychological effects of abortion.
Ney	1988	A survey of psychosocial effects of abortion revealed no psychiatric indications for therapeutic abortions. Short and long term medical and psychiatric complications to abortion illustrate harmful effects of elective abortions.

TABLE 2

Adverse Physical Effects of Induced Abortion (By Year)

Researcher(s)	Date	Major Findings
Klinger	1971	After one legal abortion, premature births increase by 14%; after two abortions, it is 18%; and after three, it increases to 24%.
Tietze and Lewis	1971	Immediate complications of induced abortion (hemorrhage, laceration of the cervix and perforation) totaled 1-2% after eight weeks gestation and 3.6% at 15 weeks or longer.
Conger	1972	From a study of 1,668 women, perforation occurred using suction curettage in 96.8 per 1000 abortions at 15 weeks gestation or more.
Harlap and Davies	1975	752 mothers interviewed during subsequent pregnancy revealed an excess of malformations in births and pregnancy complications, such as bleeding, low birth weight, manual removal of placenta and two to threefold increase in neonatal deaths, following earlier induced abortions.
Roht, Aoyama, Leinen and Callen	1976	Prior induced abortions appear to be associated with excess prematurity and spontaneous abortions in subsequent pregnancies. Unfavorable subsequent pregnancy outcomes increase with frequency of induced abortions.
Trichopoulos	1976	"The relative risk of secondary infertility among women with at least one induced abortion and no spontaneous miscarriages was 3-4 times that among non-aborted women."
Burkman	1977	"Occurrence of genital tract infection following elective abortion is a well-known complication." John Hopkins University reports rates up to 5.2% for first trimester and up to 18.5% in second trimester.

TABLE 2—Continued

Researcher(s)	Date	Major Findings
Roht, Fonner, Aoyama and Fonner	1977	Survey of 3,222 showed a consistently reported excess of menstrual symptoms among women with history of induced abortion.
Bracken	1978	Abortion by dilatation and curettage (D&C) may increase the risk of subsequent spontaneous abortion, low birth weight and prematurity but these findings need further confirmation.
Cavenar, Maltbie and Sullivan	1978	Report of psychogenic abdominal pain after abortion and anniversary reactions.
Harlap, Shiono, Berendes and Pellegrin	1979	Study revealed 120% increase of mid-trimester spontaneous fetal losses among nulleparous women with previous induced abortions and the relative risk increased with the number of previous induced abortions.
Leong, Duby and Kinch	1979	A random survey/study of 75 women whose pre- and post-abortion smears were studied revealed therapeutic abortions to be a major potential source of RH isoimmunization.
Ratten and Beischer	1979	Therapeutic abortions performed in first trimester were linked to a significant increase in second trimester spontaneous abortions and premature labor in next pregnancy.
W.H.O. Task Force	1979	Significantly higher risk of mid-trimester spontaneous abortion, preterm delivery, or low birth weight among women whose only previous pregnancy ended in an induced abortion.
Levin, Schoenbaum, Monson, Stubblefield and Ryan	1980	Comparison of women who had multiple abortions and women who had term delivery revealed twofold-threefold increased risk of subsequent pregnancy losses for women with multiple induced abortions.

TABLE 2—Continued

Researcher(s)	Date	Major Findings
Brautigam and Wainke	1981	Induced abortion was statistically more frequent precedent to late complications, such as abdominal pregnancy, retarded abortion, cervical insufficiency or imminent premature births, than in the control group. Induced abortions beyond the 8th week involve even more frequent late complications of subsequent pregnancy.
Pike	1981	First trimester abortion before full term pregnancy showed a 2.4-fold increase in risk of breast cancer.
Slater	1981	Infants born following a previous induced abortion by D&C showed excessive low birth weight due to damage to cervix from D&C. The greater the degree of dilatation, the greater the cervix damage which leads to increase in low birth weight.
Levin	1982	Relative risk of ectopic pregnancy was 1.6 for women with one prior induced abortion and 4.0 with two or more, which is significantly higher than control group.
Qvigstag	1982	Patients harboring chlamydia trachomatis in the cervix at termination of pregnancy are at high risk of developing postoperative infections such as PID, salpingitis and detectable chlamydia antibodies. Chlamydia trachomatis was cultured from the cervix in 70 of 557 women admitted for therapeutic abortion. Among the 70, 22 developed acute PID postoperatively.
Westergaard	1982	Presence of chlamydia in the cervical canal at the time of an induced abortion in asymptomatic women increases risk of postabortal PID from 10% to 28% in 333 women studied.

TABLE 2—Continued

Researcher(s)	Date	Major Findings
Schulz, Grimes and Cates	1983	Cervical injury, which is one of the most frequent complications of suction curettage abortion, occurs in about 1 per 100 abortions in study of 15,438 women. Such microfracture of the cervix may lead to cervical incompetence, premature delivery and other pregnancy complications.
Tollefson and Garvey	1983	Case analysis of the evolution of a woman's conversion disorder (urinary retention) in response to a decision to terminate pregnancy. Concluded that a variety of psychological disorders may go undetected concerning abortion and present themselves as "unrelated" physical complaints without organic basis.
Dicker, Feldberg, Samuel and Goldman	1985	Association of cervical pregnancy and induced abortion with traumatic curettage damaging the endometrium, rendering it unsuitable for nidation, was well documented.
Heisterberg	1985	PID is major complication of induced abortion occurring in 2-20% of women who had an abortion.
Pickering and Forbes	1985	Women with previous induced abortions experienced significantly increased risk of pre-term delivery.
Wong, Wong and Chang	1985	A history of previous abortions was significantly more common in the group displaying meconium stained amniotic fluid diagnosed during labor.
Barron	1986	Compilation of data from British and American publications showed over half of the pregnancies in girls under 16 ended in induced abortion and a prospective study of teenagers found a high rate of fetal loss in pregnancies that followed abortions.

TABLE 2—Continued

Researcher(s)	Date	Major Findings
Darj	1987	Scandinavian studies reveal that PID following induced abortion ranges from 6-13%.
Rue	1988	Induced abortion is estimated to be responsible for 150,000-250,000 cases of PID in the U.S. annually. PID is a major direct cause of permanent sterility, chronic abdominal pain and increased risk of extra-uterine pregnancy.

TABLE 3

Adverse Familial Effects of Induced Abortion

Researcher(s)	Date	Major Findings
Calef	1972	Clinical study suggests post-abortion anxiety and disruption of marital sexual relations.
Perez-Reyes and Falk	1973	15% of post-abortion adolescents expressed adverse feelings of depression, guilt, anger and anxiety, some of which were related to family tensions.
Cavenar, Maltbie and Sullivan	1978	Described psychiatric sequelae of abortion in potential grandparents, intrapsychic conflict in children whose mother aborted a pregnancy known to them, and other family members. Case studies show significant physical and emotional sequelae from therapeutic abortions not attributable to environmental changes or other stresses. Case reports highlight post abortion psychogenic problems for some women for twenty years after the procedure.
Ney	1979	Outline of eight methods of how an increasing rate of abortion is leading to an increasing rate of child abuse. Evidence indicates that post-abortion depression hinders mother-infant bonding in a subsequent pregnancy whereas no evidence indicates elective abortions will reduce prevalence of child abuse.
Plattner	1979	Nearly half of 150 women who elected abortion ended their relationships with the putative father.

TABLE 3—Continued

Researcher(s)	Date	Major Findings
Deutsch	1982	Studied 96 pregnant teenagers. Never pregnant adolescents manifested significantly higher measurers for self-esteem than did first time and repeat abortion subjects. Repeat abortion adolescents showed significantly more signs of instability, personality conflict and sex guilt than the never pregnant group. Teen aborters were more likely to come from families with father absent, marital conflict, poor patterns of communication, family enmeshment or disengagement, and to have lower self concepts.
Ney	1983	Children who have siblings terminated by abortion may have similar psychological conflicts to those children who survive disasters or illness which kill another sibling. Unresolved guilt, fear of parents, obsession to please parents, latent hostility can all be signs of psychological effects of "abortion survivors."
Furlong and Black	1984	Young children may experience particular difficulties in coping with complex information of genetic indicated abortions and may show negative reactions to parents' distress and maternal absence.
Mattinson	1985	Unable to mourn the loss of the child at the time of the abortion, parents show a delayed grief reaction. It may be mild but persistent, or it may occur in more extreme form many years later when subsequent loss of a different nature triggers repressed grief. Many of the married couples in this clinical report are still troubled by an abortion of many years ago, and were largely unaware at the time of the abortion of the intensity of their feelings and the personal meaning of this death experience.

TABLE 3—Continued

Researcher(s)	Date	Major Findings
Rue	1985	Because of the basic inequality between the partners in an abortion decision, future marital skills and communication may be severely handicapped and restricted. "Some men view abortion as a destruction of man's seed—a death event."
Ney	1987	Parents have difficulty bonding with surviving children if the neonatal losses are not mourned appropriately, especially if the loss comes from elective abortion. Counselors must help parents and surviving children go through grieving process for neonatal deaths.
Reardon	1988	Summary of case reports of children from one year up to 21 years old suffering negative effects from mother's induced abortion. Children display fear that mother is "agent of death," hostility and agression toward siblings and peers, feeling neglect, anorexia, depression and withdrawal if not properly treated.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Studies from Table 1

Adler, Abortion: A Social Psychological Perspective, 35 J. OF SOCIAL ISSUES 100 (1979).

Ashton, The Psychosocial Outcome of Induced Abortion, 87 BR. J. OF OBSTETRICS AND GYNECOLOGY 1115 (1980).

Baker and Quinkert, Women's Reactions to Reproductive Problems, 53 PSYCHOLOGICAL REPORTS 159 (1983).

Belsey, Greer, Lal, Lewis and Beard, Predictive Factors in Emotional Response to Abortion: King's Termination IV, 11 SOC. SCI. AND MED. 71 (1977).

Blumberg, Golbus and Hanson, The Psychological Sequelae of Abortion Performed for a Genetic Indication, 122 AM. J. OF OBSTETRICS AND GYNECOLOGY 799 (1975).

Bracken, A Causal Model of Psychosomatic Reactions to Vacuum Aspiration Abortion, 13 SOCIAL PSYCHIATRY 135 (1978).

Bracken and Suigar, Factors Associated with Delay in Seeking Induced Abortions, 113 AM. J. OF OBSTETRICS AND GYNECOLOGY 301 (1972).

Bradley, Abortion and Subsequent Pregnancy, 29 CANADIAN J. OF PSYCHIATRY 494 (1984).

Brewer, Induced Abortion after Feeling Fetal Movements: Its Causes and Emotional Consequences, 10 J. OF BIOLOGICAL AND SOCIAL SCIENCES 203 (1978).

Cates, Adolescent Abortions in the United States, 1 J. OF ADOLESCENT HEALTH CARE 18 (1980).

Cohen and Roth, Coping with Abortion, 10 J. OF HUM. STRESS 140 (1984).

David, Rasmussen and Holst, Postpartum and Postabortion Psychotic Reactions, 13 FAM. PLANNING PERSPECTIVES 88 (1981).

BIBLIOGRAPHY—Continued

Ewing and Rouse, Therapeutic Abortions and a Prior Psychiatric History, 130 AM. J. OF PSYCHIATRY 37 (1973).

K. Franco, Dysphoric Reactions in Women after Abortion (1984) (unpublished paper, Medical College of Ohio).

Frank, Sequelae of Induced Abortion, 115 CIBA FOUND. SYMP. 67 (1985).

Freeman, Rickels, Huggins, Garcia and Polin, Emotional Distress Patterns Among Women Having First or Repeat Abortions, 55 OBSTETRICS AND GYNECOLOGY 630 (1980).

George, An Empirical Study of Medical Termination of Pregnancy, 25 PSYCHOLOGICAL STUDIES 211 (1980).

Gerrard, Sex Guilt in Abortion Patients, 45 J. OF CONSULTING AND CLINICAL PSYCHOLOGY 708 (1977).

D. GOLD, THE ABORTION CHOICE: PSYCHOLOGICAL DETERMINANTS AND CONSEQUENCES (1984).

Gould, Postabortion Depressive Reactions in College Women, 28 J. OF AM. COLLEGE HEALTH ASSOC. 316 (1980).

Greenglass, Therapeutic Abortion and Psychiatric Disturbance in Canadian Women, 21 CANADIAN PSYCHIATRIC ASSOC. J. 45 (1976).

Handy, Psychological and Social Aspects of Induced Abortion, 22 BR. J. OF CLINICAL PSYCHOLOGY 29 (1982).

Hittner, Feelings of well being before and after abortion, 9 AM. MENTAL HEALTH COUNSELOR'S ASSOC. J. 98 (1987).

Jansson, Mental Disorders After Abortion, 41 ACTA PSYCHIATRICA SCANDINAVICA 87 (1965).

Jorgensen, Uddenberg and Ursing, Ultrasound Diagnosis of Fetal Malformation in the Second Trimester—The Psychological Reaction of the Women, 4 J. PSYCHOSOMATIC OBSTETRICS AND GYNECOLOGY 31 (1985).

BIBLIOGRAPHY—Continued

Kaltreider, Psychological Factors in Mid-Trimester Abortions, 4 PSYCHIATRY AND MED. 129 (1973).

I. Kent, Emotional Sequelae of Therapeutic Abortion, presented at 27th Annual Meeting of the Canadian Psychiatric Association, Saskatoon, September 1977.

Kumar and Robson, Previous Induced Abortion and Ante-Natal Depression in Primiparae: Preliminary Report of a Survey of Mental Health in Pregnancy, 8 PSYCHOLOGICAL MEDICINE 711 (1978).

Lask, Short-Term Psychiatric Sequelae to Therapeutic Termination of Pregnancy, 126 BRITISH J. OF PSYCHIATRY 173 (1975).

Liebman and Zimmer, The Psychological Sequelae of Abortion: Fact and Fallacy, in THE PSYCHOLOGICAL ASPECTS OF ABORTION 127 (1979).

Lipper, Obsessive-Compulsive Neurosis After Viewing the Fetus During Therapeutic Abortion, 30 AM. J. OF PSYCHOTHERAPY 666 (1983).

Lloyd and Laurence, Sequelae and Support after Termination for Fetal Malformation, 290 BRITISH MEDICAL JOURNAL 907 (1985).

Lyons, Larson, Huckeba, Rogers and Mueller, Research on the Psychosocial Impact of Abortion: A Systematic Review of the Literature 1966-1985, in VALUES AND PUBLIC POLICY 77, Family Research Council of America (1988).

Mester, Induced Abortion in Psychotherapy, 30 PSYCHOTHERAPY AND PSYCHOSOMATICS 98 (1978).

E. Moore-Caver, The International Inventory on Information on Induced Abortion, International Institute for the Study of Human Reproduction (1974).

Morrissey and Schuckit, Stressful Life Events and Alcohol Problems Among Women Seen at a Detoxification Center, 39 J. OF STUDIES OF ALCOHOL 1559 (1978).

BIBLIOGRAPHY—Continued

P. Ney, Mental Health and Abortion (March 1988) (unpublished paper).

Osofsky and Osofsky, The Psychological Reaction of Patients to Legalized Abortions, 42 AM. J. OF ORTHOPSYCHIATRY 48 (1972).

E. Proud, A comparison of the effects of anxiety on self-concept between pregnant women seeking an abortion and pregnant women not seeking an abortion (1979) (unpublished doctoral dissertation, U.S. International University).

D. REARDON, WOMEN EXPLOITED: A NATION DECEIVED (1986).

T. Selby, Post Abortion Trauma, presented at the annual meeting of the Association for Interdisciplinary Research in Values and Social Change, Denver, Colorado, 1986.

R. Somers, Risk of admission to psychiatric institutions among Danish women who experience induced abortions: An analysis based on national record linkage (1979) (unpublished doctoral dissertation, Univ. of California).

Spaulding and Cavenar, Psychoses Following Therapeutic Abortion, 135 AM. J. OF PSYCHIATRY 364 (1978).

A. SPECKHARD, PSYCHO-SOCIAL ASPECTS OF STRESS FOLLOWING ABORTION (1987).

Tishler, Adolescent Suicide Attempts Following Elective Abortion: A Special Case of Anniversary Reaction, 68 PEDIATRICS 670 (1981).

T. Wall, PSYCHOLOGICAL AFTER-EFFECTS OF ABORTION (1986) (Unpublished master's thesis, Wayne State University).

Williams and Ventimiglia, Abortion or Birth? Discriminators in Problem Pregnancy Decisions, 1 SOCIOLOGICAL SPECTRUM 115 (1981).

BIBLIOGRAPHY—Continued

Studies from Table 2

Barron, Sexual Activity in Girls Under 16 Years of Age, 93 BR. J. OF OBSTETRICS AND GYNECOLOGY 787 (1986).

Bracken, Induced Abortion as a Risk Factor for Perinatal Complications: A Review, 51 YALE J. OF BIOLOGY AND MED. 539 (1978).

Brautigam and Wainke, Incidence Rate of Late Complications in Legally Induced Abortions in Germany, 185 Z. GEBURTSHILFE-PERINATOL 193 (1981).

Burkman, Culture and Treatment Results in Endometritis Following Elective Abortion, 128 AM. J. OF OBSTETRICS AND GYNECOLOGY 556 (1977).

Cavenar, Maltbie and Sullivan, Aftermath of Abortion: Anniversary Depressions and Abdominal Pain, 42 BULLETIN OF MENNINGER CLINIC 433 (1978).

Conger, Cluster of Uterine Perforations Related to Suction Curettage, 40 OBSTETRICS AND GYNECOLOGY 551 (1972).

Darj, The Prophylactic Effect of Doxycycline on Postoperative Infection After First Trimester Abortion, 55 OBSTETRICS AND GYNECOLOGY 322 (1987).

Dicker, Feldberg, Samuel and Goldman, Etiology of Cervical Pregnancy, 30 J. REPRODUCTIVE MED. 25 (1985).

Harlap and Davies, Late Sequelae of Induced Abortion: Complications and Outcome of Pregancy and Labor, 102 AM. J. OF EPIDEMIOLOGY 217 (1975).

Harlap, Shiono, Berendes and Pellegrin, A Prospective Study of Spontaneous Losses after Induced Abortions, 301 NEW ENGLAND J. OF MED. 677 (1979).

Heisterberg, Prophylaxis with Lymecycline in Induced First Trimester Abortion: A Clinical Controlled Trial Assessing the Role of Chlamydia Trachomatis and Mycoplasma Hominis, 12 SEXUALLY TRANSMITTED DISEASES 72 (1985).

BIBLIOGRAPHY—Continued

Klinger, Demographic Consequences of Legalization of Abortion in Eastern Europe, 8 INT. J. OF GYNECOLOGY AND OBSTETRICS 691 (1971).

Leong, Duby and Kinch, Fetal Maternal Transfusion Following Early Abortion, 54 OBSTETRICS AND GYNECOLOGY 424 (1979).

Levin, Schoenbaum, Monson, Stubblefield and Ryan, Association of Induced Abortion with Subsequent Pregnancy Loss, 243 J. OF AMA 2495 (1980).

Levin, Ectopic Pregnancy and Prior Induced Abortion, 72 AM. J. OF PUBLIC HEALTH 253 (1982).

Pickering and Forbes, Risks of Pre-Term Delivery and Small for Gestational Age Infants Following Abortion: A Population Study 92 BR. J. OF OBSTETRICS AND GYNECOLOGY 1106 (1985).

Pike, Oral Contraceptive Use and Early Abortion as Risk Factors for Breast Cancer in Young Women, 43 BR. J. OF CANCER 72 (1981).

Qvigstag, Therapeutic Abortion and Chlamydia Trachomates Infection, 58 BR. J. OF VENERAL DISEASES 182 (1982).

Ratten and Beischer, The Effect of Termination of Pregnancy on Maturity of Subsequent Pregnancy, 1 MED. J. AUST. 479 (1979).

Roht, Aoyama, Leinen and Cullen, Association of Multiple Induced Abortions with Subsequent Prematurity and Spontaneous Abortion, 23 ACTA OBSTETRICS AND GYNECOLOGY JAP. 140 (1976).

Roht, Fonner, Aoyama and Fonner, Increased Reporting of Menstrual Symptoms among Women Who Used Induced Abortion, 127 AM. J. OF OBSTETRICS AND GYNECOLOGY 356 (1977).

V. Rue, Pelvic Inflammatory Disease and the Role of Induced Abortion, ASSOC. FOR INTERDISCIPLINARY RESEARCH NEWSLETTER, Summer 1988 at 4.

BIBLIOGRAPHY—Continued

Schulz, Grimes and Cates, Measures to Prevent Cervical Injuries During Suction Curettage Abortion, LANCET, May 28, 1983 at 1182.

Slater, The Effect of Abortion Method on the Outcome of Subsequent Pregnancy, 26 J. OF REPRO. MED. 123 (1981).

Tietze and Lewis, Joint Program for the Study of Abortion, 3 STUD. FAMILY PLANNING 97 (1971).

Tollefson and Garvey, Conversion Disorder Following Termination of Pregnancy, 16 J. FAM. PRACTICE 73 (1983).

Trichopoulos, Induced Abortion and Secondary Infertility, 83 BR. J. OF OBSTETRICS AND GYNECOLOGY 645 (1976).

Westergaard, Significance of Cervical Chlamydia Trachomates Infection in Post-Abortal Pelvic Inflammatory Disease, 60 OBSTETRICS AND GYNECOLOGY 322 (1982).

W.H.O. Task Force, Gestation, Birth Weight and Spontaneous Abortion in Pregnancy after Induced Abortion, LANCET, 142, Jan. 20, 1979 at 142.

Wong, Wong and Chang, Epidemiology of Meconium Staining of Amniotic Fluid in Hong Kong, 25 AUST-NZ J. OF OBSTETRICS AND GYNECOLOGY 90 (1985).

BIBLIOGRAPHY—Continued

Studies from Table 3

Calef, The hostility of parents to children: Some notes on infertility, child abuse and abortions, 1 INT. J. OF PSYCHOANALYTIC PSYCHOTHERAPY 79 (1972).

Cavenar, Maltbie and Sullivan, Psychiatric Sequelae of Therapeutic Abortion, 39 N.C. MEDICAL J. 101 (1978).

M. Deutsch, Personality Factors, Self-Concept, and Family Variables Related to First Time and Repeat Abortion-Seeking Behavior in Adolescent Women (1982) (unpublished doctoral dissertation, American University).

Furlong and Black, Pregnancy Termination for Genetic Indications, The Impact on Families, 10 SOC. WORK IN HEALTH CARE 17 (1984).

Mattinson, The Effects of Abortion on a Marriage. Abortion: Medical Progress and Social Implications, 115 CIBA FOUND. SYMP. 165 (1985).

Ney, Relationship Between Abortion and Child Abuse, 24 CAN. J. OF PSYCHIATRY 610 (1979).

Ney, A Consideration of Abortion Survivors, 13 CHILD PSYCHIATRY AND HUMAN DEV. 168 (1983).

Ney, Facilitating the Process of Grieving a Pregnancy; Helping Patients Cope Well with Pregnancy Loss, CONTEMPORARY OBSTETRICS AND GYNECOLOGY (June 1987).

Perez-Reyes and Falk, Follow-up after Therapeutic Abortion in Early Adolescence, 28 ARCHIVES OF GENERAL PSYCHIATRY 120 (1973).

S. Plattner, Conceptual systems and sex role attitudes and beliefs and their effect on short-term abortion outcome (1979) (unpublished doctoral dissertation, Univ. of Colorado).

Reardon, The Impact of Induced Abortion on Surviving Siblings: Case Studies, ASSOC. FOR INTERDISCIPLINARY RESEARCH, Fall 1988 at 2.

Rue, Abortion in Relationship Context, INT. REV. OF NATURAL FAMILY PLANNING 95 (1985).

APPENDIX C[1]

ABORTION IN THE UNITED STATES

Year	Number of Abortions [a]	Abortion Rate * [a]	Abortion Ratio  [a]	% Repeat  [b]	% Under 19 Yrs. [b]	% Not Married [b]	Late * [b]
1972	587,000	—	—	—	—	—	—
1973	745,000	16.3	193	—	32.8	71.0	14.6
1974	899,000	19.3	220	15.2	32.5	72.4	12.0
1975	1,034,000	21.7	249	21.5	32.9	73.7	10.8
1976	1,179,000	24.2	265	22.7	32.1	75.4	9.8
1977	1,317,000	26.4	286	26.6	31.3	77.2	9.0
1978	1,410,000	27.7	294	29.5	30.8	76.5	8.9
1979	1,498,000	28.8	297	31.7	30.8	78.5	8.8
1980	1,554,000	29.3	300	33.0	29.6	79.4	8.7
1981	1,577,000	29.3	300	35.1	28.5	81.1	8.8
1982	1,574,000†	28.8	299	36.8	27.5	80.9	8.1
1983	1,515,000‡	27.4	294	38.8	27.1	81.3	9.5
1984	1,577,000	28.1	297	—	—	—	—
1985	1,589,000	28.0	298	—	—	—	—
1986	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
1987	—	—	—	42.9	25.5	81.5	—

* Per 1,000 Women 15-44.

 Per 1,000 known pregnancies (live births plus abortions).

 Women Having Second or More Abortion.

* Thirteen or More Weeks from Last Menstrual Period.

[a] Center for Disease Control, Abortion Surveillance, Annual Summary, 1978, at Table 1 (1980) (for 1972); Henshaw, Forrest, Sullivan & Tietze, Abortion in the United States, 1979 and 1980, 14 Fam. Plan. Perspectives 1, 6 (1982) (for 1973-80) (est. 3%-6% shortfall in data); Henshaw, Forrest & Blaine, Abortion Services in the United States, 1981 and 1982, 16 Fam. Plan. Persepectives 119, 121 (1984) (for 1981-82); Henshaw, Trends in Abortion, 1982-84, 18 Fam. Plan. Perspectives 34 (1986); Contraception and Abortion Costs Are Tiny Portion of U.S. Health Spending, id. at 37; Henshaw, Forrest & Van Vort, Abortion Services in the United States, 1984 and 1985, 19 Fam. Plan. Perspectives 63 (1987) (for 1985).

[b] Forrest, Sullivan & Tietze, Abortion in the United States, 1977-78, 11 Fam. Plan. Perspectives 329 (1979) (for 1973-78); Henshaw & O'Reilly, Characteristics of Abortion Patients in the United States, 1979 and 1980, 15 Fam. Plan. Perspectives 5 (1983) (for 1979-80); Henshaw, Binkin, Blaine, & Smith, A Portrait of American Women Who Obtain Abortions, 17 Fam. Plan. Perspectives 90 (1985) (for 1980-81); Henshaw, Characteristics of U.S. Women Having Abortions, 1982-1983, 19 U.S. Fam. Plan. Perspectives 5 (1987) (for 1982-83); Henshaw, The Characteristics and Prior Contraceptive Use of U.S. Abortion Patients, 20 Fam. Plan. Perspectives 158 (1988) (for 1987).

† Total cost for all abortions in 1982—$484 million. 18 Fam. Plan. Perspectives 37 (1986).

‡ Average amount paid for 1,068,000 first-trimester abortions in 1983—$200 per abortion. 18 Fam. Plan. Perspectives 34 (1986).

[1] Prepared by LYNN D. WARDLE, J. REUBEN CLARK LAW SCHOOL, Brigham Young University, Provo, Utah 84602.

APPENDIX D

LODGING OF AMICI CURIAE FOCUS ON THE FAMILY, AND FAMILY RESEARCH COUNCIL OF AMERICA

Table of Contents

		Page
1.	Copies of Letters on File with This Court, Consenting to Filing of This Brief Amici Curiae	i
2.	Description of Lodging	iii
3.	Personal Accounts and Letters, Quoted in Brief Amici Curiae	L-1.1 through L-1.7
4.	Personal Accounts and Letters Received by Amici	L-2
5.	Letter from Surgeon General Koop to President Reagan (January 9, 1989)	L-4
6.	Videotape: Eclipse of Reason	separate cover

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

---

BRIEF FOR FEMINISTS FOR LIFE OF AMERICA, WOMEN EXPLOITED BY ABORTION OF GREATER KANSAS CITY, THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF PRO-LIFE NURSES, LET ME LIVE, AND ELLIOT INSTITUTE FOR SOCIAL SCIENCES RESEARCH, AS AMICI CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

CHRISTINE SMITH TORRE
3800 Centre Square West
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania 19102
(215) 833-5624
Attorney for Amici Curiae

Of Counsel:
CARLA PERANTONI WALSH
1025 Jefferson St., N.W.
Suite 500 East
Washington, D.C. 20007
(202) 342-5400

WILSON - EPES PRINTING CO., INC. - 789-0096 - WASHINGTON, D.C. 20001

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES	ii
INTEREST OF AMICI	1
SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT	1
ARGUMENT:
I. The Court's Trimester Approach To Abortion Rights Has Resulted In Unfettered Abortion On Demand	6
A. The Supreme Court Acts As The Nation's Medical Review Board	6
B. The Inherent Risks of Abortion Justify Regulation of The Abortion Procedure	9
C. The Aftermath of "Safe, Legal" Abortion—The Survivors	13
D. When Legal Means Lethal	15
E. Buttressing The Myth Of Safe, Legal Abortion—Underreporting of Maternal Mortality and Morbidity	20
II. Abortion On Demand—Abandonment and Exploitation	22
A. A Physician's Right To An Ignorant Patient	23
B. Abortion—The Unregulated Industry	27
CONCLUSION	30
APPENDIX	1a

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases Page

Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416 (1983) 6, 8, 11
Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973) 11, 12, 23, 24
Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri, et al. v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976) 24
Planned Parenthood Assn. v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 365 (1983) 24
Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) ..... passim
Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986) 3, 6, 8, 20, 24, 25, 26
Manaskie v. Rosenblume, No. 15028-83 (N.Y. 1983) reported in 4 (2) Medical Malpractice Verdicts, Settlements and Experts (Feb. 1988) 9
McNair v. Rubin, No. 4492-81 (N.Y. 1988) reported in 4 No. 2 Medical Malpractice Verdicts, Settlements & Experts (Feb. 1988) 9

Other Authorities

A. Saltenberger, Abortion Choice or Chance? (1987) 8, 9
A. M. Kimball, Deaths Caused By Pulmonary Thromboembolism After Legally Induced Abortion 132 (2) Am. J. Ob. & Gyn. (Sept. 15, 1978) .. 10
Battlefield Conditions Reported at Hospital in Inglewood, Los Angeles Times, December 3, 1987, at pt. II, 3, col. 1 ..... 16, 17
Clinic Didn't Study Records Before Abortion, State Says, St. Louis Globe Journal, November 10, 1981, at 3A Col. 1 16
Clinic Declines Comment On Abortion Death Report, St. Louis Globe Democrat, November 11, 1981, at 6A 17
Cox, The Role of The Supreme Court in American Government 114 (1976) 7
D. Horan & T. Balch, Roe v. Wade, No Justification in History, Law or Logic, in Abortion and the Constitution (1987) 6, 8

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

D. Reardon, Aborted Women, Silent No More (1987) 3, 13, 22
Doctor's Abortion Business Is Lucrative, San Diego Union Oct. 12, 1980 ..... 18, 23, 24
E. Drogin, Margaret Sanger, Father of Modern Society (1986) 19
Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, 82 Yale L. J. 920 7
For Three Women A Safe Medical Procedure Turned Deadly, Los Angeles Herald Examiner, February 22, 1988 ..... 19, 20
Frank, Induced Abortion Operations and Their Early Sequelae, 35 J. Royal College of General Practitioners 175-180 (April 1985) 9
G. Wulff, Jr. & S. Freimin, Elective Abortion Complications Seen In A Free Standing Clinic in 49 No. 3 Obstetrics and Gynecology (1976) 10
Hilgers & O'Hare, Abortion Related Maternal Mortality: An In Depth Analysis in New Perspectives on Human Abortion 69-91 (1981) 8
Hilgers & O'Hare, Abortion Related Mortality Seen in Small High-Rick Group, 16 No. 10 Ob. Gyn News 13 (May 15, 1981) 8
J. Wilke, M.D. & B. Wilke, Handbook On Abortion (1979) 21
Hospital Shut Down As Health Risk Will Reopen For Abortions Tomorrow, Los Angeles Herald Examiner, February 12, 1988 19
Kaunitz, Causes of Maternal Mortality in the United States, 65 No. 5 Obstetrics and Gynecology (May 1985) 9
Letter from Sue Liljenberg to Senator Gordon Humphrey dated June 6, 1986 ..... 13, 14
Letter from Elaine Blakely dated August 5, 1986 .. 15
On the Edge of the Racist Pit, The Daily Californian, October 14, 1980 at 4B 18
R. Castadot, Pregnancy, Termination: Techniques, Risks, and Complications Seen In a Free-Standing Clinic, in Fertility and Sterility (1986) 10

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

State Again Finds Violations At Inglewood Abortion Clinic, Daily Breeze, May 12, 1985, at 1B at col. 1 16
The Abortion Dilemma, Press-Telegram (Special Reprint of Articles appearing July 14-22, 1985).. 15
The Abortion Profiteers, Chicago Sun Times (Special Reprint December 3, 1987) 21
W. M. Hern, M.D., Abortion Practice (1984) 2

BRIEF AMICI CURIAE ON BEHALF OF FEMINISTS FOR LIFE ET AL.

INTEREST OF AMICI

Feminists For Life of America ("FFLA") Women Exploited By Abortion of Greater Kansas City ("WEBA"), The National Association of Pro-Life Nurses, Let Me Live and The Elliot Institute for Social Services Research file this brief under United States Supreme Court Rule 36, with the consent of the parties, as amici curiae in support of Appellant. These organizations, having seen the adverse physical and psychological effects of abortion on women, oppose the continued deregulation of the lucrative abortion industry, advocate the development of non-violent alternatives to crisis pregnancies and seek an end to the exploitation of women and the widespread destruction of preborn children which characterizes the current state of abortion on demand.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The decisions of the United States Supreme Court in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) and its progeny have been based upon the assumption that legal abortion is safe and beneficial to women.[1] Many women who have had legal abortions, and who are purportedly the beneficiaries of the Court's abortion rulings maintain that the very heart of the decision in Roe—"safe, legal abortion" is a myth, and that women are being exploited at the hands of the lucrative, unregulated private abortion industry which has developed in the sixteen years since Roe.

Dr. Warren M. Hern, an abortionist and author of a leading text on abortion procedures has stated that "[i]n medical practice there are few surgical procedures given so little attention and so underrated in its potential hazards as abortion."[2] Grieving families expressing their pain and outrage at the unnecessary deaths of their mothers, sisters, daughters and wives at the hands of an abortion establishment which continues to make broad assurances regarding the safety of abortion are testimony to the accuracy of Dr. Hern's statement. Aborted women who have survived hasty transfers from private abortion clinics to hospital emergency rooms with life threatening medical complications and who have sustained serious, irrevocable physical and psychological damage as a result of legal abortion are testifying to the intense pain and suffering their legal abortions cost them.

[1] Roe, 410 U.S. 148-152, 163.

Many women are seeking recompense for injuries sustained through legal abortion. Some have recovered large sums in malpractice suits against abortion profiteers, only to see those responsible for their injuries continue to victimize yet more women and girls, unhampered by any regulatory authority. Others who have brought actions for abortion deaths and injuries do not recover anything because the courts have determined that their deaths and injuries were caused not by a physician's malpractice, but are due to the inherent dangers of induced abortion, whether the procedure is legal or illegal.

Many aborted women have reported that their concerns about the potential dangers of abortion, or the ambivalence they expressed regarding the prospect of having their child killed, were simply dismissed as "irrational" by "counselors" who downplay the medical risks of abortion, and evade any real discussion of fetal characteristics or alternatives to abortion.

The self-serving silence of the abortion industry regarding the dangers to women of induced abortion has been bolstered by the Court's decisions holding that a physician may in his or her own discretion withhold information regarding the particular medical risks of abortion and other information relevant to an informed decision on the part of the woman considering an abortion.[3] Abortion is the only medical procedure known to Amici with respect to which the normal requirements for informed consent prior to undergoing a medical procedure are suspended.

[2] W.M. Hern, M.D., Abortion Practice 101 (1984) (emphasis supplied).

There is ample evidence in the medical studies and public health statistics cited herein that the unfettered right of abortion on demand foisted upon our society by the Court and by abortion advocates is a public health disaster the proportions of which we are just beginning to uncover. Although medical experts acknowledge the inherent dangers of abortion, public health authorities rely in large part upon a voluntary reporting system to collect data regarding deaths and injuries from legal abortion. Thus the very clinics and physicians causing death and injury to women are expected to police themselves and to voluntarily report the damage abortion causes despite their vested financial and political interest in maintaining current state of de facto deregulation. Amici contend that the current reporting system is woefully inadequate and that it has contributed significantly to the gross underreporting of the actual deaths and serious injuries sustained by women undergoing legal abortions.

However, studies and statistics cannot adequately describe the tragedy of the abortion establishment's exploitation of women—only the families of abortion's victims and the surviving victims themselves can adequately describe the pain they have endured. Therefore, Amici have lodged with the Court a volume containing the testimonies of abortion's victims.[4] [3] Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986) and Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., 462 U.S. 416 (1983).

[4] A small sampling of these testimonies is included in this Brief. For the Court's convenience, Amici have compiled hundreds of additional testimonies of abortion victims in the volume lodged with

The young, childless women who wanted children "someday" but have been rendered sterile by their abortions cry out from the pages for the children they so desperately want but cannot conceive and for those destroyed in abortion. The parents who were not aware of their teenager's abortion until they were called to the bedside of their dying child rail in anger against a system which requires their consent for administration of an aspirin, but forbade their participation in their daughter's decision to obtain the abortion that cost her young life. The women who were told they would feel only relief after their abortion recount the agony of discovering that the memory of the child they were urged to kill still haunts them decades after their loss. Their stories speak for themselves.

Some of abortion's victims can no longer speak for themselves. Yet even the cold, impersonal jargon of police investigative reports and death certificates[5] cannot hide the suffering of those women and young girls who have lost their lives believing in the myth of "safe, legal" abortion. They are the victims of an abortion establishment that cares more about profits or population control than about the health and welfare of pregnant women, and their unnecessary deaths are an indictment of society's failure to protect them from abortion profiteers.

---

this Brief entitled "Rachel Weeping". Testimonies of members of Women Exploited By Abortion are included in D. Reardon, Aborted Women, Silent No More (1987) copies of which have also been lodged with this Brief. Additional testimonies of aborted women are contained in Appendix D to the Brief Amicus Curiae of Focus on the Family and the Family Research Council.

[5] Documentation of legal abortion deaths has been included in the volume lodged with the Court under the caption "When Legal Means Lethal". Amici have documented only a small number of the legal abortion deaths which have occurred throughout the Nation, and have focused on a study of the abortion industry in one urban area, Los Angeles, California, which is thought to be representative of the manner in which abortions are performed in most other urban areas in the United States.

The Court's decisions in Roe and its progeny are one of the primary reasons why the abortion industry is able to operate in the virtually unregulated environment which resulted in such human tragedy. By arbitrarily striking down every conceivable type of abortion regulation and reporting requirement enacted by state legislatures both prior to and after Roe, the Court has placed itself in the position of a "national medical review board" which makes judgments on the questions of the safety (or lack thereof) of abortion, the existence and extent of adverse abortion sequalae, what types of relevant information can be withheld from women regarding the particular medical risks of abortion (and who has the power to dispense or withhold such information) and what constitute appropriate methods for compiling health statistics crucial to the development of sound national health policies. And because a "right of privacy" was the chosen vehicle for adoption of a policy of abortion on demand, the abortion industry and its practices have themselves been wrapped in a cloak of "secrecy" amounting to de facto deregulation of the industry. As a result, both the Court itself and the federal judiciary have been legislating health policy since Roe without reliable data concerning the dangers of abortion, and without the ability to engage in the kind of broad investigations and fact finding which legislatures can undertake prior to the enactment of legislation as important as abortion regulation.

To reaffirm Roe would be inimical to the interests of the very women whose "rights" are purportedly protected by Roe and its progeny. Therefore, Amici urge that the Court reconsider and overturn Roe and return to appropriate legislative bodies the power to regulate abortion. Otherwise, "the 'undesired and uncomfortable straitjacket' . . . [which] . . . the Court has tailored for the 50 States"[6] will most surely result in still more tragic losses of the lives and health of women and their pre-born children.

ARGUMENT

I. THE COURT'S TRIMESTER APPROACH TO ABORTION RIGHTS HAS RESULTED IN UNFETTERED ABORTION ON DEMAND.

A. The Supreme Court Acts As The Nation's Medical Review Board.

Roe purportedly allowed the States to regulate abortions in the furtherance of two legitimate state interests: protection of maternal health and protection of the fetus. Roe, 410 U.S. at 162. Yet it must be remembered that, in pronouncing its factual findings regarding the safety of abortion and the stage at which a preborn child becomes viable, the Court in a single, powerful stroke invalidated statutes regulating abortion in every single State in the nation.[7] Indeed, "[e]ven the law of New York, the 'abortion capital of the country,' which allowed abortion on request through the twenty-fourth week of pregnancy, was too protective of the unborn . . ." [8] to withstand scrutiny by the United States Supreme Court once it had decided to act as "the Nation's 'ex officio medical review board, with powers to approve or disapprove medical and operative practices and standards throughout the United States' ".[9] A cursory review of Roe's progeny reveals that the promise of even a modicum of regulatory protection for women and their preborn children has proven illusory, as even the most innocuous attempts at regulation by State legislatures have fallen victim to the Court's own assessment of its superior fact finding capabilities with respect to the safety of abortion and what constitutes accepted medical procedure.

---

[6] Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 833 (O'Connor, J., dissenting).

[7] D. Horan & T. Balch, Roe v. Wade, No Justification in History, Law or Logic, in Abortion and the Constitution 58 (1987) (hereinafter "Abortion and The Constitution").

[8] Id. (citations omitted).

[9] Akron, 462 U.S. at 456 (O'Connor, J., dissenting) (citation omitted).

That the Court was promulgating legislation in Roe is apparent upon examination of the intricate scaffolding of medical theories and technological assessments upon which it was constructed. One critic of Roe aptly summarized the widespread reaction to this approach among constitutional scholars when he stated that "[n]either historian, layman, nor lawyer will be persuaded that all the details prescribed in Roe v. Wade are part of either natural law or the Constitution." [10]

The majority in Roe purported to have conscientiously reviewed the medical "evidence" regarding the safety of various types of abortion procedures at various stages of pregnancy and discovered an incontrovertible medical "fact":

> With respect to the State's important and legitimate interest in the health of the mother, the "compelling" point, in light of present medical knowledge, is at approximately the end of the first trimester. This is so because of the now-established medical fact . . . that until the end of the first trimester mortality in abortion may be less than mortality in normal childbirth.[11]

Roe, 113 U.S. at 163 (emphasis supplied). Conversely, the Court's medical "finding" that second and third trimester abortions were statistically more dangerous for women than childbirth provided the rationale for its holding that "from and after [the end of the first trimester], a State may regulate the abortion procedure to the extent that the regulation reasonably relates to the preservation and protection of maternal health." [12] Id. (emphasis supplied).

---

[10] Cox, The Role of the Supreme Court in American Government 114 (1976).

[11] There was by no means unanimity of opinion in the medical community regarding this "fact" in 1973. Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, 82 Yale L.J. 920, 942 n.117.

[12] As Justice O'Connor's powerful dissents in Akron and Thornburgh point out, even the types of regulation supposedly permitted in Roe failed to pass constitutional muster as new medical "findings"

While the Court's medical findings regarding the relative safety of abortion as compared to childbirth have been widely criticized as being both inaccurate [13] and an inappropriate standard [14] upon which to construct the trimester approach on which Roe's holding depends, perhaps the most important question is why such findings are relevant at all. The Court's medical findings, even assuming they were correct "provide no basis for concluding that there is no state interest in health regulations during the first trimester. 'The Court gave no reason why it should make a difference whether it is safer to undergo an abortion or carry the pregnancy to full term. . . . [T]hough it may be safer for a particular patient to undergo open heart surgery than to forego the operation and do nothing, the state still has an interest in ensuring that if the patient chooses to have the operation, it is performed as safely as possible.' " [15]

The Court ignored the well-established principle that the States, in the exercise of their police powers and in by the Court invalidated regulations previously thought to have been constitutional. Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 828-33 and Akron, 462 U.S. at 452-72.

---

[13] Hilgers & O'Hare, Abortion Related Maternal Mortality: An In-Depth Analysis, in New Perspectives on Human Abortion 69-91 (1981).

[14] While there are certain medical risks associated with pregnancy and childbirth, studies examining maternal mortality and morbidity "arise primarily from a small group of high risk patients". A. Saltenberger, Abortion Choice or Chance? 62 (1987) citing Most Mother Child Mortality Seen in Small High-Risk Group, 16 Ob. Gyn. News 13, May 15, 1981. Yet, the vast majority of abortions are performed on young women who are not aborting due to medical risks. Thus the women and young girls who are most likely to obtain an abortion are those less likely as a group to be at risk for medical complications associated with pregnancy and childbirth. See Appendix C "Abortion In America" in Brief Amicus Curiae of Focus on the Family and the Family Research Council.

[15] Abortion and The Constitution, supra at 77 quoting Comment, Technological Advances and Roe v. Wade: The Need To Rethink Abortion Law, 29 U.C.L.A.L. Rev. 1194, 1199 n.41 (1982).

the interest of their citizens' health and safety, regulate medical and surgical procedures as a matter of course. Therefore, unless it can be established that there are no dangers of any kind to women inherent in the abortion procedure itself, or in the manner in which it is carried out, regulation of abortion by the States should be allowed even in the first trimester of pregnancy.

B. The Inherent Risks of Abortion Justify Regulation of The Abortion Procedure.

It is irrefutable that there are a number of known medical risks associated with abortion, regardless of its "legality" or "illegality",[16] and while there is debate regarding the true complication rate [17] there is a well established pattern of potentially lethal complications of abortion, including cardiac arrest, hemorrhage, infection, inflammation of the heart, water intoxication, septic shock, disseminated intravascular coagulation, amniotic fluid embolism [18], pulmonary embolism, salt poisoning, and swelling of the brain.[19] Despite these dangers, legal abor-

---

[16] Kaunitz, Causes of Maternal Mortality in the United States, 65 Obstetrics and Gynecology (May 1985); see, e.g. Manaskie v. Rosenblume, No. 15028-83 (N.Y. 1983) in 4, No. 2 Medical Malpractice Verdicts, Settlements and Experts (Feb. 1988) ($75,000 verdict for 24 year old woman who suffered a vaginal tear and a ruptured cervix during a first trimester abortion and suffered two miscarriages thereafter) and testimonies of women included in this Brief.

[17] One study has indicated that the medical risks of abortion taken together produce an immediate complication rate of ten percent—that is, physical complications of abortion in 300,000 women annually. Frank, Induced Abortion Operations and Their Early Ssequelae, 35 J. Royal College of General Practitioners 175-180 (April 1985).

[18] See e.g. McNair v. Rubin, No. 4492-81 (N.Y. 1988) reported in 4, No. 2 Medical Malpractice Verdicts, Settlements & Experts (Feb. 1988) ($701,500 verdict for estate of 24 year old mother of two who died of amniotic fluid embolism after a second dose of saline solution to induce abortion).

[19] A. Saltenberger, What Every Woman Should Know About Legal Abortion 28-32 (1982) (hereinafter "Legal Abortion"). See tions can be performed in hospitals, doctors' offices, storefront clinics or virtually any place an abortionist chooses to perform the procedure. In 1982, 82% of abortions took place in nonhospital facilities.[20]

It is well recognized that the risks associated with late abortions are much greater than those associated with abortions performed in early pregnancy, one researcher having calculated that "between 16 and 20 weeks gestation, the risk of death is 25 times greater than before 8 weeks gestation." [21] Yet the post-Roe decisions consistently thwart attempts by the State to impose requirements that abortions performed after a particular point in pregnancy take place in hospitals.[22] Notwithstanding Roe, which reserved to the States the authority to promulgate reasonable regulations of second-trimester abortion in the interest of maternal health, the Court has

---

R. Castadot, M.D., M.H. P., Pregnancy Termination: techniques, risks, and complications and their management in Fertility and Sterility 5 (1986) (hereinafter "Castadot"); G. Wulff, Jr. M.D. FACOG and S. Freiman, M.D., Elective Abortion Complications Seen In a Free-Standing Clinic, 49, No. 3 Obstetrics and Gynecology 351 (1976); A. M. Kinball, Deaths Caused By Pulmonary Thromoembolism After Legally Induced Abortion, 132(2) Am. J. Ob. & Gyn. 169-74 (Sept. 15, 1978).

[20] Castadot, supra at 13.

[21] Castadot, supra at 10, citing C. Tyler, Jr., Epidemiology of Abortion, 26 J. Reprod. Med. 459 (1981).

[22] Some critics of non-hospital abortions maintain that because a free-standing clinic may lack blood banks, a staff skilled in resuscitation, and surgical facilities to deal with emergencies that the risk of death and morbidity may be higher in non-hospital abortion. Legal Abortion, supra at 39. Lack of adequate resuscitation equipment may contribute to a greater number of anesthesia and analgesia deaths outside a hospital setting. Id. citing, D. A. Grimes, Comparative Risk of Death from Legally Induced Abortion in Hospitals and Non-Hospital Facilities, 51 Ob. & Gyn. 323-326 (March 1978). Query whether some of the legal abortion deaths at the Inglewood Abortion Clinic and Hers Medical Clinic in Los Angeles discussed below might have been prevented if they occurred in a fully equiped medical center?

invalidated provisions requiring hospitalization for such abortions.[26]

In Akron the Court invalidated as unreasonable a municipal ordinance requiring hospitalization for second-trimester abortions because the State failed to show that "accepted medical practice" at the time the decision was rendered called for hospitalization for all abortions after the first trimester. 462 U.S. at 435-37.

Thus, the Court declared essentially that States would be permitted to regulate the abortion industry only to the extent that such regulations coincide with he most recently revised minimum standards of the industry itself. Therefore, the standard of reasonableness is the standard set by those who perform abortions. However, abortion deaths in freestanding clinics and complications of abortion requiring hospitalization clearly demonstrate that it may be reasonable for a State to require hospitalization as an extra measure of protection as the line approaches that at which the safety of hospitalized, as opposed to unhospitalized, abortions becomes less clear.

Perhaps the most serious flaw in the Court's trimester approach as it relates to maternal health concerns is that the Court's "abortion safety" data focused upon the deaths of aborted women, without even considering the morbidity (medical complications short of death) of abortion. This is astonishing in light of the fact that the Court adopted an extremely broad definition of "health of the mother", for purposes of determining when a viable preborn child could be aborted. The Court stated that the physician's medical judgment concerning the "health of the mother":

> . . . may be exercised in light of all factors—physical, emotional, psychological, familial, and the woman's age—relevant to the well-being of the patient.

---

[23] Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, 193-95 (1973) (striking down a Georgia statute requiring hospitalization for all abortions.)

> All these factors may relate to health. This allows the attending psysician the room he needs to make his best medical judgment. And it is room that operates for the benefit, not the disadvantage of the pregnant woman.[24]

The Court thus appears to set a "double standard" for its definition of "health of the mother". When the question is what latitude should be given in the decision to abort, the definition is extremely broad. However, when the question is how "safe" abortion is for women, the only standard which the Court finds relevant is how many women die from abortion at a particular stage of pregnancy. No assessment is made of the impact of abortion on the mother's overall physical, psychological and emotional health. In light of the fact that one million five hundred thousand abortions are performed annually in the United States, an assessment of the overall impact of induced abortion upon a woman's health is crucial. Amici contend that abortion on demand has not produced the health bonanza proclaimed by its proponents, but rather has created a public health hazard the scope of which is just beginning to come to light. There are other inherent risks of induced abortion which damage women's health and may affect a woman's ability to bear children in the future, including cervical trauma resulting in incompetent cervix and subsequent miscarriage, pelvic inflammatory disease, RH isoimmunization, subsequent fetal malformations and a substantially increased risk of potentially lethal ectopic pregnancy. See the Brief Amicus Curiae of Focus on the Family and the Family Research Council which contains an extensive discussion of the physical complications of induced abortion, including citations to studies which have established the existence of such adverse abortion sequelae.

In addition to the obvious physical complications, abortion has a profound psychological impact upon many women [25] that can be seen in the testimonies of women who have undergone abortion. Since the absolute safety of abortion, whether in the first trimester or thereafter, cannot be established, there is no justification for complete deregulation of the procedure. Therefore, the States should be allowed to regulate abortion throughout pregnancy.

[24] Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. at 19-92 (citation omitted (emphasis supplied).

C. The Aftermath of "Safe, Legal" Abortion—The Survivors.

Sue Liljenberg, who was a teenager when she obtained a "safe, legal" abortion, had no immediate physical complications. The passing years have revealed the self-destductive behavior and sterility that are the price she paid for exercising her "right to choose."

> . . . I'm a victim of abortion and, even if it takes until my last breath, I must be heard.
>
> When I was 17 I found myself in a crisis pregnancy. . . . When I went to the local family planning clinic, I sought guidance and wanted to know what I could do about my situation. I wanted a helping hand. When I walked into the clinic, I trusted the nurses and doctors, and thought they were concerned about my health enough to help me make a decision, not make my decision for me.
>
> Only one solution was strongly recommended that day. When I questioned the development of my baby, I was told it wasn't a baby yet, and that it looked like a tadpole. Since that day I have learned differently. . . . I was told that abortion was simple and safe and that I could go and live the rest of my life and have children when I was in a position to provide for them. I heard no scientific facts that day, only biased opinions. I was not told what abortion itself could do to me in the years to come, only that it was "safe and simple". I was not told that I would abuse myself with alcohol, try to kill myself, > develop an eating disorder, and have terrible dreams. Worst of all, I was not told that I might never have another child. It has been 14 years since my "safe and simple" abortion and I have never been able to have another child.

[25] See D. Reardon, Aborted Women, Silent No More (1987) (the culmination of three years of research and interviews with aborted women).

Letter from Sue Liljenberg to Sen. Gordon Humphrey, dated June 6, 1986 (emphasis supplied). Can it be doubted that a young woman who was told she could have the children she wanted "someday," and yet will never hold her own child in her arms, is harmed irrevocably by abortion on demand? What about the impact of abortion upon her physical, psychological and emotional health?

Another woman, Elaine Blakely of Hunstville, Alabama describes the "safe, legal" abortion she had in 1976:

> I am a woman who was exploited by abortion ten years ago. My abortion was free, legal and by no means performed in a "back alley" facility. In fact, the abortion facility was recommended by Planned Parenthood. Since I was not working at the time, Planned Parenthood happily gave me a "free pass" for the abortion. I didn't even have to pay for the abortion.
>
> . . . .
>
> At the Kansas City abortion clinic, I was given a pelvic exam . . . Contrary to what I was told, the abortion hurt very much and it led to severe complications. The "doctor" who performed my abortion perforated my uterus, cut an artery, and traumatized my colon. The doctor left me alone there with the "counselors" and one "nurse" for one and a half hours. After all of the other patients had left the abortion facility, I was rushed by ambulance to a hospital across the state line for observation and blood transfusions. The ambulance rushed me to the hospital with lights flashing and sirens blaring in an attempt to save my life. The complaint that back alley abortions kill girls must be seen in light of the fact that girls are dying today from LEGAL abortions.

> In order to save my life, a few hours later a hysterectomy was performed at the Kansas City, Missouri hospital. I am telling you this because I am an adult. I was misled into believing it was a simple procedure with no complications. Since then I have had eighty percent of my colon removed.

Letter to Gordon Humphrey from Elaine Blakely dated August 5, 1986.

Are Sue Liljenberg, Elaine Blakely and tens of thousands of women who have also suffered the physical and psychological, and emotional trauma of legal abortion entitled to protection by their "health" by State legislatures or are their lives and health expendable in the quest for unfettered abortion on demand?

D. When Legal Means Lethal.[26]

Abortion proponents' claims regarding the safety of legal abortion lead one to believe that there is virtually no risk of injury, let alone death, from legal abortion.[27] Yet, the discussion below of a few of the twenty-nine legal abortion deaths in Los Angeles County, California alone belies the assertion that abortion is "safe" simply because it is legal,[28] and reveals the horrendous practices

---

[26] Adapted from A. Saltenberber, The Threat of Abortion: When Legal Means Lethal (1978).

[27] The Center For Disease Control has made some sweeping claims for the "safety" of legal abortion. One spokesman for the CDC was quoted as saying that [i]t is one of the safest surgeries performed." The Abortion Dilemma, Press-Telegram (Special Reprint of Articles appearing July 14-22, 1985) at 10, col. 1.

[28] Other legal abortion deaths are also described herein and in the volume entitled "Rachel Weeping" which has been lodged with this Brief. The inherent dangers of death from legal abortion are also demonstrated by the death of Diane Boyd in October 1981 after an abortion performed at Reproductive Health Services, one of the named plaintiffs in the instant case. Diane Boyd, a 19 year old retarded black woman who underwent a court ordered abortion at the plaintiff clinic died of cardiac arrest after the administration of the drugs Sublimaze and Valium. Clinic Didn't Study Records Before Abortion, State Says, St. Louis Globe Journal, Nov. 10, and substandard medical care provided in freestanding clinics which are largely unregulated by public health authorities.

Inglewood Women's Hospital, which performed approximately 1000 abortions a month in its single operating room was the site where several young women met their deaths obtaining "safe, legal" abortions. The substandard conditions at the clinic came to light in 1985 when it was reported that, for the second time within a year, county health officials had cited the abortion facilities for deficiencies in more than 20 areas.[29] In response to both inspections, hospital officials said steps would be taken to correct the deficiencies. However, by the time the horrendous conditions at the abortion clinic were again acknowledged by public health officials,[30] it was too late to save 37 year old Belinda Byrd, a mother of three who underwent an abortion at Inglewood on January 24, 1987 and died three days later.[31] A suit filed in Los Angeles Superior Court alleges that Belinda Byrd's uterus was lacerated and that she lay bleeding and unattended for hours in a hospital bed at the abortion facility until she suffered a heart attack. Paramedics were summoned and Belinda was rushed to Centinela Medical Center in Inglewood where she died.[32] Yet another "deficiency report" was issued by county health officials which described patients being rushed through abortions performed in an operating room where the tables and floors were stained with the blood of previous patients. The report stated that some patients "were encouraged to leave the facility before they were comfortable doing so" and some were not examined at all after surgery although the physicians signed paper work approving their discharge. The abortion facility, which had been cited twice in 1986, had in response to each inspection submitted a "correction plan" which was invariably accepted by the county health officials.

1981 at 3A; Clinic Declines Comment On Abortion Death Report, St. Louis Globe Democrat, Nov. 11, 1981, at 6A.

[29] These included the dispensing of medication not ordered by physicians, failure to sanitize reusable items between uses, not following proper infection control techniques, failure to keep an operation register that would detail complications suffered by patients, and overcrowding in the recovery room which allegedly often held four patients when there was only enough equipment to monitor two patients. State Again Finds Violations At Inglewood Abortion Clinic, Daily Breeze, May 14, 1985, at 1B, col. 1.

[30] 'Battlefield Conditions' Reported at Hospital In Inglewood, Los Angeles Times, December 3, 1987, at pt. II, 8, col. 4.

[31] At least two other young black women died after abortions at Inglewood—23 year old Cora Mae Lewis in 1983 and 22 year old Yvonne Tanner in 1984.

The years of bureaucratic delays in taking action to close the facility, and the lack of prosecution of the physician who had performed Belinda's abortion added to the anguish her family felt over her death. Her mother, in desperation, finally wrote to a Los Angeles district attorney:

> I am the mother of Belinda A. Byrd, victim of abortionists at 426 E. 99th Street in Inglewood. I am also the grandmother of her three young children who are left behind and motherless. I cry every day when I think how horrible her death was. She was slashed by them and then she bled to death, taken from this world on January 27, 1987. She has been stone dead for two years now, and nobody cares.

[32] 'Battlefield Conditions' Reported at Hospital in Inglewood, Los Angeles Times, December 3, 1987 at pt. II, 8, col. 4. A complaint was made by County-USC Medical Center that the abortion clinic had transferred its patients in unstable condition and without notice to the Medical Center's emergency room, in violation of a federal law against "dumping" patients in emergency rooms.

[33] See "When Legal Means Lethal" in the volume lodged with this Brief.

[34] Ibid. It is common practice for abortionists to "rush" through abortions in two to five minutes, despite the increased risk of cervical trauman and uterine lacerations resulting from such practices. See note 43 infra.

I know that other young black women are now dead after abortion at that address—Cora Mae Lewis and Yvonne Tanner.

Where is [the abortionist] now? Has he been stopped? Has anything happened to him because of what he did to my Belinda? Has he served jail time for any of these cruel deaths?

People tell me nothing has happened, that nothing ever happens to white abortionists who leave young black women dead. I'm hurting real bad and want some justice for Belinda and all other women who go like sheep to slaughter.

Sincerely,
Mrs. Mattie Byrd [35]

---

[35] See, "When Legal Means Lethal" in the volume lodged with the Court. The highly inflammatory remarks attributed by several newspapers to Dr. Edward Allred, owner of the largest chain of abortion clinics in California, had caused some to attribute the abortion deaths of several Black and Hispanic women to racial prejudice. On The Edge of the Racist Pit, The Daily Californian, October 14, 1980, at 4B col. 1. Doctor Labeled 'Racist' In Abortion Suit, at B-1, col. 1 (describing a $14 million lawsuit filed against Dr. Allred in connection with the abortion death of 16 year old Patricia Chacon in which it was alleged that Chacon had "received substanard medical treatment as a result of her race and ancestry, rather than medical treatment based on her . . . condition and needs". Id. at col. 2, quoting Jack Schuler, attorney for Patricia Chacon's parents). The following remarks upon which the allegation was made had been attributed to Dr. Allred in a story which appeared in the San Diego Union:

> Population control is too important to be stopped by some right-wing pro-life types. Take the new influx of Hispanic immigrants. Their lack of respect of democracy and social order is frightening. I hope I can do something to stem that tide; I'd set up a clinic in Mexico for free if I could. Maybe one in Calexico would help. The survival of our society could be at stake. . . . The Aid to Families With Dependent Children program is the worst boondoggle ever created. When a sullen black woman can decide to have a baby and get welfare and food stamps and become a burden to all of us it's time to stop. In parts of South Los Angeles having babies for welfare is the only industry the people have.

Doctor's Abortion Business Is Lucrative, San Diego Union, B-1, col. 1 (October 12, 1980). Dr. Allred's aversion to government

Belinda Byrd's mother has resorted to putting up posters in the neighborhood asking the women of Watts to urge the district attorney to take action against Inglewood's abortionists. An isolated case of the one "bad apple"? Unfortunately not.

The license which allowed Inglewood to receive Medicaid and Medi-Cal was ultimately revoked. The abortionits reopened their abortion business as West Coast Medical Group, an unlicensed clinic not subject to state scrutiny or regulation.[36]

Three young women brought to the emergency room at California Medical Center in critical condition after undergoing abortions at Her Medical Clinic in Los Angeles have died since August 1986.[37] Donna Heim, a 20 year old pre-school teacher, who was 5½ months pregnant went to the clinic and received anesthesia despite having noted on her medical forms that she had asthma. According to the coronor's report, approximately 10 minutes into the procedure, the nurse-anesthetist told the physician performing the abortion that Donna was hav-subsidies did not prevent him from collecting approximately $3 million in public subsidies in 1980 for performing abortions. Dr. Allred's statements reflect the same philosophy as demonstrated by Margaret Sanger, the founder and heroine of Planned Parenthood when she said "[t]he most successful educational approach to the Negro is through a religious appeal. We do not want the word to go out that we want to exterminate the Negro population, and the minister is the man who can straighten out that idea if it ever occurs to any of their more rebellious members." E. Drogin, Margaret Sanger, Father of Modern Society 33 (1986), citing Gordon, Woman's Body, Woman's Right: A Social History of Birth Control in America 33 (1976).

---

[36] Hospital Shut Down As Health Risk Will Reopen For Abortions Tomorrow, Los Angeles Herald Examiner, February 12, 1988 at A-1, col. 1 and A-15, col. 1 (quoting Los Angeles County's supervisor of hospital inspections as saying "It does seem sort of silly though doesn't it? If they're so unsafe they can't keep their [hospital] license, why should they be able to operate as a clinic?").

[37] For Three Women A Safe Medical Procedure Turned Deadly, Los Angeles Herald Examiner, February 22, 1988, at 1 col. 3.

ing difficulty breathing, but the physician ignored her and continued the abortion for another five minutes before turning his attention to Donna. After an emergency tracheotomy failed, the abortion clinic then called paramedics who rushed Donna to the California Medical Center. She was unresponsive and comatose upon arrival, and was pronounced dead the following day.[38] One month later, 22 year old Liliana Cortez also died after suffering cardiac arrest during an abortion at Her Medical Center. And one year later, 18 year old Michelle Thames, died at California Medical Center after an abortion at the same freestanding abortion clinic.[39]

Because Her Medical Center is run as a private physician's office it is not open to inspection by public health thorities, and it is continuing to perform abortions.

E. Buttressing The Myth Of Safe, Legal Abortion—Underreporting of Maternal Mortality and Morbidity.

Maintaining the myth of "safe, legal" abortion is crucial to supporters of abortion on demand. Anxious to convince women, politicians and the public at large that abortion is safe, they repeatedly cite statistics regarding abortion mortality and morbidity which, for the reasons described below, represent a gross underreporting of deaths and complications of abortion. The Court's post-Roe decisions concerning recordation and reporting of abortion-related information have made it virtually impossible for those States seeking to obtain even a minimum of information regarding the mortality and morbidity of abortion to tailor recordkeeping requirements to the exigencies of the Court's constitutional tests.[40]

---

[38] Id., at A-7 cols. 2-3.

[39] Id., at A-7, cols. 4-6.

[40] Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 765-68 (refusing to recognize that the information which the Pennsylvania legislature required be reported to Pennsylvania public health officials concerning physical complications of abortion serves the legitimate goal of advancing the state of medical knowledge concerning maternal and fetal health.)

By striking down the minimal recordkeeping requirements fashioned by the Pennsylvania legislature, the Court assured that the "system" of collecting data concerning abortion morbidity and mortality would continue to rely solely upon the cooperation and self-policing of the clinics and physicians involved in abortion deaths or complications.

That the abortion industry is not policing itself in any regard, let alone in the reporting of abortion deaths and complications, is apparent from interviews with and testimonies of aborted women and former abortion providers, the abortionists' own descriptions of their "assembly line" procedures, and from the horrifying practices uncovered in the few investigations of the abortion industry undertaken by newspaper reporters and others.[41] To contend that all abortionists supply relevant information concerning the mortality and morbidity of abortion given such practices is disingenuous.

The unreliability of abortion safety data on which the medical profession and public health authorities depend can be illustrated most easily by comparing the number of maternal deaths from abortion reported annually for the State of California, with the number of deaths from legal abortion which have been documented herein and in the volume lodged with this Brief under the caption "When Legal Means Lethal". The State of California Yet there is incontrovertible evidence from death certifi-

---

[41] See the discussion of exploitive practices by the abortion industry in Section II infra, J. Wilke, M.D. & B. Wilke, Handbook On Abortion 78-80, 89 (1979). See also Pamela Zekman and Pamela Warrick, The Abortion Profiteers, Chicago Sun Times, special reprint December 3, 1978 (original publication November 12, 1978) Zekman and Warrick reveal how undercover investigators in abortion clinics found that clinic employees routinely checked off "no complications" before the surgery was even performed.

reported no deaths from abortion during 1983 and 1984.[42] cates, police reports, coroner's reports and other sources that at least four women and teenage girls have died from legal abortion in Los Angeles County alone during 1983 and 1984—23 year old Cora Mae Lewis, 16 year old Patricia Chacon, 43 year old Mary Pena, and 22 year old Yvonne Tanner. The stories of these women and others who have met their deaths and suffered physical and psychological injury in abortion clinics throughout the Nation provide a brief glimpse of the exploitive nature of the abortion industry.

II. ABORTION ON DEMAND—ABANDONMENT AND EXPLOITATION OF WOMEN.

When the Court made its initial foray into the business of formulating the Nation's abortion policy, it did not even remotely envision the surgical "assembly line", commercialization, and exploitation which many aborted women say characterize their experiences with the abortion industry. Rather, the majority in Roe apparently envisioned a reasoned, one-on-one consultation [43] between [42] State of California, Department of Vital Statistics, Death Records, Table A-2, Maternal Deaths By Selected Causes of Dealth, California, 1960-1984 (By Place Of Residence) in California Vital Statistics (1986). It is clear that the Department of Health Services either knew nothing of the deaths which occurred in 1983 and 1984 when it issued its report, or for some other reason simply did not report them as abortion deaths. In either case, this is but one example of the underreporting of deaths from legal abortion which takes place across the Nation, and is illustrative of why conclusions drawn from the current data cannot be relied upon. Failure to report abortion deaths is not limited to California. In an investigation of only four abortion clinics of the twenty operating in Chicago in 1979, the Chicago Sun Times uncovered 12 unreported abortion deaths. Aborted Women at 109 (citation omitted). Even when previously unreported abortion deaths such as those that occurred in Chicago and Los Angeles are uncovered, they are generally not included in the 'official' total since they were not reported as such on the original death certificate. Id. at 109 citing Wilke, Handbook on Abortion 81-92 (1979).

[43] Roe, 410 U.S. 163-166 (stating that the abortion decision was to be made "by the physician after consulting with the woman considthe pregnant woman and a physician who took the time to become familiar not only with the woman's medical history, but who knew the woman well enough to take into consideration "all of the factors—physical, emotional, psychological, familial, and the woman's age—relevant to . . . [her] well-being . . ." [44] when discussing the relative risks and benefits of abortion and childbirth.

However, the Court's vision of how a decision to abort would be reached and effectuated bears no resemblance to the reality which many women have experienced at the hands of an abortion industry some segments of which appear to be maximizing profits at the expense of women's lives and health.

Abortion is a lucrative business [45] the profitability of which depends upon speed, efficiency and minimizing contact between the physician and the pregnant woman.[46] Dr. Edward Allred, whose chain of abortion clinics was said to have grossed $12 million annually as of 1981, and performs approximately 60,000 abortions each year, has stated that "[v]ery commonly we hear patients say they feel like they're on an assembly line. We tell them they're right. It is an assembly line. . . We're trying to be as cost effective as possible, and speed is important". Indeed, Allred has stated that "[w]e try to use the physician for his technical skill and reduce the one-on-one relationship with the patient. We usually see the ering an abortion" . . . the abortion decision is inherently, and primarily a medical decision and basic responsibility for its must rest with the physician.") patient for the first time on the operating table and then not again. . ." [47] Dr. Allred's abortion clinics do not differ from others in this respect, and it is clear that the "consultation" between the physician and the pregnant woman which Roe envisioned simply does not exist.

[44] Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, 191-192 (1973), citing United States v. Vuitch, 402 U.S. 62, 71-72 (1971).

[45] See statement of former abortion provider appearing in the Appendix at p. 27a.

[46] Allred "likes to spend no more than five minutes on each abortion," and "is proud of having eliminated needless patient-physician contact". Doctor's Abortion Business Is Lucrative, The San Diego Union, A-3, col. 6 and A-14, col. 4 (October 12, 1980). See statement of former abortion provider appearing in the Appendix at p. 27a.

A. A Physician's Right To An Ignorant Patient.

The Court has recognized that "[t]he decision to abort, indeed, is an important, and often stressful one, and it is desirable and imperative that it be made with full knowledge of its nature and consequences. The woman is the one primarily concerned, and her awareness of the decision and its significance may be assured, constitutionally, by the State to the extent of requiring her prior written consent."[48] But subsequent decisions have made a mockery of the requirement of informed consent.[49]

In Thornburgh, supra, the Court struck down a provision requiring that women undergoing abortions be informed of the name of the physician performing the abortion, the fact that there may be unforseeable "detrimental physical and psychological effects" of the abortion, the "particular medical risks associated with the particular procedure to be employed," the fetus's probable gestational age, the medical risks associated with carrying the child to term, the fact that there may be medical assistance benefits available for prenatal care, childbirth and neonatal care, and that fact that the father is required by law to assist in the child's support. In addition, the provision required that the woman be offered the opportunity to examine printed materials describing the fetus and its development, and listing agencies offering alternatives to abortion which opportunity she could, of course, decline. The Court struck down these provisions, in their entirety, holding that despite the Court's previous decisions that the government might further its legitimate public policy interests in preferring childbirth over abortion, the information on abortion alternative agencies was impermissible because it "contains names of agencies that well may be out of step with the needs of the particular woman and thus places the physician in an awkward position and infringes upon his or her professional responsibilities." 476 U.S. at 763. Thus, despite the fact that the woman was not required to review these materials, information on fetal development was struck as "not medical information that is always relevant to the woman's decision, and it may serve only to confuse and punish her and to heighten her anxiety, (emphasis supplied) contrary to accepted medical practice" 476 U.S. at 762.[50] Incredibly, the Court found that even the information regarding "detrimental physical and psychological [47] Doctor's Abortion Business Is Lucrative, The San Diego Union, October 12, 1980 at 3A, col. 5-6 at A-3, col. 5-6.

[48] Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 67 (1976).

[49] Thornburgh, 476 U.S. 747 (1986) and Akron, 462 U.S. 416 (1983). In Akron, the Court struck down a provision requiring information regarding the status of the pregnancy and fetal development, holding that, although the States might legitimately further an interest in preferring childbirth over adoption, the Akron ordinance. by requiring specified information, restricted access to abortions. 462 U.S. at 444, n. 33.

[50] Information regarding fetal development is clearly within the scope of the medical information to which women should have access in order to give their informed consent to an abortion. Logic, as well as attention to the testimony of countless women who have undergone abortions, dictates that severe emotional and psychological trauma may result when a woman undergoes an abortion without a clear understanding of the nature and development of the child to be aborted and discovers this information after the fact. Nonetheless the Thornburgh court obviously feel women have no right to know this information if its effect may be "inflammatory" 476 U.S. at 762, n. 10; if it may cause her "anxiety," 476 U.S. at 762 or horror of horrors, if it may "persuade her to withhold [her consent] to the abortion." 476 U.S. at 762. The essence of informed consent is the provision of precisely this kind of information, which has the capacity to influence a patient's decision regarding a proposed medical or surgical procedure. Many of the testimonies of aborted women set forth in this Brief, in the Appendix, in the volume lodged with the Court and in Aborted Women have a recurring theme—if only I had known that my baby was alive, what my baby looked like, I would never have chosen abortion.

effects" and all "particular medical risks" of the abortion must be struck as likely to "compound the problem of medical attendance, increase the patient's anxiety, and intrude upon the physician's exercise of proper professional judgment." 476 U.S. at 762 (emphasis added). To grant the physician complete control over whether to provide information to a woman regarding a surgical procedure portrays a patronizing attitude toward women —an attitude that assumes women are such poor decision makers, so fragile and so easily "confused" that abortionists need not provide them with information relevant to their future health or necessary to the exercise of a meaningful choice regarding elective surgery. After all, it might "increase their anxiety." Instead, the abortionist, who in a freestanding clinic generally first meets a woman when she is gowned and on the operating table, is entitled to withhold relevant information and make the abortion decision, not in consultation with the pregnant woman, but rather for her. The Court cloaks this paternalistic attitude in the mantle of protection of women's constitutional right to "choice," while it strips women of their right to information necessary for control of their bodies and their destinies, by empowering the abortionist to withhold information a woman needs in order to make an informed choice regarding her own medical care and the irrevocable decision to have her preborn child killed.

The common thread which runs through almost all testimonies of aborted women who have suffered psychological trauma and/or physical injury as a result of decisions such as Akron and Thornburgh, is the sense of anger and betrayal when they discover that they were not told of the possible consequences of a decision to abort, and often were fed outright lies when asking questions regarding the procedure, particularly when the questions involved fetal developmental characteristics.

The following are examples of the effect of nondisclosure such as the Thornburgh decision endorsed an aborted women:

Being a woman who experienced an abortion, I can tell you that withholding information from women that may affect them for the rest of their lives is both dangerous and demeaning. Doctors may explain more to their patients about tonsillectomies or appendectomies that they do about abortions. I really believe that if I had been fully informed, both medically and as to my options, I would have chosen not to abort my baby.

I was given a saline abortion at four months and I never once was told of the pain involved during the injection of the saline solution into my womb. Neither was I told of the pain involved in labor, nor even that my body would go into labor to reject the struggling, dying baby that was being burned alive in my uterus. Over four hours after the injection, I gave birth to my dead son. I knew he was my son because I asked the nurse what it was as she removed the bedpan and she said, "It's a boy."

> Then began the horror that I have lived with for years afterward, the horror of the certainty that I had killed my own son in a moment of confusion and, I believe, the omission of basic information that would have changed the course of my life. I was twenty-one years old then. My son would now be fourteen.

Letter from Rosemary Gaston to Senator Gordon Humphrey dated August 4, 1986.

Another woman, who discovered the facts about fetal development only after her baby was aborted writes:

> In 1980, I aborted my first child. I was told at Planned Parenthood that this "little blob of tissue" would be as easily removed as a wart. Terminating a pregnancy, I was told, is no more significant than removing a tiny blood clot in my uterus. "Sounds harmless" I reasoned. Exercising my right, I opted for abortion. At that time, no other options, such as adoption or single parenting were explained.
>
> Following my abortion I became deeply depressed. suicidal and unable to hold a job. I never mourned > the loss of my appendix, so why did I grieve over the passing of an enigmatic uterine blob? The answer is that it wasn't a mere "blob of tissue." It was a living baby. I realized it the moment I saw his dismembered body. I realized it too late.

Letter from Karen Sullivan Ables to Senator Gordon Humphrey dated May 23, 1986.

B. Abortion—The Unregulated Industry.

There are a number of instances in which abortions were attempted, but were not completed, and where the patient was either not given appropriate medical treatment by the abortion clinic, or was literally abandoned by the abortionist. Such women generally are treated in hospital emergency rooms within the vicinity of the free-standing facility. As was discussed in Section I, the documentation of death or injury causing hospitalization often does not include any reference to the fact that death or injury ensued upon performance of an induced abortion. While abortion injuries are rarely reported to the police, one case surfaced recently which graphically illustrates the horrendous practices engaged in by some abortionists in utter disregard for women's lives and health and the lack of either prosecution by police authorities or regulatory control of the industry. It involved an abortion of a 23 year old woman Mrs. Arias, by Dr. McMillan at Quality Medical Health Group. The Los Angeles Police Department investigative report attached to the death certificate of Baby Arias [51] states that after having paid $400 cash for her abortion:

> Ms. Arias was escorted into a room and placed on a table. The receptionist (unknown if a nurse) held her on the table and the doctor started the abortion. The patient was in extreme pain and was bleeding profusely. After crying and screaming, the > receptionist left the room and returned with a shot that was administered to the patient by the receptionist. The doctor exited the room and never returned. The receptionist told the patient she was going to take her to the hospital. The patient was placed in the receptionist's private vehicle for transportation. . . .

[51] See autopsy report, along with the follow up investigation into Baby Arias' mother's abortion in the volume entitled "Rachel Weeping" which has been lodged with this Brief.

>
> The patient was given a note from the doctor explaining the complications during the attempt abortion. The patient was seated in the Emergency Room and the receptionist departed without notifying anyone why the patient was present. After a long period of time, one of the hospital personnel asked the patient why she was present. The patient showed the note from the doctor and the patient was immediately rushed to surgery where the abortion was completed and medical treatment was administered.
>
> When the surgeon operated, she removed half of the torso of a preborn child of 24 to 27 weeks gestation. The autopsy of the child indicated that the infant's left arm, leg and internal organs were missing, but the remainder of the child was intact.
>
> The police report concludes:
>
> > Deputy District Attorney Brian Kelberg was notified of the incident and advised that because of the consent by the patient for the abortion, that there is no criminal violation.
> >
> > . . .
> >
> > The incident was a therapeutic abortion of a second trimester fetus Constitutionally recognized as the right of the patient. Id. at p. 3.[52]

Ms. Arias must have been astonished to discover the breadth and depth of the fundamental rights visited upon her by Roe and its progeny. So too, must the families of the women and girls who were led to their deaths in Inglewood and Hers Medical Clinic by abortionists who continue to ply their trade unhampered by any regulatory authority.

[52] Id.

CONCLUSION

Before Roe women died and were injured by illegally performed abortions. After Roe, women die and are injured by legally performed abortions. Whether pre-Roe or post-Roe, their deaths and the physical, psychological and emotional trauma caused by abortion are tragic. However, today, one and one-half million women each year are exposed to the risks of abortion, an astronomical increase over the numbers which were performed prior to Roe. Over twenty-two million preborn children have been killed, and respect for human life has been denigrated. This is an enormous price to pay for the current state of abortion on demand. Amici urge that the Court reconsider and overturn its ruling in Roe and return to the legislatures the power to solve the dilemma of abortion.

Respectfully submitted,

CHRISTINE SMITH TORRE
3800 Centre Square West
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania 19102
(215) 833-5624
Attorney for Amici Curiae

Of Counsel:
CARLA PERANTONI WALSH
1025 Jefferson St., N.W.
Suite 500 East
Washington, D.C. 20007
(202) 342-5400

APPENDIX

APPENDIX

LIST OF AMICI

Women Exploited By Abortion of Greater Kansas City is a local chapter of a national organization, Women Exploited By Abortion ("WEBA"). There are over one hundred chapters of WEBA across the nation, and its membership is comprised exclusively of women who have had abortions. WEBA serves as a source of healing for aborted women and educates the public about the adverse physical, emotional, and psychological consequences of abortion.

The National Association of Pro-Life Nurses is an association of registered and licensed practical nurses with state and local chapters throughout the nation. Its members, having seen the devastating effects of abortion on their patients and their profession, oppose abortion on demand.

Let Me Live is an organization based in Dallas, Texas which provides crisis pregnancy alternatives, post-abortion counseling, and education regarding the exploitation of women by the abortion industry. Its founder, Carol Everett, was formerly an administrator of four abortion clinics and a founder and owner of two abortion clinics.

The Elliot Institute for Social Sciences Research is an independent, not-for-profit research group committed to a program of original research in the areas of abortion, birth control, and population control. It is a leader in researching the long-term effects of abortion as reported by aborted women.

Letter to Senator Humphrey appearing at Cong. Record, S 12699 (September 16, 1986)

DEAR SENATOR: I am writing this letter as an encouragement to you in your fight to give women a real CHOICE by giving them "informed consent" prior to abortion.

I am a woman who experienced firsthand the turmoil of an unplanned pregnancy followed by the emotional and psychological trauma which accompanies abortion. I am able to say to you that after years of working through my abortion experience, I believe that had I been told the "choice" I was making would result in the painful death of my child as well as subsequent emotional and psychological problems that would require attention as a result of my "choice," I never would have had the abortion.

In my so-called counselling session, I was manipulated by carefully worded questions made to imply that I was not capable of mothering a child at that time; that there would be virtually no help from my family or friends; that my husband couldn't get a job and we'd never be able to pay the rising OB-GYN costs, let alone feed and care for an infant . . . etc., etc. NO INFORMATION was given about fetal development, possible physical complications or even the actual abortion procedure, NOTHING.

I am convinced after counselling with many other women in post-abortion trauma that abortion itself is completely alien to the thinking process of the female, and that we can not participate in any way in the death of our own children without suffering psychological problems.

Before a woman can be truly "free" to make her own "choice," she MUST make a decision based on factual information about ALL the aspects of abortion, adoption and parenting as well.

Again, thank you, Senator Humphrey, for standing up for womanhood and our RIGHT to INFORMED CONSENT, which will truly give us the freedom of choice.

For the Children's sake and for mine.

Thank you.

LAUREN PLATZ,
Pinoio, CA

Letter to Senator Humphrey appearing at Cong. Rec., S13923 (October 8, 1987)

CINCINNATI, OH.
June 5, 1986.

SENATOR HUMPHREY: I wish to thank you for your support in the fight to stop abortion, and to bring to the floor of the Senate a bill to make them inform any women of its effects.

I've had an abortion! My husband was a drunk and I already had two children. I just couldn't think of having another baby. I didn't know anything about abortion. My friend took me to a doctor.

He gave me drugs and took my baby from me. I started to bleed to death. I had no help, no where to turn. I did get through that, but my health was never good again.

But this was not the worst. The psychological effects were the worse time of my life. There was guilt. I was suicidal. When I laid down at night I heard babies crying. I was full of anger and rage, and had no self esteem. Regret and remorse stayed with me.

Thank God for saving me. It breaks my heart to think how many girls are suffering the way I did.

So please see to it that they are informed, before the abortion procedure. I pray for all these girls each day and pray they will get help.

Sincerely,

CATE WEBSTER.

I HAD TWO ABORTIONS

I used to be one of those who argued that abortion was okay until I realized how much damage it did to my own life. It really wasn't long after I had the two abortions that I began having some difficulty both emotionally and physically.

Not long after the second abortion I got married and became pregnant again, because we wanted children. By this time, I realized I had been foolish to have decided on having those two previous abortions. I became aware that what was termed a "simple surgical procedure" was actually the taking of an innocent life from its mother.

I repented for my deeds and decided I wasn't going to let my mistakes affect the baby I was carrying for myself and my husband.

I carried our next baby for 5½ months before I went into premature labor. A tiny 2 pound baby girl was delivered and she was alive. We named her Elizabeth Kaye. They let me see her for a minute before they rushed her off to Children's Mercy Hospital.

One usually expects to see their newborn baby in a bassinet, wrapped in a warm pink or blue blanket. My baby was put in a clear plastic box-like incubator. There were tubes and wires inserted into her body that would become her life support for as long as necessary.

One can't put into words the agony felt as a parent waits to find out if their child is going to pull through.

After a week, the torturous waiting finally ended. Our baby girl died of heart failure. She was just too small and weak.

We lost our second child, a boy who was stillborn at 4½ months.

We lost our third child, a baby girl who lived for two days through a similar experience of our first baby.

Why was I losing my babies??? The answer is: because of the previous abortions.

And not one but two abortions in less than three years. I began reading up on the subject.

When a woman becomes pregnant, the cervix automatically tightens up to support the developing baby and prevents infection from entering the uterus.

It goes against nature to pry it open before it's ready to undertake natural processes.

When an abortion is being done, they pry the cervix open to make the procedure. I've read that the most time consuming part of abortion is dilating (prying open) the cervix because it's so tightly shut.

I was informed by my doctor of a medical complication which was preventing me from carrying a full-term pregnancy. He referred to it as an "incompetent" or weakened cervix.

Because of the previous abortions, my cervix had weakened to the point where it could no longer support all the weight of a living baby, its placenta and fluids. Eventually the cervix gave way to the weakness, resulting in premature labor and delivery of our babies.

I wasn't informed at the time of the abortions that these things could happen.

Nobody told me that what was growing inside of me wasn't a pile of cells going nowhere. That it was a living human being with its own identity.

I have fought with the unspeakable guilt. The guilt of having taken two lives. The guilt of being responsible for the deaths of three babies I desired so in my heart. The guilt of subjecting such terrible agony to the other people around me who had to deal with the pain—my husband (who had nothing to do with the abortions), grandparents, brothers and close friends when our babies died. The guilt of being a failure as a woman, because I couldn't even do a simple thing like have a baby in the normal way.

The worst guilt of all was the terrible sin of murder committed against the Lord my God. I was responsible for destroying His precious children. Lives which He created and for which He had plans.

When I realized that the worst guilt was sinning against God, all I had to do was fall on my knees to Him and ask Him to forgive me for what I'd done. He did. He forgave me. He replaced all the guilt and shame with His love, joy and peace. The emptiness was gone. Now I walk in freedom from guilt. God is a miracle worker.

Through a surgical procedure, my cervix was tightened.

We now have a healthy, energetic two year old boy. He is a reminder of my reason for living, proof that God has forgiven me, forgotten my past and truly loves me—completely.

Love,
Vicki
[MEMBER OF WOMEN EXPLOITED BY ABORTION]

Monica Harshbarger

Monica had a legal abortion in Colorado in 1971. Though she was afraid that a baby would spoil her teenage fun, she soon found that the complications she suffered from the abortion weren't worth all the "fun" in the world.

In 1971, at the age of seventeen, I became pregnant. I had a been pretty rebellious teenager, and I went through a lot of emotional turmoil at that time. I now know that most of that was due to the fact that my parents divorced in my early teens. I lived with my mother, but I loved and missed my father more than I knew, or at least was willing to admit at the time.

I guess I fell in with the wrong group of kids when I was in junior high school and high school. We were experimenting with drugs and casual sex. Oh, we knew about birth control, thanks to our local Planned Parenthood. But it is my belief that teenagers are not responsible enough to handle any form of birth control. I now know that abstinence is the only sure form of birth control.

When I discovered I was pregnant, I was devastated, and could think of no one but me, and my life. No one else mattered because I was having fun, and I knew it all. A baby would have spoiled that. I didn't think I could give birth to a child and give it to someone else. I knew at seventeen that I was not capable of raising a child.

I had heard that abortions were safe and easy. My best friend had had one, and she was fine. She has since had four more; how sad. Needless to say, she is not my best friend now, but we are friends, and I felt terribly sorry for her. She tries so hard to bury her guilt, and justify them.

Anyway, I truly believed that what I was carrying at that point, the first trimester, was a blob of tissue. No one ever told me any different at any time before my abortion. I went to my mother with the news of my pregnancy and told her that I wanted to have an abortion. She tried to talk me out of it, not because she knew how developed my baby was, but because she believed it was a life, and because of her love and concern for me. But I was determined, and no one was going to change my mind. Then, as now, a parent had no legal influence over their minor child when it came to abortion or birth control. My father was the one who paid for the abortion; my mother wouldn't.

My friend's sister was a nurse, and she gave me the name of her Ob/Gyn. Abortion was liberalized in Colorado several years prior to the 1973 Supreme Court decision, for the "health" of the mother. I now know what a generalization that is: it can mean anything. For me it meant a half an hour in a psychiatrist's office, telling him that I did not want to have a baby. He recommended in favor of the abortion.

I then had a physical examination by the Ob/Gyn. My mom went with me, I think in hopes of changing my mind. After the exam, we met with the man who called himself "doctor." He never informed us about the development of my baby. He never informed us of the dangers, the possible complications to me.

I returned the day before my abortion for the insertion of a laminaria tent to start dilation. I returned home, and the next morning I checked into a Denver-area hospital. (Before 1973, all abortions were done in a hospital.) Mine was a twelve-week suction abortion.

I remember lying on the stretcher outside the operating room, everything so sterile and so white. Everyone pretended to be so compassionate. You know, I believe I even had a crush on that man who took my baby, he was my savior! What a fool I was then. . . .

I believe I had a moment of hesitation: "Am I doing the right thing? I can't turn back now. And it really is for the best." Then they came and rolled me into the operating room.

They put me to sleep. I spent the night, and then left the next morning. I was a bit numb, but relieved. It was over. Now I could get on with my life.

The next Friday night, I was out at a party, having a good time, when I went into labor. It was the most horrible pain I would ever experience. My mom picked me up and rushed me to the emergency room. There I underwent a second suction abortion to remove the parts left behind the first time. When the pain was gone, I was relieved. The doctor told me that either I had had twins, and he had only gotten one the first time, or that my uterus was tipped, and he hadn't reached all the fetal tissue. Whatever it was, I didn't care.

I'm sure I justified my abortion to other women after I aborted; I know I did. I was pro-choice, pro-abortion. Justification is where it's at for aborted women who refuse to admit their mistakes and accept the truth. I guess a lot of women are scared to admit their mistakes, or talk about it because they are scared of how it will affect them. Often, after telling my story to a group, I will have a woman come up to me with tears in her eyes, thanking me for having the courage to tell what she has been unable to tell. They are my sisters. And you watch us; pretty soon that fear and doubt will turn into strength and determination, and we will put an end to this degradation.

Anyway, I didn't think about that procedure consciously until six years later, when my daughter was born. I say "consciously," because when I met my husband-to-be, a couple of years later, at nineteen, I had a strong wish to have a baby. When we were married, I was twenty-two. I went off the pill immediately, in hopes of conceiving a child soon. After a year or so of trying to conceive, without luck, I went in for some rather uncomfortable fertility tests. We discovered that my fallopian tubes were blocked with scar tissue. My tubes were cleared, and then I became pregnant. How lucky I was!

During my prenatal visits I can remember crying each time I heard my daughter's heartbeat. But I still did not consciously recall my abortion. Finally, the time for delivery came, and my water broke. I was in labor for twenty hours, but my uterus did not dilate. They had to take her C-section.

When the nurse handed me my baby for the first time, that is where it hit me: what had I done when I was seventeen?! Danielle, my daughter, was such a beautiful miracle. From that day on I started to read and study about the unborn child and abortion. I have been a completely dedicated, pro-life activist ever since.

I will never know if my physical complications—blocked tubes, incompetent uterus, extraordinarily heavy menstrual periods, endometriosis (scar tissue in my uterus), pain in intercourse—were the result of that abortion. When I tried to recover the medical records of my abortion from that office, I was told that they had been destroyed in a fire in 1972, one year after my abortion. But I believe these are all abortion complications.

Emotionally I have felt a lot of guilt and remorse since finding out that my baby was completely formed at the time of the abortion, and I felt horrible pain. I have trouble telling my story; at times I will break down while telling it.

One other thing: only several years ago did my mother finally unburden herself to me. I wish she'd had the courage when I was seventeen to tell me her story. She had become pregnant when she was seventeen, also, and was taker by an uncle to an abortionist. She got up and ran out because she could not go through with it. She stayed in a Catholic convent home until she gave birth to a little boy, John. She kept him there for two years in hopes that something would work out so that she could keep him. Knowing it was hopeless, she finally gave him up for adoption. We found him a couple of years ago. He's thirty-seven now, and his name is Jerry. This was really a thrill for me. I really wish that abortion did not hold such a stigma. It is the greatest show of a mother's love and the best alternative for a lot of young girls today.

Reprinted with permission from D. Reardon, Aborted Women, Silent No More (1987).

Carolyn Walton

When Carolyn became pregnant under difficult circumstances, she went into a state of "shock." She didn't know what to do. But her well-meaning relatives did. They took over her decision-making for her, and had her undergo an abortion at a Cleveland clinic. The trauma of her abortion made her lose complete control of her life. She found herself abusing drugs and alcohol, sterile from abortion complications, and dangerously suicidal.

Ten years ago I found myself pregnant, divorced, and virtually alone. The first emotion was that of sheer panic. I only had a small income and was working two jobs. I had a four-year-old daughter to support. The baby's father immediately retracted his mariage proposal as soon as he found out I was pregnant. I had no money, no medical insurance, and didn't realize that there were places to turn to for help.

As I turned to friends and relatives for advice, the whole matter became more confusing. Advice poured in from all sides. I felt like I was being put through the third degree. "What is a divorced women going to do with such a small income? You already have one child to feed. How will you pay the hospital bills?" As I think back, not once did anyone just put their arms around me and ask my feelings or allow me to even have time to have any. Just some positive love and support would have been a relief. A relative that had had an illegal abortion 25 years before talked to me about abortion. After all, it was now legal and "safe." She had never been able to have children because of her abortion, but strangely enough, advised me to have one anyways! I felt like I was in a tailspin. There was no time to think.

My relatives went about their business of making all the arrangements while I remained in a total state of oblivion. I felt like someone on the outside looking in. It was as if it was happening to someone else. I don't blame anyone, they only did what they thought was right; that is why educating people about what's really right is so important.

Anyway, I was soon whisked off to Cleveland and dropped off at some friend's house. The next day I was again dropped off at the abortion clinic. My heart told me I was wrong, but my mind, like a robot, did what it was told. After I got inside (alone), I paid my $200 and was given a pregnancy test and given a locker (just like in a gym). I was given a paper gown and told to put it on. The place was cold and the people formal. No compassion, no understanding. It was like a busy assembly line.

I then waited in a small room until my name was called. I was taken to another room and told to get up on the table, put my feet in the stirrups and scoot down. It was so cold—I shivered and have never been so scared or felt so alone. I was soon to find out that the "painless" procedure I was promised was anything but painless. As my baby was ripped from my body, the pain became unbearable and tears streamed down by face. I was told to be still, it would soon be over. After the abortion, I walked to another room and was allowed to lie down for thirty minutes, after which I was told I could leave. I went to my locker, got dressed, and was told to see my family doctor in six weeks. I asked if I could use a phone to call my ride and was told they had no phones for public use, but there was a pay phone down the street I could use.

I walked down the street. It was November, and very cold. As I walked back to wait for my ride outside the clinic, I felt cold, nauseous, dizzy, alone and empty. When my ride picked me up, she had a friend with her. They were going to a steak house for lunch and I had to go along. You would have thought I had just gone to get my eyes checked for all anyone cared.

Later that day another relative took me home and dropped me off in front of my apartment. It's amazing how everyone was there to give advice before the abortion, but afterwards I was on my own.

What was to follow was more like a nightmare than reality. I began having nightmares about my murdered baby. I began drinking more and more until I was up to five bottles of alcohol a week. I sometimes went so long without eating that when I would try to eat, I would vomit. I finally went to the doctor and found out that I had an infection from the abortion. He started treatment, but it didn't help. I told him about the nightmares and my nerves, and he gave me tranquilizers—no comfort, no counseling—just pills.

So I started taking tranquilizers to help me sleep, and pep pills to keep me going during the day. Four times I deliberately overdosed, trying to commit suicide. I don't think I really wanted to die, I only wanted someone to care, to help, to listen. I wanted the pain to go away. The doctor continued to try treatment after treatment on the physical problem. But to no avail. I finally changed doctors and had to have surgery because the infection caused by the abortion had destroyed the cervix and the uterus. This helped for a short time.

I finally met the man I am now married to; with his love and support, I started to put my life back together. We started to attend church and I came to find Christ as my Savior. I then knew I was forgiven, but it took time before I was able to forgive myself, I was finally alive after being dead and living in hell.

But the physical problems caused by the abortion started cropping back up. More infections and more damage. I changed doctors again. I had a D&C. I was filled with tumors by this time and had endrometriosis. A hysterectomy was inevitable, but we put it off as long as possible. But March 15, 1984 it finally came to pass. Everything had to be removed, for it was totally destroyed. It took ten years of constant problems, but the abortion finally took its final toll.

As I look back, if I had had love and support, and above all, the true facts, I would have never even considered an abortion. The pain never goes away; it's always there.

I really believe WEBA needs to be heard. We have a right to be heard. The thought of anyone going through what I went through (although I know that there are literally millions who have) is heartbreaking to me.

Reprinted with permission from D. Reardon, Aborted Women, Silent No More (1987).

Lorijo Nerad

Lorijo was a victim of pressure and deceit from her social worker, a Michigan state agent appointed to serve and protect the poor. The Nerads' caseworker implied that their welfare benefits would be cut off if Lorijo carried her third child to term. Now sterile due to abortion-related complications, Lorijo and her husband feel they were exploited because of their circumstances.

In January of 1974, my husband Jim lost his job when he injured his elbow. At that time we had one child already, and I was pregnant with our second. Since Jim was unable to find another job, we had to go on welfare.

After having our baby in May, our caseworker at the Department of Social Services made us feel like we had been irresponsible for having a second child. I remember her glaring at us like a disapproving mother who didn't trust her children. She lectured Jim, telling him, "You can't keep your wife barefoot and pregnant the rest of your life. You had better so something about it." She wanted us to stop having children and insisted on making an appointment for us to go to Planned Parenthood for counseling and birth control supplies—conveniently located right next door.

At the clinic I was examined and told that I had a bacterial infection. The doctor said, "I'm not going to touch her with a ten-foot pole." They decided that I couldn't have any kind of birth control, so my husband became the target. The counselor told us that Jim had to have a vasectomy. They really put the pressure on him, making him feel like he was under an obligation to be sterilized. Of course, Medicaid would pay for it. (They were willing to do anything to keep us "welfare folk" from reproducing.) We didn't want to do it, but they told us that there was a 50-50 chance the vasectomy could be reversed later when we wanted more kids and had more money. Afraid we would have our finances cut off if we had another child, we went along with it.

After this, I went to my doctor to be treated for the bacterial infection, and they ran a pregnancy test on me. We waited in the office for the results. I had missed a period, and I was secretly hoping that I was pregnant. With Jim sterilized, this was our last chance to complete our family. When the phone call from the lab finally came, the nurse talked for a moment, then hung the phone up by slamming it down rather hard. She turned to us and said in a very disgusted voice: "Well, it's positive."

I was happy immediately. "All right! I just knew it!" But my enthusiasm was dampened when I saw my husband fall against the wall and look at me with disgust as if it was all my fault. At this point, the nurse started telling us that it was much too soon for me to have another baby. "Either you could die, or the baby could die, or the both of you could die," she told us. The prospect of having me die and leaving him to care for two or three children alone had Jim really nervous. Later that same day my doctor said I could have the baby, but he didn't really offer any encouragement that I should. From all that the nurse had said, we left with the feeling that my life would be in danger if I was to carry the baby full term.

When our caseworker found out that I was pregnant with a third child, she was just disgusted with us. She couldn't believe that we had been "so irresponsible." She urged us to have an abortion, saying "You just can't go around having babies all the rest of your life." After making us feel like dirt, she reassured us that Medicaid would pay for the abortion and that we could always have children later.

From that point on, there was pressure from everyone around me to have the abortion. The only one that didn't want me to do it was my mother-in-law, who was herself a survivor of a failed abortion attempt.

Confusion mounted, tension and pressure took control, and I became another victim of "free choice." I agreed to let them do the abortion, and immediately Medicare came through to prevent another mouth on the welfare roles. (The quick service for aborting my child was a sharp contrast to the six weeks I had to wait before Medicare would treat two rotting teeth.)

On August 18, 1975, I had an abortion. The doctor told me he would slowly dilate my cervix with a series of metal rods and suction out the "blob of jelly called fetal tissue."

I wasn't given anything for pain, the nurse had to hold me down. The nurse kept saying to me, "It will be over in a minute, honey. . . . Oh, come on now, it doesn't hurt that bad. Quit being such a baby!"

The doctor went on with the procedure. Once he stopped and wiped a piece of it on the sheet, showing me and telling me it was a piece of placenta, and saying this is a piece of this or that, using some medical terms.

Afterwards, our caseworker didn't ask about the abortion or how I felt, she just wanted to know that I had had it done.

Looking back, I think that some of the people working with welfare recipients do really want to help them; but when they find out that they can't really "get involved" and help, they buckle under the pressure and quit. Others, like the one who pushed us towards Planned Parenthood and the abortion, have a Margaret Sanger attitude, wanting to weed-out the "depraved," non-working class.

After the abortion, we lied to everyone about it, trying to hide from the guilt. We told my family that I had just had a D&C and that I just tried to forget about it, but never really could. He buried it really deep, and he still hurts today when he thinks what he put me and our child through.

As for me, I began to neglect my children, my husband, my home, and myself. I abused my children. I didn't hold them or cuddle with them, because of the looks that they would give me. It was as if they knew what I had done and hated me for killing their brother or sister. The guilt and pain I felt in my heart made me feel so unworthy to even hold a child, let alone have my own. I heard voices saying, "Murderer, murderer, you've slaughtered an innocent baby, your own child."

To cover our guilt we started getting into drugs. We had parties galore. Smoked pot, drank senslessly, and experimented with hard drugs. We wanted to party until we dropped. I was trying anything and everything to get rid of the guilt that stabbed me in the heart every day.

We lived like this for three years after my abortion. Then in 1978 we decided the life we were living was a mess and was burning us out. We turned to our childhood days of churchgoing, and remembered the stories of how God forgave, but I was still in turmoil about my baby. I prayed that I would have another baby to replace it.

Seven years after my abortion, I went back to my doctor to see if all was well enough for me to have the baby I so desperately wanted. After tests, I was told that I had abnormal cells on my cervix, the kind that turn into cancer. Tests led to more tests, and in 1982, at twenty-six years of age, I had to have a hysterectomy. All my hopes of having another baby were ripped away from me.

One month later I got my monthly newsletter from Right to Life. Still a little out of it from my operation, I thumbed through the newsletter only to find a picture of an aborted baby. That did it! I snapped. I cried and screamed at God with my fist in the air, "Why don't you give me another chance?" Then I sat in shock just wondering why I get so hurt and depressed. God had forgiven me, but I didn't forgive myself. So that day, I forgave myself. I decided to take my self-pity and turn it over to God.

But it wasn't until I joined WEBA and saw other women with more problems than I could shake a stick at, that I received complete healing from my abortion. I still mourn the death of my child as anyone who has lost a child will. It is normal; it is what every woman who has had an abortion needs to do. And for the first time in my life, I have felt normal, after being told by counselors, friends, and even family that I was crazy for all those years after my abortion.

Reprinted with D. Reardon, Aborted Women, Silent No More (1987)

Debbie Nelson

Debbie chose abortion twice: the first time was in Washington, under pressure from her husband; the second was in California, because the child had been conceived during a rape. But as Debbie's story emphasizes, no matter what the circumstances, the physical and emotional aftereffects are traumatic.

I have had two abortions. The first was when I was sixteen years old. I had been married for three months when I realized I was pregnant. My husband was opposed for financial reasons to our having a baby, and said I should have an abortion. Being newly married and only sixteen, I felt that I had to prove I could hold my marriage together.

The abortion was one in a hospital, under general anesthesia. When I woke, I was crying. I didn't understand why, but I knew that I felt a tremendous loss. When I was taken back to my room, I began bleeding heavily. I told the nurse that I had never bled like that before, and she said, "Well, you've never had a baby before." At the time I didn't understand that comment. Now I know the point she was trying to make.

My second abortion was three years later. I was working in a hotel as a maid; and while at work, I was raped at gunpoint. I was taken to the emergency room immediately, but a D&C wasn't done, thus I conceived of that rape.

When I suspected that I was pregnant, I went back to the doctor who had tended me in the emergency room. I remember sobbing and crying so hard when he told me the pregnancy test results were positive. In that moment of shock, the doctor told me that my only choice in a situation such as this was abortion. He was very kind. He held my hand and comforted me, then made a phone call to make an appointment for me with an abortion clinic.

The feelings that I had experienced with my first abortion came back to me, but I thought that this would be different. After all, I had been raped and couldn't possibly love this child. The doctor told me abortion was safe, easy, and painless. Having been asleep the first time, I had no reason to dispute this.

When I got to the clinic (I think it was three days later), I was asked to sign a form releasing the doctor and clinic from any responsibility in the event of complications. I asked what complication this was referring to. I was told that as with any surgical procedure, there was always the slight chance of problems—but that this very rarely happened.

I was awake this time. They used the suction method to kill my baby, and the pain was horrendous. I hadn't expected to feel the emotional trauma this time, but it was worse than before. I was taken to a room to rest and couldn't stop crying. The "oh-so-rare" physical complications began immediately. I began hemorrhaging and cramping severely and was given an injection to lessen the bleeding, and I was told to go home to bed.

One week later, while at work, I began hemorrhaging again. I went back to the clinic and was told that I had probably retained some of the tissue, but that it would pass. After three months of bleeding off and on, I went to another doctor, who was outraged at my condition. He did an emergency D&C to remove the retained placenta, then he told me that my uterus had been significantly damaged by the abortions and their subsequent infections. He said there was much scar tissue in my uterus and that any future pregnancies would probably be difficult.

In the years to follow, I was divorced and remarried; and I became a Christian, a mother, and a nurse. It was when I went through nurse's training that the reality of what I had done became clear to me. While studying fetal development, I realized that I had been lied to. At eight weeks, those "clusters of cells" had a remarkable resemblance to a baby. They had hands and feet, a heartbeat and brainwaves, which meant that those babies did indeed feel the pain of their horrible deaths.

I now have two little girls. During both of my pregnancies I had a condition known as placenta previa. Both were high risk pregnancies followed by very difficult labors and deliveries. Eight months after the birth of my second daughter, at the age of twenty-three, I had to have a hysterectomy. The damages done by my abortions were so severe that my childbearing days were over. All of this occurred because of my two "safe and legal" abortions.

Had I been told the truth about the risks that I was taking with my body and about the developing persons inside of me, I know that I would not have made the decision to destroy life. There are those people who can deliberately take the life of another person, but that is not my nature. Yet I must live with the truth, because that is what I have done.

I still feel that I probably couldn't have loved that child conceived of rape, but there are so many people who would have loved that baby dearly. The man who raped me took a few moments of my life, but I took that innocent baby's entire life. That is not justice as I see it. My first marriage ended in divorce, so the reality is that my first abortion was done for the convenience of two very selfish people.

Reprinted with permission from D. Reardon, Aborted Women, Silent No More (1987)

This letter is to inform you of the death of our daughter Donna and the hope that it can be prevented from happening to someone else.

Our 20 year old daughter Donna was pregnant without myself or my husband's knowledge. She had gone to a clinic in Pasadena, California where she found out she was 21 weeks pregnant. They told her she was too far along but told her about a clinic in Los Angeles that would do it. She had gotten an emergency 30 Medical Card without our knowledge.

She went to the clinic at 2700 South Figueroa St. the HER Medical Clinic. Donna has a history of asthma and the clinic was aware of this but they gave her general anesthesia without ventilating her properly. She stopped breathing during the abortion, but the doctor finished the abortion before he tried the Heimlich method on Donna without success. They did an incomplete tracheotomy with success, then tried C.P.R. with no success so they call paramedics, Donna's sister Ronda was with her at the clinic and she kept asking how her sister was and she was told that Donna was fine. She did not know that Donna had stopped breathing and that they had called the paramedics. Ronda happened to overhear one of the nurses on the phone to a hospital and she heard her sister's name mentioned. She then heard sirens and went outside and saw them putting her sister (already turned blue) in the paramedics' truck. She then went inside to get her sister's purse and belongings and went to the California Hospital on South Hope Street in Los Angeles where they took Donna. While they were taking care of Donna, a nurse from the hospital called me and my husband, we went right away to the hospital in the 4:30 afternoon traffic. When they got Donna's tracheotomy repaired and had an O.B. doctor examine her, they put her on a life support system and transferred her to C.C.U. unit at the hospital. My husband and I arrived before they had sent her to C.C.U. We were not aware that she was pregnant let alone in a clinic for an abortion. We were upset and in a state of shock. The doctors told us that they felt Donna was 90% brain dead when she arrived at the hospital and she was also in a coma. They did everything they could possibly do for her and kept close watch over her on the life support system for approximately 12 hours before pronouncing her dead. They told my husband and me with tears in their eyes, please do not let them get away with this; get something done for they butchered your daughter.

We are writing this in hopes that something will be done so it will not happen ever again.

I have tried and tried to contact the proper persons so this situation can be thoroughly looked into. So far the only persons checking into it is the Board of Medical Quality Assurance, but they told me that there have been three other deaths at the same clinic and nothing has been done. I am in hopes that this will not be overlooked and will be resolved justly. I want the public to be aware that there are unsafe clinics out there and to be careful before making a deadly mistake. Young girls as well as women like our daughter are not aware that there are unclean, unsafe clinics that go unnoticed.

Please if you can help in any way to let the public know of this clinic and bring out the facts about it so we can warn the community, I would be very grateful.

Reprinted With Permission From Abortion Malpractice Reporter, Vol. 1, No. 1, p. 3-5.

I was involved in the abortion industry from 1977 until 1983. I was not an absentee owner; I ran a total of four clinics in the Dallas/Fort Worth area, coming to a ownership position in Dallas Medical Ladies Clinic and Women's Clinic of Mesquite in Dallas and Mesquite, Texas.

I assisted in abortions, particularly second and third trimester abortions. I saw death from legal abortions, as well as major complications; i.e. perforation of the uterus, repair of the urinary tract, repair of the colon resulting in colostomy. I saw abortions performed on women who were not pregnant at the time of the procedure, but were accomplished just for the money.

I saw women lied to about the development of her "product of conception"!

Doctors commonly rushed in the clinic, asking, "How many do we have today"—interested only in how much money they would make that day.

Doctors rush from room to room sometimes bragging about how fast they "could kill a baby". One doctor claimed to be able to do a two to three minute abortion, but missed one of each five. One patient of this particular doctor came in at six weeks for her abortion. She called back some time later to say she felt a "foot in her vagina". Upon arrival, she was examined by a physician who found her to be 20 weeks pregnant, an incomplete abortion, and the baby's foot was extended out of her cervix into her vagina.

I worked with physicians who were more concerned with their evening date than with checking a hemorraging patient.

I am sorry to report that it was more important to keep the doctor moving quickly than to clean the room. Many times blood was not cleaned up between patients, because the doctor was working too fast. Simply get one out, and rush the next one on to the table.

I believe I became involved in the abortion industry in an attempt to justify my own abortion. I believed I was "helping women" with the "safe, legal choice" of abortion. What I saw was that the women were being injured or died at alarming rates.

/s/ CAROL EVERETT 2-21-89

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

IN THE

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

No. 88-605

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

BRIEF OF CERTAIN MEMBERS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA, AS AMICI CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

WILLIAM BENTLEY BALL
PHILIP J. MURREN
MAURA K. QUINLAN
BALL, SKELLY, MURREN & CONNELL
511 North Second Street
P. O. Box 1108
Harrisburg, PA 17108
(717) 232-8731
Counsel for Amici Curiae

February 23, 1989 Counsel of Record

PACKARD PRESS - LEGAL DIVISION, 1617 JFK BOULEVARD, PHILA., PA 19103 (215) 563-9000

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES iii

INTEREST OF THE AMICI CURIAE 1

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT 2

ARGUMENT 2

I. Roe Stripped the States of Their Traditional Right to Protect the Unborn and Established an Extremely Limited and Unworkable Framework Within Which States Might Act. This has Resulted in Abortion Virtually on Demand Throughout Pregnancy 2

A. Prior to Roe, the States had the Right to Protect the Unborn and were Active in Exercising that Right 3

B. Roe Drastically Altered the Right of States to Protect the Unborn 5

C. The Roe Trimester Approach is Unworkable and has been Abandoned by the Court in Favor of Concepts Related to Medical Technology and Accepted Medical Practice. But These are Also Unworkable. 5

D. Application of Roe by the Supreme Court and Lower Federal Courts to Legitimate Attempts by States to Regulate has Resulted in Abortion on Demand. 11

II. Roe Should be Overruled and the States Enabled to Assume Their Proper Role in Protecting Human Life, Born and Unborn 15

TABLE OF CONTENTS—(Continued)

Page

A. Abortion is Unlike the Fundamental Rights Recognized Under the Right of Privacy and Should Not be Treated As Are Those Rights 15

B. States Are Better Suited Than the Federal Judiciary to Deal with the Problem of Abortion 18

C. Returning the Abortion Issue to the States will Reduce Public Tension ... 22

CONCLUSION 26

APPENDIX A A-1, A-2

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases: Page

Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416 (1983) 6, 8, 10

Amadio v. Levin, 509 Pa. 199 (1985) 24, 25

American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists v. Thornburgh, 737 F.2d 283 (3rd Cir. 1984) 12

Barsky v. Board of Regents, 347 U.S. 442 (1954) 21

Charles v. Daley, 846 F.2d 1057 (7th Cir. 1988) .. 9

City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 290 (1985) 11

Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U. S. 379 (1979) 7, 10

Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 172 (1973) 4, 12, 19

Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, 469 U.S. 528 (1985) 18-19

Keith v. Daley, No. 84-C-5602 (N.D. Ill. July 1, 1984) 17

Margaret S. v. Edwards, 488 F.Supp. 181 (D.La. 1980) 13

New York Ice Co. v. Liebmann, 285 U.S. 262 (1932) 20

Northeast Women's Center, Inc. v. Michael McMonagle, et al., No. 85-4845 (E.D. Pa. Apr. 29, 1987) 19

Planned Parenthood v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476 (1983) 9

Planned Parenthood v. Kempiners, 568 F.Supp. 1490 (N.D. Ill. 1983) 22

Cases: Page

Ragsdale v. Turnock, 842 F.2d 1358, appeal docketed no. 88-790 57 U.S.L.W. 3378 (Nov. 10, 1988) (7th Cir. 1988) 8, 22

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973)..... passim

Schulte v. Douglas, 567 F.Supp. 522 (D.Neb. 1981) 13

Sinkler v. Kneale, 401 Pa. 267 (1960) 1, 25

Thornburgh v. A.C.O.G., 476 U.S. 747 (1986) . passim

Tony and Susan Alamo v. Secretary of Labor, 471 U.S. 290 (1985)..... 11

Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S. 589 (1977) 18

Statutes:

Cal. Penal Code sec. 187 (West Supp. 1983)..... 24

Conn. Stat. Tit. 20, SSE. 14, 16 (1821) 3

Ga. Code Ann. sec. 16-5-80 (1983) 24

Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 38, par. 9-1.2, 9-2.1, 9-3.2, 12-3.1, 12-4.4 (West Supp. 1986)..... 24

Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 38, par. 81-26(8) (West Supp. 1984) 17

Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 111½ par. 157-8.1 (1983)..... 22

Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 70, sec. 2.2 (1983)..... 24

Iowa Code Ann. sec. 707.8(1) (West 1979)..... 24

N.Y. Penal Law sec. 125.00 (McKinney 1975)..... 24

Utah Code Ann. sec. 76-5-201 (Supp. 1983)..... 24

Other Sources: Page

Chicago Sun Times, November 12, 1978..... 21

80th General Assembly, Report to the House Human Resources Committee, Subcommittee on Health, December 13, 1978 21

Hern, Abortion Practice (1984)..... 9

Hilgers & Horan, Abortion and Social Justice (1980) 4, 5

Pritchard & McDonald, Williams Obstetrics, (16th ed. 1980)..... 3

Prosser, Law of Torts, (1971) 24

Stroh & Hinman, Reported Live Births Following Induced Abortion; Two and One-half Years' Experience in Upstate New York, 126 Am. J. Obstet. Gynecol. 83, 88 (1976) 25

INTEREST OF THE AMICI CURIAE

Amici are members of the Pennsylvania General Assembly whose names are listed in Appendix A, hereto attached. They represent members of both the House and Senate and both the Democratic and Republican parties. Pennsylvania is one of many states which have taken seriously this Court's statements in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), that the right to abortion is not absolute and that the states may regulate abortion in a manner which furthers their important and legitimate interests in preserving maternal health and protecting the unborn child.

In keeping with its duty to protect all human life, born and unborn, the General Assembly has grappled with the abortion issue for the past sixteen years. This is because of the conviction of its members that unborn children should possess the fundamental right to life to which all other human beings are entitled, since the unborn become human beings at conception. Indeed, that was the well-established state of the law in Pennsylvania prior to Roe. Sinkler v. Kneale, 401 Pa. 267 (1960).

It has been difficult for the General Assembly to comply with the rulings of this Court regarding abortion, given the inherent uncertainty regarding how far the Roe rationale may be expanded. It also has been distressing to see the General Assembly's motives for regulating abortion challenged, when it has consistently attempted to comply with this Court's own prior rulings. See, e.g., Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 744, 764 (1986).

The Pennsylvania General Assembly has evidenced a commitment to regulate abortion to the fullest extent possible, consistent with this Court's decisions.[1] Some post-Roe decisions of the Supreme Court, however, have increasingly undercut the power of state legislatures to deal with the problem of abortion — now one of runaway proportions.[2] This deprivation of the state's power to deal with a major social problem was said to be compelled by Roe. Amici, representing large constituencies in Pennsylvania, now urge the Court to reexamine Roe and to overrule it so that states may have greater flexibility in providing protections for pregnant women and unborn children. A right, on the part of states, must be recognized to deal with those interests according to values inherent in the fabric and traditions of American constitutional law.

---

1. The General Assembly, in 1988, enacted its latest abortion legislation. See, Act of March 25, 1988, No. 1988-31 (P.L. ____).

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

It is now essential, in light of mounting social problems of unrestricted abortion and the development of new findings in fetology and other fields of research related to pregnancy, that Roe v. Wade be reexamined and overruled. Roe and successor decisions of this Court have provided a framework, both unscientific and unworkable, within which states may act in relation to abortion. The states, with their great fact-finding capacity, are well suited to deal with the social problem of abortion. The ruling here sought should significantly reduce public tension.

ARGUMENT

I. ROE STRIPPED THE STATES OF THEIR TRADITIONAL RIGHT TO PROTECT THE UNBORN AND ESTABLISHED AN EXTREMELY LIMITED AND UNWORKABLE FRAMEWORK WITHIN WHICH STATES MIGHT ACT. THIS HAS RESULTED IN ABORTION VIRTUALLY ON DEMAND THROUGHOUT PREGNANCY.

2. Since 1973, approximately 800,000 lives have been taken through abortion in Pennsylvania. This figure is derived from data contained in Abortion Surveillance, U.S. Department of Health, Centers for Disease Control 25 (1981).

A. Prior to Roe, the States had the Right to Protect the Unborn and Were Active in Exercising that Right.

In the 19th century, when states began codifying their laws, they frequently prohibited or limited abortion. See e.g., Conn. Stat., Tit. 20, §§14,16 (1821); Roe, 410 U.S. at 175 n. 1 (Rehnquist, J., dissenting). As the Roe Court noted, a great number of anti-abortion laws were enacted in the late 1800's. The American Medical Association (AMA) played a "significant role" in the enactment of such stringent anti-abortion laws. Roe, 410 U.S. at 141. The AMA felt compelled to actively participate in a movement prohibiting abortion because of the "widespread popular ignorance of the true character of the crime — a belief, even among mothers themselves, that the fetus is not alive till after the period of quickening." Id. The AMA felt that the existing criminal abortion laws failed to recognize "the independent and actual existence of the child before birth, as a living being," and to adequately protect the unborn child. Id.[3]

3. Such statements about the actual existence of the child before birth, although made in 1859, have been borne out and scientifically verified over the years. Ultrasound imaging, in utero surgery on the fetus, and the wonders of prenatal and perinatal medicine have shown undeniably that we are dealing with a developing human life when dealing with the fetus. In their preface to the 1980 edition of Williams Obstetrics, Drs. Pritchard and MacDonald wrote:

> Happily, we have entered an era in which the fetus can be rightfully considered and treated as our second patient. . . . Fetal diagnosis and therapy have now emerged as legitimate tools the obstetrician must possess. Moreover, the number of tools the obstetrician can employ to address the needs of the fetus increases each year. We are of the view that it is the most exciting of times to be an obstetrician. Who would have dreamed—even a few years ago—that we could serve the fetus as physician? Or, that the well-being and growth of the fetus could be monitored accurately and that the status of fetal health could be addressed?

J. Pritchard & P. MacDonald, Williams Obstretics, vii (16th ed.

As of 1966, virtually all of the 50 states prohibited induced abortion except when necessary to protect the life of the pregnant woman. J. Lampe, "The World in Perspective," in Abortion and Social Justice, 94 (T. Hilgers and D. Horan, eds. 1980). Between 1966 and 1972, approximately 20 states relaxed their abortion laws to some degree. Id. at 95-96. The vast majority of these new statutes were modeled on the American Law Institute's recommended legislation set forth in its Model Penal Code. Id. Those laws, such as that enacted by Georgia, generally allowed abortion only when: 1) a continuation of the pregnancy would endanger the life of the pregnant woman or would seriously and permanently injure her health; or 2) the fetus would very likely be born with a grave, permanent and irremediable mental or physical defect; or 3) the pregnancy resulted from forcible or statutory rape. Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 172, 183 (1973). Only four states, Alaska, Hawaii, New York and Washington had more permissive abortion laws. Lampe, supra, at 96. Even in those states, however, abortion was prohibited after a set number of weeks (24 in New York, for example) unless such abortion was necessary to preserve the woman's life. Id. 96-97.

The trend toward liberalization of abortion laws, however, was not inexorable. Illinois, Minnesota and New Hampshire rejected attempts to pass versions of the Model Penal Code abortion provision. Lampe, supra, at 96. Also, attempts to bring about abortion on demand by way of state referenda were soundly defeated by voters in both North Dakota and Michigan in the 1972 general elections. Id. at 99. Finally, the General Assembly of New York voted in 1972 to repeal its 1970 1980). These major advances in medical technology have allowed us to view the unborn, monitor his or her heart rate and brain waves, and examine the fetus' responses to various external influences such as light, sound, and taste.

NOTES (Continued)

permissive abortion law and, but for Governor Rockefeller's veto, would have restored the law to its earlier position. Id. at 98.

B. Roe Drastically Altered the Right of States to Protect the Unborn.

The Roe Court held that the right of privacy is "broad enough to encompass a woman's decision whether or not to terminate her pregnancy." 410 U.S. at 153. In so holding, the Court, in one stroke, made what had been criminal activity in the majority of states for over a century into a fundamental right guaranteed by the Constitution. Any attempt by the states to regulate this new right of abortion, would be permissible only if supported by a "compelling" interest. Id. at 163. Two such state interests were recognized: 1) an interest in preserving maternal health; and 2) an interest in protecting "potential" life. Id. at 162.

The Court determined that the point at which the state's interests become "compelling" roughly correlates to "trimesters" of pregnancy. Therefore, the Court established a trimester system for regulating abortion. According to that system, the state's interest in maternal health is "compelling" after the first trimester, and its interest in potential life is "compelling" at viability. Roe, 410 U.S. at 163. During the first trimester the state has no compelling interest and the woman is free to obtain an abortion without interference from the state. Id. After the first trimester, the state may regulate on behalf of its interest in preserving maternal health, and after viability (roughly the third trimester) the state may regulate and even proscribe abortions except where necessary for the preservation of the life or health of the mother. Id.

C. The Roe Trimester Approach is Unworkable and Has Been Abandoned by the Court in Favor of Concepts Related to Medical Technology and Accepted Medical Practice. But These Are Also Unworkable.

The trimester system of Roe was based on arbitrary lines drawn by the Court which did not logically relate to the state's asserted compelling interests. As Justice O'Connor wrote, in dissent, in Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health:

> The fallacy inherent in the Roe framework is apparent: just because the State has a compelling interest in ensuring maternal safety once an abortion may be more dangerous than childbirth, it simply does not follow that the state has no interest before that point that justifies state regulation to ensure that first-trimester abortions are performed as safely as possible.
>
> The state interest in potential human life is likewise extant throughout pregnancy. In Roe, the Court held that although the State had an important and legitimate interest in protecting potential life, that interest could not become compelling until the point at which the fetus was viable. The difficulty with this analysis is clear: potential life is not less potential in the first weeks of pregnancy than it is at viability or afterward.

462 U.S. 416, 460-461 (1983)(emphasis in original).

However erroneous the original trimester system was, it at least seemed to allow states to rely on some definite lines in order to legislate in furtherance of their compelling interests. Those who favored abortion on demand, however, challenged numerous state laws which were based on the lines established in Roe and were successful in convincing the Court to abandon the Roe trimester framework.

In Roe, the Court noted that "[v]iability is usually placed at about seven months (28 weeks) but may occur earlier, even at 24 weeks." Roe, 410 U.S. at 160. Thus, many states attempted to set viability at a definite stage in pregnancy so that enforcement of the laws applicable after viability could be based on objective criteria. In Colautti v. Franklin, the Court categorically rejected the ability of states to rely on any set lines regarding "viability," stating:

> Viability is reached when, in the judgment of the attending physician on the particular facts of the case before him, there is a reasonable likelihood of the fetus' sustained survival outside the womb, with or without artificial support. Because this point may differ with each pregnancy, neither the legislature nor the courts may proclaim one of the elements entering into the ascertainment of viability — be it weeks of gestation or fetal weight or any other single factor — as the determinant of when the state has a compelling interest in the life or health of the fetus.

439 U.S. 379, 388-389 (1979).

In like manner, the Court also abandoned the trimester approach with respect to the state's compelling interest in protecting maternal health. In Roe, the Court had held that the state's interest became compelling "at approximately the end of the first trimester." 410 U.S. at 163. Accordingly, the Court stated:

> It follows that, from and after this point, a state may regulate the abortion procedure to the extent that the regulation reasonably relates to the preservation and protection of maternal health. Examples of permissible state regulation in this area are requirements as to the qualifications of the person who is to perform the abortion; as to the licensure of that person; as to the facility in which the procedure is to be performed, that is, whether it must be a hospital or may be a clinic or some other place of less-than-hospital status; as to the licensing of the facility; and the like.

Id.

Although Roe had specifically suggested that states might require that abortions performed after the end of the first trimester be performed in hospitals, the Court, in Akron, rejected that position. In Akron, the Court held that it was unconstitutional to require that all abortions performed after the first trimester be performed in hospitals. This change was due to recent medical advances, under which Akron's ordinance so requiring was no longer "reasonable" because it departed from "accepted medical practice." 462 U.S. at 436-438. Thus, the Court once again abandoned Roe's trimester line of demarcation which would have provided at least some stable foundation upon which the states could rely in attempting to enact legislation consistent with Roe.

As Justice O'Connor correctly noted, such an approach is "compeletly unworkable." Akron, 462 U.S. at 454. It requires a state to determine what "acceptable medical practice" is, not only for each type of abortion performed, but also for each type of abortion at each week of pregnancy within each trimester. 462 U.S.456.[4] The undue burden which such a scheme places on state legislatures is amply demonstrated by the 1983 abortion decisions of this Court which involved provisions requiring that abortions performed after the first trimester be performed in hospitals. For example, in 1978, when Akron enacted such a requirement, it was in conformance with accepted medical practice and was, therefore, constitutional. Its second trimester hospitalization requirement was also constitutional in 1979 when reviewed by the district court and in 1981 when reviewed by the court of appeals. In 1982, however, the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists (A.C.O.G.) changed its standards to provide that one type of abortion (D&E) could safely be performed in a non-hospital setting up until about the 18th week of pregnancy.[5] Thus, it was not until the challenged provision reached this Court in 1982 that it suddenly became unconstitutional. The same is true of the Missouri hospitalization provision which was struck down in Planned Parenthood v Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476 (1983).

4. It also has been argued that the states may only regulate according to the particular skill of the physician performing the abortion. Thus, it may not set blanket regulations governing all physicians, but rather, must allow skilled abortion providers more leeway in their practice than non-skilled abortion providers. See, Ragsdale v. Turnock, 841 F.2d 1358 (7th Cir. 1988) (regulations governing all ambulatory surgical treatment centers, including those which perform abortions, were held unconstitutional as they applied to abortion clinics based on the testimony of highly skilled abortion providers that such regulations were not medically necessary to their practice of medicine).

Such sliding standards make it virtually impossible for states to regulate. They, in fact, encourage total deregulation in an area of evident concern in many states.[6] As Justice O'Connor noted, such a scheme requires state legislators to "continuously and conscientiously study contemporary medical and scientific literature in order to determine whether the effect of a particular regulation is to 'depart from accepted medical practice' insofar as particular procedures and particular periods within the trimester are concerned." 462 U.S. at 456. It also requires that they predict what the "accepted medical practice" will be four or five years in the future when the case may ultimately reach the Supreme Court. Moreover, even if this can be done, and the provision is constitutional when enacted and is ultimately upheld by the Court, nothing would appear to prevent such a provision from being challenged a second time after a decision by this Court, based on new medical standards.

5. It is now argued that some skilled physicians can perform abortions safely by dismemberment (D&E) up until 24 weeks in a clinic setting. See, e.g. W. Hern, Abortion Practice, at 154 (1984) (describing the techniques to be used in clinics when aborting fetuses between 21-24 weeks gestation).

6. In addition, the imposition of significant awards of attorneys fees against states in response to successful challenges of their laws may have a chilling effect on those and other states. See e.g., Charles v. Daley, 846 F.2d 1057, 1058-59 (7th Cir. 1988) (award of $100,000 against the state and more than $200,000 against private intervenors).

In effect, Colautti and Akron removed from the states any ability to regulate according to the lines established by the trimester system in Roe. By tying the state's ability to regulate abortion to ever-shifting medical technology and "accepted medical practice," the Court effectively removed from the states' elected representatives the ability to regulate abortion and placed such decisions within the hands of the medical profession.

Far from engendering stability in the law, tying constitutional rights to ever-shifting medical technology and "accepted medical practice" has led to extreme instability in the law. What was constitutional a year or two before may suddenly become unconstitutional. Similarly, whether a particular fetus is "viable" depends not only on the advances in neonatal care, but also on the advances in medical technology with respect to accurately determining fetal age, weight, and lung maturity, as well as the skill of those utilizing such techniques. In addition, viability presumably depends on the availability of such technology within a particular community.

Thus, two women carrying unborn children of the same gestational development may have very different rights regarding abortion, depending on the skill of their physician and the technology available in their community. There is no logical reason that this should be so, from either the perspective of the woman's "right" to abort or the state's right to protect the unborn child's life.[7] The worth of one unborn child does not differ from

7. In his concurring opinion in Thornburgh, Justice Stevens states that he believes it is "obvious that the State's interest in the protection of an embryo — even if that interest is defined as 'protecting those who will be citizens.' — increases progressively and dramatically as the organism's capacity to feel pain, to experience pleasure, to survive, and to react to its surroundings increases day by day." 476 U.S. at 778. Justice Stevens' proposal, that the state's interest in protecting the unborn child's life must increase as he or she develops, however, cannot be correct. If it were correct, then the state's interest in protecting the newborn as well as the mentally incompetent and disabled would be less than its interest in protecting competent adults who are arguably better capable of interacting with society, experiencing pleasure and reacting to their surroundings. Such a notion is clearly contrary to existing laws and principles of equality under the law. The development of the unborn child is not static, but the interest of the state is and should be static because the intrinsic worth of the developing individual is no less prior to birth than after birth or at any other point upon the continuum of life.

the worth of another, and there is no discernable reason for allowing one mother to obtain an abortion simply because her physician is less skilled or does not have the technology which enables him to determine that the fetus is actually of 28 weeks gestational age, and, therefore, viable; rather than 20 weeks and not viable.

D. Application of Roe by the Supreme Court and Lower Federal Courts to Legitimate Attempts by States to Regulate Has Resulted in Abortion on Demand.

Despite the Court's assertion in Roe that the new "right" to abortion was not absolute, that "right" has attained greater protection against state interference than virtually any other right, including those specifically set forth in the text of the Constitution. Normally, where the state asserts a recognized compelling interest in regulating speech or religion, its regulations will be upheld. See e.g., City of Renton v. Playtime Theaters, Inc., 475 U.S. 41 (1985); Tony and Susan Alamo v. Secretary of Labor, 471 U.S. 290 (1985). In contrast, where the state attempts to further its compelling interest in preserving fetal life, its regulations are routinely struck down.

Although the state's interest in preserving fetal life is "compelling" at viability, the state may not prohibit any abortion that is deemed necessary to preserve maternal health. Roe, 410 U.S. at 165. In Doe v. Bolton, the Court, however, adopted an extremely open-ended definition of "health," stating:

> [T]he medical judgment [with respect to whether an abortion is necessary to preserve health] may be exercised in the light of all factors — physical, emotional, psychological, familial, and the woman's age — relevant to the well-being of the patient. All these factors may relate to health.

Doe, 410 U.S. at 192.

This broad interpretation of the "health" exception has been followed uniformly by the lower federal courts and has been applied to statutes attempting to prohibit abortion after viability as well as to those which relate to abortions prior to viability. The Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit held that any attempt to limit the broad definition of health as applied to post-viable abortions would certainly be unconstitutional. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists v. Thornburgh, 737 F.2d 283, 299 (3rd Cir. 1984). That court stated that legislation attempting to prohibit abortions after viability would have to be carefully scrutinized because "[i]t is noteworthy that no Supreme Court case has upheld a criminal statute prohibiting abortion of a viable fetus." Id. The Court set forth the following standard under which legislation that prohibits post-viable abortions was to be reviewed:

> It is clear from the Supreme Court cases that health is to be broadly defined. As the Court stated in Doe v. Bolton, the factors relating to health include those that are 'physical, emotional, psychological, familial, [as well as] the woman's age.'

Id. at 299.

Noting that the Pennsylvania General Assembly, in another subsection, had attempted to limit the broad definition of "health" by stating that "[t]he potential psychological or emotional impact on the mother of the unborn child's survival shall not be deemed a medical risk," the Court added:

> Had the legislature imposed this qualification on the language 'maternal . . . health' in 3210(a) [prohibiting abortions after viability unless necessary to preserve maternal health] we would have no hesitation in declaring that provision unconstitutional. However, since it does not so state, and we are bound to construe it as constitutional, if possible, we again rely with confidence on the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania to construe 'health' as does the Supreme Court of the United States.

Id. See also, Margaret S. v. Edwards, 488 F.Supp. 181, 191 (D.La. 1980) (Louisiana statute prohibiting abortions after viability unless necessary "to prevent permanent impairment to [the woman's] health" held unconstitutional because "[p]reserving maternal health means more than preventing permanent incapacity" and "[a] rape or incest victim may not be able to prove that her mental health will be permanently impaired if she is forced to bear her attacker's child, but she might be able to show that it is necessary to preserve her immediate mental health."); Schulte v. Douglas, 567 F.Supp. 522 (D.Neb. 1981) (statute which prohibited abortion after viability unless "necessary to preserve the woman from imminent peril that substantially engangers her life or health" held unconstitutional).[8]

---

8. The Supreme Court's decision in Thornburgh struck down a regulation that merely attempted to require that the method of abortion be used that was least likely to injure or kill the unborn child when that child had reached a stage in development where there was a reasonable likelihood that he or she could survive. The statute provided that other methods of abortion could be used if that

Thus, the present "balance" of the woman's liberty interest and the state's interest in protecting fetal life weighs entirely in favor of the woman's liberty interest and makes the state's "compelling" interest in preserving life meaningless. The woman's health interest (which presumably includes mental health according to the Third Circuit's decision) always outweighs the state's interest in preserving the child's life. The state may never prevent an abortion which is deemed necessary to preserve the woman's emotional well-being — even after viability.[9] method which was best for the unborn child "would present a significantly greater medical risk to the life or health of the pregnant woman." In striking down that provision, the Court held that the statute was unconstitutional "because it required a 'trade-off' between the woman's health and fetal survival, and failed to require that maternal health be the physician's paramount consideration." 476 U.S. at 768-769 (emphasis added). According to Thornburgh, the state may not protect an unborn child who could survive if born prematurely, from being dismembered within the womb if other methods of abortion which could result in a live birth pose any increased risk to the pregnant woman's health — even an insignificant risk. Thus, it does not appear that the State's ability to protect its interest in preserving fetal life has fared any better with this Court.

NOTES (Continued)

9. As Chief Justice Burger stated in his dissent in Thornburgh:

> [E]very member of the Roe Court rejected the idea of abortion on demand. The Court's opinion today, however, plainly undermines that important principle, and I regretfully conclude that some of the concerns of the dissenting Justices in Roe, as well as the concerns I expressed in my separate opinion, have now been realized.
>
> We have apparently already passed the point at which abortion is available merely on demand. If the statute at at issue here is to be invalidated, the "demand" will not even have to be the result of an informed choice.

476 U.S. at 782-84.

II. ROE SHOULD BE OVERRULED AND THE STATES ENABLED TO ASSUME THEIR PROPER ROLE IN PROTECTING HUMAN LIFE, BORN AND UNBORN.

As discussed above, Roe's framework is, as a practical matter, unworkable. Also, because Roe is not grounded on sound constitutional principles, it is virtually impossible to prevent its unbridled expansion by the federal judiciary. Roe should be overruled and the right to protect all human life restored to the states.

A. Abortion Is Unlike the Fundamental Rights Recognized Under the Right of Privacy and Should Not Be Treated As Are Those Rights.

The Roe Court acknowledged that abortion is unlike all privacy rights recognized in its prior decisions:

> The pregnant woman cannot be isolated in her privacy. She carries an embryo and, later, a fetus, if one accepts the medical definitions of developing young in the human uterus. [ ] The situation therefore is inherently different from marital intimacy, or bedroom possession of obscene material, or marriage, or procreation, or education with which Eisenstadt and Griswold, Stanley, Loving, Skinner, and Pierce and Meyer were respectively concerned.

Roe, 410 at 159 (citations omitted). Thus, it is inappropriate to treat abortion in the same manner as the privacy rights recognized in those cases.

Justice White, joined by Justice Rehnquist, argued cogently in dissent in Thornburgh, that the right to abortion is not fundamental:

> Given that the continued existence and development — that is to say the life — of [the fetus is] so directly at stake in the woman's decision whether or not to terminate her pregnancy, that decision must be recognized as sui generis, different in kind from the others that the Court has protected under the rubric of personal or family privacy and autonomy. Accordingly, the decisions cited by the Court both in Roe and in its opinions today as precedent for the fundamental nature of the liberty to choose abortion do not, even if all are accepted as valid, dictate the Court's classification.

. . . .

That the decision involves the destruction of the fetus renders it different in kind from the decision not to conceive in the first place. This difference does not go merely to the weight of the state interest in regulating abortion; it affects as well the characterization of the liberty interest itself.

. . . .

The Court's decisions in Moore v. East Cleveland, Pierce v. Society of Sisters, and Meyer v. Nebraska can be read for the proposition that parents have fundamental liberty to make decisions with respect to the upbringing of their children. But no one would suggest this fundamental liberty extends to assaults committed upon children by their parents. It is not the case that parents have a fundamental liberty to engage in such activities and that the state may intrude to prevent them only because it has a compelling interest in the well being of children; rather, such activities, by their very nature should be viewed as outside the scope of a fundamental liberty interest.

476 U.S. at 792-793 and n.2.

> Both the characterization of the abortion liberty as fundamental and the denigration of the state's interest in preserving the lives of nonviable fetuses are essential to the detailed constitutional rules devised by the Court to limit the states' power to regulate abortion.

Id. at 796.

Justice O'Connor has articulated a different approach. "Even assuming there is a fundamental right to terminate pregnancy in some situations, there is no justification in law or logic for the trimester framework adopted in Roe." Akron, 462 U.S. 459 (O'Connor, J., dissenting). Accordingly, under that view, the state has compelling interests in protecting maternal health and potential human life which exist throughout pregnancy; therefore, unless the regulation of abortion imposes "an undue burden" on the abortion decision, it should be subjected to a rational basis test. Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 828. Only where the state imposes absolute obstacles or severe limitations on the abortion decision would its regulations be subjected to heightened scrutiny. Id. Given the "limited nature" of any fundamental right which might exist, (Akron, 462 U.S. at 465, n.10), even where heightened scrutiny is applied, "the possibility remains that the statute will withstand the stricter scrutiny." 476 U.S. at 828.[10]

Whether Justice White's approach or that of Justice O'Connor is followed, "a broad range of limitations on abortion (including outright prohibition) that are now unavailable to the states would again become constitutional possibilities." 476 U.S. at 796. As noted by Justice

---

10. Presumably under this test, states would be able to prohibit abortion in furtherance of their compelling interest in protecting fetal life where the woman's interest in aborting is not of utmost urgency. At a minimum, statutes, such as that enacted by Illinois which prohibit abortions that are based solely on the sex of the fetus would be permissible. See, Ill. Rev. State. ch. 38 par. 81-26(8). In 1984, Judge Nordberg entered a temporary restraining order against enforcement of the Illinois provision which has been in effect since that date and remains in effect today. Keith v. Daley, No. 84-C-5602 (N.D. Ill 7/1/84). Such a restriction, while perhaps involving an absolute obstacle to a particular woman's desire for an abortion, and thereby triggering heightened scrutiny, would still be permissible because the state's compelling interest in protecting fetal life would override the woman's interest in obtaining an abortion based on the child's sex.

White, "such a state of affairs would be highly desirable from a standpoint of the constitution." Id. As duly elected members of the Pennsylvania General Assembly who take an oath to uphold the Constitution, amici agree.

The rights asserted by the states — protection of maternal health and the protection of unborn human life — are not exclusive of each other. Rather, they are supplemental. That states seek to prohibit abortions except in the gravest of instances in order to protect human life and also to regulate those abortions which are permitted so as to protect maternal health and fetal life are not mutually inconsistent propositions.

Amici believe that Justice White's approach would produce more stability in constitutional terms because it would return the issue of abortion to the people where it may be dealt with more effectively. However, the approach of Justice O'Connor would also go far toward remedying the present intolerable situation wherein the state's interest in protecting fetal life is totally overridden by the woman's desire, for whatever reason, or no reason at all, to terminate that life.

B. States Are Better Suited Than the Federal Judiciary to Deal With the Problem of Abortion.

This Court has "frequently recognized that individual states have broad latitude in experimenting with possible solutions to problems of vital local concern." Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S. 589, 597 (1977). States have retained this broad latitude both pursuant to principles of federalism and because states, through their elected representatives, are best suited to finding solutions for such problems.

As Justice O'Connor noted in Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority:

> The central issue of federalism, of course, is whether any realm is left open to the States by the Constitution — whether any area remains in which a State may act free of federal interference. . . . The true "essence" of federalism is that the States as States have legitimate interests which the National Government is bound to respect even though its laws are supreme.
>
> . . . .
>
> The text of the Constitution does not define the precise scope of state authority other than to specify, in the Tenth Amendment, that the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution are reserved to the States. . . . The States were to retain authority over those local concerns of greatest relevance and importance to the people.

469 U.S. 528, 581-82 (1985) (O'Connor, J., dissenting).

Abortion is primarily a public policy issue. This is evidenced by the fact that numerous factors relied upon by the Roe Court in support of legalizing abortion relate primarily to social reasons. Roe, 410 U.S. at 153. Such factors, as well as many of those set forth in Doe v. Bolton, regarding the definition of "health," relate to societal problems; not to physical health problems as commonly understood. Indeed, the vast majority of abortions — well in excess of 90% — are performed for social reasons.[11]

---

11. At least one physician has suggested that he would not perform an abortion if it were requested for medical reasons rather than for emotional or social reasons. In testimony before Judge James Kelly in Northeast Women's Center, Inc. v. Michael McMonagle, et al., No. 85-4845 (E.D. Pa. 4/29/87), Dr. Klebanoff, a physician who routinely performed abortions at the clinic, testified as follows:

Q. Now doctor, take us through the procedures in a routine first trimester case. What is the first thing you do?

A. The first thing I do, is introduce myself. I ask the patient if they are having their operation for emotional reasons or not.

. . . . .

Q. Now, this emotional reason or not, what is that? Would you detail that a little bit more for us?

As such, abortion falls within the traditional sphere of state regulation.

This Court has often recognized, that the states through their elected representatives are best suited to finding solutions for such social problems.

> To stay experimentation in things social and economic is a grave responsibility. Denial of the right to experiment may be fraught with serious consequences to the nation. It is one of the happy incidents of the federal system that a single courageous State may, if its citizens choose, serve as a laboratory; and try novel social and economic experiments without risk to the rest of the country. This Court has the power to prevent an experiment. . . . But in the exercise of this high power, we must be ever on our guard, lest we erect our prejudices into legal principles.

New York Ice Co. v. Liebmann, 285 U.S. 262, 311 (1932).

Given that few abortions are obtained for physical health reasons, Roe inaccurately characterizes abortion as a "medical" issue. Moreover, to the extent that abortion is a medical concern, it is also within the traditional realm of state regulation. "It is elemental that

---

NOTES (Continued)

A. I ask the patient if they are having their operation due to emotional reasons.
Q. Is that the standard question that you ask?
A. I ask that in every patient, yes.
Q. What if the response is, "Yes?"
A. Then, I go ahead and proceed with the operation.
Q. That's the only question that you would ask of the patient?
A. I ask them how they are and try to put them at ease.

THE COURT: What happens if they say, "No?" What happens if they say, "No, I am not having it for emotional reasons?"

THE WITNESS: If they say, "No," which I haven't run into yet, I expect I wouldn't do the procedure.

THE COURT: You haven't run into that yet?

THE WITNESS: No.

a state has broad power to establish and enforce standards of conduct within its borders relative to the health of everyone there. It is a vital part of a state's police power." Barsky v. Board of Regents, 347 U.S. 442, 449 (1954).

Whether abortion is viewed as a social problem, a medical problem, or a combination thereof, states are better equipped to deal with it than the judiciary. First, states are in a better position to be aware of abuses within their borders and the need for corrective legislation. For example, a five month undercover investigation of numerous abortion clinics conducted in 1978 by the Better Government Association and the Chicago Sun Times exposed widespread corrupt, unsafe and abusive abortion practices in Chicago. "The Abortion Profiteers," Chicago Sun Times, November 12, 1978. This investigation showed that a number of abortion providers profited greatly at the expense of Illinois women — performing abortions on women who were not pregnant, operating under unsafe conditions, and generally exploiting the women who sought their services.

Second, state legislatures have greater fact-finding capacity than the courts. This allows them to address social problems more thoroughly and effectively. For example, in direct response to the above investigative series, the Illinois General Assembly conducted extensive hearings on the regulation of abortion clinic practices and of outpatient surgical procedures generally. See, 80th General Assembly, Report to the House Human Resources Committee, Subcommittee on Health, "State regulation of abortion clinics," December 13, 1978. According to the Subcommittee report, stricter enforcement of existing regulations and additional regulations were necessary to ensure that abortions would be performed safely and ethically in the state. Physicians were simply unable or unwilling to police themselves and the penalties that were available under the Medical Practice Act at that time apparently did not deter abusive practices. The report was the basis of amendments to the provisions of the Illinois Ambulatory Surgical Treatment and Care Act and regulations promulgated thereunder. Ill. Rev. Stat. ch 111½ par. 157-8.1. Despite the widespread abuses which these provisions were enacted to remedy, the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit recently affirmed the district court's decision striking down virtually all regulations promulgated pursuant to the Ambulatory Surgical Treatment and Care Act as they apply to abortion clinics. Ragsdale v. Turnock, 841 F.2d. 1358 (7th Cir. 1988), appeal docketed, No. 88-790, 57 U.S.L.W. 3378 (November 10, 1988).

In addition to being more attuned to the need for corrective legislation within their jurisdictions, states are also better able to study changing medical technology and assess its availability. Similarly, states have a much broader range of options available with which to alleviate the problems which lead women to seek abortions than does the federal judiciary.[12]

C. Returning the Abortion Issue to the States Will Reduce Public Tension.

Although it has been argued, that returning this issue to the states would create an intolerable situation — one that allows different protection on a state-by-state basis, such argument is unpersuasive. Certainly, prior to Roe, there was great diversity among the 50 states. See this brief at 3-5. Such diversity did not present chaos.

12. Unfortunately, some of the efforts of states to provide women with viable alternatives to abortion by funding organizations which offer wide-ranging services to women with problem pregnancies have been hampered by the federal courts. See e.g., Planned Parenthood v. Kempiners, 568 F.Supp. 1490 (N.D. Ill. 1983) enjoining enforcement of state law that attempted to provide limited funds for problem pregnancies only to organizations which do not counsel and refer for abortion).

Rather, it allowed states to act as experimental laboratories in balancing all of the interests involved — maternal, fetal, and societal — to achieve regulations which were consistent with public sentiment.[13]

Moreover, even under the present law, there continues to be great diversity among the various states. This is due to the fact that Roe did not require any state to regulate abortion to the fullest extent possible. The state was severly limited in the areas where it could regulate, but even where a state was allowed to regulate on behalf of maternal health and fetal life, the Court merely stated that it could regulate "if it chooses." Roe, 410 U.S. at 164. As is demonstrated in the area of parental involvement in a minor's abortion decision, approximately 30 states have chosen at one point or another to require parental notice or consent.[14] Although not all states require such involvement, a number of those states that have done so have found that such laws not only reduce teenage abortion but also teenage pregnancy.[15]

13. Although it has been claimed that the existing law under Roe and its progeny is supported by public sentiment, such is not the case. There has been tremendous upheaval within the 50 states which has increased in recent years in response to the excessive and radical position articulated in Roe, Bolton, and subsequent cases which allow abortion on demand.

14. The following states have enacted legislation requiring parental involvement: Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, California, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, North Dakota, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Utah and West Virginia. Although some of these statutes have been struck down and some remain in the courts, it is clear that a significant number of states felt that the need for parental involvement in the minor's abortion decision was compelling enough to cause them to pass such legislation.

15. In Minnesota, between 1980 (the last full year prior to enforcement of the parental notice law) and 1984 (a time during which the law was in effect), the number of abortions for teenagers under the age of 18 dropped from 2,327 to 1,395 a decline of 40.1%

As states have become aware of this, more and more have chosen to involve parents. Such diversity has in no way caused chaos. Nor would enactment of other restrictions which are more consistent with public sentiment cause chaos. Such restrictions would serve only to reduce public tension with respect to this issue and allow states to make their laws with respect to protection of the unborn more consistent with each other.

The present trend among the 50 states is to grant civil and criminal protection to the unborn. For example, all 50 states recognize a cause of action for prenatal injuries negligently inflicted upon the unborn child. See generally, W. Prosser, Law of Torts, 335-338 (1971). A majority of states also recognize a cause of action for wrongful death of the unborn child, and many of these apply throughout pregnancy. Amadio v. Levin, 509 Pa. 199, 203 n.3 (1985); Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 70, sec. 2.2 (1983). Indeed, a number of state legislatures have proscribed the killing of a fetus as homicide or otherwise criminalized such conduct. See e.g., Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 38, par. 9-1.2, 9-2.1, 9-3.2, 12-3.1, 12-4.4 (West Supp. 1986); Cal. Penal Code sec. 187 (West Supp. 1983); N.Y. Penal Law sec. 125.00 (McKinney 1975); Utah Code Ann. sec. 76-5-201 (Supp. 1983); Iowa Code Ann. sec. 707.8(1) (West 1979); Ga. Code Ann. sec. 16-5-80 (1983).

The Pennsylvania Supreme Court recently stated in Amadio:

NOTES (Continued)

and the decline in the abortion rate for this age group was 32.2%. Figures based on data contained in Reported Induced Abortions, published yearly by Minnesota Department of Health. For the same time period and age group, the number of births dropped from 2,083 to 1,654 — a decline of 18.6%, and the birthrate dropped 7.9%. Figures obtained from Minnesota Department of Health computer printouts regarding births and female population size. Also during this time period, the number of pregnancies (abortions plus births) for Minnesota teens under age 18 dropped from 4,360 to 3,049 — a decline of 30.1%; and the pregnancy rate decreased 20.9%. Id.

> We have, since our decision in Sinkler v. Kneale, 401 Pa. 267, 164 A.2d 93 (1960), recognized that a child en ventre sa mere is a separate individual from the moment of conception, and have permitted that child to sue for injuries received during gestation when the child is born alive. Implicit in our holding in Sinkler is the acknowledgement that a child en ventre sa mere is an individual with the right to be free of prenatal injury. If a child en ventre sa mere is an individual at the time of its injury, then, a fortiori, the child is also an individual when those injuries cause its death, and it makes no difference in liability under the wrongful death and survival statutes whether the child dies of the injuries just prior to or just after birth.

509 Pa. at 204. It is clear that Missouri (that the statued here under review) also recognizes that human life begins at conception. However, under Roe, these and other states are forced to ignore scientific facts and to maintain flatly inconsistent laws on their books—protecting unborn human life from destruction or injury by others on the one hand and, on the other, permitting the unborn child to be destroyed or injured[16] through abortion whenever his or her mother so chooses. Such a glaring anomily encourages disrespect for the law.

---

16. Some children upon whom an abortion has been attempted or performed do survive the abortion procedure. See, e.g., Stroh & Hinman, Reported Live Births Following Induced Abortion: Two and One-half Years' Experience in Upstate New York, 126 Am. J. Obstet. Gynecol. 83, 88 (1976). Those who do survive, however, may be severely damaged by the abortion procedure. Id. These children will eventually become aware of the cause of their imparament.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, amici curiae request that this Court reverse Roe v. Wade and return to the states the right to protect unborn human life.

Respectfully submitted,

William Bentley Ball
Philip J. Murren
*Maura K. Quinlan
Ball, Skelly, Murren & Connell
511 N. Second Street
P.O. Box 1108
Harrisburg, PA 17108
(717) 232-8731
Attorneys for Amici Curiae

February 23, 1989

*Counsel of Record

APPENDIX A

THE AMICI CURIAE

The amici curiae consist of members of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, including the following:

Senators: Anthony B. Andrezeski (D) Erie; Gibson E. Armstong (R) Lancaster; Edward W. Helfrick (R) Northumberland; J. William Lincoln (D) Fayette; Roger A. Madigan (R) Bradford; Raphael J. Musto (D) Luzerne; Michael A. O'Pake (D) Berks; Frank A. Pecora (R) Allegheny; John W. Regoli (D) Westmoreland; M. Joseph Rocks (R) Philadelphia; John J. Shumaker (R) Dauphin; William J. Stewart (D) Johnstown; J. Barry Stout (D) Washington; Noah W. Wenger (R) Lancaster.

House Members: John E. Barley (R) Lancaster; Joseph W. Battisto (D) Monroe; Fred Belardi (D) Lackawanna; Jerry Birmelin (R) Wayne; Kevin Blaum (D) Luzerne; Alvin C. Bush (R) Lycoming; Italo S. Cappabianca (D) Erie; Edgar A. Carlson (R) Tioga; Gaynor Cawley (D) Lackawanna; Richard J. Cessar (R) Allegheny; Paul I. Clymer (R) Bucks; Nicholas A. Colafella (D) Beaver; Anthony L. Colaizzo (D) Washington; Tony DeLuca (D) Allegheny; Thomas W. Dempsey (R) Lycoming; Scott Dietrich (R) Luzerne; Jim Distler (R) Elk; Howard L. Fargo (R) Mercer; Thomas J. Fee (D) Lawrence; Patrick E. Fleagle (R) Franklin; A. Carville Foster, Jr. (R) York; Stephen F. Freind (R) Delaware; James J. Gallen (R) Berks; Thomas P. Gannon (R) Delaware; Richard A. Geist (R) Blair; Leonard Q. Gruppo (R) Northampton; George C. Hasay (R) Luzerne; Samuel E. Hayes, Jr. (R) Blair; Dick L. Hess (R) Bedford; Edwin G. Johnson (R) Blair; Ralph Kaiser (D) Allegheny; Ted V. Kondrich (R) Allegheny; Gerard A. Kosinski (D) Philadelphia;

Frank LaGrotta (D) Lawrence; Dennis E. Leh (R) Berks; William R. Lloyd, Jr. (D) Somerset; Keith R. McCall (D) Carbon; Christopher K. McNally (D) Allegheny; Emil Mrkonic (D) Allegheny; Dennis M. O'Brien (R) Philadelphia; Richard D. Olasz (D) Allegheny; Joseph A. Petrarca (D) Westmoreland; Merle H. Phillips (R) Northumberland; Joseph R. Pitts (R) Chester; Eugene G. Saloom (D) Westmoreland; Jere W. Schuler (R) Lancaster; Edward G. Staback (D) Lackawanna; Ted Stuban (D) Columbia; Elinor Z. Taylor (R) Chester; Leona G. Telek (R) Cambria; Thomas M. Tigue (D) Luzerne; Peter R. Vroon (R) Chester; Frances Weston (R) Philadelphia; Chris R. Wogan (R) Philadelphia; John N. Wozniak (D) Cambria; Frank W. Yandrisevits (D) Northampton.

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et. al.,
Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF AMICUS CURIAE OF THE NATIONAL RIGHT TO LIFE COMMITTEE, INC. IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

James Bopp, Jr.
Counsel of Record
Richard E. Coleson
BRAMES, McCORMICK, BOPP & ABEL
The Tudor House
191 Harding Avenue
Post Office Box 410
Terre Haute, Indiana 47808-0410
(812) 238-2421
Attorneys for Amicus Curiae

February 23, 1989

Central Publishing Company, Inc., Indianapolis, IN 46206

QUESTIONS PRESENTED HEREIN

1. WHETHER ESTABLISHING THE APPROPRIATE STANDARD OF REVIEW IS NECESSARY TO DETERMINING THE CONSTITUTIONALITY OF THE MISSOURI STATUTES.
2. WHETHER THE ABORTION PRIVACY ANALYSIS SET FORTH IN ROE V. WADE SHOULD BE APPLIED IN THE PRESENT CASE.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
QUESTIONS PRESENTED HEREIN	i
TABLE OF CONTENTS	ii
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES	v
INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE	1
SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT	2
ARGUMENT	3
I. ESTABLISHING THE APPLICABLE CONSTITUTIONAL ANALYSIS IS THE NECESSARY THRESHOLD ISSUE IN THE REVIEW OF THIS CASE	3
A. This Court Has Consistently Begun Constitutional Review With the Threshold Issue of Determining the Appropriate Standard of Review	3
1. This Threshold Determination Is Evident in the Cases Regarding the Regulation of Abortion.	3
2. This Threshold Determination Is Evident in the Cases Regarding the Public Funding of Abortion	5
3. This Threshold Determination Is Evident in the Privacy Analysis in Bowers v. Hardwick	6
B. There Is No Principled Way to Avoid the Issue of the Applicability of Roe v. Wade to This Case	7
II. FAILURE TO DETERMINE THE APPLICABLE STANDARD OF REVIEW WHILE UPHOLDING THE MISSOURI STATUTE WOULD LEAD TO UNTOWARD RESULTS	11
A. Litigation Would Continue Concerning the Constitutionality of State Statutes Under the Standard of Review Established in Roe.	11
B. Further Litigation Would Force the Courts to Continue Making Legislative Policy Choices and Drawing Ever-Finer Lines	13
C. This Court Would Continue to be Faced With Legislative Policy Choices on Abortion and the Necessity of Resolving Issues Decided Differently in the Lower Courts, Leading to Further Distortion of the Law Where It Touches On Abortion	14
III. THE ABORTION PRIVACY ANALYSIS OF ROE SHOULD BE ABANDONED IN FAVOR OF A RATIONAL BASIS TEST FOR ABORTION LEGISLATION	17
A. Under the Privacy Analysis of Bowers, the Right of Privacy Does Not Extend to Abortion	18
B. Preserving an Abortion Privacy Right While Recognizing a Compelling State Interest in Unborn Human Life Throughout Pregnancy Would Lead to Substantial Difficulties	19
1. Litigation Would Continue Concerning the Proper Advancement of State Interests and Whether Legislation Is Narrowly Tailored to Meet Those Interests	20
2. The Continuing Litigation Would Force Upon the Courts the Need to Continue Making Policy Choices, More Properly Suited to Legislative Bodies, Which Has Led to a Substantial Distortion in the Law Where It Touches Abortion	20

3. This Court Would Be Forced to Continue Making Ever-Expanding Policy Choices . 21

4. This Court's Own Experience With the Declared Compelling Interests in Maternal Health and "Potential Life" After Viability Shows the Inherent Problems with Declaring a Compelling Interest in Unborn Life While Maintaining the Abortion Privacy Right 21

CONCLUSION 26

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

United States Supreme Court Cases: Page(s)

Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 426 U.S. 416 (1983) 4, 5, 13, 14, 15, 23, 24

Ashwander v. TVA, 297 U.S. 288 (1936) 7, 8, 9

Bellotti v. Baird (I), 428 U.S. 132 (1976) 13

Bellotti v. Baird (II), 443 U.S.622 (1979) 4, 13

Bowers v. Hardwick, 106 S.Ct. 2841 (1986) 2, 6, 18, 19

Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979) 4, 9

Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973) 2, 4, 15

Gary-Northwest Ind. Women's Services v. Orr, 451 U.S. 934 (1982) 11, 23

H.L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398 (1981) 4, 13

Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980) 4, 5, 6

Hartigan v. Zbaraz, 108 S.Ct. 479 (1987) 11, 13

Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977) 4, 5

Moore v. City of East Cleveland, Ohio, 431 U.S. 494 (1977) 6, 18

Mattiello v. Connecticut, 4 Conn. Cir. Ct. 55, 225 A.2d 507, appeal dismissed, 395 U.S. 209 (1969)..... 9

Naim v Naim, 197 Va. 80, 87 S.E.2d 749, vacated, 350 U.S. 891 (1955) (per curiam) 9

Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U.S. 319 (1937) 6, 18

Planned Parenthood Association of Kansas City v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476 (1983) 9, 13, 23

Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976) 4, 13

Poe v. Ullman, 367 U.S. 497 (1961) 8

Rescue Army v. Municipal Court of Los Angeles, 331 U.S. 549 (1947) 8

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) ..... passim

Singleton v. Wulff, 428 U.S. 106 (1976) 9

Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 106 S.Ct. 2169 (1986) 3, 5, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 24, 25

Other Cases:

Akron Center for Reproductive Health v. Akron, 479 F.Supp. 1172 (N.D. Ohio 1979)..... 23

Akron Center for Reproductive Health v. Akron, 651 F.2d 1198 (6th Cir. 1981) 23

Akron Center for Reproductive Health v. Slaby, No. 86-3664, slip op. (6th Cir. Aug. 12, 1988) appeal filed sub nom. Ohio v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 57 U.S.L.W. 3378 (U.S. Nov. 10, 1988) (No. 88-805) 14

American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists v. Thornburgh, 737 F. 2d 283 (3d Cir. 1984) 8

Conn v. Conn, 525 N.E.2d 612 (Ind. Ct. App. 1988), aff'd and opinion of app. ct. adopted by order, No. 73S01-8807-CV-631 (Ind. July 15, 1988), cert. denied, 57 U.S.L.W. 3347 (U.S. Nov. 14, 1988) (No. 88-347) 11

Gary-Northwest Indiana Women's Services v. Bowen, 96 F. Supp. 894 (N.D. Ind. 1980) 12, 22, 23

Hodgson v. Minnesota, No. 86-5423, slip op. (8th Cir. Aug. 8, 1988) (en banc) 13

Planned Parenthood Association of Kansas City v. Ashcroft, 655 F.2d 848 (8th Cir. 1981). 23

Simopolous v. Commonwealth, 221 Va. 1059, 277 S.E.2d 194 (1981) 23

Other Authorities:

Abortion and the Constitution (D. Horan, E. Grant & P. Cunningham eds. 1987) 11

Arbagi, "Roe and the Hippocratic Oath," in Abortion and the Constitution (D. Horan, E. Grant & P. Cunningham eds. 1987) 18

A. Bickel, The Least Dangerous Branch: The Supreme Court at the Bar of Politics (1962)..... 9

Bopp & Coleson, The Right To Abortion: Absolute, Anomalous, and Ripe for Reversal, 3 B.Y.U. J. Pub. L. 191 (1989)..... 9, 12, 16, 17, 19, 21, 24, 25

Brief Amicus Curiae for Americans United for Life as Amicus Curiae at 4 n.l, Simopolos v. Virginia, 462 U.S. 506 1983 23

Connery, "The Ancients and the Medievals on Abortion: The Consensus the Court Ignored," in Abortion and the Constitution (D. Horan, E. Grant & P. Cunningham eds. 1987). 18

A. Cox, The Role of the Supreme Court in America (1976) 16

Dellapenna, "Abortion and the Law: Blackmun's Distortion of the Historical Record," in Abortion and the Constitution (D. Horan, E. Grant & P. Cunningham eds. 1987) 18

Dellapenna, The History of Abortion: Technology, Morality, and Law, 40 U. Pitt. L. Rev. 359 (1979) 18

Destro, Abortion and the Constitution: The Need for a Life Protective Amendment, 63 Calif. L. Rev. 1250 (1975) 18

Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, 82 Yale L.J. 920 (1973) 15

F. Frankfurter, The Public and Its Government 49-51 (1930) 16

Gunther, The Subtle Vices of the "Passive Virtues" — A Comment on Principle and Expediency in Judicial Review, 64 Colum. L. Rev. 1 (1964) 9

Horan & Balch, "Roe v. Wade: No Justification in History, Law or Logic," in Abortion and the Constitution (D. Horan, E. Grant & P. Cunningham eds. 1987) . 18

Means, The Phoenix of Abortion Freedom: Is a Penumbral or Ninth-Amendment Right About to Arise from the Abuse of Fourteenth-Century Common-Law Liberty?, 17 N.Y.L.F. 335 (1971) 18

Pfeifer, "Abandoning Error: Self-Correction by the Supreme Court," in Abortion and the Constitution (D. Horan, E. Grant & P. Cunningham eds. 1987) . 25

Plato, Phaedrus 18

Plato, Republic 18

L. Wardle, The Abortion Privacy Doctrine (1980) 11

Wardle, Rethinking Roe v. Wade, 1985 B.Y.U. L. Rev. 231 25

Woodward, The Abortion Papers, The Washington Post, Jan. 22, 1989, at D1, col.1 15

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et. al.,
Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF AMICUS CURIAE OF THE NATIONAL RIGHT TO LIFE COMMITTEE, INC. IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

INTEREST OF AMICUS[1]

The National Right to Life Committee, Inc. is a nonprofit organization whose purpose is to promote respect for the worth and dignity of all human life, including the life of the unborn child from the moment of conception. The National Right to Life Committee, Inc. is comprised of a Board of Directors representing 51 state affiliate organizations and more than 2,000 local chapters made up of individuals from every race, denomination, ethnic background, and political belief. It engages in various political, legislative, legal, and educational activities to protect and promote the concept of the sanctity of innocent human life.

[1]This Brief Amicus Curiae is filed with the consent of all parties to this appeal. A letter from each attorney stating this consent has been filed herewith with the Clerk of this Court.

The members of the National Right to Life Committee, Inc. have been the prime supporters of laws restricting abortion on demand to only those instances in which the mother's life is in danger. Since Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), and Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973), the members of the National Right to Life Committee, Inc. have supported legislation to protect unborn human life within these guidelines. The Missouri legislation at issue herein is the result of lobbying, in great part, by the members of the National Right to Life Committee, Inc. and its affiliate, Missouri Citizens for Life. By means of this brief, the National Right to Life Committee, Inc. seeks to advance these interests by supporting the Missouri regulations at issue herein.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The necessary first step in the judicial review of the Missouri statutes at issue herein is to determine the appropriate standard of review. Without resolution of this threshold issue, the Court will be uncertain what constitutional analysis to employ, whether a low level of scrutiny, strict scrutiny, or some intermediate standard.

This Court should not merely assume, without confronting, the continued viability of Roe v. Wade. To so consider the statutes, while avoiding the underlying issue of the correctness of Roe's right to choose abortion and its trimester framework, would be to depart from the precedents of this Court. Such avoidance would also lead to untoward results.

The Court should confront directly the necessary threshold issue of the standard of review. In doing so, the Court should be guided by the analysis of Bowers v. Hardwick, 106 S.Ct. 2841 (1986), and find that there is no constitutional right to abortion. Thus, the standard of review to be employed herein should be the rational basis test. An attempt to establish an intermediate standard of review would also result in undesirable results. The only lasting resolution of the matter is to overrule Roe completely and allow the states to resolve the matter through the mechanisms of the democratic process.

ARGUMENT

I. ESTABLISHING THE APPLICABLE CONSTITUTIONAL ANALYSIS IS THE NECESSARY THRESHOLD ISSUE IN THE REVIEW OF THIS CASE.

The first step in any judicial review of state statutes is to determine the standard of review. Until a system of measurement is established, be it cubits, yards, or meters, declaring the measure of an object is meaningless. Likewise, an evaluation of the constitutional dimensions of Missouri's legislative handiwork is meaningless unless the Court reveals the character of its measuring rod. Therefore, the Court should begin its analysis in this case by reappraising Roe's abortion right and trimester scheme.

A. THIS COURT HAS CONSISTENTLY BEGUN CONSTITUTIONAL REVIEW WITH THE THRESHOLD ISSUE OF DETERMINING THE APPROPRIATE STANDARD OF REVIEW.

It is the consistent practice of this Court to begin its constitutional review of a case by setting forth the standard of review to be applied and the elements of the applicable analysis. This consistent pattern may be seen in the following examples.

1. THIS THRESHOLD DETERMINATION IS EVIDENT IN THE CASES REGARDING THE REGULATION OF ABORTION.

In cases involving state regulation of abortion, this Court has consistently set forth the standard of review before considering the particular statutes at issue. This may be seen from the seminal case of Roe through the most recent case decided with analysis, Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 106 S.Ct. 2169 (1986).

In Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, the Roe majority labored over the appropriate constitutional analysis, for more than thirty pages of the official reporter, before striking down the Texas abortion statute in a brief paragraph. The result was a trimester scheme built upon a claimed fundamental right — with stages of compelling interests adhered to movable points of medical technology — all perched upon a substantive due process analysis. As unlikely as the resulting analysis may be, the Roe majority did not ignore the threshold step of establishing the standard by which the statute would be reviewed.

In subsequent abortion cases of this Court, this pattern (of establishing the standard of review as a threshold matter) is clearly evidenced, in cases such as the following:

1. Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. at 189, 195 (cross- references to Roe regarding the appropriate analysis).
2. Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 60-61 (1976) (set out Roe analysis in detail).
3. Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464, 470 (1977) (began by setting forth equal protection analysis).
4. Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379, 386-87 (1979) (reviewed the Roe standard of review before considering the statutes).
5. Bellotti v. Baird (II), 443 U.S.622, 633-42 (1979) (extensive discussion of Roe, Danforth, and other precedent setting forth the proper analysis).
6. Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297, 311-18 (carefully reviewing the abortion privacy right analysis), 319-20 (setting forth the establishment clause tests), 322-23 (establishing the equal protection analysis), 324 (settling on the rational basis test as the applicable standard of review)(1980).
7. H.L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398, 408-10 (1981) (review of controlling precedent and standards).
8. Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 426 U.S. 416, 419-20 (reaffirming Roe as setting forth the controlling analysis), 426-31 (extensive restatement of the trimester scheme prior to consideration of the Ohio statutes) (1983).

9. Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 106 S.Ct. at 2178, 2184 (preliminary and concluding reaffirmation of Roe as containing the appropriate analysis).

Particularly crucial to the present discussion are the cases of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health and Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists. In Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 426 U.S. 416, with Roe under attack — by a growing Court dissent, in the state legislatures, and in the academic world — the Akron majority considered the continued viability of Roe as the threshold issue of its analysis. Id. at 419-20.

Likewise, in Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 106 S.Ct. 2169, with Roe still under attack by a larger Court dissent, with states still struggling to constitutionally assert their supposedly compelling interests, and with an undiminished assault by legal academics, a narrow majority of this Court again stopped at the threshold to establish the standard of review before applying the analysis to the latest set of statutes. Id. at 2178. Once again, the viability of Roe was considered as the necessary preliminary consideration.

2. THIS THRESHOLD DETERMINATION IS EVIDENT IN THE CASES REGARDING THE PUBLIC FUNDING OF ABORTION.

In both Maher v. Roe, 448 U.S. 297, and Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297, abortion funding cases, this Court considered the necessary first step of the standard of review before dealing with the constitutionality of the legislation before it. Especially noteworthy in this respect is Harris v. McRae, where this Court considered carefully whether the abortion privacy right, or any other constitutional protection, entitled indigent women to public funding of abortion. After carefully reviewing the constitutional protections and analyses, this Court concluded that the rational basis test was the controlling standard of review. Id. at 324. Under this standard, the Court then determined that the Hyde Amendment, limiting funding for abortions under federally financed programs to situations where the life of the mother was at risk, had a rational basis.

3. THIS THRESHOLD DETERMINATION IS EVIDENT IN THE PRIVACY ANALYSIS IN BOWERS v. HARDWICK.

In privacy cases outside the abortion realm, this Court has also found it essential to pause at the threshold to determine the standard of review. The recent case of Bowers v. Hardwick, 106 S.Ct. 2841, stands as a perfect example. In Bowers, as in the abortion cases, it was asserted that a substantive-due-process privacy right encompassed the activity at issue. This Court first considered the appropriate analysis, as described more fully below, see infra at III (A), and determined that there was no constitutional right to homosexual sodomy. For present purposes, the key element is the threshold consideration of the proper constitutional analysis. The Bowers majority noted that, before a right could be declared fundamental under a substantive due process analysis, as urged by the respondent, a certain standard must be met.

> Striving to assure itself and the public that announcing rights not readily identifiable in the Constitution's text involves much more than the imposition of the Justices' own choice of values on the States and the Federal Government, the Court has sought to identify the nature of the rights qualifying for heightened judicial protection. In Palko v. Connecticut, it was said that this category includes those fundamental liberties that are 'implicit in the concept of ordered liberty,' such that 'neither liberty nor justice would exist if [they] were sacrificed.' A different description of fundamental liberties appeared in Moore v. East Cleveland, where they are characterized as those liberties that are 'deeply rooted in this Nation's history and tradition.'

Id. at 2844 (citations omitted).

Thus, this Court first set forth the standard of review, then applied the appropriate standard to the issues at hand.

B. THERE IS NO PRINCIPLED WAY TO AVOID THE ISSUE OF THE APPLICABILITY OF ROE v. WADE TO THIS CASE.

It will be argued by some that the judicial review of this case need not include a consideration of the continued viability of Roe v. Wade — that this Court may simply assume, without considering, the standards set forth by Roe, and uphold the Missouri statutes as within the scope of permissible abortion regulation under Roe and its progeny. While this might have a perceived advantage, i.e., postponing the inevitable confrontation with Roe's faulty analysis, any perceived advantage is illusory. This is evident for several reasons.

First among the reasons for confronting the issue now is the lack of any truly principled way to avoid the issue. As noted above, this Court has consistently established the standard of review as the necessary first step in its analysis. To do otherwise now would be to abandon this Court's usual method of review. The question would certainly be raised as to why, in this case and by this Court, the usual analysis was abandoned.

Of course, this Court has a long-standing principle of avoiding constitutional issues where a case may be decided on some other ground. Justice Brandeis, in his famous concurrence to Ashwander v. TVA, 297 U.S. 288, 346-48 (1936) (joined by Stone, Roberts, and Cardozo, JJ.), summed up the seven rules comprising the avoidance principle:

> First, "[t]he Court will not pass upon the constitutionality of legislation in a friendly non-adversary proceeding. . . ." Id. at 346.
>
> Second, "[t]he Court will not 'anticipate a question of law in advance of the necessity of deciding it.'" Id. (citations omitted).
>
> Third, "[t]he Court will not pass upon the validity of a statute upon complaint of one who fails to show that he is injured by its operation." Id. at 347.

Fourth, "[t]he Court will not pass upon the constitutionality of a statute at the instance of one who has availed himself of its benefits." Id. at 348.

Fifth, "[t]he Court will not 'formulate a rule of constitutional law broader than is required by the precise facts to which it is applied.'" Id. (citations omitted).

Sixth, "[t]he Court will not pass upon a constitutional question although properly presented by the record, if there is also present some other ground upon which the case may be disposed of." Id. at 347.

Seventh, "'[w]hen the validity of an act of the Congress[2] is drawn in question, and even if a serious doubt of constitutionality is raised, it is a cardinal principle that this Court will first ascertain whether a construction of the statute is fairly possible by which the question may be avoided.'" Id. (citation omitted).

These rules, based on considerations of policy, developed by this Court, and on Article III of the United States Constitution, were quoted in Rescue Army v. Municipal Court of Los Angeles, 331 U.S. 549 (1947), where this Court stated that the rules were employed to "avoid[] passing upon a large part of all the constitutional questions pressed upon it for decision . . . , notwithstanding conceded jurisdiction, until necessity compel[led] it in the performance of constitutional duty." Id. at 569. "Like the case and controversy limitation itself and the policy against entertaining political questions," the Court declared, the avoidance principle "is one of the rules basic to the federal system and this Court's appropriate place within that structure." Id. at 570.

This avoidance principle has been reflected in "numerous cases and over a long period." Poe v. Ullman, 367 U.S. 497, 503

[2]This principle applies to acts of state legislatures as well. See, e.g., Thornburgh, 737 F.2d 283, 294 (3d Cir. 1984).

(1961)(Frankfurter, J., plurality opinion).[3] It has been repeated by this Court in relation to review of state abortion laws. See, e.g., Singleton v. Wulff, 428 U.S. 106, 114 (1976). However, in keeping with the usual abortion distortion factor (apparent where any area of the law touches on abortion)[4] the principle has not been scrupulously followed in abortion cases.[5]

In Thornburgh, 106 S.Ct. 2169, Justice White observed the majority's eagerness to strike down abortion legislation at the expense of the Ashwander avoidance principle and summarized the matter well in response to the majority's refusal to find an emergency exception in the two-physician requirement for postviability abortions:

> The Court's rejection of a perfectly plausible reading of the statute flies in the face of the principle — which until today I had thought applicable to abortion statutes as well as to other legislative enactments — that '[w]here fairly possible, courts should construe a statute to avoid a danger of unconstitutionality.' [citation omitted] The Court's reading is obviously based on an entirely different principle: that in cases involving abortion, a permissible reading of a statute is to be avoided at all costs.

[3]There has been controversy over particular applications of the principle, but not the principle itself. See, e.g., Mattiello v. Connecticut, 4 Conn. Cir. Ct. 55, 225 A.2d 507, appeal dismissed, 395 U.S. 209 (1969); Naim v. Naim, 197 Va. 80, 87 S.E.2d 749, vacated, 350 U.S. 891 (1955) (per curiam); A. Bickel, The Least Dangerous Branch: The Supreme Court at the Bar of Politics (1962); Gunther, The Subtle Vices of the "Passive Virtues" — A Comment on Principle and Expediency in Judicial Review, 64 Colum. L. Rev. 1 (1964).

[4]See infra II (B). For a fuller discussion of the abortion distortion factor in general and the failure of this Court to follow the Ashwander avoidance principle in particular, in cases such as, inter alia, Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979), Planned Parenthood Association of Kansas City v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476 (1983), Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 106 S.Ct. 2169, see Bopp & Coleson, The Right to Abortion: Absolute, Anomalous, and Ripe for Reversal, 3 B.Y.U. J. Pub. L. 191 (1989) (The anticipated publication date is April, 1989. Page references — other than the initial page number — employed herein are to the unpublished manuscript, which has been provided to the Clerk of this Court.).

[5]Id.

cases involving abortion, a permissible reading of a statute is to be avoided at all costs.

Thornburgh, 106 S.Ct. at 2205.

It is not surprising to find the avoidance principle itself avoided, as was done in Thornburgh and other abortion cases, because the precedent for failure to follow the usual rules in abortion cases was set in Roe itself. Roe v. Wade was widely criticized for violation of this avoidance principle. For example, now Chief Justice Rehnquist, in his dissent to Roe, declared, "[T]he Court departs from the longstanding admonition that it should never 'formulate a rule of constitutional law broader than is required by the precise facts to which it is to be applied.'" Roe, 410 U.S. at 171-72 (Rehnquist, J., dissenting) (citation omitted).

The distortion worked on the law where it touches on abortion should not be continued in the present case by failure to reach the threshold issue of the standard of review. While it is appropriate and laudable for courts to avoid reaching issues not essential to the determination of the case before them, the standard of review is not one of the issues which may be avoided, provided that the constitutional issues are reached. It is a necessary threshold determination.

Nowhere in the list of avoidance rules of this Court is there one which says that, when the constitutionality of a state statute is at issue, this Court will bypass the determination of the appropriate standard of review. Indeed the precedents require otherwise. Therefore, sound adjudication requires that adjudicatory principles be followed consistently, whether or not a case touches on abortion. In this case, that requires this Court to determine the viability of Roe — to state the standard by which it will review abortion statutes — as the necessary threshold issue in the review of the Missouri statutes for constitutionality.

II. FAILURE TO DETERMINE THE APPLICABLE STANDARD OF REVIEW WHILE UPHOLDING THE MISSOURI STATUTE WOULD LEAD TO UNTOWARD RESULTS.

Failure to confront the issue of Roe's viability would lead to untoward results, including continued, interminable litigation of the subject of abortion in this and lower courts. This ongoing litigation would cause the lower courts to continue making legislative policy choices, leading to further distortion of abortion jurisprudence. The courts would be forced to fashion social policy with even less guidance than before. Likewise, this Court would be faced with the need to draw ever-finer legislative policy lines.

A. LITIGATION WOULD CONTINUE CONCERNING THE CONSTITUTIONALITY OF STATE STATUTES UNDER THE STANDARD OF REVIEW ESTABLISHED IN ROE.

In the sixteen years since Roe was decided, there have been numerous cases concerning abortion brought in state and federal courts and taken on appeal. As of 1980, just seven years after Roe, there were one hundred thirteen federal district court opinions, forty-five federal appellate court decisions, and fourteen cases in this Court relating to abortion. L. Wardle, The Abortion Privacy Doctrine Tables A-C (1980). In the subsequent nine years, the flow has not abated. Including the present case, twenty-two abortion cases have been reviewed by this Court, and many more have been brought but not granted review or have been dealt with summarily. Abortion and the Constitution, Appendix One (D. Horan, E. Grant & P. Cunningham eds. 1987)(listing twenty cases up to and including Thornburgh); Hartigan v. Zbaraz, 108 S.Ct. 479 (1987). See, e.g., Conn v. Conn, 525 N.E.2d 612 (Ind. Ct. App. 1988), aff'd and opinion of app. ct. adopted by order, No. 73S01-8807-CV-631 (Ind. July 15, 1988), cert. denied, 57 U.S.L.W. 3347 (U.S. Nov. 14, 1988) (No. 88-347); Gary-Northwest Indiana Women's Services v. Orr, 451 U.S. 934 (1982), summarily aff'g

Gary-Northwest Indiana Women's Services v. Bowen, 96 F. Supp. 894 (N.D. Ind. 1980).

As observed by Justice White in Thornburgh, such a flood of litigation is in no way evidence of any evil intent by the states; rather, it is inherent in the nature of the right and analysis declared in Roe and in this Court's subsequent changing of the rules[6] set up in Roe:

> The majority's opinion evinces no deference toward the state's legitimate policy. Rather, the majority makes it clear from the outset that it simply disapproves of any attempt by Pennsylvania to legislate in this area. The history of the state legislature's decade-long effort to pass a constitutional abortion statute is recounted as if it were evidence of some sinister conspiracy. . . . In fact, of course, the legislature's past failure to predict the evolution of the right first recognized in Roe v. Wade is understandable and is in itself no ground for condemnation. Moreover, the legislature's willingness to pursue permissible policies through means that go to the limits allowed by existing precedents is no sign of mens rea. The majority, however, seems to find it necessary to respond by changing the rules to invalidate what before would have seemed permissible.

Thornburgh, 106 S.Ct. at 2198 (White, J., dissenting).

The flood of litigation shows no signs of abating. Failure to consider the continued viability of Roe would do nothing to abate the flood. Rather, the uncertainty created by such a decision would cause the flood to swell, further inundating the courts.

[6]For an analysis of how this Court has failed to follow the principle of stare decisis, by gutting Roe of virtually all content except the bare right to choose abortion, see Bopp & Coleson, supra note 4, at 12-42.

B. FURTHER LITIGATION WOULD FORCE THE COURTS TO CONTINUE MAKING LEGISLATIVE POLICY CHOICES AND DRAWING EVER-FINER LINES, LEADING TO FURTHER CONFUSION IN ABORTION JURISPRUDENCE.

To avoid the issue of Roe's viability would leave the lower courts as well as state and federal legislators in disarray, uncertain as to the status of abortion jurisprudence — especially given the shifting balance of this Court on abortion matters, which is evident in the progression from Roe, 410 U.S. 113 (seven to two majority), to Akron, 426 U.S. 416 (six to three majority), to Thornburgh, 106 S.Ct. 2169 (five to four majority), to Hartigan v. Zbaraz, 108 S.Ct. 479 (1987) (evenly divided court).

Moreover, the courts would need to draw ever-finer lines, in matters more properly considered legislative policy choices, with increasingly blurred guidelines. As noted below, see infra II(C), this Court has been unable to give the lower courts clear guidelines for analyzing abortion statutes.

The need to draw finer and finer lines without clear guidelines is well illustrated by the situation in the lower federal courts with regard to waiting periods for minors. Seven cases to date have engaged this Court in attempting to fine-tune the permissible regulation of minors seeking to abort. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52; Bellotti v. Baird (I), 428 U.S. 132 (1976); Bellotti v. Baird (II), 443 U.S. 622; H.L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398; Akron, 462 U.S. 416; Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476; and Thornburgh, 106 S.Ct.2169.

Despite this series of cases, the lower courts are currently wrestling with the regulation of abortion for minors, including the constitutionality of a mandatory waiting period. The circuits have split. In Hodgson v. Minnesota, No. 86-5423, slip op. (8th Cir. Aug. 8, 1988)(en banc), the Eighth Circuit upheld a forty-eight hour waiting period. However, the Sixth Circuit struck down a twenty-four hour waiting period for minors in Akron Center for Reproductive Health v. Slaby, No. 86-3664, slip op. (6th Cir. Aug. 12, 1988), appeal filed sub nom. Ohio v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 57 U.S.L.W. 3378 (U.S. Nov. 10, 1988)(No. 88-805).

No change in the need for continued judicial hair-splitting appears imminent. As noted in the following subsection, this is a job traditionally entrusted to legislatures and to which they are more adequately suited than courts.

C. THIS COURT WOULD CONTINUE TO BE FACED WITH LEGISLATIVE POLICY CHOICES ON ABORTION, LEADING TO FURTHER DISTORTION OF THE LAW WHERE IT TOUCHES ON ABORTION, AND THE NECESSITY OF RESOLVING ISSUES DECIDED DIFFERENTLY IN THE LOWER COURTS.

Rather than making the rules of abortion jurisprudence clearer, the decisions of this Court have made the "bright lines" of Roe "blurred." Akron, 462 U.S. at 455 (O'Connor, J., dissenting). The result is that, with the continued flood of abortion cases, abortion jurisprudence is becoming more obscure, unpredictable, and difficult for the legislatures and lower courts to follow. Justice O'Connor, in Akron, noted the failure of this Court to apply "neutral principles" and its reliance on an analytical framework that "varies according to the 'stages' of pregnancy" and "the level of medical technology available when a particular challenge to state regulation occurs." Id. at 452 (O'Connor, J., dissenting). She observed that "[t]he Roe framework . . . was clearly on a collision course with itself." Id. at 458. The result of such blurring of the guidelines would be more hair-splitting cases for this Court to resolve, taking it ever deeper into the morass of minutiae, and ever further from the grand sweep of timeless, neutral principles of the Constitution to the consideration of which it is best suited by its granted powers and august position.

The sort of nit-picking detail required of this Court by present abortion jurisprudence is better suited to legislatures.

Justice O'Connor commented on the basically legislative[7] work of the Court in its review of the legislation at issue in Akron:

> It is . . . difficult to believe that this Court, without the resources available to those bodies entrusted with making legislative choices, believes itself competent to make these inquiries and to revise these standards every time the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists (ACOG) or similar group revises its views about what is and what is not appropriate medical procedure in this area.

Id. at 456.

Legislatures have historically been entrusted with making the sort of social policy decisions performed by this Court in its abortion decisions. They are not bound by "case or controversy" requirements or rules of evidence and procedure. They may hold hearings, appoint advisory panels, employ researchers, experiment, and revise their views without concerns of stare decisis.

John Hart Ely wrote shortly after Roe was decided: "[P]recisely because the claims involved are difficult to evaluate, I would not want to entrust to the judiciary authority to guess about them — certainly not under the guise of enforcing the Constitution." Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, 82 Yale L.J. 920, 935 n.89 (1973). Similarly, Justice Frankfurter, some four decades before Roe, criticized [7]Memoranda by members of the Roe majority, found in papers of Justice Douglas and recently released by the Library of Congress, reveal an acknowledgment of the legislative nature of the Roe majority's handiwork in Roe. There is discussion of concern that much of the decision constituted "dicta" and "about the desirability of the dicta being quite so inflexibly 'legislative.'" The memoranda reveal the author of Roe acknowledging that the opinion contained dictum and that the lines drawn were "arbitrary." Noticeably absent is discussion of the requirements of the Constitution; rather, the exchanges read like negotiations among members of a legislative conference committee seeking to hammer out compromise legislation. Woodward, The Abortion Papers, The Washington Post, Jan. 22, 1989, at D1, col. 1. The memoranda help put in context Justice White's charge that the Roe and Bolton majority was engaged in an exercise of "raw" judicial power." Bolton, 410 U.S. at 222 (White, J., dissenting).

---

> the imposition by judges of their private notions of social policy [on the states] because it so often turns on the fortuitous circumstances which determine a majority decision and shelters the fallible judgment of individual Justices, in matter of fact and opinion not particularly within the special competence of judges, behind the impersonal dooms of the Constitution.

F. Frankfurter, The Public and Its Government 49-51 (1930).

Roe v. Wade has been criticized by Archibald Cox as "read[ing] like a set of hospital rules and regulations, whose validity is good enough this week but will be destroyed with new statistics." A. Cox, The Role of the Supreme Court in America 113-14 (1976). This has proven to be the case. His oracle has proved sound, and the lower courts are left in disarray by changes in medical technology, even where this Court has seemingly set down a bright line. See Bopp & Coleson, supra note 4, at 25-42. It would be left to this Court to seek to extricate the lower courts from the morass of confusion, to resolve their disagreements, and to attempt to give guidance for the future, knowing that, under the current scheme, the guidelines would become worthless with the next pronouncement of ACOG.

Finally, the inherent flaws in Roe, coupled with the efforts of the Court majority seeking to preserve it, have wrought a profound distortion in the law where it touches on the subject of abortion. As a result, while the pro-Roe majority in previous cases cried "stare decisis," it ignored the doctrine in subsequent cases, gutting Roe of all content but the bare right to have an abortion — virtually on demand. Bopp & Coleson, supra note 4, at 5-42. While the prochoice majority declared the right to abortion to be based on the right to privacy, it treated the abortion privacy right differently from any other privacy right and failed to provide the nexus between the declared fundamental right and American history and tradition. Id. at 43-76. While the defenders of Roe stripped the unborn of rights, classifying them as less than persons, examination of the rest of the law reveals a quantum leap in fetal rights with the recognition of the separateness of the unborn from their mothers and their personhood for a host of other purposes. Id. at 77-118. While the authors of Roe's progeny discussed the abortion right as a medical procedure, they treated it differently than any other medical procedure, restricting the traditional role of the states in regulating medical matters, even to the point of striking down reasonable informed consent statutes — thereby reversing the whole modern trend of informed consent law. Id. at 119-138. And, when the champions of Roe dealt with procedural and adjudicatory matters, it became evident that there were two sets of rules: general rules and special, abortion rules. Id. at 139-196. As elsewhere, the abortion distortion effect is evident in this area, making the right to abortion more anomalous and absolute.

Failure of this Court to confront the necessary threshold issue of the viability of Roe would leave this massive flaw in the law intact, forcing this Court to employ ever-finer distinctions and increasingly arbitrary divisions upon an interminable series of cases in an attempt to repair the irreparable.

III. THE ABORTION PRIVACY ANALYSIS OF ROE SHOULD BE ABANDONED IN FAVOR OF A RATIONAL BASIS TEST FOR ABORTION LEGISLATION.

The only cure for such a tangent from the norm of constitutional law is a correction, namely, the reversal of Roe. Only such a correction can repair the profound distortion worked by (and required by) abortion jurisprudence. This Court should reverse Roe and abandon any notion of a fundamental constitutional right to abortion and, with it, any requirement of compelling state interests. The only appropriate standard for reviewing abortion legislation is the rational basis test.

A. UNDER THE PRIVACY ANALYSIS OF BOWERS, THE RIGHT OF PRIVACY DOES NOT EXTEND TO ABORTION.

In Bowers v. Hardwick, 106 S.Ct. 2841, this Court, employing an evaluation of the history of Western attitudes toward homosexual sodomy, concluded that there was no fundamental privacy right to engage in such activity under either the test of Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U.S. 319 (1937), or Moore v. City of East Cleveland, Ohio, 431 U.S. 494 (1977). Yet, the historical case for the fundamentality of abortion is no more convincing than the historical case for sodomy.[8] Some comparisons of the two analyses indicates the discrepancies between the usual privacy analysis and the relaxed form applied to abortion by the Roe majority.

The Roe majority cited Plato's Republic as evidence of abortion's deep roots in our cultural traditions. 410 U.S. at 131. By contrast, the Bowers majority did not apparently see such evidence as worthwhile, for no mention is made to the numerous allusions in Plato's writings to the practice of homosexual sodomy among the ancients. See, Plato, Phaedrus.

The Roe approach suggested that a shift of opinion, in favor of abortion, among selected elites and in a few states, was constitutionally significant. By contrast, the Bowers opinion saw little constitutional significance in the lack of enforcement of sodomy laws in general and the repeal of such laws in many states. 106 S.Ct. at 2845. These trends did not make a constitutional right.

[8]Justice Blackmun, in Roe, relied primarily on an article by Cyril Means for his history of abortion. See, e.g., 410 U.S. at 135; Means, The Phoenix of Abortional Freedom: Is a Penumbral or Ninth-Amendment Right About to Arise from the Ashes of a Fourteenth-Century Common-Law Liberty?, 17 N.Y.L.F. 335 (1971). Although the article's scholarship was questionable at the time, for the non-sequiter conclusions it drew, it has since been effectively refuted with respect to the validity of its history and analysis. See, e.g., Destro, Abortion and the Constitution: The Need for a Life Protective Amendment, 63 Calif. L. Rev. 1250, 1267-92 (1975); Dellapenna, The History of Abortion: Technology, Morality, and Law, 40 U. Pitt. L. Rev. 359, 379-89 (1979); Horan & Balch, "Roe v. Wade: No Justification in History, Law or Logic," Connery, "The Ancients and the Medievals on Abortion: The Consensus the Court Ignored," Dellapenna, "Abortion and the Law: Blackmun's Distortion of the Historical Record," and Arbagi, "Roe and the Hippocratic Oath," in Abortion and the Constitution (D. Horan, E. Grant & P. Cunningham eds. 1987).

The Bowers analysis was more rigorous than that of Roe. There was no grasping at historical straws in Bowers, such as occurred in Roe. While the Bowers historical sketch was not exhaustive, it was, unlike Roe's, not glaringly inaccurate. Nor did it have to be complete, for it needed only to show that the practice of homosexual sodomy was not rooted in the traditions of this nation nor essential to a scheme or ordered liberty — a task it did in a simple, straightforward manner. The comparison of the historical analysis employed in Roe with that used in Bowers indicates that, if the Texas abortion law challenged in Roe were subjected to the same analysis as the Georgia sodomy statute in Bowers, the abortion law would have been upheld. See Bopp & Coleson, supra note 4, at 45-76 (a detailed evaluation of Roe as a privacy right, in comparison to other privacy rights, and further analysis of the Roe/Bowers analytical dichotomy).

Application of the analysis employed in Bowers to the issues of Roe reveals that, under a proper constitutional analysis, there is no fundamental right to abortion. Therefore, the strict standard of scrutiny employed for fundamental rights should be abandoned and the abortion legislation of the states, including the Missouri statutes at issue herein, should be evaluated by the rational basis standard of review.

B. PRESERVING AN ABORTION PRIVACY RIGHT WHILE RECOGNIZING A COMPELLING STATE INTEREST IN UNBORN HUMAN LIFE THROUGHOUT PREGNANCY WOULD LEAD TO SUBSTANTIAL DIFFICULTIES.

It may be argues by some that the issue of whether there is a fundamental right to abortion need not be reached, for this Court may simply declare that there is a compelling interest in unborn human life throughout all stages of pregnancy. Under such a holding, the state, in asserting and protecting that compelling interest, could then limit abortion practice. However, such an approach would lead to substantial difficulties.

1. LITIGATION WOULD CONTINUE CONCERNING THE PROPER ADVANCEMENT OF STATE INTERESTS AND WHETHER LEGISLATION IS NARROWLY TAILORED TO MEET THOSE INTERESTS.

Maintaining a fundamental right to abortion while finding the states' interest in unborn human life to be compelling would do nothing to stanch the flow of abortion litigation — only the emphasis would be shifted. Questions would be raised in case after case concerning whether the state interests were advanced properly by certain legislation and whether the legislation was narrowly tailored to meet those interests. The fundamental rights analysis itself generates litigation in the field of abortion jurisprudence. By maintaining that analysis and finding a compelling interest in unborn human life, this Court would contribute little to ending the interminable litigation of this matter in the courts.

2. THE CONTINUING LITIGATION WOULD FORCE UPON THE COURTS THE NEED TO CONTINUE MAKING POLICY CHOICES, MORE PROPERLY SUITED TO LEGISLATIVE BODIES, WHICH HAS LEAD TO A SUBSTANTIAL DISTORTION IN THE LAW WHERE IT TOUCHES ABORTION.

If the fundamental rights analysis is maintained, the need for the courts to make policy choices, as discussed supra, would continue unabated. These policy choices are more properly and effectively made by legislatures. Maintaining the fundamental rights analysis would do little to repair the distortion wrought by courts bending over backward to protect the abortion liberty at all costs. The predictable result would be even greater distortion if the abortion liberty continues to enjoy the imprimatur of this Court.

3. THIS COURT WOULD BE FORCED TO CONTINUE MAKING EVER-EXPANDING POLICY CHOICES.

Likewise, by maintaining a fundamental rights analysis, this Court would be required to continue acting as the nation's medical review board, making ever-expanding policy choices on ever-finer points of social policy. Only a return of the matter to the political arena and the democratic process, designed to resolve such difficult matters of social policy, will put an end to the interminable imploring of this Court to play a role for which it was not created and is ill-suited.

4. THIS COURT'S OWN EXPERIENCE WITH THE DECLARED COMPELLING INTERESTS IN MATERNAL HEALTH AND "POTENTIAL LIFE" AFTER VIABILITY SHOWS THE INHERENT PROBLEMS WITH DECLARING A COMPELLING INTEREST IN UNBORN LIFE WHILE MAINTAINING THE ABORTION PRIVACY RIGHT.

Declaring a compelling interest in human life throughout pregnancy would only cause further complications for this Court, as evidenced by its experience with prior interests declared compelling in the abortion context. In Roe, this Court declared that the state had a compelling interest in maternal health, from the end of the first trimester on, and in "potential" unborn life from viability to term. 410 U.S. at 163.

In practice, the fundamental liberty right of the mother has consumed the supposedly compelling interests of the state. See Bopp & Coleson, supra note 4, at 12-42. Some examples will illustrate the voracious appetite of the abortion right, under the control of justices unwilling to abide by stare decisis.

The doctrine of stare decisis was developed as an essential corollary to the rule of law, a corner stone of our system of constitutional government. This rule-of-law doctrine allows obedience to and stability in the law. The observance of stare decisis normally yields a degree of predictability in the law. Despite invocation of Roe as a polestar for creating and reviewing abortion regulation, abortion law has been marked by instability and uncertainty. This Court's pronouncements have been far from clear, and there have been changes of the rules in the middle of the game.

It is ironic that, while claiming to follow Roe, this Court has systematically gutted Roe to allow the current desired result. The doctrine of stare decisis presupposes a precedent with content to be followed. By emptying Roe of content, the Court's appeal to stare decisis is to the skeletal concept that a woman may have an abortion whenever she desires, for whatever reason.

This Court has indicated this to be the core and substance of the precedent it follows by striking down any meaningful attempt to assert the interests it has declared as "compelling" in Roe and by abandoning key elements of the Roe formula when convenient. It is clear, then, that while the pro-Roe majority has raised the cry of stare decisis, it has not in fact followed its own precedent, except in the most skeletal fashion.

For example, Roe said that a state had a compelling interest in maternal health, beginning at the end of the first trimester, which would allow it to, inter alia, regulate "as to the facility in which the procedure is to be performed, that is, whether it must be a hospital . . ." 410 U.S. at 163-64 (emphasis added). An Indiana district court in Gary-Northwest Indiana Women's Services v. Bowen, adhered to this precedent and upheld a statute requiring hospitalization for post-first-trimester abortions. 496 F. Supp. 894 (N.D. Ind. 1980). The plaintiffs had argued that dilation and evacuation abortions had become so safe that hospitalization should not be required, at least during the first half of the second trimester (to eighteen weeks). Id. at 896-97. The district court, adhering to precedent, quoted the passage from Roe allowing the state to require hospitalization after the first trimester and declared, "The express language of Roe mandates that Indiana's hospitalization requirement be found by this Court to be constitutional." 496 F. Supp. at 899.

The district court also rejected the attempt to subdivide the trimesters, by allowing state regulation of "abortions more dangerous than childbirth," rather than treating "second trimester" abortions as a unit, holding that "[t]his Court must respect Roe's specific ultimate rulings. If this Court does not respect the specific ultimate rulings in Roe, those rulings will lose their usefulness . . . [and s]tates will be hard pressed to pursue their legitimate, compelling interests in protecting maternal health." Id. at 900. The district court further noted the impracticability of abandoning the trimester framework in favor of a case-by-case determination, and the fact that it was "the policy of the United States Supreme Court to avoid, if possible, the creation of rules of law which increase litigation." Id. at 900-01.

This Court summarily affirmed this case on appeal, leading to the widespread perception that this Court had adopted a bright-line approach and meant what it said about state interests being compelling. Sub nom. Gary-Northwest Indiana Women's Services v. Orr, 451 U.S. 934 (1982).[9]

However, when faced with a similar hospitalization provision, enacted by the city of Akron, the pro-Roe majority abandoned stare decisis in reviewing the ordinance. The district and circuit courts had considered the hospitalization requirement as constitutional and firmly controlled by this Court's precedents. Akron Center for Reproductive Health v. Akron, 479 F. Supp. 1172 (N.D. Ohio 1979); 651 F.2d 1198 (6th Cir. 1981).

The Akron majority, on this Court, chose to follow medical precedent rather than its own. The American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists had decided that clinic abortions were safe into the second trimester, and this Court struck down the hospitalization requirement, holding that abortion regulations may not "depart from accepted medical practice." Id. at 434.

[9]Twenty-three states enacted hospitalization requirements for abortions after the first trimester. Akron, 462 U.S. at 426 n.9 (citing Brief for Americans United for Life as Amicus Curiae at 4 n.1, Simopoulos v. Virginia, 462 U.S. 506 (1983)). Cf. Planned Parenthood Association of Kansas City v. Ashcroft, 655 F.2d 848 (8th Cir. 1981) (invalidating hospital requirement) with Simopolous v. Commonwealth, 221 Va. 1059, 277 S.E.2d 194 (1981) (upholding hospital requirement).

In the words of Justice O'Connor, the Court had abandoned its "bright-line" approach. Henceforth, legislators would be required to track the changing trends of medical technology, rather than follow the precedents of this Court. See Bopp & Coleson, supra note 4, at 25-30 (a fuller analysis of this failure of stare decisis).

A second key concept of Roe was the woman's right to make the abortion decision "in consultation" with her physician. 410 U.S. at 163. However, in Akron, 462 U.S. at 449, the pro-Roe majority again abandoned stare decisis, holding that a woman need not even speak with her physician about her abortion. See Bopp & Coleson, supra note 4, at 30-34 (a fuller discussion of this point).

Former Chief Justice Burger, in Thornburgh, observed how the state interests, declared in Roe, had been ignored. Despite the declared "compelling" interest in maternal health, "the Court astonishingly goes so far as to say that the State may not require that a woman contemplating an abortion be provided with accurate medical information concerning the risks inherent in the medical procedure . . . " 106 S.Ct. at 2190 (Burger, C.J., dissenting). He further noted that the Thornburgh majority's willingness to strike down a second physician requirement (to care for viable, aborted children) made of Roe's declared "compelling" interest in unborn life "mere shallow rhetoric." Id. at 2191. He added, "Undoubtedly the Pennsylvania Legislature added the . . . requirement on the mistaken assumption that this Court meant what it said in Roe concerning the 'compelling interest' of the states . . ." Id.

Chief Justice Burger concluded that the Court had left its original consensus against abortion on demand — perhaps the greatest example of the abandonment of stare decisis in abortion law — and, thereby, had left him behind. Id. at 2190-91. He declared that "[t]he soundness of our holdings must be tested by the decisions that purport to follow them," and, finding that Roe had failed such a test, called for the reexamination of Roe. Id. at 2190, 2192.

The result of the continued neglect of the "compelling" interests, declared in Roe, by the Thornburgh majority was to create a climate of instability, unpredictability, inconsistency, unworkability, and unfairness — the antithesis of the values sought to be promoted by stare decisis and the rule of law. See Bopp & Coleson, supra note 4, at 12-23, 34-42 (a more detailed analysis of the shortcomings of Thornburgh in light of the principles underlying stare decisis and the rule of law). In view of the failure of the pro-Roe majority to follow stare decisis in abortion jurisprudence, it is ironic that in Akron, faced with calls for the reversal of Roe, the majority trumpeted stare decisis and claimed to be following Roe. 462 U.S. at 420 n.1.[10]

Thus, to declare a compelling interest in unborn human life throughout pregnancy may not yield the result intended. As seen in the record of past cases, compelling interests have suffered catastrophic erosion when subject to an abortion right. It is likely that a new declaration of a compelling state interest in unborn life from the time of conception would suffer a similar fate.

---

[10]While it is beyond the scope of this brief to discuss the doctrine of stare decisis at length, the amicus curiae notes briefly that there is a difference between giving lip-service to the doctrine with alleged adherence to Roe, while ignoring inconvenient aspects of it at will, and honestly confronting a past mistake of this Court. The former is to be condemned; precedent not overruled ought to be followed. The latter is an essential aspect of constitutional adjudicaton and, where necessarily done, should be applauded; precedent seen to be erroneous from the perspective of time, experience, and expanded scholarship must be corrected. Roe v. Wade is a precedent that requires reversal and stare decisis demands, rather than forbids such reversal. See Bopp & Coleson, supra note 4, generally and at 197-04; Pfeifer, "Abandoning Eror: Self-Correction by the Supreme Court," in Abortion and the Constitution 3-22; Wardle, Rethinking Roe v. Wade, 1985 B.Y.U. L. Rev. 231, 251-57.

CONCLUSION

Abortion jurisprudence needs resolution after sixteen year of turmoil. This Court attempted to resolve the matter in 1973. Time has proven the effort a failure. This Court is now confronted with the opportunity to restore a proper interpretation to the Constitution, returning this volatile matter of social policy to the proper fora — the state legislatures.

Objective application of the tests of fundamentality established by this Court reveals that there is no fundamental right to abortion apart from judicial fiat. By confronting this fact, as the threshold issue in this case, this Court can fulfill its duty to adjudicate consistent with its precedents and, most importantly, in faithfulness to the Constitution. Because the abortion liberty fails to rise to the level of a fundamental right, the rational basis test should be employed. Given the states' historic interest in preserving life from the time of conception (an interest firmly rooted in the history and conscience of our nation), there is clearly a rational basis to uphold the Missouri statutes at issue herein.

Respectfully submitted,

James Bopp, Jr.
Counsel of Record
Richard E. Coleson
BRAMES, McCORMICK, BOPP
& ABEL
The Tudor House
191 Harding Avenue
P.O. Box 410
Terre Haute, IN 47808-0410
(812) 238-2421
Counsel for Amicus Curiae National Right to Life Committee, Inc

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

No. 88-605

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

In the United States Supreme Court

October Term, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, ET AL., Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, ET AL.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF AMICUS CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

By WILLIAM J. GUSTE, JR.,
Attorney General of Louisiana

With Attorneys General Joining for the States of Arizona, Idaho, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin

WILLIAM J. GUSTE, JR., Attorney General
JO ANN P. LEVERT, Assistant Attorney General
THOMAS A. RAYER, Of Counsel

Robert K. Corbin, Attorney General of Arizona
Jim Jones, Attorney General of Idaho
Ernest D. Preate, Jr., Attorney General of Pennsylvania
Donald J. Hanaway, Attorney General of Wisconsin

QUESTION PRESENTED

Appellants have presented seven Questions for review. Amicus, State of Louisiana, wishes to address those questions as follows:

Whether the Police Power reserved to the States and the people by the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution allows the States the exercise of power to balance the competing interests of the mother's right to abortion and the unborn child's right to life?

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PAGE

QUESTION PRESENTED i
STATEMENT OF THE CASE 1
INTEREST OF THE AMICUS CURIAE 2
SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT 3

ARGUMENT

I. THE RIGHT OF THE SEVERAL STATES TO LEGISLATE IN MATTERS OF PUBLIC POLICY RELATED TO ABORTION IS A PROPER EXERCISE OF THE POLICE POWER RESERVED TO THE STATES AND THE PEOPLE BY THE TENTH AMENDMENT TO THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION 6

II. THERE ARE SIGNIFICANT SIMILARITIES BETWEEN THE LAWS AND PUBLIC POLICIES OF MISSOURI AND LOUISIANA BALANCING THE COMPETING RIGHT TO ABORTION AND RIGHT TO LIFE OF THE UNBORN CHILD 16

CONCLUSION 24
APPENDIX A ..... App. 1
APPENDIX B ..... App. 5

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES:

Adkins v. Children's Hospital, 261 U.S. 525, 43 S.Ct. 394, 67 L Ed 785 (1923) 9
Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416, 103 S.Ct. 2481, 76 L Ed 2d 687 (1983) 8, 14, 16, 22
Allaire v. St. Luke's Hospital, 56 N.E. 638 (Ill. 1900) 20

Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 82 S.Ct. 691, 7 L Ed 2d 663 (1962) 13, 14
Benton v. Maryland, 395 U.S. 784, 89 S.Ct. 2056, 23 L Ed 2d 707 (1969) 9
Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186, 106 S.Ct. 2841, 92 L Ed 2d 140 (1986) 8, 9, 13
Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka, 347 U.S. 483, 74 S.Ct. 686, 98 L Ed 873 (1954) 9
Carter v. Carter Coal Co., 298 U.S. 238 56 S.Ct. 855, 80 L Ed 1160 (1936) 8
City of New York v. Miln, 36 U.S. (11 Pet.) 102 (1837) 9
Colegrove v. Green, 328 U.S. 549, 66 S.Ct. 1198, 90 L Ed 1432 (1954) 13
Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433, 59 S.Ct. 972, 83 L Ed 1385 (1938) 13
Columbia Broadcasting System Inc. v. Democratic National Committee, 412 U.S. 94, 93 S.Ct. 2080, 36 L Ed 2d 772 (1973) 15
Commonwealth v. Stofcheck, 185 Atl. 840 (1936) 12
Cooper v. Blanck, 39 So.2d 352 (1923) 20, 21
Crews v. Undercofler, 249 F.Supp. 13 (1966) 12
Dandridge v. Williams, 397 U.S. 471, 90 S.Ct. 1153, 25 L Ed 2d 491 (1970) 7, 10
Dietrich v. Inhabitants of Northampton, 138 Mass. 14 (1884) 20
Edwards v. California, 314 U.S. 160 (1941) 9
Erie R.R. Co v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 58 S.Ct. 817, 82 L Ed 1188 (1938) 9
Ex parte Bakelite, 279 U.S. 438, 49 S.Ct. 411, 73 L Ed 789 (1929) 9
Glidden Co. v. Zdanok, 370 U.S. 530, 82 S.Ct. 1459, 8 L Ed 2d 671 (1962) 9
Griswold v. Hepburn, 2 Duvall 20 (1869) 9

Haddock v. Haddock, 201 U.S. 562 (1906) 9
Hudson and Smith v. Guestier, 6 Cranch 281 (1810) 9
Hughes v. United States, 112 F.2d 417 (1940) 12
Jones v. Opelika, 316 U.S. 584 (1942) 9
Jones v. Opelika, 319 U.S. 103 (1943) 9
Legal Tender Cases, 12 Wall 457 (1870) 9
Lindsey v. Normet, 405 U.S. 56, 92 S.Ct. 862, 31 L Ed 2d 36 (1972) 7
Lochner v. New York, 198 U.S. 45 (1905) 9
Luther v. Borden, 48 U.S. 1 (1849) 7
Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137 (1803) 11
Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464, 97 S.Ct. 2376, 53 L Ed 2d 484 (1977) 10, 15
McCormick & Co. v. Brown, 286 U.S. 131, 52 S.Ct. 522, 76 L Ed 1017 (1931) 12
Minersville School District v. Gobitis, 310 U.S. 586, 60 S.Ct. 1010, 84 L Ed 1375 (1940) 9
Missouri, Kansas & Texas Ry. Co. v. May, 194 U.S. 267 (1904) 10, 15
Mobile v. Bolden, 446 U.S. 55, 100 S.Ct. 1490, 64 L Ed 2d 47 (1980) 7
National League of Cities v. Usrey, 426 U.S. 833, 96 S.Ct. 2465, 49 L Ed 2d 245 (1976) ... 11
Palko v. Connecticut, 308 U.S. 319, (1937) 9
Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 96 S.Ct. 2831, 49 L Ed 2d 788 (1976) 21, 22
Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537 (1896) 9
Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 93 S.Ct. 705, 35 L Ed 2d 147 (1973) 3, 6, 14, 21
Rose v. Himely, 4 Cranch 241 (1808) 9
San Antonio Independent School Dist. v. Rodriguez, 411 U.S. 1, 93 S.Ct. 1278, 36 L Ed 2d 16 (1973) 7, 8

Shapiro v. Thompson, 394 U.S. 618, 89 S.Ct. 1322, 22 L Ed 2d 600 (1969) 7
State v. Rozenthal, 559 P.2d 830 (1977) 13
Swift v. Tyson, 16 Pet 1 (1842) 9
Thornburgh v. American College of Obst. & Gyn., 476 U.S. 747, 106 S.Ct. 2169, 90 L Ed 2d 779 (1986) 8, 9
Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 7 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 518, 4 L Ed 629 (1819) 12
U.S. v. Constantine, 296 U.S. 287 (1935) 12
United States v. Darby, 31 U.S. 100 (1941) 11
West Coast Hotel v. Parrish, 300 U.S. 379 (1937) 9
West Virginia State Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624 (1943) 9
Williams v. North Carolina, 317 U.S. 287 (1942) 9
Williamson v. Lee Optical Co., 348 U.S. 483, 75 S.Ct. 461, 99 L Ed 563 (1955) 10

CONSTITUTIONS AND STATUTES

U.S. Const., Amend. X 10
La. C.C. art. 26 19
La. C.C. art. 29 ..... 18, 19
La. C.C. arts. 953-957, 963 19
La. R.S. 40:1299.34 ..... 18, App. 5
La. R.S. 40:1299.35.0 ..... 16, App. 5
La. R.S. 40:1299.35.5 5
La. R.S. 40:1299.35.1 ..... 17, App. 6
RS MO §1.205.1 ..... App. 1
RS MO §188.010 ..... App. 1
RS MO §188.200 ..... App. 3
RS MO §188.025 ..... App. 2
RS MO §188.029 ..... App. 2
RS MO §188.205 ..... App. 2
RS MO §188.210 ..... App. 3
RS MO §188.215 ..... App. 3

OTHER AUTHORITIES

Cox, A., The Role of the Supreme Court in American Government, (1976) 15
Federalist 45, Madison 11
Lenow, J. L., The Fetus as a Patient: Emerging Rights as a Person, A. J. Law and Med. 9 Vol. 1 (1983) 18

No. 88-605

In the United States Supreme Court

October Term, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, ET AL., Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, ET AL.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF AMICUS CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

By WILLIAM J. GUSTE, JR.,
Attorney General of Louisiana

With Attorneys General Joining for the States of Arizona, Idaho, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Attorneys General in several states come together to present their interest in the Court's decision in this case which may affect many state laws regulating abortion.[1] [1] The opinion below is reported at 851 F.2d 1071 (8th Cir. 1988).

The states of Arizona, Idaho, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin have joined with Louisiana in support of the Appellants to demonstrate the public interest in limiting and regulating the right to abortion and to allow the individual state legislatures to define when human life begins. Other states have aligned with Massachusetts in support of Appellees to encourage expanding the right to abortion. This decision will determine the power states may lawfully exercise in regulating abortion and in protecting the rights of unborn children.

INTEREST OF THE AMICUS CURIAE

This brief is filed, amicus curiae, by William J. Guste, Jr., Attorney General of Louisiana, pursuant to his official duty to defend the constitutionality of State statutes. Robert K. Corbin, Attorney General of Arizona, Jim Jones, Attorney General of Idaho, Ernest D. Preate, Attorney General of Pennsylvania, and Donald J. Hanaway, Attorney General of Wisconsin, have joined this brief with Louisiana to restore to the States their right to legislate in matters related to abortion. The interests of Louisiana in this case are significantly similar to those of Missouri in that Louisiana has statutes which, for example, define that human life begins at the moment of conception; which make the unborn child a legal person for purposes of the unborn child's right to life as protected by State laws; which forbid the use of public funds, institutions and/or public employees from participating in abortions except to prevent the death of the mother; and which regulate abortion to the extent permitted by the decisions of the United States Supreme Court.[2] The interests of other states are likewise similar; therefore, these several states have a direct and substantial interest in the disposition of this case. The position of amicus is solely to uphold the right of the States to determine the power states may lawfully exercise in regulating abortion and in protecting the rights of unborn childre...

[2] The Missouri and Louisiana Statutes are reproduced in Appendices A and B respectively, at App. 1 and 5.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

I. THE RIGHT OF THE SEVERAL STATES TO LEGISLATE IN MATTERS OF PUBLIC POLICY RELATED TO ABORTION IS A PROPER EXERCISE OF THE POLICE POWER RESERVED TO THE STATES AND THE PEOPLE BY THE TENTH AMENDMENT TO THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION

The Louisiana laws are significantly similar to those of Missouri and may be at risk in these proceedings. Louisiana urges the Court to reject further attempts to balance the interests of the unborn child against those of the mother and to allow Amicus to resolve this issue through the democratic process at the state level. Amicus further urges that the court allow the states to exercise their general police powers to legislate in abortion-related matters because of this Court's precedents and because of the Framers' concept of the constitutional division of power between the federal and state goverments.

The Court has long recognized the wisdom of abstention from involvement in matters distinctively political in nature. The nature of the opposing forces in abortion issues is essentially political and therefore not amenable to judicial resolution. Amicus suggests that the instant case, as well as Roe v. Wade[3] and its progeny, are inappropriate for judicial resolution. To achieve federal-state harmony on this issue, Amicus urges this court to reverse or to modify Roe.

II. THERE ARE SIGNIFICANT SIMILARITIES BETWEEN THE LAWS AND PUBLIC POLICIES OF MISSOURI AND LOUISIANA BALANCING THE COMPETING RIGHT TO ABORTION AND RIGHT TO LIFE OF THE UNBORN CHILD

Under both Missouri and Louisiana laws, it has been a longstanding policy that an unborn child is a human being from the time of conception. Both states have a compelling interest in protecting an unborn child's right to life and in regulating and limiting abortion to the extent permitted by the Constitution.

The substantive laws of both states grant certain rights to the unborn child. In particular, both states prohibit public employees, facilities or funds from involvement in abortions except when medically necessary to prevent the mother's death. In the area of inheritance law, the unborn child has inheritance rights particularly well-grounded in Louisiana, which has adopted much of the Roman Civil Law on this subject. In the area of tort law, Louisiana was the first state to allow recovery for injuries to an unborn child, rejecting the traditional common-law rule on this issue. Amicus submits that it is blatantly inconsistent to grant a legal remedy to an unborn child injured during pregnancy, as Louisiana does, and to deny that same unborn child the right to life, as Roe does.

[3] 410 U.S. 113, 93 S.Ct. 705, 35 L.Ed. 2d 147 (1973).

Amicus likewise contends that the question of when human life begins is crucial to any discussion of abortion and that this question ought to be resolved through the political process at the state ievel.

Roe and its progeny have established the competing rights of the mother and the unborn child, both of which are linked to the states' compelling interests. Amicus argues that the point at which these compelling interests intervene is inherently unstable because the competing interests are on a collision course with each other. The Constitution does not provide for a "trimester" and "viability" approach. The Constitution reserves to the states and the people through the Tenth Amendment the exercise of power to legislate in matters of public policy related to the right to abortion and the right to life of the unborn child.

ARGUMENT

I. THE RIGHT OF THE SEVERAL STATES TO LEGISLATE IN MATTERS OF PUBLIC POLICY RELATED TO ABORTION IS A PROPER EXERCISE OF THE POLICE POWER RESERVED TO THE STATES AND THE PEOPLE BY THE TENTH AMENDMENT TO THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION

The State of Louisiana has a long and unbroken legislative history in the area of abortion related legislation. Like the appellant, State of Missouri, Amicus has at risk in these proceedings the viability of numerous laws affecting the health, peace and tranquility of its citizens.

Seeking to restore order from conflict, Louisiana urges this court not to become once more entangled in the thicket of the medical, ethical, moral and social controversy from which Roe v. Wade[1] and its progeny emanate. Rather, Amicus urges the Court to forsake further attempts to balance the interests of the unborn child against those of the mother, and recognize that a definitive and workable resolution of that issue is and ought to be accomplished appropriately through the political process, and adjudged beyond the capacity of this Court to resolve through constitutional principles.

Chief Justice Taney, in the beginnings of the Court's work, cautioned that, "It is the province of a court to expound the law, not to make it." Further, " . . . it is equally its duty not to pass beyond its appropriate sphere of action, and to take care not to involve itself in discussions which properly belong to other forums." Luther v. Bor- den, 48 U.S. 1 at 40, 46 (1849). This cardinal precept of judicial restraint was again affirmed in Mobile v. Bolden, 446 U.S. 55, 100 S Ct. 1490, 64 L Ed 2d 47 (1980) wherein this Court noted that:

[1] Supra 3.

> It is of course true that a law that impinges upon a fundamental right explicitly or implicitly secured by the Constitution is presumptively unconstitutional. See Shapiro v. Thompson, 394 U.S. 618, 634, 638, 22 L Ed 2d 600, 89 S Ct 1322 id., at 642-644, 22 L Ed 2d 600, 89 S Ct 1322 (concurring opinion). See also San Antonio Independent School Dist. v. Rodriguez, 411 U.S. 1, 17, 30-32, 36 L Ed 2d 16, 93 S Ct 1278. But plainly "[i]t is not the province of this Court to create substantive constitutional rights in the name of guaranteeing equal protection of the laws," id., at 33, L Ed 16, 93 S Ct 1278. See Lindsey v. Normet, 405 U.S. 56, 74, 31 L Ed 2d 36, 92 S Ct 862; Dandridge v. Williams, 397 U.S. 471, 485, 25 L Ed 2d 491, 90 S Ct 1153. Accordingly, where a state law does not impair a right or liberty protected by the Constitution, there is no occasion to depart from 'the settled mode of constitutional analysis of legislat[ion] . . ., involving questions of economic and social policy,' San Antonio Independent School District v. Rodriguez, supra, at 33, 36 L Ed 2d 16, 93 S Ct 1278. Mr. Justice Marshall's dissenting opinion would discard these fixed principles in favor of a judicial inventiveness that would go "far toward making this Court a 'superlegislature.' Shapiro v. Thompson, supra, at 655, 661, 22 L Ed 2d 600, 89 S Ct 1322 (Harlan, J., dissenting). We are not free to do so." id. at 76.

Amicus suggests that, absent a finding of an issue involving fundamental personal rights which are uniquely secured by the Constitution, further inquiry into whether the Missouri statutes in question are beneficial, wise, or in the best interest of those thereby affected, are, in the words of Justice Sutherland, "wholly irrelevant to the inquiry of constitutionality." Carter v. Carter Coal Co., 298 U.S. 238, 295, 56 S Ct 855, 80 L Ed 1160 (1936).

In San Antonio Independent School District v. Rodriguez, 411 U.S. 1, 93 S Ct 1278 at 40, 36 L Ed 2d 16 (1973) the Court held that "strict judicial scrutiny" should be applied only when legislation may be said to have deprived or interfered with the exercise of some fundamental personal right or liberty. See: also, Akron v. Akron Center For Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416, 462, 103 S Ct 2481, 76 L Ed 2d 687 (1983), (O'Connor, dissenting.)

Amicus agrees with and adopts the arguments and reasoning of Justice White in Thornburgh v. American College of Obst. and Gyn., 476 U.S. 747, 790, 791, 106 S Ct 2169, 90 L Ed 2d 779 (1986), (White, J., dissenting, joined by Rehnquist, J.) to the effect that the woman's ability to choose an abortion is not so fundamental as to "call into play anything more than the most minimal judicial scrutiny." Id. at 790. As then Justice Rehnquist noted in his dissent in Roe, ". . . the asserted right to an abortion is not 'so rooted in the traditions and conscience of our people as to be ranked as fundamental.'" 410 U.S. at 174.

Justice White, speaking for the Court in Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186, 106 S Ct 2841, 92 L Ed 2d 140, (1986) found no fundamental right to privacy allowing homosexual sodomy, and characterized such rights as being those "liberties that are 'deeply rooted in this Nation's history and tradition.'" 478 U.S. at 192.

Amicus suggests that the woman's election to abort an unborn child is, for certain, not rooted in either the history or tradition of this Nation, nor so fundamental that legislation placing limitations thereon should receive anything more than the minimal scrutiny of this Court in terms of the rational relationship thereof to legitimate government objectives. To the extent that the language of Roe suggests otherwise, that decision should therefore be overruled. ". . . [W]hen it has become apparent that a prior decision has departed from a proper understanding of the Constitution, that decision must be overruled." Thornburgh, supra, 476 U.S. at 788 (White dissenting).[5]

In the context of judicial review of abortion legislation, the Court has already given partial recognition to [5] Supreme Court reversing error: e.g. Hudson and Smith v. Guestier, 6 Cranch 281, 285 (1810) overruling Rose v. Himely, 4 Cranch 241 (1808); Edwards v. California, 314 U.S. 160, 176-77 (1941) overruling City of New York v. Miln, 36 U.S. (11 Pet) 102 (1837); Jones v. Opelika, 319 U.S. 103 (1943) overruling Jones v. Opelika, 316 U.S. 584 (1942); Legal Tender Cases, 12 Wall 457, 603 (1870) overruling Griswold v. Hepburn, 2 Duvall 20 (1869); Glidden Co. v. Zdanok, 370 U.S. 530 (1962) overruling Ex parte Bakelite 279 U.S. 438 (1929); Erie R.R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64 (1938) overruling Swift v. Tyson, 16 Pet 1 (1842); Williams v. North Carolina, 317 U.S. 287 (1942) overruling Haddock v. Haddock 201 U.S. 562 (1906); Benton v. Maryland, 395 U.S. 784, 794 (1968) overruling Palko v. Connecticut, 308 U.S. 319 (1937); West Virginia State Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 64, 642 (1943) overruling Minersville School District v. Gobitis, 310 U.S. 586 (1940); West Coast Hotel v. Parrish, 300 U.S. 379 (1937) overruling explicitly Adkins v. Children's Hospital 261 U.S. 525 (1922) and abandoning error in Lochner v. New York, 198 U.S. 45 (1905); Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka, 347 U.S. 483, 493 (1954) overruling Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537 (1895).

this limitation in, Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464, 97 S Ct 2376, 53 L Ed 2d 484 (1977) to the extent that it therein declined to substitute its judgment for that of the legislature relative to abortion funding. The Court concluded that:

> 'The decision whether to expend state funds for nontherapeutic abortion is fraught with judgments of policy and values over which opinions are sharply divided. Our conclusion that the Connecticut regulation is constitutional is not based on weighing of its wisdom or social desirability, for this Court does not strike down state laws because they may be unwise, improvident, or out of harmony with a particular school of thought.' Williamson v. Lee Optical Co., 348 U.S. 483, 488, 99 L Ed 563, 75 S Ct 461 (1955), quoted in Dandridge v. Williams, supra, at 484, 25 L Ed 491, 90 S Ct 1153. Indeed, when an issue involves policy choices as sensitive as those implicated by public funding of nontherapeutic abortions, the appropriate forum for their resolution in a democracy is the legislature. We should not forget that 'legislatures are ultimate guardians of the liberties and welfare of the people in quite as great a degree as the courts.' Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. May, 194 U.S. 267, 270 (1904) (Holmes, J.) id. at 479, 480.

It is the position of Amicus that the Court should extend its application of the logic of Maher, supra., to the case, sub judice. The Court can reach this result by a finding that, within those powers expressly reserved to the several States by the Tenth Amendment[6] is the general police power to legislate in those matters related to abortion which affect the health, peace, welfare and moral fiber of its people, and to proscribe conduct adverse thereto. United States v. Darby, 31 U.S. 100, 124, 61 S Ct 451, 462, 85 L Ed 609 (1941); National League of Cities v. Usrey, 426 U.S. 833, 96 S Ct 2465, 49 L Ed 2d 245 (1976).

[6] U.S. Constitution, Amend. X: "The Powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."

Judicial deference to the political process at the State level is not only consonant with this Court's prior expressions, but is also in conformity with the Framer's concept of the constitutional division of power between the federal and state governments.

Madison, in Federalist 45, argued that the creation of a strong union would not, "derogate from the importance of the governments of the individual States." He further opined that, "The powers reserved to the several states will extend to all the objects which, in the ordinary course of affairs, concern the lives, liberties and properties of the people, and the internal order, improvement and prosperity of the State."[7]

For virtually as long as this Court has sat in judgment it has given recognition to the wisdom of abstention from involvement in matters distinctively political in nature. In Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137 (1803), the Court tersely noted that, "Questions in their nature political." . . . "can never be made to this court." id. at 168. Justice Story later judiciously forecast the pitfalls of the Court's intrusion into matters best left to the will of the people when he observed that, "The predicament in which this court stands in relation to the nation at large is full of perplexities and embarrassments. . . . It stands therefore, in the midst of jealousies and rivalries of conflicting parties, with the most momentous interests confided to its care. Under such circumstances, it never can have a motive to do more that its duty; and I trust, it will always be found to possess firmness enough to do that." Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 7 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 518, 712, 4 L Ed 629 (1819).

[7] Federalist, 45 (Madison) pp. 289, 293.

History reveals that in those vexing cases to which Justice Story alluded, where sharply and deeply divided lines have been drawn based on moral, cultural or religious convictions, this Court has most ably fulfilled its constitutional role when, in recognition of the political nature of the issue before it, it has relegated such matters for resolution to the legislative forum.

Even in those instances where the Congress and the people have legislated in such matters, the Court has expressed a willingness to defer to the States wherever possible. The sovereignty of the States was thusly recognized to permit them to enact prohibition laws within their territorial limits, notwithstanding the adoption of the ill-fated 18th Amendment. McCormick & Company v. Brown, 286 U.S. 131, 52 S.Ct. 522, 76 L Ed S Ct 1017 (1931). Following the repeal of that Amendment, the courts have generally upheld the power of the States to regulate the sale or consumption of alcohol. U.S. v. Constantine, 296 U.S. 287, 56 S.Ct. 223, 80 L Ed 2d 233 (1935); Hughes v. United States, 112 F 2d 417 (1940); Crews v. Undercofler, 249 F.Supp. 13 (1966), affirmed 371 F. 2d 534; Commonwealth v. Stofcheck, 185 Atl. 840, 322 Pa. 513 (1936).

Similarly, this Court has declined to elevate the constantly contested social, moral and political issues surrounding the legalization of gambling to the level of constitutional scrutiny. State v. Rozenthal, 559 P 2d 830, 93 Nev. 36, appeal dismissed, 434 U.S. 803, 98 S Ct 32, 54 L Ed 2d 61 (1977). The Court has likewise refrained from finding 14th Amendment privacy rights to bar the States from enacting penal statutes against homosexual conduct.[8]

Amicus readily acknowledges that the issues at stake herein are of uniquely greater moment than alcohol abuse, gambling, or homosexuality. However, the nature of the abortion issue differs therefrom only in degree, not in kind. The nature of the national unending struggle of opposing forces, in each instance, is, in essence, political, value laden, and not therefore amenable to judicial resolution.

This Court has not otherwise been loath to categorize questions presented for determination as being essentially political in nature, and therefore non-justiciable. Foremost in any such determination is the lack of adequate criteria for the making of a decision, or the impossibility of the Court's rendering a decision without an initial policy determination of a kind clearly non-judicial in nature.[9] [8] Bowers v. Hardwick, supra., 478 U.S. 186.

---

[9] Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433, 454, 455, 59 S Ct 972, 88 L Ed 1385; Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 82 S Ct 691, 7 L Ed 2d 663 (1962); Colegrove v. Green, 328 U.S. 549, 66 S Ct 1198, 90 L Ed 1432 (1945), reh. den. 329 U.S. 825, 67 S Ct 118, 91 L Ed 701, motion for reargument den. 329 U.S. 828, 67 S Ct. 199, 91 L Ed 703.

In Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186 (1962), this Court carefully delineated circumstances which require a finding that the nature of the matter before the Court is essentially unsuitable for judicial determination:

> A controlling factor in such cases is that, decision respecting these kinds of complex matters of policy being traditionally committed not to courts but to the political agencies of government for determination by criteria of political expediency, there exists no standard ascertainable by settled judicial experience or process by reference to which a political decision affecting the question at issue between the parties can be judged. id. 369 U.S. at 82.

Amicus suggests that the Court now has before it precisely the sort of question described in Baker which renders this case, and all prior decisions emanating from Roe v. Wade,[10] supra., and, for that matter even Roe itself, inappropriate for judicial resolution. The question relates not to 14th Amendment privacy rights; rather, it requires a declaration of the ever shifting status of the unborn child, measured on the sliding scale of pre-natal "meaningful life and his resulting rights balanced against those of his mother," cf. Roe v. Wade.

The dissenting opinion in, Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Services, 462 U.S. 416, 1035 S Ct 2481, 76 L Ed 2d 687 (1983) most aptly states the argument of Amicus on this point. Justice O'Connor therein cautions that:

> 'We should not forget that legislatures are ultimate guardians of the liberties and welfare of the people in quite as great a degree as the courts.' Missouri, K.

[10] Supra 3.

& T. R. Co. v. May, 194 U.S. 267, 270, 48 L Ed 971, 24 S Ct 638 (1904) (Holmes, J.) Maher, 432 U.S. at 479-480, 53 L Ed 2d 484, 97 S Ct 2376 (footnote omitted). This does not mean that in determining whether a regulation imposes an 'undue burden' on the Roe right we defer to the judgments made by state legislatures. The point is, rather, that 'when we face a complex problem with many hard questions and few easy answers we do well to pay careful attention to how the other branches of Government have addressed the same problem.' Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc. v. Democratic National Committee, 412 U.S. 94, 103, 36 L Ed 2d 772, 93 S Ct 2080 (1973). id. at 465 (O'Connor, J., dissenting, joined by White, J., and Rehnquist, J.).

Justice O'Connor then proceeds to articulate the dissent's perception of the "many hard questions" with "few easy answers" in the following terms:

> The Roe framework, then, is clearly on a collision course with itself. As the medical risks of various abortion procedures decrease, the point at which the State may regulate for reasons of maternal health is moved further forward to actual childbirth. As medical science becomes better able to provide for the separate existence of the fetus, the point of viability is moved further back toward conception. Moreover, it is clear that the trimester approach violates the fundamental aspiration of judicial decisionmaking through the application of neutral principles sufficiently absolute to give them roots throughout the community and continuity over significant periods of time. . . . A. Cox, The Role of the Supreme Court in American Government 114 (1976). The Roe framework is inherently tied to the state of medical technology that exists whenever particular litigation en> sues. Although legislatures are better suited to make the necessary factual judgments in this area, the Court's framework forces legislatures, as a matter of constitutional law, to speculate about what constitutes 'accepted medical practice' at any given time. Without the necessary expertise or ability, courts must then pretend to act as science review boards and examine those legislative judgments. id. at p. 458.

For this Court to either affirm or reverse the decision below in this appeal on the merits will ultimately involve a reconsideration of the ever shifting knowledge and values to which the dissent in Akron alludes. Amicus urges the Court to decline this invitation, and rather to defer to the several States for a resolution of these issues in the appropriate political forum.

II. THERE ARE SIGNIFICANT SIMILARITIES BETWEEN THE LAWS AND PUBLIC POLICIES OF MISSOURI AND LOUISIANA BALANCING THE COMPETING RIGHT TO ABORTION AND RIGHT TO LIFE OF THE UNBORN CHILD

A. The Nature of the Laws

The Louisiana Legislature reaffirmed the longstanding policy of Louisiana that the unborn child is a human being from the time of conception and is a legal person for the purpose of the unborn child's right to life as follows:

> 1299.35.0 Legislative intent
>
> It is the intention of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana to regulate abortion to the extent permitted by the decisions of the United States Supreme Court. The Legislature does solemnly declare and > find in reaffirmation of the longstanding policy of this State, that the unborn child is a human being from the time of conception and is, therefore, a legal person for purposes of the unborn child's right to life and is entitled to the right to life from conception under the laws and Constitution of this State. Further, the Legislature finds and declares that the longstanding policy of this State is to protect the right to life of the unborn child from conception by prohibiting abortion impermissible only because of the decisions of the United States Supreme Court and that, therefore, if those decisions of the United States Supreme Court are ever reversed or modified or the United States Constitution is amended to allow protection of the unborn then the former policy of this State to prohibit abortions shall be enforced.[11]

In the definitions enacted, "'Unborn child' means the unborn offspring of human beings from the moment of conception through pregnancy and until termination of the pregnancy."[12]

The Louisiana state interest in protecting the unborn child's right to life is clear and compelling and forms the basis for regulating and limiting abortion to the extent permitted by the United States Supreme Court. The Missouri Act defining human life as beginning at conception also forms a statutory basis to establish inheritance rights inuring to the unborn child's heirs. These statutes do not constitute state action impinging on any privacy right to abortion. These statutes demonstrate public interest in recognizing the competing right to life of the unborn child from the moment of conception.

---

[11] La. R.S. 40:1299.35.0. (See App. 6)
[12] La. R.S. 40:1299.35.1. (See App. 6)

By the democratic process, the Louisiana Legislature further expresses the strong interest of the state to prohibit public funds, facilities or employees from participating in abortions except when medically necessary to prevent the death of the mother.[13]

B. Treatment of the Fetus in Property Law

(1) The Fetus in Property Law

At common law, fetal rights were recognized in property law from the time of conception.[14] For instance, the states have established mechanisms for protecting the unborn child's right to inherit property upon its birth.[15] In Louisiana, a Civil Law Jurisdiction, former Civil Code Article 29, found in Book 1 "Of Persons," recognizes the unborn child's property rights and rights of forced heirship as rights preserved for its own sake as a person:

> Article 29. Children in mother's womb
>
> Children in the mother's womb are considered, in [13] La. R.S. 40:1299.34. Employees of state and political subdivisions; counseling abortion prohibited. (See Append. B).

[14] Lenow, J.L., The Fetus as a Patient: Emerging Rights as a Person, A.J. Law and Med. 9 Vol. 1, 3 (1983) citing C.J.S. Wills sec 655 (1976). "The word 'children' includes those en ventre sa mere at the time of the testator's death, especially where such intention is clear by reason of express provision in the will."

[15] Id. Michigan, for example, provides for the appointment of a guardian ad litem to protect an unborn child's property, etc.: "The guardian ad litem is authorized to engage counsel and do whatever is necessary to defend and protect the interest of the unborn person."

> whatever relates to themselves, as if they were already born; thus the inheritances which devolve to them before their birth, and which may belong to them, are kept for them, and curators are assigned to take care of their estates for their benefit.[16]

This principle stems directly from the classical period of Roman law[17] which is again ingrained in the Louisiana Civil Code in Book III, "Of the Different Modes of Acquiring the Ownership of Things," and stipulates that the capacity or ability to own rights is the core of one's legal personality.[18] The redactors of the Louisiana Civil Code clearly treated the fetus as a person directly traced to antiquity.

2. The Fetus in Tort Law

The traditional rule of tort law was to deny recovery for prenatal injuries even if the child were born alive.[19] However, the live birth requirement for a wrongful death remedy was logically indefensible on the following grounds:

> To deny a right of action to a stillborn child produces the incongruous result that a tortfeasor would be liable for injuries to an unborn child who is later still-[16] The original version of Civil Code Article 29 as it appeared in the Digest of 1808 included the passage "yet the hope that such children may be born alive, causes them to be considered" in the law. Effective January 1, 1988, La. C.C. art. 26 became Article 29 without changing the law.

[17] Weeks v. Garrison, civil action No. 73-469, La. Eastern District (1973) at 12; Brief cites Pugh, Nina, "Nasiturum, the Roman Law on the Inception of Human Personality," Master's thesis, L.S.U. (1963) at 25-28.

[18] e.g., La. C.C. arts 953-957, 963.

[19] 410 U.S. at 162.

> born. This rewards tortfeasors for killing rather than maiming a fetus and also creates an incentive for tortfeasors to withhold efforts to save their victim's lives.[20]

In Cooper v. Blanck, 39 So.2d 352 (La. App. Orl. 1923), Louisiana became the first state in the union to allow recovery for pre-natal injuries to a child. The Louisiana Court rejected the common law precedent in Allaire v. St. Luke's Hospital, 56 N.E. 638 (Ill. 1900), which found that the child before birth is a part of the mother and is only severed from her at birth. The lack of a separate legal personality was first expressed by Justice Holmes in Dietrich v. Inhabitants of Northampton, 138 Mass. 14 (1884), where the court of Massachusetts denied recovery for pre-natal injuries because the unborn child had no separate existence. Rejecting Dietrich, Louisiana set a precedent for the nation by finding a remedy for wrongful death, holding that the civil law stipulated that the unborn child is separate from its mother and has a right of recovery for its own injuries. Louisiana further found that the pecuniary damages for the lost benefit of an unborn child were not too speculative on the following grounds:

> "Life," said Blackstone, "begins, in contemplation of the law, as soon as the infant is able to stir in its mother's womb." If the Common Law decisions are uniformly opposed to this view, or if, as was said in the majority opinion in Allaire v. St. Luke's Hospital, the doctrine of the Civil Law and Ecclesiastical law has not been indulged in the courts of the Common Law, we cannot follow them in the application > of principles of our law, which while it presents many analogies, is yet a distinct system. Cooper, supra, 39 So.2d at 358.

[20] Lenow, 14 supra at 7.

In Roe, the majority opined that the right to an abortion is not inconsistent with the parents' rights for a wrongful death remedy for a stillborn child due to pre-natal injuries.[21] Although there are commentators who agree that Roe is not inconsistent with wrongful death actions, an examination of the origin of the action reveals blatant inconsistencies that grant a legal remedy for the unborn child who is injured during pregnancy yet deny that same unborn child the basic right to life.

C. State's Interest in Protecting Fetal Life

The question of when human life begins is fundamental to the discussion on abortion. In Roe, the court decided that it need not resolve the difficult question of when human life begins because even scholars disagree.[22] This Court declared in Roe[23] and reaffirmed in Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth,[24] that the right to abortion is not absolute. The right is "inherently different" from other aspects of the constitutional right to privacy.[25] The right is qualified by "compelling state interests."[26]

It is evident from Roe, Planned Parenthood and Akron[27] that the points at which these "compelling interests" intervene are inherently unstable.

[21] 410 U.S. at 162.
[22] 410 U.S. at 159.
[23] 410 U.S. at 153.
[24] 428 U.S. 52 (1976).
[25] 410 U.S. at 159.
[26] 410 U.S. at 154.
[27] 462 U.S. 416.

This Court originally set the intervention of the State interest in the health of the mother at the end of the first trimester "in light of present medical knowledge."[28] This Court likewise held that a state's interest in "potential" life begins at "viability," by which is meant "potentially able to live outside the mother's womb, albeit with artificial aid."[29]

In Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health,[30] this Court expands the Roe framework of dividing the pregnancy into stages and sets the intervention of the State's interest in the health of the mother at the end of the second trimester.[31] In the case presently before the court, the Missouri statutes recognize that the present state of medical knowledge has advanced the stage at which the unborn child becomes viable to a point in time before the end of the second trimester. The Missouri statutes seek to protect the interest of the unborn child at this stage of development which the Appellees will argue is in direct conflict with the rights of the mother as the court has found them to exist in Akron. Anticipating this problem, Justice O'Connor criticized the Roe trimester framework and the role of viability. She suggests that the point at which the state may intervene is on a "collision course with itself."[32]

Obviously, the settings for these two compelling in-[28] 410 U.S. at 163 (emphasis added).

[29] 410 U.S. at 160.

[30] Supra 462 U.S. 416, 103 S.Ct 2481, 76 L.Ed. 687 (1983).

[31] Id., Akron overruled state actions regulating abortions in the second trimester unless medically necessary because the abortion procedure is hailed as less dangerous than the delivery.

[32] 462 U.S. 416, 103 S.Ct. 2481 at 458.

terests are not sacrosanct. First of all, the point of "viability" was "purposefully left flexible for professional determination and dependent upon developing medical skill and technical ability."[33] As to the interest in maternal health, that interest must be balanced with the State's interest competing to protect the life of the unborn child. Present science makes it possible for the unborn, fertilized in vitro, to survive outside the womb immediately after conception "albeit with artificial aid," for purposes of successful transplantation. Faced with such advancements in medicine, by implication from the reasoning in Roe, it is urged by Amicus that this Court should recognize that the State's interests in protecting the life of the unborn child is compelling from conception.

The competing interests of the mother and the unborn child, under the theory of Roe, are in irreconcilable conflict with each other. Therefore, since the Constitution does not provide for a "trimester" and "viability" approach, and the Constitution reserves to the States through the Tenth Amendment the exercise of power to legislate in matters of public policy, Amicus urges this Court to overturn Roe and to uphold the constitutionality of the Missouri statutes.

[33] Planned Parenthood v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976).

CONCLUSION

Amicus respectfully urges this Court to rule in favor of Appellants, and to uphold the constitutionality of the Missouri statutes based on compelling state interests in balancing the right to abortion and the right to life of the unborn child through the legitimate exercise of police power reserved to the states and the people by the Tenth Amendment of the United States Constitution.

February 23, 1989

Respectfully submitted,

WILLIAM J. GUSTE, JR.
Attorney General of Louisiana

JO ANN P. LEVERT
Assistant Attorney General
THOMAS A. RAYER
Of Counsel

Joined by
Robert K. Corbin, Attorney General of Arizona
Jim Jones, Attorney General of Idaho
Ernest D. Preate, Attorney General of Pennsylvania
Donald J. Hanaway, Attorney General of Wisconsin

APPENDIX A: MISSOURI STATUTES

RS MO §1.205.1 The general assembly of this state finds that:

(1) The life of each human being begins at conception;

(2) Unborn children have protectable interests in life, health, and well-being;

(3) The natural parents of unborn children have protectable interests in the life, health, and well-being of their unborn child.

2. Effective January 1, 1988 the laws of this state shall be interpreted and construed to acknowledge on behalf of the unborn child at every stage of development, all the rights, privileges, and immunities available to other persons, citizens, and residents of this state, subject only to the Constitution of the United States, and decisional interpretations thereof by the United States Supreme Court and specific provisions to the contrary in the statutes and constitution of this state.

3. As used in this section, the term "unborn children" or "unborn child" shall include all unborn child or children or the offspring of human beings from the moment of conception until birth at every stage of biological development.

4. Nothing in this section shall be interpreted as creating a cause of action against a woman for indirectly harming her unborn child by failing to properly care for herself or by failing to follow any particular program of prenatal care.

RS MO §188.010. It is the intention of the general assembly of the state of Missouri to grant the right to life to all humans, born and unborn, and to regulate abortion to the full extent permitted by the Constitution of the United States, decisions of the United States Supreme Court, and federal statutes.

RS MO §188.025. Every abortion performed at sixteen weeks gestational age or later shall be performed in a hospital.

RS MO §188.029. Before a physician performs an abortion on a woman he has reason to believe is carrying an unborn child of twenty or more weeks gestational age, the physician shall first determine if the unborn child is viable by using and exercising that degree of care, skill, and proficiency commonly exercised by the ordinarily skillful, careful, and prudent physician engaged in similar practice under the same or similar conditions. In making this determination of viability, the physician shall perform or cause to be performed such medical examinations and tests as are necessary to make a finding of the gestational age, weight, and lung maturity of the unborn child and shall enter such findings and determination of viability in the medical record of the mother.

RS MO §188.205. Use of public funds prohibited,

It shall be unlawful for any public funds to be expended for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion, not necessary to save the life of the mother, or for the purpose of encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life.

(L.1986, H.B. 1596, § A (§2).)

RS MO §188.210. Public employees, activities prohibited,

It shall be unlawful for any public employee within the scope of his employment to perform or assist an abortion, not necessary to save the life of the mother. It shall be unlawful for a doctor, nurse or other health care personnel, a social worker, a counselor or persons of similar occupation who is a public employee within the scope of his public employment to encourage or counsel a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life.

(L.1986, H.B. No. 1596, § A (§ 3).)

RS MO §188.215. Use of public facilities prohibited,

It shall be unlawful for any public facility to be used for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother or for the purpose of encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life.

(L.1986, H.B. No. 1596, § A (§ 4).)

Definitional language is set forth in Mo.Rev.Stat. § 188.200 (previously Section 1 of "the Act"), which provides:

RS MO §188.200. Definitions

As used in sections 188.200 to 188.220, the following terms mean:

(1) "Public employee," any person employed by this state or any agency or political subdivision thereof;

(2) "Public facility," any public institution, public facility, public equipment, or any physical asset owned, leased, or controlled by this state or any agency or political subdivision thereof;

(3) "Public funds," any funds received or controlled by this state or any agency or political subdivision thereof, including, but not limited to, funds derived from federal, state or local taxes, gifts or grants from any source, public or private, federal grants or payments, or intergovernmental transfers.

APPENDIX B: LOUISIANA STATUTES

La. R.S. 40:1299.34. Employees of state and political subdivisions; counseling abortion prohibited

No person employed by the state of Louisiana, by contract or otherwise, or any subdivision or agency thereof, and no person employed in any public or private social service agency, by contract or otherwise, shall require or recommend that any woman have an abortion. Notwithstanding anything contained herein to the contrary, this Section shall not apply to a doctor of medicine, currently licensed by the Louisiana State Board of Medical Examiners pursuant to R.S. 37:1261 et seq., who is acting to save or preserve the life of the pregnant woman.

La. R.S. 40:1299.34.5 Use of public funds

Notwithstanding any other provision of law to the contrary, no public funds, made available to any institution, board, commission, department, agency, official, or employee of the state of Louisiana, or of any local political subdivision thereof, whether such funds are made available by the government of the United States, the state of Louisiana, or of a local governmental subdivision, or from any other public source shall be used in any way for, to assist in, or to provide facilities for an abortion, except when the abortion is medically necessary to prevent the death of the mother.

La. R.S. 40:1299.35.0. Legislative intent

It is the intention of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana to regulate abortion to the extent permitted by the decisions of the United States Supreme Court. The Legislature does solemnly declare and find in reaffirmation of the longstanding policy of this State, that the unborn child is a human being from the time of conception and is, therefore, a legal person for purposes of the unborn child's right to life and is entitled to the right to life from conception under the laws and Constitution of this State. Further, the Legislature finds and declares that the longstanding policy of this State is to protect the right to life of the unborn child from conception by prohibiting abortion impermissible only because of the decisions of the United States Supreme Court and that, therefore, if those decisions of the United States Supreme Court are ever reversed or modified or the United States Constitution is amended to allow protection of the unborn then the former policy of this State to prohibit abortions shall be enforced.

La. R.S. 40:1299.35.1. Definitions

As used in R.S. 40:1299.35.0 through 40:1299.35.18, the following words have the following meanings:

(1) "Abortion" means the deliberate termination of a human pregnancy after fertilization of a female ovum, by any person, including the pregnant woman herself, with an intention other than to produce a live birth or to remove a dead unborn child caused by a spontaneous abortion.

(2) "Unborn child" means the unborn offspring of human beings from the moment of conception through pregnancy and until termination of the pregnancy.

(3) "Viable" means potentially able to live outside of the womb of the mother upon premature birth whether resulting from natural causes or an abortion, or otherwise, and whether that potentiality exists in part due to the provision or availability of natural or artificial life-support systems.

(4) "Conception" means the fertilization of a human female ovum by the sperm of a human male.

(5) "Physician" means a person licensed to practice medicine in the state of Louisiana.

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al., Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al., Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES
CIRCUIT COURT COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT COURT

BRIEF AMICUS CURIAE OF THE AMERICAN ACADEMY OF MEDICAL ETHICS IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

James Bopp, Jr.
Counsel of Record
Richard E. Coleson
BRAMES, MCCORMICK, BOPP & ABEL
The Tudor House
191 Harding Avenue
Post Office Box 410
Terre Haute, Indiana 47808-0410
(812) 238-2421
Attorneys for Amicus Curiae

February 23, 1989

Central Publishing Company, Inc., Indianapolis, IN 46206

QUESTIONS PRESENTED HEREIN

1. WHETHER MO. REV. STAT. § 188.205, WHICH MAKES IT UNLAWFUL FOR PUBLIC FUNDS TO BE USED FOR THE PURPOSE OF ENCOURAGING OR COUNSELING A WOMAN TO HAVE AN ABORTION NOT NECESSARY TO SAVE HER LIFE, IS UNCONSTITUTIONAL FOR REASONS OF VAGUENESS AND VIEWPOINT DISCRIMINATION.

2. WHETHER MO. REV. STAT. § 188.205, WHICH MAKES IT UNLAWFUL FOR PUBLIC FUNDS TO BE USED FOR THE PURPOSE OF ENCOURAGING OR COUNSELING A WOMAN TO HAVE AN ABORTION NOT NECESSARY TO SAVE HER LIFE, IS UNCONSTITUTIONAL AS A VIOLATION OF A WOMAN'S FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT RIGHT TO CHOOSE ABORTION IN CONSULTATION WITH HER PHYSICIAN.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
QUESTIONS PRESENTED HEREIN	i
TABLE OF CONTENTS	ii
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES	iii
INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE	1
SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT	2
ARGUMENT	3
I. THE MISSOURI PROHIBITION ON THE EXPENDITURE OF PUBLIC FUNDS FOR ENCOURAGING OR COUNSELING WOMEN TO HAVE ABORTIONS IS NOT UNCONSTITUTIONAL FOR REASONS OF VAGUENESS OR VIEWPOINT DISCRIMINATION	3
A. The Prohibition on Expending Public Funds for Encouraging or Counseling for Abortion Is Not Unconstitutionally Vague	3
1. The Full Vagueness Analysis	4
2. The Full Vagueness Analysis Applied	8
B. The Prohibition on Expending Public Funds for Encouraging or Counseling for Abortion Does Not Constitute Impermissible Viewpoint Discrimination for Purposes of the First Amendment	16
II. THE MISSOURI PROHIBITION ON THE EXPENDITURE OF PUBLIC FUNDS FOR ENCOURAGING OR COUNSELING WOMEN TO HAVE ABORTIONS IS NOT AN UNCONSTITUTIONAL VIOLATION OF A WOMAN'S RIGHT TO CHOOSE ABORTION IN CONSULTATION WITH HER PHYSICIAN	21
CONCLUSION	23

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT CASES:	Page(s)
Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 426 U.S. 416 (1983)	10, 17
Babbitt v. Planned Parenthood, 107 S.Ct. 391 (1986)	15
Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601 (1973)	7-8, 15
Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979)	4-5, 8-11
Colten v. Kentucky, 407 U.S. 104 (1972)	8, 16
CSC v. Letter Carriers, 413 U.S. 548 (1973)	8
Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973)	9-10
Erznoznik v. City of Jacksonville, 422 U.S. 205 (1975)	7
FCC v. League of Women Voters, 468 U.S. 364 (1984)	17
Frisby v. Schultz, 108 S.Ct. 2495 (1988)	6
Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. 104 (1972)	4, 6-7
Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980)	16, 20-22
Kolender v. Lawson, 461 U.S. 352 (1983)	6
Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977)	16, 20-21
Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390 (1923)	20
Perry Education Association v. Perry Local Educator's Association, 460 U.S. 37 (1983)	19-20
Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976)	10
Regan v. Taxation Without Representation (TWR), 461 U.S. 540 (1983)	17
Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973)	3
Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 106 S.Ct. 2169 (1986)	10

Page(s)

United States v. Harriss, 347 U.S. 612 (1954) 7-9

United States v. Vuitch, 402 U.S. 62 (1971)..... 9-10

Village of Hoffman Estates v. Flipside, Hoffman Estates, 455 U.S. 489 (1982)..... 4-5

Virginia v. American Booksellers Association, 108 S.Ct. 636 (1988)..... 6-7

OTHER CASES:

Planned Parenthood Association of Chicago Area v. Kempiners, 700 F. 2d 1115 (7th Cir. 1983)..... 21

Planned Parenthood of Central and Northern Missouri v. State of Arizona, 718 F. 2d 938 (9th Cir. 1983), 1983), appealed after remand, 789 F. 2d 1348 (9th Cir.)..... 15

United States v. Maude, 481 F.2d 1062 (D.C. Cir. 1973). 7

STATUTES:

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.205 ..... passim

OTHER AUTHORITIES:

Bopp & Coleson, The Right to Abortion: Absolute, Anomalous, and Ripe for Reversal, 3 B.Y.U. J. Pub. L. 191 (1989)..... 3, 7-10, 16

Brief for Amicus Curiae National Right to Life Committee, Inc. herein..... 6

Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, 82 Yale L.J. 920 (1973)..... 5

Webster's Seventh New Collegiate Dictionary (1967).... 12

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al., Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al., Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT COURT

BRIEF AMICUS CURIAE OF THE AMERICAN ACADEMY OF MEDICAL ETHICS IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE[1]

The American Academy of Medical Ethics (AAME) is an educational and legislative lobbying organization with approximately 20,000 physician members. The AAME was incorporated in 1986 in response to an adversely changing medical and ethical climate in the American Medical Association (AMA) and the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists

[1] This Brief Amicus Curiae is filed with the consent of all parties to this appeal. A letter from each attorney stating this consent has been filed herewith with the Clerk of this Court.

(ACOG). In accordance with the Hippocratic Oath, the AAME is ethically opposed to the practice of abortion (except to save the life of the mother) and the involvement of physicians in referring for the procedure. The AAME contends that the unborn child is a patient that deserves protection and the full advocacy of the physician and that abortion referral is against the best interests of the unborn. The AAME seeks to further its interests by this brief amicus curiae in support of appellants.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

There is more to a proper void for vagueness analysis than a single step from an initial impression that a term or phrase might be vague to a judicial finding of unconstitutional vagueness. Because in most cases the determination of vagueness is more a subjective than an objective evaluation, it may be said that generally vagueness — like beauty — is in the eye of the beholder. To limit the subjective nature of vagueness evaluations, this Court has developed several counterbalancing elements which must be considered in determining whether legislation is impermissibly vague. A failure to employ the full analysis has been a distorting characteristic of abortion jurisprudence, giving the impression that courts are more eager to strike down abortion legislation than to follow the usual principles of adjudication.

By applying a complete void for vagueness analysis, including a comparison of prior examples found not overly vague by this Court, it will be demonstrated that the expression "encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life" is not unconstitutionally vague.

Nor does the Missouri prohibition on expending public funds for encouraging or counseling for abortion constitute impermissible viewpoint discrimination in violation of the first amendment. Rather, such limitation is a legitimate exercise of the state's power to determine where to spend its funds and a permissible assertion of an interest in promoting childbirth found legitimate in prior decisions of this Court.

Finally, as the Missouri statute creates no barrier to a woman's access to abortion information which is not already present, but merely declines to fund encouraging or counseling for abortion with public funds, there is no violation of a woman's fourteenth amendment right to choose abortion in consultation with her physician.

ARGUMENT

I. THE MISSOURI PROHIBITION ON THE EXPENDITURE OF PUBLIC FUNDS FOR ENCOURAGING OR COUNSELING WOMEN TO HAVE ABORTIONS IS NOT UNCONSTITUTIONAL FOR REASONS OF VAGUENESS OR VIEWPOINT DISCRIMINATION.

A. The Prohibition on Expending Public Funds for Encouraging or Counseling for Abortion Is Not Unconstitutionally Vague.

Vagueness, like beauty, is often in the eye of the beholder. While the vagueness or clarity of some legislation is so plain as to be capable of nearly objective determination, the determination as to other legislation is more subjective. In these latter situations, the old adage about beauty becomes apropos to determinations of vagueness.

Absolute clarity is not required by the precedents of this Court. Nonetheless, courts hostile to any state assertion of the interests declared compelling in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), have found the vagueness doctrine a convenient instrument of destruction in the field of abortion jurisprudence.[2] In the process, these courts have worked a distortion in this doctrine of the law where it touches abortion, just as they have wrought such a distortion (from the usual principles of jurisprudence) in other areas of the law touching on abortion. See generally Bopp & Coleson, supra note 2.

---

[2] See Bopp & Coleson, The Right to Abortion: Absolute, Anomalous, and Ripe for Reversal, 3 B.Y.U. J. Pub. L. 191 (1989)(Citations to specific page numbers hereinafter — other than the initial page number (191) — are to the unpublished manuscript, a copy of which has been filed with the Clerk of this Court. The anticipated publication date is April, 1989.).

As may be seen from the application of the full vagueness analysis established by this Court, the Missouri statute at issue herein is not unconstitutionally vague. Rather, the finding of vagueness by the lower courts is yet another example of the abortion distortion factor at work, making the right to abortion yet more absolute and anomalous.

1. The Full Vagueness Analysis

The principle underlying the vagueness doctrine is the notion of due process, as was explained by this Court in Grayned v. City of Rockford:

> It is a basic principle of due process that an enactment is void for vagueness if its prohibitions are not clearly defined. Vague laws offend several important values. First, because we assume that man is free to steer between lawful and unlawful conduct, we insist that laws give the person of ordinary intelligence a reasonable opportunity to know what is prohibited, so that he may act accordingly. Vague laws may trap the innocent by not providing fair warning. Second, if arbitrary and discriminatory enforcement is to be prevented, laws must provide explicit standards for those who apply them.

408 U.S. 104, 108 (1972).

This Court set forth the vagueness test with relation to abortion legislation in the case of Colautti v. Franklin:

> It is settled that, as a matter of due process, a criminal statute that 'fails to give a person of ordinary intelligence fair notice that his contemplated conduct is forbidden by statute,' or is so indefinite that 'it encourages arbitrary and erratic arrests and convictions,' is void for vagueness. This appears to be especially true where the uncertainty induced by the statute threatens to inhibit the exercise of constitutionally protected rights.

439 U.S. 379, 390-91 (1979) (citation omitted).

This Court has also noted that the level of vagueness tolerated varies with the nature of the statute at issue. Village of

Hoffman Estates v. Flipside, Hoffman Estates, 455 U.S. 489, 498 (1982). First, economic regulations receive less scrutiny due to their narrow subject matter, the economic motivation for businesses to consult legislation before acting, and the availability of clarification by personal inquiry or administrative ruling. Id. Second, where criminal penalties are imposed, the scrutiny is stricter, although a scienter requirement may mitigate a certain amount of vagueness — especially where the principle of adequate notice regarding proscribed conduct is adequately met. Id. at 498-99. Third, where a law "threatens to inhibit the exercise of constitutionally protected rights," more clarity is also required. Id.[3]

There are limits to the vagueness doctrine, however. It is not enough for a court to decide that a term seems vague and to then declare a statute void, based upon that mere perception. A full analysis includes consideration of several counterbalances to perceived vagueness which are often neglected.

(1) The test for vagueness itself contains the first consideration beyond the initial impression of vagueness concerning a word or phrase. The court must ask whether "a person of ordinary intelligence" will be given "fair notice that his contemplated conduct is forbidden by statute." Colautti, 439 U.S. at 390-91. Will the average person be able to figure out what the state had in mind? If so, despite some facial vagueness of a term, the statute containing it may not properly be determined void for vagueness. Moreover, this hypothetical person of ordinary intelligence will not be asked to examine the word or phrase in isolation, but, rather, he or she will be required to consider the matter in the context of the whole piece of legislation under scrutiny. Facial vagueness of an isolated word or phrase is insufficient. There must also be contextual vagueness — such that the average person cannot figure out what the state is proscribing. Closely related is the concept of whether there will be erratic arrests, i.e., can the police figure out what the legislature is saying? Of course, in a facial challenge, as is being brought in the case at bar, the matter of erratic arrests is pure speculation in all but the most objectively vague cases.

[3] Prior to the abortion cases, the stricter scrutiny mentioned with regard to fundamental rights had only been applied to inhibitions of free speech or association, as evidenced by the examples given in Hoffman Estates, 455 U.S. at 499, and in Colautti, 439 U.S. at 391. It is evidence of the "super-protected" nature of the abortion right, noted early by John Hart Ely, that this right has been exalted to a place beside the traditionally lofty right of free expression. As Ely expressed it, the protection afforded the abortion right is "far more stringent" than that accorded any other right, "so stringent that a desire to preserve the fetus's existence is unable to overcome it — a protection more stringent . . . than the present Court affords the freedom of the press explicitly guaranteed by the First Amendment." Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, 82 Yale L.J. 920, 935 (1973).

(2) A second counterbalance to the perceived vagueness of certain legislative language is the duty which courts have to give a statute a construction which favors its constitutionality, where fairly possible. Such construction, of course, must be reasonable and readily apparent from the language itself. See, e.g., Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. at 410; Brief for Amicus Curiae National Right to Life Committee, Inc. herein (setting forth the full set of avoidance rules, including the duty to apply constructions favoring constitutionality, whereby this Court avoids the vast majority of constitutional issues pressed upon it for decision).

(3) A third limitation on the vagueness doctrine is the duty of courts to consider any limiting construction by a state entity, such as a state court or enforcement agency, especially those whose interpretations may be considered "authoritative." Virginia v. American Booksellers Association, 108 S.Ct. 636, 644 (1988)(giving consideration to a state attorney general's construction, but not giving it the weight of an "authoritative" construction, and certifying certain questions of construction to the state supreme court); Frisby v. Schultz, 108 S.Ct. 2495 (1988)(adopting the construction urged by a city's attorney at oral argument before this Court); Kolender v. Lawson, 461 U.S. 352, 355 (1983). The lack of an "authoritative" construction in no way limits the duty of a reviewing court to apply a narrowing construction in a facial challenge where the statute is "readily susceptible" of such a construction upholding its constitutionality. American Booksellers Association, 108

S.Ct. at 644-45 (citing Erznoznik v. City of Jacksonville, 422 U.S. 205 (1975); Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601 (1973)). See also Bopp & Coleson, supra note 2, at 160 n.175 (explaining the sometimes employed distinction between "extrapolation" of a statute and "construction" of a statute in regard to the problem of "authoritative" constructions).

(4) A fourth counterbalance to the vagueness doctrine, which a court must consider, is the principle that a perceived difficulty with marginal cases does not cause unconstitutional vagueness. United States v. Harriss, 347 U.S. 612, 618 (1954).[1] It is not a sufficient analysis for a court to imagine obscure cases in which a piece of legislation might not provide as much guidance as desired and, on that basis, declare a legislative enactment void for vagueness.

(5) A fifth principle in a full vagueness analysis is that where one's "conduct falls squarely within the 'hard core' of the statute's proscription," a facial vagueness challenge will not be allowed. Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. at 608.

(6) A sixth counterbalance to initial perceived vagueness is the doctrine that where technical terms or terms of special meaning are employed (e.g., common law terms), or where the terminology is commonly grasped in the context, a fatal ambiguity will not be found. United States v. Maude, 481 F.2d 1062, 1068 (D.C. Cir. 1973).

(7) Finally, the vagueness doctrine does not require "unattainable feats of statutory clarity." Id. This Court, in Broadrick, noted:

> Words inevitably contain germs of uncertainty. . . . 'There are limitations in the English language with respect to being both specific and manageably brief, and it > seems to us that although the prohibitions may not satisfy those intent on finding fault at any cost, they are set out in terms that the ordinary person exercising ordinary common sense can sufficiently understand and comply with, without sacrifice to the public interest.'

[1] While many of the discussions of the vagueness rule, such as that in Harriss, are decided under the due process clause of the fifth amendment, this Court has applied the principles equally to the fourteenth amendment. This may be seen in the common citation of vagueness analysis precedents dealing with federal statutes in cases involving state laws. See, e.g., Grayned, 408 U.S. at 108 n. 3.

413 U.S. at 608 (quoting CSC v. Letter Carriers, 413 U.S. 548, 578-79 (1973)). Thus, absolute precision in legislative drafting is not required. It is enough if "citizens who desire to obey the statute will have no difficulty in understanding it." Colten v. Kentucky, 407 U.S. 104, 110 (1972)(citation omitted).

A full vagueness analysis, then, is a two-stage process. This may be clearly seen in United States v. Harriss, 347 U.S. 612, which was cited as authority for the vagueness doctrine in Colautti, 439 U.S. at 390. First, the reviewing court must evaluate the statute in light of common understanding, technical use of terms, scienter requirements, applicability of its "hard core" to the plaintiff, and so on, to see if, indeed, vagueness exists. Second, the court must then determine whether a construction is fairly possible which favors constitutionality and, if one exists, employ it. Although Harriss included both stages in its statement of the rule, 347 U.S. at 617-18, it is notable that Colautti, an abortion case, did not, 439 U.S. at 390, foreshadowing the problem found in the general application of the vagueness analysis in abortion jurisprudence, which is discussed in the following portion as a preliminary to specific application to the statute at issue herein.

2. The Full Vagueness Analysis Applied.

In general, the application of the vagueness doctrine by this Court and other courts to abortion jurisprudence has resulted in a considerable distortion of the law. Indeed, whether a court sets forth the vagueness analysis as a full two-stage process, or merely mentions the first part, as done by Colautti (i.e., that vague criminal statutes violate constitutional principles) has proven a reliable signal of the outcome of vagueness evaluations in abortion cases. See Bopp & Coleson, supra note 2, at 166-80 (a fuller discussion of the void for vagueness doctrine and its misapplication to abortion legislation). While a principled vagueness analysis requires consideration of all the counterbalances to any initial impression of vagueness, these considerations are often neglected by courts eager to strike down abortion legislation. Id.

Two examples from this Court's opinions illustrate the abortion distortion factor well. In United States v. Vuitch, 402 U.S. 62 (1971), this Court dealt with a vagueness challenge in an abortion context. Vuitch was noteworthy for a clear explication of the constitutional construction principle: "statutes should be construed whenever possible so as to uphold their constitutionality." Id. at 70. Applying this principle, the majority construed a "health" exception to a general abortion prohibition broadly to include mental health, and, thus, eliminated the ambiguity. Id. at 71. This recognition of the full vagueness analysis and its appropriate application was followed in Doe v. Bolton, 113 U.S. 179 (1973), where this Court construed the term "necessary," in a Georgia statute, to uphold its constitutionality. 113 U.S. at 191-92 ("based upon his best clinical judgment that an abortion is necessary."). It is noteworthy that these proper uses of the full vagueness analysis resulted in the expansion of abortion rights. See Bolton, 113 U.S. at 192 (The Court noted that this "room" for a physician to make his "best medical judgment" operated to the benefit of the pregnant woman.").

By contrast, in Colautti the pro-Roe majority sustained vagueness challenges to two restrictive statutes. The Court cited the first part of the Harriss vagueness analysis for the rule against overly vague criminal statutes. 439 U.S. at 390. The second step was to determine whether a construction could fairly be found to resolve the ambiguity. The majority did not quote the Harriss construction rule, although Harriss was obviously close at hand (having just been cited). Nor did the Court make much effort to find a saving construction, although such constructions were readily available. See Bopp & Coleson, supra note 2, at 173. The Colautti majority virtually conceded that a different construction rule existed where abortion rights were being expanded than where they were being restricted. The Court noted the Vuitch and Bolton constructions favoring constitutionality and declared them distinguishable, because they "afford[ed] broad discretion to the physician," unlike the statute at issue in Colautti, 439 U.S. at 394.[5]

Justice O'Connor, dissenting in Akron, likewise noted the pro-Roe majority's propensity for finding vagueness where none was readily perceptible. 462 U.S. at 475 (O'Connor, J., dissenting).

The impression left of the general application of the vagueness principle to abortion jurisprudence is that it has been found a convenient tool for striking down attempted assertions of "compelling" state interests by the states. See Bopp & Coleson, supra note 2, at 166-80 (noting the influence this Court's lowered standards for abortion jurisprudence has had on the lower courts).

It is incumbent upon this Court, in applying the vagueness rules to the statute at bar, to apply the rules applicable to all statutes, correcting the erroneous impression left by this Court in Colautti and Thornburgh that special — and more stringent — rules exist for abortion statutes, but not for all

[5] In Thornburgh, the pro-Roe majority likewise refused to apply the avoidance rule that one should apply sympathetic constructions to state statutes in order to uphold their constitutionality — although not in the context of a vagueness challenge. Justice White in dissent summed up the departure from the normal rules in abortion cases as follows:

> The Court's rejection of a perfectly plausible reading of the statute flies in the face of the principle — which until today I had thought applicable to abortion statutes as well as to other legislative enactments — that '[w]here fairly possible, courts should construe a statute to avoid a danger of unconstitutionality.' The Court's reading is obviously based on an entirely different principle: that in cases involving abortion, a permissible reading of a statute is to be avoided at all costs.

Thornburgh, 106 S.Ct. at 2005. Cf. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 100 (1976) (White, J., dissenting) ("Incredibly the Court reads the statute to require 'the physician to preserve the life and health of the fetus, whatever the stage of the pregnancy,' . . . thereby attributing to the Missouri Legislature the strange intention of passing a statute with absolutely no chance of surviving constitutional challenge under Roe. . . .").

others. In the case at bar, the plaintiffs/appellees have challenged the phrase "encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life" as unconstitutionally vague and the Court of Appeals has so held. J.S. at A68-69. However, applying the full vagueness analysis reveals this holding to be erroneous.

Initially, the standard of requisite clarity must be established. As no criminal penalties are involved, heightened clarity is not required for that reason. Appellees, however, urge that the right of free expression is implicated, thus raising the standard of clarity required. However, as the State notes, J.S. at 24-25, the language of Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.205 merely instructs officials in control of the public fisc not to expend State monies on programs that involve encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion (except where her life is at risk). This particular part of the state legislation forbids no one to discuss the subject of abortion. J.S. at 25.[6] Thus, the level of clarity required of the piece of legislation at issue herein is that lower level required of economic regulations. However, even under the stricter clarity requirement for matters impinging on first amendment rights, the statute is not unconstitutionally vague under the full vagueness analysis.

In applying the preceding enumerated counterbalances to any perceived vagueness, the first question is to ask whether "a person of ordinary intelligence" will be "given fair notice that his contemplated conduct is forbidden by statute." Colautti, 439 U.S. at 390-91. This "average" person must consider the statute as a whole and the common usage of terms in determining whether any particular terms are beyond his comprehension. Because of the preamble to the statute, declaring that life begins at conception and that unborn human life should be protected to the full extent possible in the law, and because of the efforts made by the statute to protect unborn life to the maximum extent possible by requiring, inter alia, appropriate viability tests, and because of the long history of the State's efforts to assert its "compelling" interests through legislation, this average person would have to conclude that the State of Missouri is opposed to abortion except to preserve the life of the mother. The plain language of § 188.205 would also make this clear: "It shall be unlawful for any public funds to be expended . . . for the purpose of encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life."

[6] The interpretation of the state statute given it by the State attorney general is entitled to careful consideration, as discussed more fully infra.

This person of average intelligence would also examine the context of the term "counsel" which the lower court and the Appellees find so problematic. He or she would note that the word does not stand alone but is modified by the prepositional clause "to have an abortion not necessary to save her life." This "average" person would then rather easily conclude, from the words "to have," that affirmative advocacy of abortions not necessary to save the lives of mothers was proscribed. After all, the clause does not proscribe counseling a woman not to have such an abortion.

This average person would be familiar with the term "counsel" from the common use of the term to mean "to advise," which he could find in any dictionary which an "average" person would use. See, e.g., Webster's Seventh New Collegiate Dictionary (1967).

In sum, a person of average intelligence could easily conclude that the statute prohibited state officials from funding any activity whereby a woman was encouraged or advised to have an abortion which was not medically indicated to save her life.

Just as plainly, this "average" person would see that the statute did not forbid neutral advice or "encouraging or counseling" not to have an abortion not necessary to save a mother's life.

Also, this average person would know that, as the statute applied only to the funding of programs by the state, any mistake in his or her interpretation would carry no criminal penalties. While the reasonably intelligent person would know that English terms are capable of various meanings, he or she would, as one must do every day, assign the meaning to the terms contextually, not in isolation, narrowing the range of meanings easily by the use of reason.

Finally, as this person of average intelligence would be chargeable with knowledge of the law (and persons in medical practice relating to abortion would doubtless have actual knowledge) he or she will know that this Court has upheld the statutory language at issue on just such an interpretation, resulting in certainty of constitutionality in such interpretation and removing any likelihood that one would be found in violation by appropriating funds for any programs that did not encourage or counsel women to have abortions not necessary to save their lives. The requirements of fair notice would be easily satisfied.

Second, as this Court has declared its duty to give a construction favoring constitutionality where fairly possible, it should adopt an interpretation of "encouraging and counseling to have an abortion" to mean positive advocacy of abortion. Such an interpretation is reasonable and readily apparent from the language of the statute itself. No unseemly stretching of the normal usage of the English language would be required. It should be noted that, while a state construction of a statute might seem preferable, most abortion cases will be brought in federal district courts, precluding state courts from making constructions. Thus, for federal courts to refuse to construe abortion statutes, where fairly possible, to uphold their constitutionality is to subject abortion jurisprudence to a more difficult standard of clarity than general legislation by depriving it of the usual benefit of a sympathetic construction at bar. In short, legislators dealing with abortion are faced with the daunting task of obtaining linguistic perfection, an unfair burden not placed on other legislation.

Third, while the interpretation of this phrase by the Missouri Attorney General may not be authoritative, in the sense of being binding (as a judicial construction would be), this Court commonly considers the statutory interpretations of state attorneys general and counsel at oral argument before the bench. The interpretation of such a person in a position of representation of the state makes such an interpretation worthy of consideration and respect. Moreover, where the reading given is readily apparent and reasonable from the text and context, there is little reason to reject such a reading. Should a state court later choose to interpret the matter differently but "authoritatively," it would do so knowing that such an interpretation had not received the approval of this Court and might be subject to an as applied challenge. The more likely scenario would be for the legislature to reword the language of the statute to prohibit funding of all programs which involved "encouraging or counseling about abortion" — if that were, in fact, its intent. The result of such new wording would be fair warning that the State would not fund even a discussion of the practice of abortion. As the language now stands, there is no good reason to strike this statute for vagueness when the State's official representative offers a perfectly plausible construction of it.

Fourth, while marginal cases might be imagined where this statute, as would be the case with most statutes, might be misinterpreted, such marginal cases would not make the legislation unconstitutionally vague. The legislation as a whole is clearly aimed at limiting state support for abortion and the specific wording at issue is clearly aimed at affirmative advocacy of abortion in state funded counseling situations. While it might be remotely imaginable that a person expending state funds to a program not counseling in favor of abortion, or merely mentioning abortion as an option without promoting the practice in any way, might be found to have violated the law, such possibilities — especially in light of the Attorney General's interpretation and the proposed construction adopted by this Court — is at best of marginal probability.

Fifth, some of the plaintiffs/appellees in this cause, as stated by the Court of Appeals, "have occasion to encourage or counsel such women to terminate their pregnancies" or "occasionally encourage or counsel certain patients to have abortion, even though the pregnancy is not life-threatening." J.S. at A10. Such affirmative advocacy of abortion "falls squarely within the 'hard core' of the statute's proscription." Broadrick, 413 U.S. at 608. Because they do not do this in every case, but only "have occasion" to do so, these plaintiffs are not totally precluded from making a facial challenge. Id. However, it should be noted that their allegation that they wish to encourage and counsel women to have abortions, which allegation is what gives them standing to challenge this portion of the statute, is an adoption of the interpretation given by the Missouri Attorney General (affirmative advocacy) and was easily understood by the plaintiffs theselves in asserting their standing and by the lower courts in recognizing the standing of these plaintiffs. J.S. at A10.

Sixth, the phrase, "encouraging and counseling to have an abortion," is easily understood, as previously noted, from its contextual use. To "counsel" is also a technical term, due to its use in other abortion legislation prohibiting "counseling for abortion," where it has been upheld against a vagueness challenge in a similar state funding context. Planned Parenthood of Central and Northern Missouri v. State of Arizona, 718 F.2d 938, 948-49 (9th Cir. 1983), appealed after remand, 789 F.2d 1348 (9th Cir.), aff'd sub nom. Babbitt v. Planned Parenthood, 107 S.Ct. 391 (1986). The Babbitt case indicates that the language used by Missouri is not of the nearly objectively vague variety, but is, at least, of the sort where vagueness is in the eye of the beholder. More likely still, it is of the nearly objectively clear variety. Moreover, the common knowledge of psychological, legal, pastoral, financial, and other counselors, lends credibility to the argument that counsel is a commonly understood technical term, meaning "to advise."

Seventh, while the Missouri legislature might have used more precise terms, or defined them more fully, that does not make what it has enacted unconstitutionally vague. Nor does a certain amount of initial perceived vagueness mandate a finding of unconstitutionality. Absolute precision in legislative drafting is not required. Moreover, while the lower courts and appellees have difficulty with the term "counsel," one must ask what alternative the State should employ — advise, discuss, give opinions? Clearly, the term "counsel" is a common term for the sort of discussions between a doctor or other medical practitioner and a patient. To counsel "to have" easily may be interpreted as entailing affirmative advocacy. To ask for more than such simple, straightforward English, which best portrays with brevity the intention of the legislators, is to ask too much.

Finally, some terms which this Court has upheld against vagueness attacks are worth noting. This Court has upheld, in criminal or quasi-criminal settings, such terms as "crime involving moral turpitude," "restraint of trade," "any offensive, derisive or annoying word," "connected with or related to the national defense," "fair and open competition," and other, similar phrases. See Bopp & Coleson, supra note 2, at 174-75.

In sum, it may be said of the legislation at bar that "citizens who desire to obey the statute will have no difficulty in understanding it." Colten, 407 U.S. at 110 (emphasis added).

B. The Prohibition on Expending Public Funds for Encouraging or Counseling for Abortion Does Not Constitute Impermissible Viewpoint Discrimination for Purposes of the First Amendment.

Appellees' charge of viewpoint discrimination, in violation of the first amendment, is based on the premise that someone's free expression would be inhibited by this legislation. This is untrue. The only "encouraging and counseling to have an abortion" provision before this Court is one which gives instructions to those controlling expenditures of State funds as to what sort of programs the State wishes to fund.

There is no question of the propriety of the State of Missouri choosing to favor childbirth over abortion in its funding decisions. It has been clearly established by this Court that a state may do so. Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980); Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977). Under these cases, if a state chose to do so, it could erect billboards, distribute leaflets, or run advertisements in print and broadcast media expressing its preference for childbirth and opposition to abortion — all matters with first amendment implications. There is nothing constitutionally infirm with Missouri's decision to express its preference for childbirth over abortion by choosing to publicly fund one viewpoint over the other. Nor is the state requiring any physician to express a viewpoint with which he disagrees, which this Court has found objectionable. See, e.g., Akron, 462 U.S. 416. The state is merely limiting the kind of services that are provided by its expenditures of public funds.

Appellees attempt to analogize this case to FCC v. League of Women Voters, 468 U.S. 364 (1984), and declare that by refusing to fund advocacy of abortion, while funding opposition to abortion, the state has committed viewpoint discrimination. Motion to Affirm at 15. However, FCC by its own admission "rests on a very narrow proposition," namely, that > the specific interests sought to be advanced by . . . [the] ban on editorializing are either not sufficiently substantial or are not served in a sufficiently limited manner to justify the substantial abridgment of important journalistic freedoms which the First Amendment jealously protects.

FCC, 468 U.S. at 402. Of course, in the case at bar, no journalistic freedoms are at issue. Nor has the state government created a broadcasting public forum, as it did in FCC, and then limited speech by means not justified by the ends they were supposed to achieve. The FCC majority noted that if, as in Regan v. Taxation Without Representation (TWR), 461 U.S. 540 (1983), the public radio stations could "segregate [their] activities according to the source of [their] funding," there would be no problem with a ban on editorializing, just as there was no problem with the statutory refusal to fund the first amendment (political lobbying) activity of the plaintiffs in TWR. The FCC majority found the key fault with the FCC's bar on editorializing by partially publicly funded broadcast stations to lie in the fact that "[t]he station has no way of limiting the use of its federal funds to all noneditorializing activities, and more importantly, it is barred from using even wholly private funds to finance its editorial activity." FCC, 468 U.S. at 400.

However, the effect of Missouri's decision not to fund affirmative encouraging or counseling for abortion is to leave medical practitioners with the full range of free expression intact in any area of their practice not funded by the state. Moreover, they are entirely free to determine whether or not they choose to participate in state funded programs, which according to this statute will only be programs that do not include encouraging or counseling women to have an abortion not intended to save the mother's life. Physicians choosing to express other opinions on the subject of abortion, on state-funded time, would simply not be funded with state funds unless they chose to segregate their activities and express their contrary opinions on non-state-funded time. No attempt is made to regulate what physicians or other medical personnel say on their own time, nor is there any penalty of loss of funding if they express contrary views on their own time, with their own resources.

However, the statute is not even directed at physicians. The thrust of the statute is to instruct those controlling these funds as to what programs and activities they may fund. No penalties are prescribed for physicians who affirmatively encourage or counsel women to have non-lifesaving abortions. Those refusing to abide by the guidelines would merely no longer be funded, provided that the controllers of the state funds were allocating those funds properly, in accord with this restriction.

The notion of applying content-based discrimination principles in the context of state funding schemes would lead to absurd results. This is so because government funding programs, by their very nature, generally choose one viewpoint from a variety of possible viewpoints. For example, the field of family planning is replete with alternative viewpoints. Some favor no family planning whatsoever and are, therefore, opposed to any type of family planning. Others favor only natural family planning methods, denouncing artificial means. Yet others see no problem with any preventive family planning, provided that life is protected from the moment of conception, and are stongly opposed to abortion. Some advocate family planning that would extend to abortion. A few writers have even advocated legal infanticide in the early days of a child's life to care for those children determined by their parents to be unwanted after birth.

In choosing to fund one of these activities over another, a government entity could be accused of engaging in viewpoint discrimination. For example, those advocating only natural family planning — and strongly opposed to artificial means — could as logically object (on content-based discrimination grounds) to exclusion of their viewpoint as those advocating abortion liberty object to exclusion of their viewpoint. Were such an analysis allowed to prevail, there could be no government funding of preventive family planning, for those opposed to the use of condoms and birth control pills would be able to assert that their viewpoint was being discriminated against by non-funding. To be "fair" under such a scheme, the government would have to fund all views on family planning equally. There would be funding for rhythm instuctors and instructors who teach how to "do nothing" to prevent conception during intercourse. Likewise, there could be no governmental AIDS prevention programs, teaching "safe sex" and distributing or prescribing condoms, for those opposed to such activities would claim viewpoint discrimination for failure of their viewpoint to be similarly funded. The logical extension of Appellees' theory demonstrates its inherent flaw.

However, as determined by the prior decisions of this Court — specifically in the area of preferring childbirth over abortion — a state may make such a value judgment and fund what it chooses. In choosing to fund only certain types of counseling, it is essential that other types not be funded or the program is amorphous. Any legislative spending program must have restrictions to limit the expenditures authorized to those purposes authorized.

The fact that the type of activity chosen to be funded includes verbal communication does not thereby implicate the first amendment. This is not a case where the government "has opened [a forum] for use by the public as a place for expressive activity." Perry Education Association v. Perry Local Edu- cator's Association, 460 U.S. 37, 45 (1983)(emphasis added). First amendment analysis is appropriate in such cases, where there is affirmative government restriction on expressive speech. However, first amendment analysis is not appropriate where the issue is whether a state may choose to subsidize one medical service out of a variety of other possible medical services.

The fact that verbal communication is involved in the medical service does not change the analysis from that employed in Maher and Harris. Maher, in fact, when explaining why the government may make a value judgment preferring childbirth over abortion (and implement it with public funds), analogized this choice to the governmental freedom to encourage one first amendment activity over another. The Maher Court discussed Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390 (1923), which held that a state need not fund, but may not criminalize, the teaching of German in its schools. Then, the Maher Court stated:

> [Meyer does not deny] to a state the policy choice of encouraging the preferred course of action. Indeed, in Meyer, the Court was careful to state that the power of the State to 'prescribe a curriculum' that included English and excluded German in its free public school 'is not questioned. . . .' Yet were we to accept appellees' argument [that the state's decision to fund other medical procedures created an obligation to fund abortions], an indigent parent could challenge the state policy of favoring public rather than private schools, or of preferring instruction in English rather than German on grounds identical in principle to those advanced here.

In the same way that choosing English over German is not viewpoint discrimination in a first amendment sense, state funding choices that fund one medical counseling practice over another do not constitute viewpoint discrimination in the first amendment sense. To hold otherwise would be to require the government to be completely neutral in all its funding programs, subsidizing all speech related to its viewpoint on a subject. This would "engraft an 'equal time' requirement onto the dispensation of state funds for the encouragement of matters reflecting legitimate state interests." Planned Parenthood Association of Chicago Area v. Kempiners, 700 F.2d 1115, 1128 (7th Cir. 1983)(Cudahy, J., concurring). Such an approach is impossible to reconcile with the holdings of this Court in Maher and Harris.

II. THE MISSOURI PROHIBITION ON THE EXPENDITURE OF PUBLIC FUNDS FOR ENCOURAGING OR COUNSELING WOMEN TO HAVE ABORTIONS IS NOT AN UNCONSTITUTIONAL VIOLATION OF A WOMAN'S RIGHT TO CHOOSE ABORTION IN CONSULTATION WITH HER PHYSICIAN.

Appellees also claim that refusal of the State to fund encouraging or counseling women to have abortions is a violation of the fourteenth amendment right of these women to choose an abortion in consultation with their physician. Motion to Affirm at 15. The Court of Appeals erroneously agreed that this refusal to fund advocacy of abortion was "an obstacle in the path of women seeking full and uncensored medical advice about alternatives to childbirth." J.S. at A72.

The obstacle and path language comes from the holdings of this Court in Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464, and Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297. In Harris, this Court reaffirmed what it had said in Maher that "although government may not place obstacles in the path of a woman's exercise of her freedom of choice, it need not remove those not of its own creation." Harris, 448 U.S. at 316.

Just as in Harris, however, there is the initial question of whether the "freedom of choice," allowing a woman to choose abortion, is equivalent to "full and uncensored medical advice about alternatives to childbirth." In Harris, a similar equation was attempted, with plaintiffs arguing that, because the "freedom of a woman to decide whether to terminate her pregnancy for health reasons . . . l[ay] at the core of the constitutional liberty identified in Wade," the failure of the federal government to fund abortions intended to protect the health of indigent women violated the abortion liberty of Roe. This Court noted that the equation was arguable, but did not determine whether the right to abortion entitled one to funding for abortions intended to promote the health interests of the mother.

This Court did not reach the issue of whether the abortion right encompassed a right to abortions for health reasons, because it said that "it simply does not follow that a woman's freedom of choice carries with it a constitutional entitlement to the financial resources to avail herself of the full range of protected choices." Id. For the same reason, this Court need not consider whether an abortion right carries with it the right to publicly financed information on the whole range of alternatives to childbirth. The same analysis employed in Harris is appropriate here.

The key element of the Harris analysis which is applicable here is whether the State has placed an obstacle in a woman's path by failing to fund advocacy of abortion by medical personnel. This Court declared in Harris that, while a state may not erect obstacles in the path of a woman seeking abortion, it need not remove those not of its own making. Id. The Harris Court then held that indigency was one of the obstacles not of state making which a state need not remove. Id.

Thus, refusal of Missouri to fund advocacy of abortion by medical personnel for women who cannot afford to hear such advocacy elsewhere is not an obstacle placed in the path of abortion by the state. If a woman cannot afford to seek out medical personnel who will encourage and counsel her to have an abortion, it is the fault of her indigency, not that of the State.

The only conceivable ways it could be argued that the State has placed an obstacle in a woman's path to abortion (or pro-abortion information) is to say that, having funded medical personnel who can speak, one must fund all their selected speech, or that, if the state has once allowed such pro-abortion speech, removing it is the creation of an obstacle. The free speech argument has already been dealt with elsewhere, so will not be repeated. The latter argument, carried to its logical conclusion, would mean that any government funding once provided could never be removed without creating obstacles to the exercise of any fundamental right so subsidized. The result would be a ludicrous paralysis of government, with legislators never able to change their minds about funding and hesitant to ever launch a funding program for fear of locking themselves into it eternally.

Of course, the power to appropriate funds, as done by the State of Missouri herein, carries with it the power to limit what will be funded. That is all that Missouri has done here. It has not erected any obstacles to the choice of abortion not already in existence. For this reason, there is no fourteenth amendment violation to be found in the action of the State in refusing to fund encouraging or counseling women to have abortions.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth herein, this Court should find constitutional the provisions of Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.205 which forbids the expenditure of public funds for the purpose of "encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life."

Respectfully submitted,

James Bopp, Jr.
Counsel of Record
Richard E. Coleson
BRAMES, MCCORMICK, BOPP & ABEL
The Tudor House
191 Harding Avenue
P.O. Box 410
Terre Haute, IN 47808-0410
(812) 238-2421
Counsel for Amicus Curiae
American Academy of Medical Ethics

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

(45)

88-605

No. .

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

In the
Supreme Court of the United States.

OCTOBER TERM, 1988.

WEBSTER, ATTORNEY GENERAL OF MISSOURI,
PETITIONER,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, INC.,
RESPONDENT.

ON APPEAL FROM A JUDGMENT OF THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

Brief for Amicus Curiae, The New England Christian Action Council, Inc., Submitted in Support of the Petitioner.

PHILIP D. MORAN,
32 Lynde Street,
Salem, Massachusetts 01970.
(508) 745-6085

February 23, 1989

BATEMAN & SLADE, INC. BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS

22 pp

Questions Presented for Review.

I. Whether Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) should be reconsidered and reversed. As the only known example in U.S. Law based on an alleged "non-consensus" relative to a central question of fact, did Roe violate several accepted maxims of law, and thus preclude democratically informed choice in this matter?

II. A case study from Massachusetts showing one approach to resolving the consensus question of whether "conception" is the beginning of each human life, in a democratically sound manner, and how the Roe logic was employed to oppose it. If Roe is reversed, the abortion legislation returned to the States, is such an approach suitable for the further redress of this question?

Table of Contents.

Interest of the amicus curiae	1
Argument	2
I. Roe v. Wade should be reconsidered and reversed	2
II. A case study of how Roe's logic blocked democratically informed choice in Massachusetts	11
Conclusion	19

Table of Authorities Cited.

Cases.

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973)	passim

Constitutional and Statutory Provisions.

United States Constitution
First Amendment	18
Ninth Amendment	10
Tenth Amendment	10
Fourteenth Amendment	5, 7, 10
Massachusetts Constitution
Part 1, Article 5	10
Massachusetts General Laws
c. 180	1

No. .

In the
Supreme Court of the United States.

OCTOBER TERM, 1988.

WEBSTER, ATTORNEY GENERAL OF MISSOURI,
PETITIONER,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, INC.,
RESPONDENT.

ON APPEAL FROM A JUDGMENT OF THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

Brief for Amicus Curiae, The New England Christian Action Council, Inc., Submitted in Support of the Petitioner.

Interest of the Amicus Curiae.

The New England Christian Action Council, Inc. ("NECAC") is a non-profit organization pursuant to M.G.L. c. 180, tax-exempt under IRS code 501(c) 4. Its purpose is to educate the public on matters of the sanctity of all human life, and to work for the legal protection of the unborn. Its offices are in Gloucester, Massachusetts.

The NECAC is affiliated with the Christian Action Council, Inc. ("CAC"), a non-profit organization pursuant to the laws of Washington, D.C. The CAC has two sub-divisions. The first is IRS code 501(c) 3, and sponsors 400 Crisis Pregnancy Centers nationwide. The second is IRS code 501(c) 4, and sponsors 120 chapters nationwide, of which the NECAC is one. The CAC national offices are in Falls Church, Virginia.

The NECAC has been involved in a unique effort to redress the question of public consensus in regard to the biological origins of individual human life. This is the central unanswered question in Roe, and a central question raised in Webster's appeal to reconsider Roe. This brief is being filed in order to bring what the amicus believes is a distinct and simple contribution to this case.

Argument.

I. Roe v. Wade Should Be Recognized and Reversed.

In the Missouri statute at issue in Webster, the legislative concern was with the public funding of abortion in its direct and indirect aspects. The concern of the amicus is at the most fundamental level, namely the right of the Missouri Legislature's statutory preamble to address the status and nature of unborn human life. In relevant part, it states that "the life of each human begins at conception," and that "unborn children have protectable interests in life, health and well being." This statement of fact represents the due process of political consensus, and should accordingly stand.

It is interesting to note that this preamble only assumed that such a statement of fact would be instructive prima facie. It had no specific intent to breach the parameters of Roe. Now, however, in appealing the July 1988 decision of the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals, Webster has questioned whether Roe should be reconsidered, given that it has proven unable to deal with such a properly phrased statement of fact. The U.S. Justice Department concurs with Webster, and so does the amicus.

The "Non-Consensus" Question.

We know of no example in U.S. Law, apart from Roe, where a non-consensus as to a central question of fact was then translated into a verdict. Such anomaly should be considered a legal pariah, and on this ground alone, Roe should be overturned. When a jury listens to a case, it is charged by the judge to ascertain the fact or facts relevant to judicial action. If a jury cannot fully agree on such fact[s], it is a "hung jury," and the case is dismissed. We maintain that Roe gave a verdict against unborn human life on the alleged basis of a "hung jury."

The relevant portion of Roe states:

> Texas urges that, apart from the Fourteenth Amendment, life begins at conception and is present throughout pregnancy, and that, therefore, the State has a compelling interest in protecting that life from and after conception. We need not resolve the difficult question of when life begins. When those trained in the respective disciplines of medicine, philosophy, and theology are unable to arrive at any consensus, the judiciary, at this point in the development of man's knowledge, is not in a position to speculate as to the answer [410 U.S. 180-181; cf. p. 192].

To say that this question "need not" be resolved flies in the face of several important accepted maxims of law.

If such an allegation of "non-consensus" had merit, it nonetheless violates a previously unsullied maxim which requires consensus as to the fact[s], apart from which no judiciary can rule. This truth is so universal in our country's legal history, that it is remarkable that Roe could assert such an exception.

Roe did not even entertain the idea that the absence of life in utero could be evidenced. Had it been able to positively argue a consensus against life beginning at "conception," Roe would have done so. But since the consensus on "conception" is overwhelming (as we shall see, infra), the only way Roe could advance the case for abortion, was to ignore the need for positive consensus on the facts of biological human life. It thus reduced itself to alleging this heretofore unknown "non-consensus" criterion. Otherwise, we do not believe the Court would embrace such a dangerous and undemocratic logic. Where else has it appeared in U.S. legal history?

Roe also provided no positive evidence that this alleged "non-consensus" was actually true. It dealt with only a certain educational/professional elite, whose views are certainly well regarded in daily political and social life, but even among whom this alleged "non-consensus" was in no fashion evidenced. Besides which, it is not consensus or lack thereof among such an elite which ultimately informs public policy, but is the positive consensus among the people as expressed through the ballot box and legislative process that determines such. Those who may be among such an elite do educate and influence this process, but they do not decide it among themselves. And the judiciary is constituted to interpret legislation so as to enforce constitutional consistency — it is not in the business to legislate de novo, and especially in the void of an alleged "non-consensus."

Roe, in fact, ignored an established consensus on the humanity of the unborn child which existed at the time of the Fourteenth Amendment's ratification. In his dissent in Roe, Mr. Justice Rehnquist states:

> To reach its result the Court necessarily has had to find within the scope of the Fourteenth Amendment a right that was apparently completely unknown to the drafters of the Amendment. As early as 1821, the first state law dealing directly with abortion was enacted by the Connecticut Legislature. Conn. Stat. Tit. 20, §§ 14, 16 (1821). By the time of the Fourteenth [401 U.S. 175] Amendment in 1868, there were at least 36 laws enacting by state or territorial legislatures limiting abortion. While many States have amended or updated [410 U.S. 176] their laws, 21 of the laws on the books in 1868 remain in effect today. Indeed, the Texas statute struck down today was, as the majority notes, first enacted in 1857 [410 U.S. 177] and "has remained substantially unchanged to the present time." Ante at 119, 35 L.Ed.2d at 158.
>
> There apparently was no question concerning the validity of this provision or of any of the other statutes when the Fourteenth Amendment was adopted. The only conclusion possible from this history is that the drafters did not intend to have the Fourteenth Amendment withdraw from the States the power to legislate with respect to this matter [410 U.S. 198-200].

This history covered a time period when the American Medical Association ("AMA") took a strong stand against human abortion. Dr. Horatio R. Storer of Boston was appointed head of the AMA's Committee on Criminal Abortion in 1857. Two years later, in 1859, the Committee made the following recommendations:

> Resolved, That while physicians have long been united in condemning the act of producing abortion, at every period of gestation, except as necessary for preserving the life of either mother or child, it has become the duty of this Association, in view of the prevalence and increasing frequency of this crime, publicly to enter an earnest and solemn protest against such warrantable destruction of human life.
>
> . . .
>
> Resolved, That the Association request the zealous co-operation of the various State Medical Societies in pressing this subject upon the legislatures of their respective States . . . [The Human Life Review, Vol. XIII, No. 1, Winter 1982, Appendix D, pp. 95-96].

The passage of tougher anti-abortion laws in several key states during this era has been attributed to physicians like Dr. Storer and the 1859 AMA report. Professor Joseph B. Witherspoon of the University of Texas Law School, states that:

> The conjunction of state ratification of these amendments (the Thirteenth, Fourteenth, and Fifteenth) with state adoption or modification (i.e., to make them more restrictive) of anti-abortion statutes designed to protect unborn children constitutes a contemporaneous legislative construction by states of the meaning of the Amendments they ratified. That construction can only be that unborn children are human beings and person under the Constitution.

> Any other view of their action would be out of line with the history of this period [footnote: Witherspoon, Joseph P., Testimony Before the House Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights of the House Committee on the Judiciary, Ninety-Fourth Congress, Second Session, 1976, cited in Congressional Record, March 3, 1976, p. 5108].

In other words, there was an unchallenged positive "consensus," that human life is fully and legally present "at every period of gestation." Gestation begins exactly at the moment of "conception" (as defined when the haploid sperm fertilizes the haploid egg and results in a one-celled zygote of unique genetic human identity), and this biological fact has never been scientifically challenged since the 1859 AMA report. This consensus on the humanity of the unborn and his or her need for equal protection under the law framed the "personhood" language of the Fourteenth Amendment.

Also in Roe's language, the door has been left open for establishment of consensus, and in so doing, has implicitly and powerfully stated that a proven consensus can redress its conclusion. The phrase, "at this point in the development of man's knowledge," invites redress, and the amicus takes that invitation and seeks to employ it in means that serve democratically informed choice for the electorate. Indeed, the U.S. Senate Subcommittee on the Judiciary, meeting in April 23-24, 1981, cited this clause as its charter for assembly[], as it considered the question of when human life begins. The testimony was overwhelming, in positive and factual evidences, along with no biological data presented to disprove conception as such a beginning point. And yet, such consensus results have never been able, in the politics of this controversy, to gain their due stature in directly disproving Roe's alleged "nonconsensus." The Webster case now affords such redress.

Thus, not only is the alleged "non-consensus of Roe without evidence, but the existing consensus was ignored." Roe has reversed the facts arbitrarily, and thus Roe should be itself reversed.

In the election of representatives, whether local, state or federal, the ballot only provides for positive choices. There may be one or several candidates, and always the option for write-in alternatives. But one can never vote, "I don't know." And in the context of referenda questions, we also know of no precedence for an "I don't know" answer. But Roe has also violated this maxim by enshrining the "I don't know" posture in its ruling. And if the dusty minutiae of political archives such an "I don't know" mechanism were ever to be discovered, its unprecedented nature would be quickly adduced. An "I don't know" entity can never be elected to public office, and its pure negativity has never been otherwise applied to the decision making process that produce laws and verdicts. Why so in Roe? Where else is alleged "ignorance" employed as a judicial, legislative electoral means to determine law?

Roe overstepped it interpretive role, and usurped legislative powers. We agree with Mr. Justice White, who dissented from Mr. Justice Blackmun's Roe language. Specifically, he said that Roe was an act of "raw judicial power" [p. 196], which we see as an effective fiat against the requisites necessary for consensus on questions of fact. If truly there were no consensus, then just as in all other law, no decision should have been rendered — and the States should have continued to have full legislative prerogative in this matter. This should have been a minimum threshold. Moreover, with no evidence to contradict the positive data for conception, Roe has exacerbated its error, thus revealing a tendentious judicial activism, wholly incongruent with the above maxims.

Such "raw judicial power" has effectively precluded democratically informed choice. It has removed the question of consensus from the domain of state legislative process, and thus vitiated an accountability to the electorate. Mr. Justice Douglas, in concurrence with Roe, stated the need for:

> freedom of choice in the basic decisions of one's life respecting . . . procreation . . . [410 U.S. 187].

Here, the language of "freedom of choice" has been employed, a goal cherished in all human nature. But since unborn human life was dismissed arbitrarily in Roe, the language of true and democratic choice has been violated. All choices have boundaries, and in legal terms, one's exercise of choice cannot extend to the violation of another's very life and/or constitutional choices. Since Roe dismissed the life of unborn humans, not be positive evidence, but by unsubstantiated "non-consensus", it has done a disservice to the very language of choice it claims as a concern. The tacit non-admission of positive vis-á-vis conception in favor of the alleged "non-consensus," and the removal of this subject from the States has put Roe squarely in opposition to democractically informed choice, and its ruling is thus unconstitutional and undemocratic.

In the Webster appeal, these concerns are paramount. The Missouri Legislature's prerogative to agree that conception marks the beginning of an individual human life, and to pass legislation consistent with that, was blocked. Since the Roe ruling and logic was the means employed to block such due process, it should be overturned. Again, the amicus agrees with Mr. Justice White:

> This issue, for the most part, should be left with the people and to the political processes that people have devised to govern their affairs [410 U.S. 196].

If, in such democractically informed choice, human abortion were to be ratified in any fashion, then at least the people would have willed it without obscuring its definition under the rubric of "non-consensus". Or if, in such democratic process, abortion is outlawed or curtailed, the same holds true. In this latter possibility, true choice in matters of procreation have been defined as appropriate in preventing conception; but not defined in abortion, which destroys existing, nascent, biologically unique human life.

In either scenario, partisans of the minority position always have redress to seek and win consensus of the people if they can politically mount the argument and gain support. But if the injunction against the Missouri statute holds, then those partisans who argue for the humanity of the unborn are not even permitted to discuss the question in the public arena. Not even in a non-binding statutory preamble. This constitutes an unprecedented threat to democratic process and access. Our contention that Roe should be reversed is based on the need for Constitutional democracy to be pre-eminent (and thus returned to the access of partisans for the unborn), as opposed to judicial fiat. The real priority is for the people to govern themselves, as possessors of "original power" [cf. Massachusetts Constitution, Part 1, Article 5; and as telescoped through the U.S. Constitution's Ninth and Tenth Amendments].

Roe v. Wade has violated various judicial maxims in six assertions. 1) In postulating a mythical "non-consensus" criterion relative to judicial questions of fact; 2) in giving no positive evidence contrary to "conception" to support the assumed absence of life; 3) in giving no positive evidence that the alleged "non-consensus" was actually true; 4) in ignoring the consensus that existed at the time of the Fourteenth Amendment; 5) in enshrining a mythical "I don't know" criterion relative/applicable to the elective processes (and as we shall evidence, infra, in a Massachusetts case study where the Roe logic was accordingly applied); 6) in unwarranted judicial legislation; and 7) in violating the language of choice and democratic process by restricting its application by means of "non-consensus". In sum of these, Roe is unprecedented in its creation of the "non-consensus" mechanism, and accordingly has vitiated democratically informed choice. For these aforesaid reasons, we ask the Court to overturn Roe and return the matter of abortion legislation to the States.

II. A Case Study of How Roe's Logic Blocked Democratically Informed Choice in Massachusetts.

In brief synopsis, we finally wish to bring to the Court's attention a case study of how the NECAC sought to redress the consensus issue through a legally non-binding referendum in Massachusetts. It was kept off the 1988 ballot by a logic consistent with Roe. Just as Roe was employed to strike down the Missouri statute at issue here, and thus interfered with due legislative process, its precedent setting negativity paved the way for democratically informed choice to be vitiated in Massachusetts. Roe should be overturned.

In fulfillment of all appropriate statutory guidelines in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, the NECAC organized a petition drive that collected 25,835 validated signatures in 105 of the Commonwealth's 160 State Representative districts to place a non-binding public policy question on the 1988 ballot. In research conducted relative to this process, no other example was found where more than ten such districts had ever been so successfully petitioned. It may be that there are exceptions to be found. Clearly, this petition drive represented a unique effort in Massachusetts history, and reflected the will of the people in a signal way. Of registered voters asked randomly by the NECAC volunteers to sign the petition, nearly 75 percent did so.

The question was simple and multiple-choice:

> IN BIOLOGICAL TERMS, WHEN DOES AN INDIVIDUAL HUMAN LIFE BEGIN?
>
> To vote on this question, mark a cross X in the square at the right of the answer you prefer. Only vote for one.
>
> A. CONCEPTION [ ]
> B. VIABILITY [ ]
> C. BIRTH [ ]
> D. WRITE IN [ ] » SPECIFY A DIFFERENT TERM_____

The purpose was straightforward: to determine what consensus does or does not exist on this question, in a legally non-binding manner of apprising the State Legislators of public sentiment. Just as the 1981 U.S. Senate Subcommittee on the Judiciary redressed the consensus question by referring to Roe's contingency clause, "at this point in the development of man's knowledge," so too did the NECAC exercise the same democratic prerogative in its ballot question initiative.

The fundamental conviction here was that no positive democratic vote has ever been taken on this question, and that if "conception" were to be evidenced as the consensus, then Roe could be redressed through an eventual attempt at a Human Life Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. In research conducted by the NECAC ion the spring of 1987, 1,012 random people were asked this question. Of the 902 willing to give a positive answer; 637 said conception (70.6%); 124 said viability (13.7%); 120 said birth (13.3%); and 21 specified other (2.3%). None were able to cite any date contrary to "conception" as such a beginning point.[1] Though this was not a "scientific" survey, it was conducted in such a way to give the NECAC a sober expectation of reality. Almost no education was given prior to the question being asked, and nearly 45% of the surveys were taken in university settings where the "pro-choice" sentiments run their strongest.[2]

However, the Massachusetts Attorney General, James M. Shannon, struck down the question as "inappropriate" for the ballot.[3] In Mr. Shannon's public life as a former U.S. Congressman, and former director with Planned Parenthood League of Massachusetts, Inc. ("PPLM"), he has been an outspoken supporter of Roe. The NECAC appealed to the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court ("SJC"), the first time in the history of the Commonwealth that a blocked public policy question has been so appealed.[4] They are rarely blocked, and only when they involve matters clearly not of public policy. The SJC ruled that it has no jurisdictional power to review the Attorney General's decision on this matter.[5] And though the Attorney General did not address the NECAC's Constitutional arguments in his brief for the SJC,[6] and the SJC likewise did not, the question was kept off the ballot. We argue that the office of the Attorney General was employed to oppose democratically informed choice, and out of a commitment to the Roe logic. Our concern is not with the specific persons — involved others could have acted likewise. Rather it is with

---

[1] The 110 respondents not choosing a positive answer correspond to those who would not vote on such a ballot question. Percentages are rounded off. Of the 21 who specified other, some answers were non-biological term. Survey results on file at the offices of the NECAC; cf. note 2.

[2] Harvard, Brown, Univ. of Massachusetts, and Salem State.

[3] Mass. Op. Atty. Gen., Sept. 2, 1988

[4] SJC Case No. 4898.

[5] New England Christian Action Council, Inc. v. Secretary of the Commonwealth and the Attorney General of the Commonwealth, [ ], October 3, 1988—January 4, 1989.

[6] SJC case No. 4898, Brief for the Defendants.

the Roe logic and how it empowered such an undemocratic reality. The NECAC will lobby the State Legislature to place the question on the 1990 ballot by virtue of its own authority.

This Roe logic was evidenced on August 17, 1988, when NECAC executive director, John C. Rankin, received a phone call from an Assistant Attorney General, speaking on behalf of the Attorney General, offering to negotiate a change in the language of the question.[7] Specifically, the Attorney General's office asked if the NECAC were willing to allow one or both of two other options on the multiple-choice question; 1) "I don't know," and 2) "No, I do not want to instruct my legislator." Mr. Rankin answered that first, he likely had not such authority to change the wishes of the 25,835 petitioners post de facto, and secondly, if he did, he would not. In a letter to the Attorney General one month prior, Mr. Rankin outlined the question's purpose as seeking to redress the "non-consensus" argument of Roe.[8] Thus, to allow an "I don't know" option would vitiate the question's purpose and enshrine Roe's unconstitutional logic, as would the second "negative opt out" offer by the Attorney General's office.[9] The positive multiple-choice phrasing was purposely selected to represent the full range of possibilities, covering the language of Roe and which nobody ever suggested as tendentious, unfair or undemocratic. By excluding any purely negative option, the question was acting on the Constitutional unanimity for positive consensus on fact, apart from which the judiciary cannot rule. It is clear to the amicus, that since Roe is undemocratic in its nature of alleged "non-consensus" and judicial fiat, that its logic provided one of its partisans with the rationale to block the will of nearly 26,000 citizens.

[7] Evidenced in NECAC's SJC Case No. 4898 Brief and Appendix for the Plaintiff-Appellant.

[8] This August 4, 1988 letter is copied in Addendum Two for PPLM's SJC Case No. 4898 [88-363] Brief for Amicus Curiae submitted in Support of the Defendants.

[9] Both options were without constitutional precedence at the state or federal levels.

In the Attorney General's September 2, 1988 opinion, he said: 1) it was not a valid public policy question; 2) it was not a proper form of instruction; 3) multiple-choice is not permissible; and 4) the Attorney General's office has no authority to change the question's substantive phrasing after the fact.

If so, how does one explain the August 17 phone call from the Assistant Attorney General? Why would he suggest two other options if multiple-choice is invalid?[10] And why would he include the word "instruct" in his second option if the question were not a proper form of "instruction?"[11] Why would he make any offer at all if it were truly not a question of public policy?[12] And why would he ask the NECAC to consider making such a substantive change, when the Attorney General's opinion explicitly said that the law forbade such?[13]

The amicus believes that since advocates of Roe and legalized abortion know that there is no evidence against conception as the origin of an individual biological human life, theyh do their best to prevent such public acknowledgement. But in so doing, they have opposed democratically informed choice. We believe that the Attorney General's office wanted to force a "negativity" on to the question behind which pro-abortioon partisans could unite—consistent with the "I don't know" evasionary criterion of Roe.

In Roe, it stated that:

> A state, by adopting one particular theory of life, may not override the rights of pregnant women to terminate their pregnancies [410 U.S. 154].

[10] NECAC's Brief, op cit., p. 27ff. The 1970 Massachusetts Legislature placed a multiple-choice question on the ballot relative to Vietnam policy. It derives authority to do so from the people; Massachusetts Constitution, Part 1, Article 5.

[11] Ibid., p. 23*ff*.

[12] Ibid., p. 4*ff*.

[13] Mass. Op. Atty. Gen., Sept. 2, 1988, p. 9, note 7.

The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals ratified Roe in this regard as it struck down the Missouri statute. Yet, Roe erred, for definitions of life are necessary for law, and Missouri was doing exactly that in stating the humanity of unborn children. It is not a "theory" of life (i.e. speculative or imposed) which we argue for, but consensus on the "facts" of life. The NECAC's referendum work redresses Roe, so that democratic process may be employed to agree on the facts, if attainable, and if so, to write laws accordingly.

In one final concern of interest to the Court as to Roe's affect, the NECAC was opposed improperly on "religious" grounds, and in a manner that is also reflected in Roe. First, on August 12, 1988, the Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts ("CLUM"), wrote the Attorney General, asking that the NECAC question not be approved. The relevant portion states:

> First, the ballot question, as worded, does not pose a question of public policy but instead a question which implicates, for many individuals, religious views concerning the point at which human life "begins." In our view the government has no proper role making such inquiries into its citizens' views on religious matters, even if those views are expressed in the form on an anonymous ballot. Although the proposed ballot question is couched as a question of "biological" fact, casting the question in those terms cannot conceal the reality that it constitutes, in effect, a poll of the voters' beliefs on a religious matter.[14]

And second, PPLM, in its brief, also made the same argument:

> There is yet another problem with the proposed question. To many people, the question will necessarily > be read to ask "in [religious] terms, when does an individual life begin." [sic]. But if the question is viewed as an inquiry into the voters' religious beliefs, it is equally improper as a ballot question. The separation of church and state mandated by the federal and state constitutions requires that voters not be polled as to their religious beliefs, and that their representatives not be instructed to vote to adopt one religious belief or doctrine over another.[15]

[14] Letter on file at the offices of the NECAC; cf. note 2.

This argument is highly disingenuous prima facie. Without needing to get into questions of the First Amendment's interpretation, we see that there is nothing religious in the question. It specifically underscored biological fact. Whereas the CLUM or PPLM may argue that religious questions may not be asked, it has here defined biology as religious. In other words, they are saying that religious people or groups (the CAC has a Protestant statement of faith) are not allowed to ask public policy questions relative to scientific knowledge. How amazing! They are essentially saying that religious citizens, if such logic is consistently applied, are precluded from participation in the "public square" except on the terms of "secular" citizens. In other words, this logic says that "biology" is not "secular" in matters of human abortion. And this is an extraordinary affront against the First Amendment's "free exercise" clause. It is the CLUM and PPLM who have imagined the alleged "religious ulterior motives" behind the question, in order to avoid democratic accountability to the facts of the issue.

And Roe, in this specific context, has provided the rationale. In its use of "personhood" to evade "individual biological humanlife" and to underscore a "non-consensus" criterion, it has arbitrarily defined concern for "conception" as somehow theoretical or religious, and thus beyond the purview of law. It has reversed reality. For example, we note the 1973 Court's treatment of medical ethics:

[15] PPLM Brief, op. cit., pp. 9-10.

> The emerging teachings of Christianity were in agreement with the Pythagorean etic. . . . Thus, suggests Dr. Edelstein, it is a "Pythagorean manifesto and not the expression of an absolute standard of medical conduct."
>
> This, it seems to us, is a satisfactory and acceptable explanation of the Hippocratic Oath's apparent rigidity. It enables us to understand, in historical context, a long-accepted and revered statement of medical ethics [410 U.S. 165].

In other words, Roe is dismissing 2,000 years of medical ethics by aligning it with the alleged "rigidity" of Christianity, and with Pythagorean sectarianism. It seems that such alignment is a convenient way to remove preconceptually undesired facts from debate. Roe's language also spoke of "conception" as "the official belief of the Catholic Church" [p. 181]. Thus it conveniently transferred questions of fact into religious dogmas of "belief." The CLUM and PPLM have all the rationale they need here for their opposition to the First Amendment's "free exercise" clause in denying religious citizens the right to seek consensus of scientific questions of fact. This logic is a grave threat to democratically informed choice, and constitutional law.

Therefore, the NECAC's experience in seeking to democratically discuss the consensus question which Roe evaded but left open for future redress, has clearly evidenced how Roe's logic has blocked democratically informed choice. This gives further reason, experientially, for the Court to conclude that Roe should be reversed and the matter of abortion legislation returned to the States. In asking the Court to reverse Roe on this additional ground, we are asking for a parallel conclusion that the NECAC's ballot initiative is a suitable means by which the question may be redressed at the State level.

Conclusion.

In accordance with the argument we presented, supra, in support of the appellant Webster, the amicus asks the Court to overturn its 1973 Roe v. Wade decision and return the matter of abortion legislation to the States.

Roe is the only known example in U.S. Law based on an alleged "non-consensus" relative to a central question of fact, and as such it violated several judicial maxims and thus precluded democratically informed choice as applicable in this issue. And Roe has been employed by its partisans to block democratically informed choice in Massachusetts. It is bad law and should be overturned.

Respectfully submitted,

PHILIP D. MORAN,
32 Lynde Street,
Salem, Massachusetts 01970.
(508) 745-6085

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, ET A.L., APPELLANTS

v.

Reproductive Health Services, ET A.L.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR THE RIGHT TO LIFE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA, INC. AS AMICUS CURIAE SUPPORTING APPELLANTS

ROBERT L. SASSONE
Attorney at Law
900 North Broadway • Suite 725
Santa Ana, California 92701
(714) 547-5611

MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE A BRIEF AS AMICUS CURIAE ON BEHALF OF WEBSTER

THE RIGHT TO LIFE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA, INC., a California 501c(3) educational and charitable corporation hereby respectfully moves for leave to file a brief amicus curiae in the present case. Requested consent of respondent has not been obtained.

INTEREST OF AMICUS

It is believed the material herein is material, relevant and unique. The brief shows primarilarily via US Law and dictionary definitions that the term "person" in turn includes the term "individual". The term "Right to Privacy" as recently used by this Court is shown to be one specifically and explicitly rejected by this Court before 1965 and criticized.

Amicus is possibly the oldest right to life organization. It may have the largest network of help groups helping women with problem pregnancies.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Item	Page
Motion for leave to file a brief	1
Interest of amicus	ii
Summary of argument	iii
Meaning of "Individual"	1
The Right to Privacy	18
Conclusion	25

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Item	Page
TITLE 1 USC SECTION 1	1, 2
Dictionary definitions of Individual	4-7
Dictionary definition of Privacy	20
Prudential Ins Co v Cheek, 259 US 530 at 542, 543, 66 LE 1044 at 1053	18
Corwin & Peltason "Understanding the Constitution, Eighth Edition, Holt et al New York, New York (1949, 1979)	22-24

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The present brief is limited to one topic, the fact that "individual" in Title 1 USC Section 1 includes preborn humans who thus are legally "persons.

Usage in the English language in America as reflected in dictionaries is a first reason why preborn humans are individuals.

"Individual" is not a particular term of medical art and is not found in Medical Dictionaries such as Stedman's or Dorland's.

"Individual" is defined in ordinary or unspecialized dictionaries. The Library of Congress contains dozens of such ordinary dictionaries, many of which are updated and republished annually. Each of said ordinary dictionaries contains at least one definition of "individual" which defines a class which includes each preborn human. None supports the opposite contention that pre born humans are not individuals. While said dictionaries include other definitions which include classes of entities which are not preborn humans, none of said dictionaries define "individual" in such a manner as to indicate that the term "individual" as used in Title 1 USC Section 1 excludes preborn humans.

Medical dictionaries define a newly fertilized human ovum as a "zygote" which in turn is defined an individual.

Many dozens, probably hundreds of medical texts found in medical school libraries state that the new individual begins at the time of fertilization of the human ovum by the human sperm.

Every preborn human has the two necessary characteristics to be an individual, internal unity and being different from the rest of the universe.

MEANING OF "INDIVIDUAL"

Title 1 USC Section 1 states in applicable part:

"In determining the meaning of any Act of Congress, unless the context indicates otherwise-the words 'person' and 'whoever' include corporations, companies, associations, firms, partnerships, societies, and joint stock companies, as well as individuals;"

Obviously "individual" adds something to the definition of "person" and does not merely restate the term "person" or there would have been no reason for the same Congress that passed Title 1 USC Section 1 in 1947 to amend it in 1948 to add "individual" which would be redundant.

Amicus knows of no case interpreting "individual" in Title 1 USC Section 1 or any other place which might be helpful to this Court.

"Person" in the 14th and other Amendments is defined, since the Amendments were initially "Acts" of Congress before being sent to the states for ratification. "Acts" is a broader term than "laws". It follows that for purposes of the 14th Amendment, all "individuals" in the sense intended by Congress are "persons". The opposite is not true in that certain "persons" such as corporations are not individuals. "individual" is both a noun and an adjective, but is obviously used only as a noun in Title 1 USC Section 1.

What are "individuals"? Is it a medical term? Is there any definition of individual which includes born humans and excludes preborn humans?

One begins with dictionaries. A search of dozens of non medical dictionaries indicates that each contains definitions of "individual" which include the preborn from the time of fertilization in a class with the born, and none includes the born in a class which excludes the preborn. The staff of the Library of Congress is continuing this search until every dictionary has been searched, and if any difference is discovered in dictionaries searched in the future, the Court will be notified. "Individuals" has a broad definition which would include many non human entities. Few would argue this was Congressional intent. The most reasonable intent is humans born and preborn in part because all the other entities defined as "persons" in Title 1 USC Section 1 are non humans.

Medical dictionaries like "Dorland's and "Stedman's" do not define "individual", so although it is used in medicine, it is apparently not a word having a unique different medical definition.

The necessary characteristics of an individual are two, uniqueness and unity. Each preborn has them, with the possible exception of identical twins who lack uniqueness for only a very short time after twinning, which time expires before the time of abortion.

A few dictionary definitions of "individual" omitting definitions which could not apply to humans, and the definition of "individual" as "person", found in many dictionaries, include:

A. Webster's Twentieth-Century Dictionary (1938):

"n. 1. a single person, being, or thing; a single entity; one of a class.

2. In biology, a single organism in existence separate from the parent; one of a kind, whether partially or fully developed, as the entire product of a fertilized egg or ovula, or the bud of a plant."

Comment: non humans can be individuals if they have unity and uniqueness. While the first phrase of definition 2 has two possible meanings, one of which excludes the preborn, that sense is incorrect because the definition goes on to include the entire product of a fertilized egg.

B. "The American Heritage Dictionary", American Heritage Publishing Co and Houghton Mifflin Co, states:

"n. 1. a. A single human being considered separately from his group or from society.

Usage: in the sense of a person, is most fitting in examples in which a single human being is distinguished from a group or mass.

C. "Second College Edition, the American Heritage Dictionary": same as B, supra.

D. "Funk and Wagnall's Standard Dictionary, New York:"

"n. 1 A single person, animal or thing; especially a human being;

2 Anything that cannot be divided or separated into parts without losing its identity."

E. "Macmillan Dictionary for Students" Macmillan Publishing Co, NY, Collier Macmillan Publishers, London":

"n. 1. single person, esp. as distinct from a group.

2. single living thing."

F. "The Merriam-Webster Dictionary for LARGE PRINT Users" G K Hall, Boston:

"n 1 : a single member of a category: a single person, animal, or thing"

G. "Webster's Third New International Dictionary" G & C Merriam

Co, Springfield, Mass (1971), (1967) and also (1961) without any change:

"n-s 1: a single or particular being or thing or group of beings or things: as a: a particular being or thing as distinguished from a class, species, or collection (1): a single human being as contrasted with a social group or institution (2): a single organism as distinguished from a group, b: a particular person, c: the product of a single fertilization- called also genetic individual,

2: an indivisible entity or a totality which cannot be separated into parts without altering the character or significance of these parts"

The preceding are a fair representation of the definition of "individual which appears in many other dictionaries, none of which dictionaries appear to contradict the preceding definitions.

Medical dictionaries such as "Dorland's" or "Stedmans" do not define "individual" directly, so presumably it is not a term that medicine uses in a specialized manner. What they do do, however, is to define the fertilized human ovum to be a Zygote, and then define the zygote to be an individual. Accordingly, by a two step process which appears to be sufficiently reliable, it is possible to claim and amicus does claim that the fertilized ovum, in ordinary typical medical language is an individual.

Do medical books say anything about the individualness of the fertilized ovum? Most do not. After all most medical books are for very advanced students. The fact that the fertilized ovum is an individual, although not profound, is not a complicated fact. One does not teach simple counting in and advanced calculus course or elementary bonding in an advanced organic chemistry course because one does not belabor the obvious. But many books found in medical libraries, probably hundreds do make statements such as the following, each of which was found in a different book on just one shelf, found by using the word "fertilization" in the subject index in the University of California Irvine Medical Library:

A. "the beginning of an individual life is coincident with the fusion of the male and female pronuclei shortly after fertilization."

B. "Development of a new individual begins when a spermatazoon fertilizes an egg."

C. "Only one of the resulting meiotic nuclei is retained in the egg cell, and this nucleus fuses with the nucleus of the entering sperm to produce the first of the nuclei of the new-generation individual."

D. "Medawar (1953) stated that...'fertilization and pregnancy are almost the only natural occasions on which the antigenic diversity of the individuals of a species has any opportunity to reveal its consequences."

E. Edwards, the doctor who first succeeded in in vitro fertilization in humans, of course had no doubt that the fertilized ovum of Louise Brown was not a part of the body of the solution. He stated: "Fertilization involves the fusion of the gametes and activation of the oocyte, and establishes the genotype of a new individual."

F. "When the two pronuclei fuse, the biologic qualities of an individual human life come into existence."

G. "Of all the approximately 160 different types of cells that compose the human body, the egg cell is the only one that has the capacity to form a new individual. Although the egg needs that critical meeting with a sperm in order to do so, the egg cell is the primary intermediary between two generations of adults."

In recent years, medical advances have made even more obvious the universally medically known fact that fertilization always means a new individual. In the case of in vitro fertilization, the fertilized ovum can be deposited in the womb of a mother not the donor of the ovum. This makes very obvious the fact that the host mother and the fertilized ovum were separate individuals having absolutely no past contacts when the ovum was in the solution. The coupling of the ovum to the womb does not change the preexisting individuality of each during the pregnancy. In fact a third woman may then adopt and raise the child who would then have three mothers, genetic, nurturing and raising.

This has been carried very far in mice. An embryo can be frozen and defrosted and it will grow again. Is the embryo part of the freezer´s body? Are they the same individual? Mice embryos have been cut into little parts and put back together into a conglomerate, and if done early enough, they continue to grow. What happens if you join parts of two or more mice embryos into a conglomerate? They grow. There are mice with four genetic fathers and four genetic mothers. This is certain because the experimenters took mice from white, grey, yellow and dark fur, and the conglomerate mouse had checkerboard fur, and was obviously a new individual.

Similar conglomerates like goat/sheep are possible. The preborn mule is obviously a different individual from its non mule mother. A preborn cow flown over the ocean in the uterus of a rabbit, there only for temporary storage, is obviously an individual.

The new individual,like a young person of any age, needs only a suitable hospitable environment and the absence of disabling or deadly factors to develop into a more mature individual.

One would hope that the Court would consider a new born to be an individual. What is the difference between the preborn one day and the new born the next?

The preborn can be more mature and better adapted to survive and thrive than many newborns. The preborn is fed, inhales, exhales, and removes wastes via tube, means, but so do some adults we consider persons. No matter what criteria one attempts to fix on to differentiate the individuality of the preborn from that of the new born, the same logic if applied as a general rule leads to absurdities and horrors.

"Individual", like most words has different meanings and different shadings of meanings, depending on the context and other factors. However, like most other words, a person fluent in the English language can usually easily determine substantially the exact meaning intended and receive the thought desired to be transmitted. Amicus can see no reasonable meaning for individual which includes the born and excludes the unborn. This does not mean that someone who is skilled and motivated cannot struggle and finally think of some meaning less good than the normal meaning of individual which would include the preborn.

Certain results logically follow from certain causes. What logically follows if the Court accepts the responsibility of deciding which human beings can be treated like trash, a responsibility the Court has been discharging with much difficulty and much criticism since 1973.

One can foresee a continuing of the combination of humility and anti scientific attitude where the Court (unfairly some say) puts the burden of proof on those favoring life, then as in the present case refuses to permit any proof on the beginning of life or the individuality of the preborn or any relevant evidence of any kind.

The technique the Court has used in the abortion cases has made it impossible for the truth to out. The question has never been when human life begins, but rather what value do we put on new life. The Court has written hundreds of pages on abortion without ever looking at the first section of the US law to see what Congress said about "person". No skilled attorney has cross examined the witnesses for abortion to expose the fallacies behind the glib slogans.

Many are frustrated. They grew up believing and being proud that we were a nation of laws, not men. This Court's handling of abortion, and particularly internal notes recently made public have made it obvious how this Court thinks and works to effect its will. Many are outraged, so they are engaged in what is already by far the most widespread civil disobediance in US history. They believe that killing a preborn child who needs your love is the ultimate act of cruelty.

It must have been the dream of certain Justices in 1973 to do much good for women by allowing only a little killing. It is easy to construct hypothetical situations where much good can be done by permitting only a little bit of killing. That is what this Court thought it was doing in 1973. In practice, however, life is far more complex than hypothetical situations. There are frequently approaching unforeseen from the future adverse results so that the possibility of doing much good by a little killing is illusory and the evil done by the killing sometimes far exceeds the worst fears of those who authorized the killing.

THE RIGHT TO PRIVACY

The "fundamental" Right to Privacy which this Court found in 1965 is surely one of the more curious Constitutional Rights. The Justices have thus far declined to point to any Congressional debates or notes from Delegates to the Constitutional Convention supporting the Right.

The Right to Privacy is so subtle that for nearly two hundred years nearly two hundred Justices lived, served their nation on this Court, studied the law, heard arguments, and died without suspecting it existed. For nearly two hundred years, in practical fact, it did not exist. The law during those years was clearly stated by this Court in Prudential Ins Co v Cheek 259 U S 530 at 542, 543, 66 LE 1044 at 1053, 1054 (1921) as follows:

"The cases cited from Georgia, from Kansas, and from Texas, place material dependence upon provisions of the several state constitutions guaranteeing freedom of speech, from which is deduced as by contrast a right of privacy called the 'liberty of silence;' and it seems to be thought that the relations between a corporation and its employees and former employees are a matter of wholly private concern. [543] But, as we have stated, neither the 14th Amendment nor any other provision of the Constitution of the United States imposes upon the states any restrictions about 'freedom of speech' or the 'liberty of silence;' nor we may add, [1054] does it confer any right of privacy upon either persons or corporations."

How do dictionaries define "privacy"? The older dictionaries such as "Webster's Twentieth-Century Dictionary, NY, NY 1938, define "privacy" as follows:

"n. 1. A state of being in retirement from the company or observation of others; secrecy.

2. A place of seclusion from company or observation; retreat; solitude; retirement.

3. Joint knowledge; privity. [obs]

4. Taciturnity. [obs]

5. Secrecy; concealment of what is said or done.

Syn. Retirement, seclusion, secrecy, solitude, concealment, retreat."

Other dictionaries are much the same.

This Court has adopted a new definition for this new Right. The Court probably did not find its definition in any dictionary because a fairly diligent search of dictionaries has failed to turn up any definition from which this Court could have chosen its definition of "privacy".

The Court definition does not include a number of activities which would seem to beg including. Why can one not do what one wants in the solitude of one's home, if done without hurting others? If the "Right to Privacy" means anything, it would seem to mean that. Yet one cannot shoot, snort, smoke, swallow, or suck certain scrumptious sinful substances, because if found in your blood later, you could be subject to criminal penalties. Is there a right to suicide without hurting others?

What makes the right to abortion so fundamental?

This course of judicial activism has not been without its critics. For example, Corwin and Peltason write that: "The justices have not been too clear on what makes a right fundamental, but they have explained that it is not whether it is considered important. The rights to education, to shelter, and to food are basic, but in a constitutional sense they are not fundamental rights because they are not rights that the Constitution 'explicitly or implicitly' guarantees .... Apparently, for example, the right to an abortion is fundamental because it is part of the right of privacy protected by the Constitution; however, the right to education is not fundamental, a distinction that some find difficult to draw." [pp 200-210]

And, while the Supreme Court has recognized that the Ninth Amendment "protects the right to engage in political activity against unreasonable national regulation, until 1965 no law had been declared unconstitutional because of disparagement of any of these unenumerated rights, nor had there been a suggestion that this amendment limited the powers of the states. Then, the Court ruled that a Connecticut law forbidding the use of contraceptives violated the right of marital privacy and stated that this right is 'within the penumbra of specific guarantees of the Bill of Rights' and is one of the fundamental rights reserved by the Ninth Amendment to the people against disparagement by a state or national government. More recent decisions tend to peg the right of privacy within the protections of the due process clauses of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments."

Thus, "... justices who want to protect from government intrusion what they consider to be basic rights not otherwise specifically secured in the Constitution have found the language of the due process clause and equal protection clauses sufficiently commodious to suit their needs."

Corwin and Peltason cite the Roe vs. Wade case as the best, really, the worst modern example of a substantive due process approach, noting that "For some time the Court has been applying substantive due process but has been reluctant to admit that it has been doing so." [1]

And, although the Court, in its privacy decisions, has tried to peg the privacy right to earlier Supreme Court cases, the effort is not supported by the either the history of the Constitution or the Court.

[1] [Edward S Corwin, Jack W Peltason, Corwin @ Peltason's Understanding the Constitution, Eighth Edition, Holt, Rinehart, and Winston, New York, c. 1949 @ 1979]

CONCLUSION

The court should adopt the ordinary dictionary definition of "individual" and protect the preborn as persons.

respectfully submitted February 23, 1989

ROBERT L SASSONE, Attorney for Amicus

NO. 88-605
IN THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES
OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L WEBSTER, ET AL., APPELLANTS
V
REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, ET AL.
RESPONDENTS

Affidavit of mailing of amicus brief copies, Rule 28.2

State of California } ss.
City of Santa Ana, County of Orange }

Robert L. Sassone, being first duly sworn on his oath deposes and says:

Robert L. Sassone is a member of the Bar of the United States Supreme Court admitted October 26, 1971. To his knowledge, on February 23, 1989, within the particular time and permitted time for serving of said amicus brief pursuant to Rule 28.2, he deposited in the United States mailbox at Santa Ana, CA 92701 pursuant to Rule 28.2 with first class postage prepaid 40 copies of the attached amicus brief in the present case properly addressed to the Clerk of the United States Supreme Court and three copies of said amicus brief to each party addressed as follows:

ROGER K EVANS, ESQ.
DARA KLASSEL, ESQ.
BARBARA OTTEN, ESQ.
PLANNED PARENTHOOD
FEDERATION OF AMERICA, INC
810 7TH AVE.
NEW YORK, NY 10019

FRANK SUSSMAN, ESQ.
THOMAS M. BLUMENTHAL
SUSMAN, SCHERMER,
RIMMEL & SHIFREN
10TH FLOOR
7711 CARONDELET AVE.
ST. LOUIS MISSOURI 63105

WILLIAM WEBSTER, ATTORNEY GENERAL
MICHAEL L. BOICOURT, ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL
JERRY L. SHORT, ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL
6TH FLOOR BROADWAY BUILDING
PO BOX 899
JEFFERSON CITY, MISSOURI
65102

ROBERT L. SASSONE, Affiant

Subscribed and sworn to before me on February 23, 1989.

LAWRENCE D. SASSONE, Notary Public

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, ET A.L., APPELLANTS

v.

Reproductive Health Services, ET A.L.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR HUMAN LIFE INTERNATIONAL AS AMICUS CURIAE SUPPORTING APPELLANTS

ROBERT L. SASSONE
Attorney at Law
900 North Broadway • Suite 725
Santa Ana, California 92701
(714) 547-5611

MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE A BRIEF AS AMICUS CURIAE ON BEHALF OF WEBSTER

HUMAN LIFE INTERNATIONAL INC., a Maryland 501c(3) educational and charitable corporation hereby respectfully moves for leave to file a brief amicus curiae in the present case. Requested consent of respondent has not been obtained. Thomas M Blumenthal of respondent stated to attorney for amicus that an agreement of the parties ensured consent if written consent of one party is obtained, so perhaps consent of respondent has just been delayed.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Item	Page
Motion for leave to file a brief as amicus curiae on behalf of Webster	i
Interest of amicus	ii
Summary of argument	iii
Statement of Professor Liley	1

INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE

Human Life International, Inc (HLI) is probably the largest right to life international educational organization with staff and offices in many nations.

With great humility, this Court has declared itself unable to determine when life begins. HLI is perhaps in the best position to find the world's leading expert on preborn human life. HLI hereby submits testimony under oath subject to cross examination by the doctor knighted by the Queen of England for founding Fetology, the science best able to solve the Court's problem. Dr Liley was crowned by his peers with the honor of being called the "Father of Fetology."

After reading this brief, the Court will know preborns are human life and the question is rather: "What respect do we give preborn humans?"

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The present brief is limited to one topic, evidence from Fetology and related Medical Science that preborn humans at all stages of development after fertilization are and must be individuals. Professor Sir Albert William Liley of the University of Aukland Medical School Fetology Department, now deceased, was the world's greatest Fetologist. He is known as the father of Fetology. He was knighted for his accomplishment of founding the medical science and specialty of Fetology. He was the first to do more than cursory study of the preborn human in the womb and developed many techniques such as fetal transfusion, treatment of Rh babies, and many other fetal diseases. He was the first to apply modern technology to examine and treat preborn humans.

Professor Liley testified May 7, 1974, Abortion-Part V, Hearings Before the Subcommittee on Constitutional Amendments of the Committee on the Judiciary, 94th Cong. He also testified under oath before the Abortion Commission, New Zealand Parliament, 1975. These two testimonies were transcribed by attorney for amicus into a book, "Tiniest Humans", Library of Congress No. 77-76811 from which book the present brief is taken.

The substance of the present brief includes in Professor Liley's own words under oath subject to cross examination the individual charactistics of the preborn human which establish that the preborn human is an individual.

In a number of genetic and biochemical problems, definite diagnosis can be established as early as the 14th week, and, in the Rh baby, therapy has been undertaken as early as the 18th week of intrauterine life. With advances in technology these limits are being moved back earlier in pregnancy. The division of intrauterine life into segments (zygote, fetus, etc.) is a semantic phenomenon, and is in no way supported by biological or medical fact. We are caring for the same child throughout pregnancy, before as well as after birth.

Because of the facts uncovered by my research, as a doctor I have no alternative but to regard the unborn child as my patient, and to protect and respect his life as I would the life of any other patient. From my clinical experience, I am convinced that unborn children are individuals and human beings, who should have legal protection, and who are capable of receiving and responding to medical care.

As any high school biology textbook will tell us, life begins at conception and ends at death. In between, life does not develop it is simply there.

What does develop is the morphological structure, the earthly home of life, the physiological performance of that structure, behavioural traits and personality. And, as we increasingly expand into a community of like individuals, we can speak of development of social responsibilities, of ethical awareness and legal status.

Unfortunately, this expansion of concept is accompanied by a deterioration in fact and specificity. Any modern textbook of embryology will accurately recount the earliest stages of morphogenesis of the human body. A little behind but catching up are accounts of the physiological performance and behaviour of the embryo and fetus.

In other words, when dealing with observation and sensory data there is good agreement. But, as we expand into social, ethical, legal and political fields, hypothesis and conjecture become more evident.

When we say that in early pregnancy the babies role over and over like yoyos, this is not an exaggeration. These conditions of movement still prevail as late as 28 weeks. After it gets too crowded for the wilder gyrations, we can still see the baby flex and bend his limbs as he pleases. In fact, it is only in very late pregnancy that the baby starts to become short of room.

It is very clear to us that it is a purposeful quest for fetal comfort that determines fetal position. Our interest in this field and this conclusion has been forced on us by our interest in fetal therapy. If you are going to carry out procedures like fetal transfusion, you want the baby lying in a suitable position for it and it helps to know why the babies lie the way they do. Babies lie the way they do for very good personal reasons which are those of fetal comfort.

If the uterus is subaccurate, this relatively common and trivial abnormality of the uterine contour can have relatively startling effects on fetal presentation. No longer is the long axis of this cavity longitudinal, but oblique. The baby obediently lies in the new long axis, the oblique one. He still plays the game according to the rules, the little end at the little end and the big end at the big end.

Severe Rh disease associated with the large placenta and an unusually sited placenta has the same effect as the uterine malformation. It gives you a long axis of the cavity which is oblique, not longitudinal. The baby lies in that long axis, the big end in the big end, and the little end in the little end. It's a very simple game.

Babies do not lie in these odd positions to make life difficult for the obstetrician or dangerous for themselves or their mothers. They lie in these positions in late pregnancy because of the purposeful quest for fetal comfort. It is the most comfortable position they can find. Now in selecting a position of comfort in late pregnancy, a baby may have chosen a position which is hazardous or difficult or impossible for a vaginal delivery and in which regard the fetus can be accused of a lack of foresight. This, of course, is a trait not unknown in adults.

Those babies who lay as extended leg breeches were laying in those positions because that was the best way they fit in.

Our generation is the first ever to have a reasonably complete picture of the development of the human from conception. In 1930 the liberation of a human egg from the ovary was first observed. In 1944, through a microscope, was seen the union of the human sperm and ovum. In the 1950s the events of the first six days of life were described, those critical first steps in a prodigious journey.

In the 1960s three further advances occurred. First, as I have said, the direct diagnosis and treatment in a baby before birth became a reality. Secondly, the physical environment and physiological behaviour of the fetus became accessible to study. Thirdly, the genetic code was cracked, the alphabet established in which is spelled out the instructions which guarantee that every human is unique and different from every human that ever was or ever will be.

These 40 years of discovery put an end to centuries of guesswork and controversy, of ideas of generation, animation, ensoulment, encapsulation.

In this Orwellian situation, where so much semantic effort and logical gymnastics are expended in making a developing human into an 'unperson', modern anatomical, genetic, immunological, endocrinological and physiological facts are a persistent embarrassment.

How much easier to echo that simple statement, 'But there's nothing there yet', without pausing to reflect that if there is nothing there, then why the unholy rush to remove it? Nevertheless, not everyone is away with the fairies, and for the benefit of those still in touch with reality we can briefly review some aspects of intrauterine life.

Q. What are features which show that the baby has an independent existence in the uterus?

A. First, that he is entirely responsible, not only for his own development, but also for the organization of pregnancy. He has influences while still no bigger than a grain of sugar on the mother whose body weight is measured in kilograms. While this is by no means novel in biochemical or physiological circumstances, as I have said, it is an astounding feat of power amplification and demonstrates the importance of his own survival to the baby so that he does in fact take over in the human the direct control of the pregnancy.

Q. So this little thing no bigger than a grain of sugar starts off what you might call a cascade reaction?

A. Exactly, by his own performance. Next he organizes, or solves rather, the homograft problem. I think most people would be familiar with the fact that no matter how much you needed somebody else's kidney or heart and no matter how willing they were to let you have one because they had one spare or no longer needed theirs, you simply cannot go around accepting spare part organs from other people, and yet we have this fascinating situation by which a baby and his mother. who are immunological foreigners, have to tolerate each other's tissues in parabiosis, and it may be a source of some satisfaction that a solution of the homograft problem which so far has defeated the best brains in surgery and immunology, was in fact personally solved by you and me before we were born, or we would not be here today. A Nobel prize awaits the man who remembers how he did it!

We each began life as a single cell. Forty-five generations of doubling of number of cells by growth divisions were needed to reach the 30 million cells of an adult. Of these 45 generations of division, eight, or nearly one-fifth, have occurred by the time we were implanted in the uterus, 30, or two-thirds, by the time we were eight weeks old, 39 by 28 weeks' gestation, and 41 by the time we were born. The remaining tedious four occupied the whole of childhood and adolescence, and then there were no more.

Q. Could you describe those later cell divisions briefly?

A. It is very simple. One can distinguish several kinds of cell division. There are those that are replacing cells that have been lost or damaged. These are replacement divisions. One can distinguish, also, growth divisions where one cell divides into two, each of those divides into four, and each of those steps in the division is a generation, as it were, of cell division. This is very like the problem of the grains of wheat on the chess board; one on the first square, two on the second square, four on the third, eight on the fourth, and so on. It is simply a geometric progression. And if one asks how many generations of cell growth division are needed to get from that single cell to the 30 million cells of an adult, then the answer is about 45 generations of cell division. And of these 41, say, have occurred by the time we are born. Therefore, you see, as we spend about 9 months, or three-quarters of a year, in the uterus, and our three score years and ten are something like three-quarters of a century out of it, it could be easy to think of that intrauterine life as occupying about one percent of our life, which is quite true in a temporal sense. But in terms of growth and development, 41 of those 45 generations of cell divisions have occurred before we were born. In other words, the sort of person we are going to be in terms of our physical growth, our physiological attributes, and our function 90 percent of the excitement is over by the time we are born. Forty-one of the 45 generations have occurred. It is for this reason that we regard the care of pregnant women, and this state of life, as so important, as rapidly growing cells are particularly vulnerable to inimical influences, and if anything does go wrong this can cast its shadow so far into the future.

Q. Could the EEG reading of a 50 day foetus resemble the EEG of an adult?

A. The EEG of a 50 day foetus does resemble that of an adult under any of a number of anaesthetic agents, but not that of a normal unanaesthetized adult.

These structural changes, of course, are not mediated by any external agency, but internally, directed by the baby who is called the zygote or embryo. In this regard the baby or zygote with his cargo of genetic information is much more than a mere blueprint of a new human. A blueprint is simply a plan, and does not include the machinery to fulfill that plan--but a zygote does. He even has the power to phenocopy himself, to reproduce asexually as about one in 400 zygotes or embryos does in identical twinning--and there is no known external agency which affects the incidence of identical twins.

However our new human has in hand even greater designs and undertakings than simply his own internal organization and development. He also develops his own life-support system, his placenta, and his own confines, for it is the embryo and fetus who develops his membranes, forms his amniotic fluid and regulates its composition and volume. Women speak of their waters breaking and their membranes rupturing, but such expressions are so much nonsense--these structures belong to the baby. This simple point is not a play on words, but a practical reality. Tests on the amniotic fluid are tests on the baby, not on the mother.

But even the organization of his own confines does not exhaust the list of achievements of the new individual. His own welfare is too important to permit leaving anything to the chance cooperation of others, and therefore he must organize his mother to make her body a suitable home.

First, and most pressing, he must prevent the menstrual shedding of the endometrium. He does this by producing chorionic gonadotrophin to prolong the normally strictly limited life span of the corpus luteum, which in turn maintains the endometrium to undergo a decidual transformation.

This is a splendid feat of power amplification, understandable in electronic circuitry and very common in physiology, whereby an embryo barely out of the microgram range influences the corpus luteum in the milligram range, which in turn affects the endometrium measured in grams. Very soon the embryo bypasses the corpus luteum and takes over direct control of the endometrium--from a very early stage of human pregnancy neither the maternal pituitary nor ovaries are necessary for its continued endocrine success.

In this regard the explanations in a dozen textbooks of witch's milk, of sebaceous retention cysts, of labial hypertrophy and withdrawal bleeding in the baby girl as the result of fetal exposure to high levels of maternal sex hormones are quite wrong. It is the mother who is exposed to high levels of fetal hormones, for these hormones are manufactured by the fetus and his own placenta. These hormones are influential beyond mother's pelvis, for they modify maternal cardiovascular, respiratory and renal function to cope with fetal requirements.

Another crucial environmental problem which must be dealt with is the homograft situation--the fact that the fetus and his mother, inevitably immunilogical foreigners, who could not exchange skin grafts and could not be safely given a blood transfusion one from the other, yet must tolerate each other's tissues in parabiosis for nine months of pregnancy. Again it is the fetus, not the mother, who copes with the problems. And finally it is the foetus, not mother, who determines the duration of pregnancy, for unquestionably the onset of labour is normally a unilateral decision by the baby.

Q. I wonder if I could put a proposition to you, and if you would comment on it, please. Can we say that the maturation of foetal hormones has an effect on the mother which determines the time of birth--an effect which is biochemical and involuntary?

A. This would be a reasonable proposition in terms of the duration of the pregnancy in weeks and days. On the other hand, in terms of the diurnal variation in onset of labour, this could be affected by external environment rather than being an internally programmed event. Thus the duration of the pregnancy is clearly not something blindly imprinted on a baby's genetic endowment at conception, because obviously it can be influenced by a number of factors such as foetal illness, and so on. In other words, it is an externally negotiable phenomenon. It is not a predetermined, blindly programmed event.

Q. So you are not intending to impute will or deliberation to the foetus?

A. No, nor in similar circumstances would I impute will or deliberation to an adult.

Q. Is the choice of birth date by the baby a rational decision?

A. No, it is not a conscious or rational decision. Obviously some babies, if we wish to continue in the idiom, are radically mistaken about when they should be born. We are sure we know much better, but the great majority are not mistaken.

The point is that there is evidence that the duration of pregnancy is genetically determined. For instance, in different breeds of sheep, whether it is 147 or 152 days, there does appear to be a genetic component. There is no question also that in the case of the human foetus this is modifiable by a number of agencies, including external environmental agencies--for instance, a virus infection, and a number of infections which can lead to premature labour. But nevertheless it is the foetus which is physiologically responsible for the triggering of labour.

Q. What is the mechanism whereby the foetus triggers off the onset of labour?

A. There are several gaps in the human story, as I understand it.

Q. In relation to medical or surgical induction, Professor, in effect does the baby eventually take over still and promote the process of labour?

A. In the great majority of instances, yes, provided one is in reasonable proximity to term. It is easy to, as it were, activate the triggers in the baby. There are some other instances, though, in which we appear to be producing the whole labour out of the bottle.

This relationship between a baby and his mother is clearly simply much more than simple biological parasitism. The term parasite, so frequently used to describe the fetus, is often used, not in the limited biological sense, but with the sociological overtone of describing someone who takes all and contributes nothing. Neither sense is applicable to the foetus. True, he is parasitic on mother for his nutritional requirements. In the same sense many wives could be said to be parasitic on their husbands' incomes; but just as wives would indignantly maintain that they contribute much to a home and a marriage to justify their keep, and that really what is involved is a division of labour, so also does the fetus justify his keep by organizing and maintaining the pregnancy. Such a relationship is more accurately described as parabiosis or symbiosis, and physiologically there is no question who guarantees its success.

Q. To say the baby is parasitic is not correct? A. Not precisely.

This concept, that the fetus is in command of the pregnancy, is hardly news to any mother with an unplanned pregnancy, but the idea is new and the consequences are farreaching in obstetrics. No longer can we understand the physiology of pregnancy if we remain in ignorance of the physiology of the dominant partner in that relationship. All the problems in pregnancy which can be solved by pulling and pushing and cutting have been solved-- the only unsolved problems, spontaneous miscarriage, premature labour, toxaemia and so on, await a better understanding of fetal physiology.

Q. When you say 'a better understanding of foetal physiology' it seems that the problems you see relate to the foetus?

A. Some of these problems are quite serious for the mother as well--toxaemia for instance.

Q. But the unsolved problems so far as the mother is concerned are physical rather than psychological?

A. There are problems for both, but, as I say, the solution seems to lie in understanding how the foetus goes about his business of organizing pregnancy.

Q. There is nothing further you need to understand about the mother?

A. Far from it. All I would say is that we are farther along in the jigsaw puzzle of the mother's problems than of foetal physiology.

These achievements of the fetus also cause us to reconsider another point--the concept of maturity. It is perhaps one of the misfortunes of medicine that we study our subject as young adults, and our standards of normality are those of the young adult--usually male. And it is a part of the arrogance to young adults to consider that the only people who matter are young adults. Since maturity equals adulthood, the fetus is, by definition, immature, but immaturity acquires a nasty overtone suggesting inferiority. Thus the tendency has developed to consider the fetus, or neonate, as a poorly functioning adult rather than as splendidly functioning baby. Every age and stage of life has its excellencies and its weaknesses, and fetal life is no exception. We do not regard the fetal circulatory system, different as it is from the child's or adult's as one big heap of congenital defects, but rather a system superbly adapted to the circumstances under which a fetus lives.

We should not regard fetal and neonatal renal function, assymetric as it is by adult standards (he handles a water load well but not a solute load unless he has plenty of water), as inferior, but entirely appropriate to the osmometric conditions in which it has to work.

We should appreciate that the fetus has a much more prompt and reliable response to hemorrhage than adults, that a fracture which would incapacitate an adult for three to six months will heal in three weeks in a bandage in a baby, that the ability of a fetus to heal surgical scars or thermal burns would be the envy of a plastic surgeon. In these contexts at least, it would be more appropriate to consider the adult as a poorly functioning fetus.

Even when we accept that it is the fetus who is in command of the pregnancy, that it is mother, not baby, who is the passive partner in the relationship, people might still feel that the fetus is nevertheless but a new superconductor of some endocrine orchestra, a mindless programmed robot controlling his mother. Nothing could be further from the truth.

As the fetus develops structures--including sensory structures, he uses them. Development of structure and development of function go hand in hand. Indeed, if the function cannot be served without developing the structure, equally, without the stimulus of function the structure does not develop properly. Further, we are aware in extrauterine life that every individual represents an interaction of nature and nurture, of environment and genetic endowment. The same is true in the uterus. The fetus does not live in a metabolic Nirvana, or in a dark and silent world in a state of sensory deprivation. The uterus may buffer, filter, and distort the outside world, but does not eliminate it. Stimuli do reach the baby and he responds to them.

We know that fetal movement is necessary for the proper development of bones and joints, that the fetus without room to move or without muscles or nerves to move with, is born with severe restriction of range of joint movements. We know that fetal comfort determines fetal position, that changes in maternal position provoke baby to seek a new position of comfort, that contractions and external palpation provoke fetal movement and that the fetus will repeatedly evade the sustained pressure of a microphone or recording instrument. We know how babies change ends in the uterus while they still have room--they propel themselves with their feet, either frontwards or backwards, and how they change sides--with an elegant longitudinal spiral roll, rotating first their heads, then their shoulders, and finally their legs.

In early pregnancy the fetus is free to move as he pleases, and he does precisely that. He can turn complete flips in one and a half or two seconds. In late pregnancy, with increasing fetal bulk and diminishing amniotic fluid volume, there is less choice, but fetal comfort determines which way baby will lie in late pregnancy and present in labour. Thus the fetus is responsive to touch and pressure, simple facts confirmed by an obstetrician who has ever stroked the palm of a prolapsed arm and elicited a grasp reflex, or the sole of a footing breech and observed the upgoing toe.

Q. In the case of an 8 to 10 week foetus, if you apply pressure will it tend to try to get out of the way?

A. Normally it would be extremely difficult, apart from putting a foreign instrument or needle into the uterus to apply pressure, but with a foetus at the maturity you have a very small foetus in a larger capsule of fluid. However, as the famous work of Dr. Davenport Hooker shows, in his many thousands of feet of film, babies at this maturity are responsive to touch.

The fetus also responds violently to painful stimuli--needle puncture and injection of cold or hypertonic solutions--stimuli which you and I find painful, children will tell you are painful, and the neonate, to judge from his responses, finds painful.

The discussions that have taken place relating to pain relief in child birth have involved only maternal pain. Considering all that has been written by poets and song writers about the cries of newborn babies, you might think that newborn babies cried for fun. We think newborn babies cry for one reason only, because birth has been a stifling and often painful experience for the baby. We are getting around to the way of thinking that whether or not mother needs pain relief in labour, some babies might well be better off for it.

However, I have been told by advocates of abortion that we have no proof that the fetus actually feels pain. Strictly, they are quite correct. Pain is a peculiarly personal and subjective experience and there is no biochemical or physiological test we can do to tell that anyone is in pain--a phenomenon which makes it very easy to bear other people's pain stoically, which is an important point for obstetricians to remember. By the same token we lack any proof that animals feel pain. However, to judge from their responses, it seems charitable to assume they do.

Q. The question, then, of pain felt by the foetus--it is your personal opinion, I gather from what you say in your paper, that in effect the foetus does feel pain?

A. I can only say that the foetus responds violently to stimuli which you and I would feel painful. Bertrand Russell once remarked that a fisherman had told him that fish had neither sense or sensation, but how he knew that he would not tell him.

Q. Well, what is the earliest stage at which you have observed this apparent violent reaction on the part of the foetus?

A. In just over 16 weeks, carrying out amniocentesis for very early and severe RH haemolytic disease. Then again, response to irritation, for instance a bristle, has been observed much earlier than this by Davenport Hooker in his monumental foctage of film of mechanical behaviour responses of very early miscarried babies.

The fetus responds to sound and light in utero. The fetus is startled by flash photography of a pregnant abdomen, and with a fibreoptic conduit and photo-multiplier we can detect the shadow cast by the fetus on the posterior uterine wall. In utero the light is shifted far to the red end of the spectrum and the fetus is using only his rod or low-light intensity vision, but if there is any light present at all there must be activation of visual pathways, because single-rod cells respond to single photons. The fetus lacks any images and sufficient light to practice cone vision, so that at birth he can see but does not know what he is looking at. Confident recognition of images takes five to eight months of extrauterine life to acquire.

With sound it is different, because intrauterine sounds have pattern and a spectral compostion not very different from extrauterine sounds, and the fetal inner ear or hearing mechanism is of the same magnitude and therefore responds in the same frequency range as childrens' or adults' ears.

If the hearing structure in the child grew with the child to adult size, then babies and children would hear in a different frequency range from adults and the communication gap between generations would be perhaps even wider than it is already.

It is easy to demonstrate fetal responses to external sound, and audiometric curves may be constructed by noting changes in fetal heart rate to pure tones presented by hydrophone or air microphone.

We have done these tests to reassure deaf mothers, for instances, during pregnancy that their foetus did in fact hear.

The fetus lined up under an image intensifier in a quiet room is startled by a sudden noise--the dropped pot or human voice, including mother's. He responds to the tympanist's contribution or an orchestral performance and to the dentist's turbine drill. Both habituation and conditioning have been demonstrated.

Habituation is the phenomenon by which you can play someone a signal and he starts; you play it again and there is not so much response; you keep it up, and after a while he starts to ignore it. The baby does precisely this. Conditioning is where, having given one stimulus to a baby, you give a second one, and after awhile you get a response to the first signal which you formerly were only getting to the second.

However, it is not simple external sound which bombards the fetus. The pregnant uterus itself is a very noisy place. The loudest sounds to which the fetus is exposed are maternal borborygmi peaking to 85 to 90 decibles, about the intensity of sound of traffic in a busy city street. Reaching and below 55 decibels the content is richer in pattern and meaning, the intermittent voice and the all pervading vascular bruits pulsing in synchrony with maternal heartbeat in the great arteries supplying the uterus. We do not think it entirely chance that babies are lulled by holding them to your chest, or the old wives' alarm clock, or the modern magnetic tape of a heartbeat, that the tick of a grandfather clock in a library is a reassurance rather than a distraction, that people asked to set a metronome to a rate which 'satisfies' them will pick a rate in the 50- to 90-per minute range, and that the majority of drum rhythms in the world reflect the measured beat of a human heart. We think this rhythm is deeply imprinted on human consciousness from fetal life.

Q. What is the earliest age in development that you have observed response to sound?

A. Personally, 23 weeks. To my knowledge the process has not been looked at earlier in this situation. Again, one has to distinguish a living foetus in the uterus, and if pregnancy continues, and therefore on is apparently dealing with a baby as it were in good shape as distinct from the very early miscarried baby who is a living but unfortunately dying baby.

The fetus drinks amniotic fluid in a phasic pattern from at least as early as eight weeks' gestation. By the third trimester there is a fascinating variation, some babies coyly drinking 20 ml per hour, and others boozing away at 90 ml per hour.

Many women have noticed foetal hiccups. They were not aware of what they were, and some have been quite worried, particularly if there is an epileptic somewhere in the family cupboard. 'Could the baby be having a convulsion, doctor?' These convulsions have been described, but they are extremely rare. Hiccups are very common indeed, and women are very much reassured to be told what they are. Some have already guessed.

There are two interesting things to know about the drinking of unborn babies, their variability, and also the general fact that large well nourished babies drink at a high rate whereas little skinny babies, with numerous exceptions, tend to drink at a low rate. But what is even more interesting about this is that it correlates beautifully with independently assessed feeding performance in the nursery. Most nurses and mothers are well aware that some babies really know what their mouth is and what it is for whereas others take 20 or 30 minutes or more to feed, drinking during that time an amount any self respecting baby would dispose of within two or three minutes. The interesting thing is that the good drinkers in utero are the good drinkers in the nursery and the dainty, tedious swallowers in utero are the tedious ones out of the uterus as well. In other words, it is not just physical traits, it is not just medical conditions which can bridge birth. The behaviour traits also bridge the birth.

Now that we are in a position to measure the swallowing rate, we can also check on the influence of other things on swallowing in utero, for instance the flavor of the amniotic fluid. It so happens that the amniotic fluid does not taste too bad, but it has a rather chemical taste, like photographic developer. It is not particularly nice, but it is not particularly nasty either and the babies don't seem to mind and quite cheerfully and reliably drink it. It so happens there is another contrasting medium in the uterus which is the oily medium which gets slicked down on the fetal skin like a coat of paint and makes the newborn baby look a little bit like he has chalk on him. This is an excellent protective material, but it tastes terrible, If you put a drop on your tongue or my tongue, we would spit it out fast. If you put a drop on the tongue of a newborn baby, the baby grimaces and cries.

What would happen if we injected this material into the fluid surrounding the baby? We have measured the swallowing rates of babies over two consecutive 48 to 72 hour intervals. These are essentially repeatable measurements in that we get about the same rate. Every time we inject this material, the fetal drinking rate just crashes. They take just one mouthful and seem to go yuk and just quit drinking.

On the other hand, if we make the fluid taste nice, will they drink more? We have done that with a dozen children. And the interesting thing is that ten of the dozen after we injected saccarin very decisively drank more. We approximately doubled their swallowing rate by sweetening their fluid with saccarin. Two, however, just quit drinking. It will be interesting to follow these children up. We may have chosen the wrong sweetening agent, because there are some people, myself included, who do not find saccarin in concentration sweet, but intensely bitter. This is a well recognized genetic trait.

He may get hiccups, easily recognized, and as these occur in an episodic pattern, commonly at the same time each day, we suspect that they are related to fetal drinking sessions, and that he is already experiencing some circadian rhythms, of his own or exposed to mother's.

All babies are experienced in swallowing at birth, and some also in suckling. In the neurological examination of the neonate the 'seeking' or 'rooting' reflex is elicited by stroking the circumoral area of the baby. He turns his head to the side of the stimulus and opens his mouth, obviously a reflex by which he homes in on the nipple, which by its size, consistency and colour is simply a homing device on a positive pressure feed system, the breast.

In so far as it is very common to see fetuses lying with hands and feet in close proximity to their faces, it is not surprising that they elicit a seeking reflex themselves. Therefore, it is not uncommon radiologically, to find fetuses sucking fingers, thumbs and toes, and thumb-sucking has been photographed in the Nine-week abortus.

Q. Are you implying from this that in effect the foetus or the child at this stage has developed a nervous reflex system?

Well, as Devenport Hooker says on response to stimuli, one does get in the early stages quite a marionette, mechanical type of movement, but afterwards quite a graceful type of response. They are quite well known. They are part of the Leonard Nilssen series.

Many other functions and responses could be described, but always the conclusion is the same--the fetus is young human, dynamic, plastic, resilient, in command of his own environment and destiny with a tenacious purpose.

Q. Now, is it fair to say that your view has been formed largely because you believe that a foetus from its very early stages has a distinct individual personality?

A. It is certainly true. Were this not so it would be completely farcical to develop programmes for the diagnosis of illness in babies before birth.

Q. And this view of each foetus having its own individual personality, is that just your belief, or does it come from scientific fact in your view?

A. Distinctions can be observed between foetuses before birth, not only in their physical appearance, in their physiological appearance, but also in their activity states, their responses to external stimuli. In other words, it is not just appearance, but also behaviour, by which they can be distinguished.

Q. You say, 'I am convinced that unborn children are individuals and human beings.' I refer again to the transcript of Professor Hubbard's evidence, 'I would contend that one is not fully human unless one is capable of what I would call a conscious life.' This is something that Dr. Inglis referred to. 'To that extent, I would say that the embryo and the foetus, up to the age of 28 weeks, in not fully human; it is a proto-human if you like. It is incipiently human, but it has not become fully human.' You have already commented on this to a certain extend, Sir William, but I would like to ask you, do you think that this is a valid scientific statement?

A. No; it is a redefinition, which can be made to suit any purpose.

Q. I am interested to contrast what you said with what Professor Hubbard said. Do you accept that obviously there can be differences of opinion between two experts of your stature?

A. Not only differences of opinion, but some experts even change their definitions one of the most notable being Ashley Montagu, whose book 'Life Before Birth' may be known to many people here. In this book he refers to 'new human being' and 'life beginning at conception'. I could give you numerous references, if you wish. But, now that he is an ardent pro-abortionist, he has taken steps to qualify and abrogate what he said before, and he has now defined

'humanness' not as an attribute but an acquisition; it is something which is conferred on you by society. It is not something about you which makes you human, but it is some accolade awarded to you by society.

Q. If we could limit this particular discussion to the differences in matters of opinion between two scientists, there is nothing wrong, is there, in changing one's mind if something causes you to doubt your first opinion or your first statement?

A. According to the variation, by which it is possible for any social purpose to decide who is human and who is not and whether he is entitled to live or not. I would agree that people have all too often in human history made arbitrary judgments on this point; but the question is not whether one can but whether one should, and I think some judgments are more charitable than others.

Q. Today you have outlined and described very fully the intrauterine life of the foetus, and because of your study of scientific facts you attach much value and importance to intrauterine life?

A. Could I emphasize, as I said at the beginning, that my interest in the physical and physiological facts of human life derive from the fact that I care for sick babies before birth, and if, for instance, you have to put a needle in the peritoneal cavity of a baby before birth, you cannot do it if the baby is lying with his back towards you, there is this awkward structure, and if his front is towards you there are arms and legs over the abdomen. We need the baby presenting by flank, and it is this that led us into studies of the facts which influence and determine foetal presentation. We need a baby lying still. We can't carry out these procedures on a baby that is bobbing around like an apple in a barrel of water. This led us to studies of the stirring and disturbance of babies, and what would quiet them down, and these are the same phenomena which would apply to a child after birth. We know if we have to put a needle in a baby we must approach it boldly. It is not just a tentative edging into a baby, because if you prick the baby he reacts violently. All these aspects of foetal behaviour derive from the fact the baby before birth has a human physiology.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons submitted herein, the Court should hold that the preborn human is an individual and accordingly, should be declared a person for purposes of the 14th Amendment of the United States Constitution pursuant to the definition set forth in Title 1 United States Code Section 1.

Respectfully submitted,

ROBERT L SASSONE

Attorney for Amicus Curiae

NO. 88-605
IN THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES
OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L WEBSTER, ET AL., APPELLANTS
V
REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, ET AL.
RESPONDENTS

Affidavit of mailing of amicus brief copies, Rule 28.2

State of California } ss.
City of Santa Ana, County of Orange }

Robert L. Sassone, being first duly sworn on his oath deposes and says:

Robert L. Sassone is a member of the Bar of the United States Supreme Court admitted October 26, 1971. To his knowledge, on February 23, 1989, within the particular time and permitted time for serving of said amicus brief pursuant to Rule 28.2, he deposited in the United States mailbox at Santa Ana, CA 92701 pursuant to Rule 28.2 with first class postage prepaid 40 copies of the attached amicus brief in the present case properly addressed to the Clerk of the United States Supreme Court and three copies of said amicus brief to each party addressed as follows:

ROGER K EVANS, ESQ.
DARA KLASSEL, ESQ.
BARBARA OTTEN, ESQ.
PLANNED PARENTHOOD
FEDERATION OF AMERICA, INC
810 7TH AVE.
NEW YORK, NY 10019

FRANK SUSSMAN, ESQ.
THOMAS M. BLUMENTHAL
SUSMAN, SCHERMER,
RIMMEL & SHIFREN
10TH FLOOR
7711 CARONDELET AVE.
ST. LOUIS MISSOURI 63105

WILLIAM WEBSTER, ATTORNEY GENERAL
MICHAEL L. BOICOURT, ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL
JERRY L. SHORT, ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL
6TH FLOOR BROADWAY BUILDING
PO BOX 899
JEFFERSON CITY, MISSOURI
65102

_____
ROBERT L. SASSONE, Affiant

Subscribed and sworn to before me on February 23, 1989.

_____
LAWRENCE D. SASSONE, Notary Public

ORIGINAL SIGNED AND NOTARIZED

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, ET A.L., APPELLANTS

v.

Reproductive Health Services, ET A.L.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR EDWARD ALLEN AS AMICUS CURIAE SUPPORTING APPELLANTS

ROBERT L. SASSONE
Attorney at Law
900 North Broadway • Suite 725
Santa Ana, California 92701
(714) 547-5611

MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE A BRIEF AS AMICUS CURIAE ON BEHALF OF WEBSTER

EDWARD ALLEN hereby respectfully moves for leave to file a brief amicus curiae in the present case. Requested consent of respondent has not been obtained. Thomas M Blumenthal of respondent stated to attorney for amicus that an agreement of the parties ensured consent if written consent of one party is obtained, so perhaps consent of respondent has just been delayed.

INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE

Allen hereby submits data establishing preborn humans as persons which is believed to be unique according to a search of substantially all prior articles. Among the material, US Supreme Court cases stating "person" includes any and every human being, reconstruction era Congressional statements, an 1876 Supreme Court DC case contrary to this Court's abortion holdings, Title 1 USC 1 where Congress defined "person" to include "individual" and therefore the preborn and historical data indicating why, a number of cases denying for various reasons that women are persons, etc.

Allen became a police officer in 1936. He graduated from and taught at the FBI academy. During World War II he was on loan to the FBI, assigned to security and anti-sabotage and anti-espionage. After World War II, he served 26 years as a police chief. He was given credit for eliminating organized Mafia type crime in Youngstown Ohio. He wrote the classic book on the Mafia, "Merchants of Menace". He served as an expert for the three major post World War II US Senate Anti Crime Committees. He was appointed by the Ohio

Governor to a state commission. His honesty and successes in law enforcement were praised by a President, nation wide and local media, J Edgar Hoover, and many others. He is a convicted criminal who has served time for trespass at a "safe" abortion clinic where court records indicate the doctor has been sued hundreds of times for abortion malpractice and is believed to have killed six women.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Item	Page
Motion for Leave to File Brief	i
Interest of Amicus	ii
Table of Authorities	iv
Summary of Argument	vi
Early US History	1
Warnings About Untermenschen	25
The German Safeguards	35
Attitude	42
Conclusion	51

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

ITEM	PAGE
STATUTES
TITLE 1 USC SECTION 1	43-44
California Health and Safety Code Sections 25950 et seq	47
CASES
United States Supreme Court
Monell v Department of Social Services (1978) 436 US 658, 56 L Ed 2d 611, 98 S Ct 2018	17
Wong Wing v US, (1896) 16 S Ct 977 at 983, 163 US 228, 41 L Ed 140	48
Other cases
United States v May 10 (1876) Supreme Court DC Sept T 512	10-14
Cases holding women not person
IN THE MATTER OF A REFERENCE AS TO THE MEANING OF THE WORD 'PERSONS' IN SECTION 24 OF THE BRITISH NORTH AMERICAN ACT, 1867	50
State v Emery, 31 S E 2d 858, 862, 224 N C 581 (1944)	50
Mashburn v State, 62 So 586, 588, 65 Flo 470	50
Glidden v Philbrick, 56 Me 222, 227	50
In re Robinson, 131 Mass 376, 382, 41	50
Commonwelath v Welosky 177 N E 656, 661	50

OTHER AUTHORITIES

William Blackstone, "Commentaries on the Laws of England" (London, 1765) 3
Robert Destro, "Abortion and the Constitution" California Law Review 63 (1975) 1250, 1267-1273	3, 16
Horatio R Storer, MD, "Why not? Boston: Lee and Shepard (1866)	3, 4, 5, 6
John Noonan "A Private Choice" Macmillan, New York (1979)	7
Alfred Avins "The Reconstruction Debates" Wilmington, 1974	8, 9
Athena Mueller, "Supreme Court's Views as to Meaning of Term "Person" as used in Statutory or Constitutional Provision 56 L Ed 2d 895	14, 15
"The Hadamar Trial" Hodge and Co. (1949)	27
Journal of the AMA (Ivy) Vol. 29, No 3,(1/15/49), Page 131 et seq	30
Leo Alexander, MD "Medical Science Under Dictatorship" (1949) New England Journal of Medicine 241:39-47	31-34
Release of "Destruction of Life Devoid of Value", Hoche & Binding Liepzig, 1920	35-40
Hitler's Letter	41
Leo Alexander quoting Lt Gen von dem Bach-Zelewsky "Journal of Criminal Law and Criminology" 39 (1948-1949):312	46

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The present brief is limited to one topic, the likelihood that Congress had the power to enact and in enacting Title 1 USC Section 1 in 1947-1948 did not intend to exclude the preborn human or any other human life regardless of condition from the definition of "person" therein. If that is the case, this Court should not change the intent of Congress by denying personhood to the preborn human.

Early US History lists 17 points tending to indicate Congress had power to define preborn humans to be persons. The history comprises debates, enactments by Congress and the states about 1870, an 1876 Federal abortion case, and an 1896 US Supreme Court concurring opinion stating: "The term "person" , used in the Fifth Amendment is broad enough to include any and every human being within the jurisdiction of the republic."

Assuming Congress had power to include the preborn in the definition of "person", is there any reason to believe Congress intended some unusual definition of "individual" which would have excluded the preborn so as to define a class of human beings (the preborn) excluded from the protection of personhood? 1947-1948 was at the height of the War Crime Trial era. Congress would have been aware of War Crime Trial news which had established the Nazi attrocities, the philosophical basis for them, the German safeguards that failed, and the inherent danger of creating a human sub class of Untermenschen without fewer or no rights. Congress would not have defined such an underclass.

If the preceding is true, this Court should hold the preborn to be "persons".

EARLY US HISTORY

Neither the makers of the US Constitution nor those who enacted the Bill of Rights nor those who enacted the 13th, 14th and 15th Amendments to the US Constitution appear to have contemplated the subject of abortion. There is no mention of abortion in the enacted text or in the written records.

In such a case, it is legitimate to study the laws, practices and beliefs of the time and available records of proceedings to attempt to infer the intent of the framers. In doing so, we find the following 17 points:

a. that there are and have at all times material hereto been two major conflicting theories of the origin of rights under law, the most widespread theory that rights are created by the state and then given to the people by the state, and the minority theory, adopted by the US Declaration of Independence that people "are created equal, that they are endowed by their creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness. That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted..." Note they are created equal, and the time of creation is before birth and was so known in 1776. The framers could have said "born equal", but chose instead the earlier time.

b. that it can be argued that this Court's Dred Scott and Roe v Wade decisions adopt the majority theory which was rejected by the Declaration of Independence but is routinely held by all totalitarian governments. Some hold the theory directly, others hold that the ruler rules by divine right, and then he implements the majority theory by his acts.

c. that in 1789 when the original articles were adopted, and in 1790 when the Bill of Rights was adopted, Blackstone was the bible of American lawyers, and Blackstone taught that a "person" was "like us" who had been "formed by God" in the womb [1]

d. that abortion was a crime at common law [2]

e. that in the late 1850's, the American Medical Association began an ultimately successful effort to outlaw abortion. [3]

[1] William Blackstone, "Commentaries on the Laws of England (London, 1765) book 1, ch. 1, and book 4 ch. 14

[2] Robert Destro, "Abortion and the Constitution" California Law Review 63 (1975):1250, 1267-1273

[3] Horatio R Storer, MD, "Why not?"

f. that the leader of the AMA effort was Horatio R Storer, MD, who wrote numerous books on abortion which emphasized the wrongness of abortion because it took a human life, more than the danger of abortion vs childbirth. [4] Storer had no doubt that preborn humans were alive from the moment of conception [5]. Storer used the kangaroo example to prove that birth should have nothing to do with one's right to life and was just an accident of time. Storer knew the difference between conception and implantation [6]. Storer knew that there was life before quickening, knew the significance of quickening and defined quickening [7]. Storer knew one

[3] cont. Boston: Lee and Shepard 1866

[4] ibid. 20-34

[5] ibid. at 28, 29

[6] ibid. at 30

[7] ibid. at 31

could hear the baby before quickening [8]. Storer knew the baby could move before quickening [9]. Storer knew the baby could breath and cry before birth [10]. Storer complained that there had been a wide and sincere ignorance of the true character of the act (thereby explaining the previous lack of enforcement of the right to life of the new preborn) [11]. Storer stated abortion was a crime against the child and a crime against the preborn [12]. Storer stated that it was generally supposed that there was no harm to the mother [13].

[8] ibid. at 33

[9] ibid. at 34

[10] ibid. at 35

[11] ibid. at 35

[12] ibid. at 35

[13] ibid. at 36

g. that in 1865, the AMA gave a special medal for the best anti abortion publication to Storer for his book "Why Not", published in 1866, [14] which book emphasized the wrongness of abortion because it killed a human being as proven by then recent additions to human knowledge about preborn humans and that 1866 saw Congress propose the 14th Amendment to the states. One wonders what medical knowledge has been lost since 1866 to account for the fact that Storer knew so much more about preborn humans and the beginning of life than certain modern doctors and courts. The answer, of course is that the moderns know more than Storer, but adopt false humility when convenient to win a point.

h. that the most important burst of anti-abortion legislation in US history took place between 1860 and 1880 [15]

[14] ibid. at ii

i. that the 14th Amendment was enacted in 1868 and belongs to that anti-abortion era of American politics

j. that as shown by the legislative histories of their abortion laws, about 25% of states ratifying the 14th Amendment also increased protection for preborn humans within about one year of ratifying the 14th Amendment [16].

k. that in 1868 when the 14th Amendment was adopted, the common law made abortion a crime after quickening, but the trend was to make abortion a crime from conception as such states as Connecticut and Pennsylvania had done [16].

[15] then professor now judge John Noonan "A Private Choice" Macmillan, New York (1979)

[16] Legislative History of the abortion laws of the various states indicating modifications

l. that in the 1860s the Federal territories of Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, and Nevada had all made it a crime to abort and such legislation was subject to the approval of the same congressmen who adopted the 14th Amendment [17].

m. that the debates relating to the 13th, 14th and 15th Amendments and the associated Civil Rights laws contain many criticisms of the US Supreme Court because it separated humanity and both personhood and citizenship in the Dred Scott decision. [18]

n. that said debates contained numerous references to the scope of "personhood" in the 14th Amendment, and all such references by both opposing

[17] ibid. 200

[18] Alfred Avins " The Reconstruction Debates" Wilmington, 1974, 14th Amendment in index

sides in the debates by those who voted for and those who opposed the 14th Amendment agreed that the term "person" was intended to apply as broadly as possible, to "every human being", "every individual", of "every condition of life". [19] [19] referring to equal protection, "...he is bound to administer it fairly to every man woman and child, of every race and color, of every condition in life" Senator Merrimon, 1875, ibid. at 735; "...the clause of the amendment which he reads has no relationship to citizenship. It covers every human being within the jurisdiction of a State." Senator Thurman 1875 ibid. 733; Referring to equal protection, "Obviously that relates not simply to classes, but to every individual". ibid. 734 The various debates from 1866 to 1875 include many similar statements.

o. that the term "person" both about 1790 and about 1868 and ever since was defined in such a way as to include "human being" as one possible definition of "person". [20]

p. that many, perhaps most of the congressmen voting on the 14th Amendment also were members of Congress when Congress approved an abortion law protective of the unborn for the District of Columbia by enabling the District of Columbia legislative assembly to pass such a law subject to a power in Congress to amend or repeal said law, then when the District of Columbia legislative assembly did pass an abortion law which was enforced, Congress did nothing, thereby tacitly admitting the validity of said law. [21]

[20] various dictionaries with no known exception

[21] United States vs May 9 (1876)..

q. that the Federal Courts, shortly after passage of the 14th Amendment held constitutional said District of Columbia abortion law, stating as part of the opinion that "'An act for the prevention of abortion' ...enacted January 19, 1872" by the District was valid in spite of the fact that defendant was sentenced more harshly under the act than a mere misdemeanor sentence he might have expected under Common Law. The opinion states in part:

"But it is argued that the legislative assembly of this District had no power to pass the act of January 19, before referred to. And this by reason of section 2 of the organic act creating the District, which provides as follows:

'The District is created a government by the name of the District of Columbia, by which name it is constituted a body corporate for municipal purposes, and may contract and be contracted with, sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, have a seal, and exercise all other powers of a municipal corporation, not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States and the provisions of this title.'

[21] Supreme Court, D.C. Sept.T., 512

What were the precise limits of legislative power granted, or intended to be granted, by section 2, we think unnecessary to inquire, because the power granted is defined with great precision. Section 49 of the same act provides:

'The legislative power of the District shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation within the District, consistent with the Constitution of the United States and the provisions of this title, subject to all the restriction and limitations imposed upon States by the tenth section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States.'

Section 50 of the act provides that all acts of the legislative assembly shall be subject to repeal or modification by Congress. And then sections 51-58 contain restrictions limiting the power of this legislative assembly. In none of these restrictions is the assembly prohibited from passing the law in question or any similar law.

This law of the legislative assembly has never been repealed or modified by an act of Congress. It will therefore be seen that the legislative assembly might rightfully pass any law, subject only to the express limitations of the act creating it." [22]

[22] ibid. at 514, 515

Amicus believes United States vs May stands as probably the highest judicial opinion as to the legality of passing abortion laws shortly after ratification of the 14th Amendment and an opinion that Congress saw said abortion law as Constitutional and not so defective as to merit repeal.

The Federal courts have held for a Century that Congress has power to define as persons practically any entity including numerous paper entities far different from a mature human. [23]

[23] Athena Mueller, "SUPREME COURT'S VIEWS AS TO MEANING OF TERM 'PERSON' AS USED IN STATUTORY OR CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISION" 56 L Ed 2d 895, reported under heading of Monell v Dept of Social Services.

Among the non human being type entities given the status of "persons" by this court are: corporations, associations, the sovereign, foreign nations, states of the Union, cities, unincorporated associations, corporate officers, a municipality or other governmental entity, a political party, agents and corporations of states, a city as municipal utility operator, unincorporated labor unions, an unincorporated association of manufacturers, local governmental entities, a municipal department of social services, the department's commissioner in his official capacity, a city's board of education, and the board's chancellor in his official capacity, liquor dispensers acting as the agent of a state, railroads, bodies politic deriving their existence and powers from legislation. [24] ibid.

Obviously those responsible for the Bill of Rights and the 14th Amendment had no intention of eliminating abortion prohibitions, or at least some of them would have made an effort to do so, particularly since at the time every state employed the sanction of the criminal law to regulate abortion. [25]

INTERPRETATION

The process of interpretation is often helpful. The framers could never have thought of television when they guaranteed the freedom of speech, but interpretation now makes that freedom include electronic communication.

What this Court says the Constitution means is for the time being what the Constitution means, at least for the time being, and usually permanently. Nevertheless the Supreme Court can be wrong. Many times a later Supreme Court has said that an earlier Supreme Court had been wrong. [26] What the Supreme Court says the Constitution means can do violence to every criterion of history and logic. Instead of developing tne purposes of the framers, the Court can subvert them. But the law of the land, the meaning of the Constitution as a legal document, will be what the Court says until it admits its error or is corrected by a constitutional amendment.

[25] Destro, "Abortion and the Constitution," 1273-1278

The Court's conviction of its own correctness does not depend solely on its own precedents; if so there would be no change or reversals. Like it or not, the Court is engaged in an exchange with its critics who always have the power to try to persuade the Court it was wrong, or who have the power to persuade the President to appoint successor justices who believe the Court was wrong or to elect a President who states that he will appoint justices who will reverse a decision believed to be wrong. This power of the people is the essence of democracy.

[26] A recent (1978) case involving the Court reversing itself on personhood is Monell v Department of Social Services (1978) 436 US 658, 56 L Ed 2d 611, 98 S Ct 2018 reversing a 1961 case.

ABORTION VOTING PATTERNS

Many polls claim public pro abortion attitudes. While polls can project some things accurately, they can be slanted and should be ignored when better data such as actual voting patterns are available. Polls can and have been used in an effort to change future election results. As an example, why does the Republican dominated Gallup organization poll consistently publish results about

3% more Republican than the Democratic dominated Harris organization? Some have wondered about a 1976 California primary poll which showed Ford close (he was not) and caused Reagan to leave Ohio which then furnished Ford his margin. In 1972, early polls for abortionists indicated they would win initiatives in South Dakota (they lost nearly 4-1) and Michigan (Early October newspaper polls said abortion was winning by over 60%. (Abortion lost on election day 62%-37%.)

What do we see when we look back at Presidential elections since abortion became a national issue? Has the more pro abortion candidate ever won? Is there a correlation between being anti abortion and becoming President?

In 1972, you will recall the slogan "Amnesty, Acid and Abortion" which was pinned on one candidate who then lost 49 states. In 1976, Mr Carter and Mr Ford were very close on abortion. So was the election. Mr Carter claimed to be a "born again Christian" and made moderate statements about abortion. Mr Ford was perceived (correctly) as having appointed a pro abortion Supreme Court Justice. Mr Nixon was perceived as saying he was anti abortion during elections, then appointing pro abortion Supreme Court Justices. Mr Carter won a close election.

In 1980, Mr Reagan ran on an anti abortion platform and even promised to appoint anti-abortion Justices to this Court, a promise we are about to see if he kept, and he won by a landslide. In like manner, he repeated in 1984 with a similar anti abortion platform against an even more pro abortion opponent.

President Reagan who signed the law making abortion legal in California, then became anti abortion after seeing the result, actually ran against this Court's abortion decisions and gave the American people an opportunity to reject him in favor of a more pro abortion opponent, but was elected.

The 1988 Presidential election very strongly exemplifies the less than majority popularity of abortion.

In mid August, Bush trailed by a landslide. Bush had previously been perceived as pro abortion, and in fact had been closely allied with the pro abortion population control movement.

Nobody knew what type of platform or election abortion position he would adopt. At the convention, Bush and the platform were anti abortion, and Bush gained more than expected. The media said Bush lost the first debate, but abortion was contrasted at the first debate, and Bush, although allegedly losing, took a strong lead in the polls which he maintained thereafter.

In 1972 shortly before the finding of the abortion liberty in the Constitution, pro abortionists chose the two states where they felt they had the best chance for success and collected signatures to put the matter before the people. Why did they go to the trouble?

In 1960, there was no right to life movement. In fact abortion was in such disfavor that the word "abortion" was not ordinarily used in the media. It was too dirty, so euphemisms were used instead. In the late 1960s, abortion burst upon the public scene, aided by a birth defect causing drug, new found friendship in the media and courts, no organized opposition, and other factors. Between 1967 and 1970, about 1/3 of the states changed their abortion laws, some by legislative action, some by courts finding the previously unknown abortion liberty, and one in 1970 via initiative.

After New York in 1970, no state legislature liberalized its abortion law in spite of the introduction of more liberal abortion bills during more than 100 legislative sessions (most states more than once during the three years 1970-1972). In fact, the New York legislature in its next session repealed the 1970 abortion law, which repeal was vetoed. At the time this court found the abortion liberty, the pro abortionists had suffered more than 100 consecutive legislative defeats, in addition to the defeats in the two initiatives of 1972.

The finding of the abortion liberty January 22, 1973 quieted the abortion battle only for a while.

A minority of jurisdictions then began to pay for abortions under medicare or similar programs. Interestingly many of these states did so without legislative enactment either by judicial order or by interpretation of an ambiguous law.

The strong trend has been for the legislatures and people if given a chance, to stop the funding of abortion. At the most recent elections, the electorate of all three states voting on the matter, Arkansas, Colorado and Michigan voted against abortion. The number of states now funding abortion has dwindled to a tiny fraction.

In like manner, Congress has repeatedly voted against abortion funding, and has repeatedly found new areas in which to eliminate abortion.

WARNINGS ABOUT UNTERMENSCHEN

A great war ended in 1945. Later the victors tried certain of the vanquished at "War Crimes Trials". A major reason for these trials was the definition by the vanquished of certain human beings as "Untermenschen", subhumans having no rights who could be treated in any desired way without regard to the fact that some considered them humans. The victors thought it urgent to warn their descendants of the dangers in certain of the philosophies of the vanquished to prevent a repetition of the crimes against the Untermenschen.

Today many fear that abortion has established a new Untermenschen class. They fear we are too close to repeating the German Untermenschen error. Is there any validity to this fear? Is there any substantial chance of a repetition of something too closely resembling the Nazi experience?

Some of the warnings were:

"A freedom-loving people will find in the records of the war crimes trials instruction as to the roads which lead to such a regime and the subtle first steps that must be avoided. Even the Nazis probably would have surprised themselves, and certainly they would have shocked many German people, had they proposed as a single step to establish the kind of extermination institution that the evidence shows the Hadamar Hospital became. But the end was not thus reached; it was achieved in easy stages.

To begin with, it involved only the incurably sick, insane and mentally deficient patients of the Institution. It was easy to see that they were a substantial burden to society, and life was probably of little comfort to them.

It is not difficult to see how, religious scruples apart, a policy of easing such persons out of the world by a completely painless method could appeal to a hard-pressed and unsentimental people. But "euthanasia" taught the art of killing and accustomed those who directed and those who administered the death injections to the taking of human life. Once any scruples and inhibitions about killing were overcome and the custom was established, there followed naturally an indifference as to what lives were taken. Perhaps those who become involved in any killings are not to be in a good positions to decline further requests. [27] [27] From "The Hadamar Trial" Forward by The Hon. Robert H. Jackson, Associate Justice, U.S. Supreme Court, and formerly U.S. Chief of Counsel for the Nuremburg Trials, Hodge and Co. 1949

The US prosecution opening statement at the medical trial attempted to warn us, their descendants, as follows:

"It is our deep obligation to all peoples of the world to show why and how these things happened. It is incumbent upon us to set forth with conspicuous clarity the ideas and motives which moved these defendants to treat their fellowmen as less than beasts. The perverse thoughts and distorted concepts which brought about these savageries are not dead. They cannot be killed by force of arms. They must not become a spreading cancer in the breast of humanity. They must be cut out and exposed, for the reason so well stated by Mr. Justice Jackson in this courtroom a year ago: 'The wrongs which we seek to condemn and punish have been so calculated, so malignant, and so devastating that civilization cannot tolerate their being ignored because it cannot survive their being repeated.'"

Expert witness Andrew Ivy MD stated:

"Medical ethics pledges that physicians are conservators rather than destroyers of life. In my opinion medicine is doomed if it ever consents to take part or permits any member in good standing to take part in a program of euthanasia applied for socioeconomic purposes. If euthanasia is ever introduced for such purposes, medicine should have none of it. Medicine should let the persons responsible for introducing it do the killing. Physicians are conservators, not destroyers, of life....

Though I had been in Medicine for thirty years, I realized, for the first time at the Nuremburg Trials, the full meaning and importance of the contributions of Hippocrates and his school to medicine and human welfare.

Hippocrates contributed the scientific philosophy of medicine as we know it today when he taught that disease is due to material causes and not to evil spirits, witches or the wrath of gods. He contributed a technical philosophy when he taught that diligence, accuracy, thoroughness in observation and skill were essential for success in the practice of a science and art of medicine. He apparently realized that a scientific and technical philosophy of medicine could not survive through the ages unless it was associated with a sound moral philosophy. One cannot conceive of a sound society with medicine that does not have a sound moral philosophy." [28]

[28] Journal of the American Medical Association, Vol. No.3, 1/15/49, page 131 et seq.

Expert witness Leo Alexander, MD stated:

"Even before the Nazis took open charge in Germany, a propaganda barrage was directed against the traditional compassionate nineteenth century attitudes toward the chronically ill, and for the adoption of a utilitarian, Hegelian point of view....

Whatever proportions these crimes finally assumed, it became evident to all who investigated them that they had started from small beginnings. The beginnings at first were merely a subtle shift in emphasis in the basic attitude of the physicians. It started with the acceptance of the attitude, basic in the euthanasia movement, that there is such a thing as life not worthy to be lived. This attitude in its early stages concerned itself merely with the severely and chronically sick. Gradually the sphere of those to be included in this category was enlarged to encompass the socially unproductive, the ideologically unwanted, the racially unwanted and finally all non-Germans. But it is important to realize that the infinitely small wedged-in lever from which this entire trend of mind received its impetus was the attitude toward the non-rehabilitable sick.

It is, therefore, this subtle shift in emphasis of the physicians' attitude that one must thoroughly investigate....

In looking for these early signs one may well retrace the early steps of propaganda on the part of the Nazis in Germany as well as in the countries that they overran and in which they attempted to gain supporters by means of indoctrination, seduction and propaganda....

The question that this fact prompts is whether there are any danger signs that American physicians have also been infected with Hegelian, cold-blooded, utilitarian philosophy and whether early traces of it can be detected in their medical thinking that may make them vulnerable to departures of the type that occurred in Germany. Basic attitudes must be examined dispassionately....

Physicians have become dangerously close to being mere technicians of rehabilitation. This essentially Hegelian rational attitude has led them to make certain distinctions in the handling of acute and chronic diseases. The patient with the latter carries an obvious stigma as the one less likely to be fully rehabilitable for social usefulness. In an increasingly utilitarian society these patients are being looked down upon with increasing definiteness as unwanted ballast....

The killing center is the 'reductio ad absurdum' of all health planning based only on rational principles and economy and not on humane compassion and divine law....

The case, therefore, that I should like to make is that American medicine must realize where it stands in its fundamental premises. There can be no doubt that in a subtle way the Hegelian premise of "what is useful is right" has infected society, including the medical portion. Physicians must return to the older premises, which were the emotional foundation and driving force of an amazingly successful quest to increase powers of healing and which are bound to carry them still farther if they are not held down to earth by the pernicious attitudes of an overdone practical realism." [29]

THE GERMAN SAFEGUARDS

Of course, abortion is not identical to the German killing program. Are there sufficient safeguards in US society to prevent drift toward additional killing, so no killing beyond abortion will occur? Accordingly, let us examine the German safeguards which failed.

It was agreed that the scientific writing which prepared the way philosophically for the German killing program and which included safeguards to prevent the killing from being extended beyond desired limits was "The Release of the Destruction of Life Devoid of Value" referred to hereafter as "Release". [30]

[29] Leo Alexander, MD "Medical Science Under Dictatorship", (1949) New England Journal of Medicine 241:39-47

[30] "Release of the Destruction of Life Devoid of Value by the jurist Karl

"One very important conclusion becomes necessary: The full respect of everyone's desire to live, no matter how sick, how tortured and how useless." [31]

[30] cont.Binding and the psychiatrist, Alfred Hoche MD, published in Leipzig (1920). A copy of the original German version from the Harvard University library was translated by attorney for amicus and references are to this translation. The first half, having paragraph numbers beginning with "1" was written by Binding. The second half having paragraph numbers beginning with "2" was written by Hoche. See Nuremburg Trial transcript, "Trials of War Criminals Before the Nuremburg Military Tribunal Under Control Council Law No. 10, page 7633 for statement on this point.

[31] ibid. "Release" 154

"Legislation should be drafted to make impossible the use of any force, even indirect, in breaking down the desire to live as such an action is characteristic of murder and manslaughter." [32]

"Of course, we could never talk about the legalization of euthanasia of a mentally ill person who is quite happy in his state of life." [33]

"The consent or the desire of the patient and not only the seriousness of the condition is a very necessary condition for euthanasia. Both people involved should have correct information. A mere assumption of a hypondriac that his condition is beyond hope should not be sufficient. The person administering euthanasia should also have full knowledge of the background of the person desiring death. [34]

[32] ibid. 155

[33] ibid. 156

"Persons for whom euthanasia may be considered are only those who are terminally sick and in addition to being terminally sick have the wish for euthanasia. [35]

"As mentioned previously, all euthanasia which breaks the will to live is excluded." [36]

"In going through all the different kinds of ballast life and in meditating about them, we can see that the principle of euthanasia does not apply to the majority of these cases. Even in the time of misery which is upon us, we will never stop to nurse physical defects of people so long as the people are not mentally dead. We will never

[34] ibid. 163

[35] ibid. 176

[36] ibid. 177

stop treating physically and mentally sick persons so long as there is some hope of a changing of their condition for the better. [37]

"It is up to the doctor to see to it that care is taken by technical means to insure the impossibility of any erroneous or abusing action under a legal euthanasia law." [38]

"Of course, it may be said by some that the legalization of euthanasia will open the doors to criminal abuse." [39]

"Persons holding these views must be assured by carefully designed safeguards." [40]

"We must first discuss if the selection of cases can be limited to

[37] ibid. 232

[38] ibid. 242

[39] ibid. 243

[40] ibid. 244

lives definitely worthless for the person himself and for society and if the selection can be done with such certainty that all mistakes and errors are excluded. The problem of selection can only be of concern to the laity. The physician has no doubt about the 100% certainty of correct selection..." [41]

While few if any members of the 1947 Congress read "Release" in the original German, the ideas expressed therein were well known.

Nor can it be argued that the Nazis passed laws going beyond the scope of the limitations demanded by Binding. No laws were passed. There is no written record of any order as wide as the acts that followed. The only document authorizing euthanasia is a letter on Hitler's personal stationary written in October, 1939, but dated back to the first day of the war, September 1,1939. This letter would have had the force of law. It stated:

[41] ibid. 245

"Reichleiter Bouhler and Dr. Brandt, MD, are charged with the responsibility of enlarging the authority of certain physicians to be designated by name in such a manner that persons who, according to human judgement, are incureable can, upon a most careful diagnosis of their condition of sickness, be accorded a mercy death." [42]

Note the care with which Hitler's letter is drafted. In safeguards, it compares favorably with the abortion holdings of this Court. Note the limitations on the persons to whom authority was delegated. Brandt, the leader of the euthanasia program, had much idealism and respect for human life when given this authority. As a young doctor, he had known Albert Schweitzer MD well, was impressed with his theory of reverence for life and had planned to work with Schweitzer as an assistant. The only reason Brandt did not go to work with Schweitzer was that Brandt had been born in France and would have been drafted by the French Army.

[42] Letter taken from "Trials of War Criminals Before the Nuremburg Military Tribunal Under Control Council Law No. 10, Volume 1, 1950, "The Medical Case" page 95

Of course as is well known, the killing program was extended and extended.

ATTITUDE OF THE KILLERS

The attitude of the Nazi killers would have been well known to the 1947 Congress that chose to define person to include "individuals" which appears to include the preborn, rather than leave the word "person" undefined and permit some future Court to try to determine whether "person" excluded or included a particular type of humanity as this Court did in 1973 or perhaps choose a word for "person" which permits the exclusion of selected classes of human life. [43]

One puzzling thing at the trials was the apparent good faith belief of the defendants that they had done nothing wrong, that they were humane and good fellows who were just trying to do their jobs. This attitude of the defendants persisted all the way to their execution, so it was apparently really the way they felt, and not just a show to improve their chance of winning at trial. As they died, they probably felt they had been unjustly condemned.

[43] Title 1 USC Section 1 defines "person" in applicable part as follows: "In determining the meaning of any act of Congress, unless the context indicates otherwise-... the words 'person' and 'whoever' include...as well as individuals;..."

This Nazi history would have been generally known to members of the 1947 Congress because of massive publicity given factors relating to the Nazi killings shortly previously. Members of the 1947 Congress would have been very sensitive to the danger that even a little bit of killing might get out of hand. They would generally have believed in the importance of respect for innocent human life to a greater extent than Congressmen of any other era. Accordingly, it would have been unlikely that they would have adopted any legislation permitting execution of any innocent human life. It would have been out of character for them to adopt any sort of limiting language. Accordingly, "individual" would have been put into Title 1 USC Section 1 in 1947 because of its ordinary dictionary meaning which includes every human life from fertilization onward.

It is highly unlikely that that Congress at that time would have depersonalized the unborn because of the widespread revulsion at the total concept of "Untermenschen" and everything the concept stood for. There was widespread agreement with the warnings stated previously herein. There was widespread fear of what would logically follow through human weakness if any human was regarded as inferior. For example, one SS officer was asked if his work of killing had been the fruit of National Socialist doctrine. He replied: "I am of the opinion that when for years, for decades, the doctrine is preached that the Slav race is an inferior race and Jews are not even human, then such an outcome is inevitable." as stated by Lt. Gen. von dem Bach-Zelewsky, quoted in Leo Alexander, "War Crimes and their motivation: The Socio-Psychological Structure of the SS and the Criminalization of a Society," Journal of Criminal Law and Criminology 39 (1948-1949): 312.

Is there a killing momentum which makes such a result inevitable as the SS officer believed? The Justices of this Court in internal memo and opinion denied that this Court wanted abortion on demand, yet we have it. Is a little bit of abortion impossible once the preborn are depersonalized?

Appellant believes a "little bit" of legal abortion is inherently impossible.

In California in 1967, abortion was legalized [44] only for certain carefully limited reasons. The mental health reasons were were so carefully limited that it appeared easier to commit a woman against her will than to grant her an abortion for mental health reasons. Yet California almost instantly had abortion on demand. The doctors will teach the patients how to lie to get around any set of limited reasons for abortion just as they did before 1973 and just as lawyers have taught how to lie about divorce requirements to turn limitations such as "only adultery" into divorce on demand. The only practical way to limit abortion is to outlaw it by defining preborn humans to be persons. Self defence could then excuse whatever few surgeries were really required in exceptional cases.

[44] California Health and Safety Code Sections 25950 et seq.

For the nearly two centuries before 1973, "person" in the US Supreme Court meant "human being" which of course would include the preborn. The Court overlooked the obvious inconsistency with slavery. The broadness of "person" was so settled that it was not even a matter of debate. For example, in Wong Wing v US, 16 S Ct 977 at 983, 163 US 228. 41 L Ed 140, Justice Field, concurring, said:

" The term "person," used in the Fifth Amendment, is broad enough to include any and every human being within the jurisdiction of the republic. A resident, alien born, is entitled to the same protection under the laws that a citizen is entitled to. He owes obedience to the laws of the country in which he is domiciled., and as a consequence, he is entitled to the equal protection of those laws.

This has been decided so often that the point does not require argument. (citing cases)"

Why then did the 1947 Congress see fit to add "individual" to the definition of "person", thereby broadening "person" in Title 1, USC Section 1? Moreover, why did it choose to do it in the odd fashion it did, first defining "person" in 1947 without the definition including "individual" and then adding it in the second year of the same Congressional session?

The most obvious reason is the constant evidence from the widely publicized War Crimes trials that separating any human life from "person" could lead to disastrous results. While certain warnings were only published after Congress by law broadened "person". the same warnings had been repeatedly published in a variety of forms between 1945 and 1948 and would have been known.

The Congress might have intended to eliminate the possibility that any US court might separate "person" from humanity. Previously, the Canadian Supreme Court in ´IN THE MATTER OF A REFERENCE AS TO THE MEANING OF THE WORD ´PERSONS´ IN SECTION 24 OF THE BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT, 1867" March 14 and April 24, 1928 had ruled that women were not persons. A variety of US courts had also ruled that women were not persons for one or more reasons, (even after women had the vote. Among these US decisions were): State v Emery, 31 S E 2d 858, 862, 224 N C 581 (1944); Mashburn v State, 62 So 586, 588, 65 Fla 470; Glidden v Philbrick, 56 Me 222, 227; In re Robinson, 131 Mass. 376, 382, 41 Am Rep 239; Commonwealth v Welosky, 177 N E 656, 661.

CONCLUSION

Considering US history, it is unreasonable to hold that Congress lacked power because of the Right to Privacy or any other provision related to the US Constitution to include the preborn in the definition of "person" of Title 1 USC Section 1. When considering US history at about the time of enactment of Title 1 USC Section 1, it is unreasonable to assume that Congress intended by enacting said Section anything less than giving the protection of "personhood" to every human life from fertilization onward. Considering recent abortion history, this Court should declare the preborn to be persons. Any other decision would repeat the past error, the claim this Court can define Untermenschen.

Respectfully submitted,

ROBERT L SASSONE, Attorney for Amicus

NO. 88-605
IN THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES
OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L WEBSTER, ET AL., APPELLANTS
V
REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, ET AL.
RESPONDENTS

Affidavit of mailing of amicus brief copies, Rule 28.2

State of California } ss.
City of Santa Ana, County of Orange }

Robert L. Sassone, being first duly sworn on his oath deposes and says:

Robert L. Sassone is a member of the Bar of the United States Supreme Court admitted October 26, 1971. To his knowledge, on February 23, 1989, within the particular time and permitted time for serving of said amicus brief pursuant to Rule 28.2, he deposited in the United States mailbox at Santa Ana, CA 92701 pursuant to Rule 28.2 with first class postage prepaid 40 copies of the attached amicus brief in the present case properly addressed to the Clerk of the United States Supreme Court and three copies of said amicus brief to each party addressed as follows:

ROGER K EVANS, ESQ.
DARA KLASSEL, ESQ.
BARBARA OTTEN, ESQ.
PLANNED PARENTHOOD
FEDERATION OF AMERICA, INC
810 7TH AVE.
NEW YORK, NY 10019

FRANK SUSSMAN, ESQ.
THOMAS M. BLUMENTHAL
SUSMAN, SCHERMER,
RIMMEL & SHIFREN
10TH FLOOR
7711 CARONDELET AVE.
ST. LOUIS MISSOURI 63105

WILLIAM WEBSTER, ATTORNEY GENERAL
MICHAEL L. BOICOURT, ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL
JERRY L. SHORT, ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL
6TH FLOOR BROADWAY BUILDING
PO BOX 899
JEFFERSON CITY, MISSOURI
65102

_____
ROBERT L. SASSONE, Affiant

Subscribed and sworn to before me on February 23, 1989.

_____
LAWRENCE D. SASSONE, Notary Public

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, ET A.L., APPELLANTS

v.

Reproductive Health Services, ET A.L.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR PAUL MARX AS AMICUS CURIAE SUPPORTING APPELLANTS

ROBERT L. SASSONI
Attorney at Law
900 North Broadway • Suite 725
Santa Ana, California 92701
(714) 547-5611

MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE A BRIEF AS AMICUS CURIAE ON BEHALF OF WEBSTER

Paul Marx, OSB, Ph D, of Maryland, hereby respectfully moves for leave to file a brief amicus curiae in the present case. Consent of respondent has not been obtained. Written consent of appellant has been obtained. Thomas M Blumenthal of respondent stated to attorney for amicus that an agreement of the parties ensured consent if written consent of one party is obtained, so perhaps consent of respondent has just been delayed.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Item	Page
Motion for leave to file a brief as amicus curiae on behalf of Webster	i
Interest of amicus	ii
Summary of argument	v
Statement of Professor Lejeune	1

INTEREST OF AMICUS

The interest of Professor Marx in this case arises from the fact that Marx, a sociologist and Catholic priest foresaw new problems on the horizon about thirty years ago. He foresaw new, rampant VD blighting millions of lives and killing many. He foresaw families under such social pressures that most would either break up or be unreasonably unhappy and many of the rest would have difficulties because they would base their lives on sociological or philosophical errors.

In response, Marx gave up teaching and since has spent his time publishing, traveling and speaking personally and via media about the proper response to these new problems.

For thirty years, Marx has been on the road most of the time and has averaged more than a sixty hour work week. Marx has traveled repeatedly to all states and over 70 nations and was the first to raise modern concerns about the modern sexual failures in about 90% of these states and nations. Marx communicates with experts worldwide.

Professor LeJeune, MD, head of the University of Paris Genetics Dept is no ordinary expert. He is possibly the world's most honored geneticist. By his position and his and his subordinates' research accomplishments, he has established himself as the world's leading expert on the topic of this brief.

This Court presently has the power to do what it will to the preborn. As it reconsiders its past abortion decisions, it should have no doubt that science regards the preborn "subhuman Untermenschen" killed pursuant to its rulings to be fully human beings.

The question is not when human life begins, as some with false humility might claim. The question is how do we treat human life which is weak and vulnerable. Do we repeat past errors when the husband would beat the wife who would then strike the large child who would hit the small child who would kick the dog? Or do we try to really analyze our problems to find lasting solutions which minimize unhappiness and violence?

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The present brief is limited to one topic, evidence from Genetics and related Medical Science that preborn humans at all stages of development after fertilization are and must be individuals. Professor Jerome LeJeune of the University of Paris Medical School Department of Genetics is perhaps the world's leading human geneticist. Among his many discoveries are the genetic basis for Mongolism and numerous aspects of the disease and a probable strategy for a cure. He has been much honored, receiving the Kennedy Award, giving "The William Allan Memorial Award Lecture: On the Nature of Men," American Journal of Human Genetics 22 (1970): 126, etc.

Professor LeJeune testified May 7, 1974, Abortion-Part V, Hearings Before the Subcommittee on Constitutional Amendments of the Committee on the Judiciary, 94th Cong. 1st Session. He also testified under oath before the Abortion Commission, New Zealand Parliament, 1975. These two testimonies were transcribed by attorney for amicus into a book, "Tiniest Humans", Library of Congress No. 77-76811 from which book the present brief is taken.

After working specifically with mongoloid children, I demonstrated that this disease was due to an extra chromosome, and it was for this research that I received the Kennedy Award from the late President.

With my colleagues in Paris, we have particularly described many different chromosomes of man and of primates like the great apes. This type of study has given a new glimpse into the evolution of species. We are deeply involved in new techniques of analysis, and have achieved specific recognition of the old and the new chromosomes during cell divisions.

We are also working on the effect of super-numerary chromosomes. In mongoloid children, we have recently demonstrated an excess of a specific enzyme, super-oxyde dismutase. The eventual relationship between this trouble and the mental retardation of the affected child is under investigation. From this research and other investigations on the clinical functioning of the brain we find no indication that appropriate medication is impossible. In other words, on theoretical grounds, we consider that a medical cure of the mental deficiency is worth investigation.

The transmission of life is quite paradoxical. We know with certainty that the link which relates parents to children is at every moment a material link, for we know it is from the encounter of the female cell (the ovum) and the male cell (the spermatozoa), that a new individual will emerge. But we know with the same degree of certitude that no molecule, no individual particle of matter enclosed in the fertilized egg, has the slightest chance of being transmitted to the next generation. Hence, what is really transmitted is not the matter as such, but a specified conformation of the matter, or more precisely, an 'information'.

Without reviewing the complex machinery of coded molecules like DNA, RNA, proteins, and so on, which are the vehicle of heredity, we can see that this paradox is common to all the processes of reproduction, whether natural or man-made. For example, a statue must be built out of some material, and could not exist if made of pure void. During the casting process, there existed at every moment a contiguity of molecules between the statue and the case, and later, between the cast and the replica. But, obviously, no matter is reproduced, for the replica could be plaster, or bronze, or anything else. What is indeed reproduced is not the matter of the statue, but the form imprinted in the matter by the genius of the sculptor.

Indeed, the reproduction of living beings is infinitely more delicate than the reproduction of an inanimate form, but the process follows a very similar path, as we will see by another familiar example. On the magnetic tape of a tape recorder, it is possible to inscribe by minute alterations of local magnetism, a series of signals corresponding, for example, to the execution of a symphony. Such a tape, if introduced in the appropriate machine, will play the symphony, although there are no musicians in the machine and even no notes written on the tape. That's the way existence is played!

But, in this analogy, the magnetic tape is incredibly thin, for it is reduced to the size of a DNA molecule the miniaturization of which is bewildering. To give an idea of this minuteness, we should remember that in this thread every character of each of us is exactly described. Thou shalt have blond hair, hazel eyes; thou shall be six feet tall, and thou shall live some eighty years, if no road accidents intervene! All these instructions giving a full description of a man, are written in a thread one yard long. But the thread is so thin and so carefully packed inside the nucleus of the cell, that it would stay at ease on the point of a needle.

I should probably give you an idea about the amount of information that is written on that thread. Roughly speaking, we can say that it is around 10 to power of eleven number of informations. That is something which exceeds enormously what you can feed actually on to the biggest computer now in existence. I mean feeding, I do not mean having a delivery done there, but just input in the machine, on the actual memory of the machine, the one which is working. A very big computer, the biggest which we have now, is around a thousand times less powerful than the quantity of information included in the thread of D.N.A.

But it would be also a little too simple to suppose that we can reduce the information on the egg to the information on the tape. Because the egg is by itself the whole tape recorder. The whole machinery is there, so that as soon as the first trigger mechanism functions, the play goes on. And the human symphony starts at its very beginning as soon as the mechanism is triggered.

To give another impression, if we were to reassemble on this table all these threads which will specify each and every quality of the next five billion people who will replace us on the surface of the planet, this quantity of matter would just about fit in an aspirin tablet. The fertilized egg is comparable to a tape recorder loaded. As soon as the mechanism is triggered, the human work is lived, in strict conformity to its program.

Q. Is it quite fair Professor, to ignore entirely the environmental factors in a person's full growth and development?

A. It is fair if the environmental is not as high.

Q. But in a hostile environment that could be a factor?

A. Oh, if you put a man on the moon without his suit he will not survive but that would not prove a man cannot live on the moon.

Q. You cannot ignore human development without having regard to the environment in which it has been developed?

A. Oh yes.

Q. Are you using a figure of speech or are you being exact when you say 'thou shalt be six feet tall'. I am interested seriously in whether this in fact is determined right from the start?

A. I am quite serious and accurate in saying that in the sense that we are told that the size of the body is genetically determined with due respect to nature. The size of the population as you know has increased from generation to generation since around a hundred years. And we know that part of it is due to better nourishment of the babies; that's one thing. But the other thing in that is genetics because the people have crossed, intermarried, so that some genes which were making for smallness or tallness are now spread over the pupulation. The main result is statistically expected to be an increase of the size which it is. We cannot read inside the first cell but if we could, if we were precise enough we would really say he shall be six feet. Yes.

The very fact that we have to develop ourselves during nine months inside the bodily protection of our mother does not change anything, as you can easily observe by looking at the egg of a hen, from which the chicken will emerge. It makes no difference whether he was incubated by the fowl, or by an electrical heating device! The chicken is still a chicken. If one day a child can be entirely grown in a test tube, the test tube will never believe that the child is its property!

Such a reduction of the human being to its very nature may not be very palatable or intuitively satisfactory, but it accurately reflects the present state of our scientific knowledge. When a new student hears for the first time a symphony, let us say the Little Night Music by Mozart, he must listen to the whole in order to know it. But if he is a music lover, he will recognize Mozart at the first bars, and could tell the title at the second or third bar. It's the same with the human symphony. The specialist can recognize it at its first accents, even if a great number of various movements are required so that its general form becomes evident to everyone.

The infinitesimal threads of the genetic information are carefully coiled in little rods, the chromosomes, easily visible with an ordinary microscope. They are something like the magnetic tape inside the cartridge of a minicassette. Twenty years ago, one could not have told the cell of a man from the cell of a chimpanzee. If he had been extremely clever he would have said that probably it is an egg of a high organism, but I am even not sure of that. And without any joke we would not have seen any difference between the fertilized egg of a mouse and that of a whale. The eggs look just the same. Around ten years ago we were able to count the chromosomes both in man and in chimpanzee, and it turned out that man had 46 and the chimpanzee had 48. That was not accepted very easily, because to be king of creation and to have two chromosomes less....! Well, that's one of the examples of the humility of science--humility imposed! But be sure we have corrected that now.

I will try to explain this very briefly because it might be too long; but maybe it will interest you. The precision of the analysis is now much better than it was before. A chromosome around five years ago was seen as something of which you could measure only the length and the position of the point by which the two sister pieces are still held together. This point is the point which allows the two chromosomes to separate and to migrate to the two daughter cells. The new techniques which arose in 1970 make it possible now to see a kind of picture inside the chromosome and recognize each piece of the 23 chromosomes of man and name them by their actual structure. That has entirely changed our impression about genetics so that just now, if one of our students, taking an advanced course of cyto-genetics, was not able to recognize and tell apart a cell of a chimp from a cell of a man, he would fail in his examination. It is so simple that he is not allowed to ignore that any longer. Indeed, three years ago he would have been allowed to ignore everything of that, just because we were ignoring it also. It shows just how relative is the knowledge of the student compared to that of the teachers.

Now I will stop on that, because it would go too far. Just to make you quiet about the fact that we have two chromosomes less than the chimp. I don't want to leave you with that bad impression. Just to make very short a very long story, we know now, thanks to the work of one of my assistants, that the chimpanzee has two chromosomes more than we have because they have two chromosomes which are separated, and in man we have a big chromosome which is made by the sum, the joining of the two chromosomes of the chimp. That was a very comforting discovery, and now we are, at least as far as the quantity of the genetic information is concerned, equal with chimpanzees.

There is something more important about that, which is that this link between two chromosomes head to head was impossible. And it is written in all the textbooks, and I have taught that for ten years, that this kind of change was impossible--for very complex reasons which I will not go into. But we know that the reading of the message starts from one point to go to the end of the chromosome. Now what happens if you join them together is that the two fragments are now not read in man in the same sense they were read in the chimpanzee. The corresponding sequences are now read backwards. That is very interesting because we know from other evidence that the number of genes and the number of genetic differences between man and chimpanzees are exceedingly small. If you count the proteins that we know--we know more than 10,000 of animo-acids and proteins, and chimpanzee and man are similar for more than 99 percent of the formulas of those proteins. And if you look at the D.N.A., at the genetic vehicle, it is the same. We are similar for more than 99 percent of the genetic information.

Then obviously the rational progression which is thus playing on this basic genetic information cannot express anything. But if we look at the chromosomes, the fact of reading one sentence forward or backward changes immediately the whole signification of the sentence; and very likely one of the segments which is actually in the chimpanzee is just a preposterous sentence, but if you read it in the human way then you get signification. And if we are, and everybody believes we are, an accretion of matter--our body is made up of matter--and if it is nevertheless our body, it is just because the information which has moulded the matter was a human information. Otherwise we would be flies or chimpanzees.

But when we speak about human nature we see another fact, which is that the chromosomes, as precisely as we can look at them, are the same in every human species. That is, it doesn't matter what is the colour of the skin, the colour of the eyes, the size of the body, the form of the face, all human beings have the same chromosomes. And this is a very interesting consideration. Indeed, it is a necessity, if we think about the way species are made by chromosomal change; so all the people belonging to the same species must have the same chromosomes.

But it gives another notion, which is that if all human beings have the same chromosomes all around the earth, there must be a reason for that. And the reason obviously is that they have the same ancestor. Now if we look back at the origin of the species by changing the way of reading the same general message of life, then obviously the beginning was on a very tiny stem. And if we work out all the equations, it comes out that to build a new species, chromosome Y needs to start with the smallest number of reproducers, as I told you before. And so it is that the idea of a unique couple does belong to the ensemble of possible solutions.

In fact, curiously, when you want to build a new species, you go deeper than that. And all the new species which have been manufactured by man--they were only in plants--have been manufactured, not only with one couple, but with one individual. The trick is that in some plants you can manufacture the change in the chromosomes--I will not go deeply into technicalities--and you can make them doubled so that they can again fit together. But in plants you can get from the same plant both male and female gametes, so that you can reproduce that new individual and build a species if you have got the right chromosomal shape. And this is what happens. Hence you have to know, as something which is just very simple, precise and well-known, that the only way to build a new species is to start either with one individual if it is a plant, or with one couple if it is a sexual animal.

Q. We know that the human germ cells are only half a human being.

A. They are not a human being.

But can we say that the early human being is an individual just after fecundation? Does he have the two qualities of an individual: its unity and its uniqueness?

(This is the only part of the body of the brief which is not testimony of Prof. Lejeune. Prof. Lejeune then discusses identical twinning in too great detail for this brief. Fraternal twins are distinct individuals who have shared the same parents and time in the same womb. Identical twins after twinning are distinct individuals who are the only exceptions to the general rule that each human has a unique genetic code. Before twinning, the fertilized ovum which will divide into identical twins is an individual in the same sense that each one celled animal such as an amoeba is an individual before dividing.

The sperm and ovum are only discardable parts of human beings which when joined in fertilization become a new human individual.)

It must be asked whether common sense can recognize as such a tiny human being. If very early, only the scientist aided by refined techniques, can tell. If, let us say, at two months everybody knows, and has known for thousands of years.

At two months of age, the human being is less than one thumb's length from the head to the rump. He would fit neatly into a nutshell, but everything is there--hands, feet, head, organs, brain--all are in place. If you look very closely, you would see the palm creases, and if you were a fortune teller, you could read the good adventure of that person. Looking still closer with a microscope, you could detect the fingerprints like Sherlock Holmes--every part is available to give him his national identity card!

The incredible Tom Thumb really does exist. Not the one of the fairy tale, but the one each of us has been.

Abortion is a normal process in imperfect mammals called marsupials. They have a special pouch on the abdomen, conveniently accommodated to nurture the little. In the giant kangaroo, the abortion occurs at the same stage as the little Tom Thumb in man, and is roughly the same size. The aborted foetus then climbs into the fur of its mother to reach the pouch. The bewildering fact is that the kangaroo mother will let him do so, although she would not allow any other kind of animal to drop in! If the poor brain of a female kangaroo can recognize the tiny creature as a kangaroo being, there is no wonder that geneticists can safely assure you that Tom Thumb is indeed a true human being.

Now the question can be raised whether a developing human being should be protected even if he is affected by a disease.

To take a clear cut example let us study the case of mongolism. By puncture of the amniotic cavity in which the foetus is swimming, only cells can be taken so that chromosomal examination could be performed. If the extra chromosome is found, surely enough the child is affected by mongolism. Hence it has been proposed to eliminate him.

To be precise, such investigation can be made after the sixteenth week of pregnancy and the foetus aborted for such reason. In the United States, for example, foetuses aborted for that reason have been aged from eighteen to twenty-four weeks or sometimes up to thirty weeks.

But it should be kept in mind that looking at the chromosomes of a mongoloid foetus gives us two certainties: one, he is affected by the disease for he has an extra chromosome and two, he is a human being as all the rest of his chromosomes demonstrate.

Hence the case is not to decide whether to eliminate a disease, but whether we eliminate a human being affected by the disease.

There is no difference whether the mental retardation is caused by a chromosomal accident, a virus infection, or a road accident.

We do our best to keep alive, assist and if possible cure patients suffering from the sequellae of a traffic accident including the sequellae of brain damage. We have to remember that the road of life is long and dangerous and from its beginning to its old age end in every case the duty of medicine is to strive towards healing and not towards killing.

From molecular genetics to comparative reproduction, nature has taught us that from its very beginning the 'thing' we started with is a member of our kin. Being its own, human by its nature, never a tumor, never an amoeba, fish or quadruped, it is the same human being from fecundation to death. He will develop himself if the surrounding world is not too hostile. And the sole role of medicine is to protect the individual from accidents as much as possible during the long and dangerous road of life.

Q. From your evidence could we conclude that it is a scientific fact that individual life starts from the first moment of conception?

A. That's a very good question sir, and my answer is yes. And the reason is, if I do not say yes, I could not teach genetics. This question is never raised except when you want to discard an embryo. Never does an expert on mice, cats or cattle ask himself at what moment does begin a mouse, or a cat or a cattle. All of them know that they do begin at fecundation and they teach that to their students. I just repeat that no people working with mice or with cattle or with any living system will wonder at what moment does occur the beginning of the cat, the beginning of the fly. Everybody knows that it is at fecundation. It is only when they question what kind of respect should they have for that tiny new being that they discuss beginning, but scientifically there are no discussions. The beginning is at the beginning. Nobody discusses the mousification of a mouse.

Q. Now, from the first time of fertilization or fecundation, Professor Lejeune, is it correct to say that the child is a human being and remains a human being right until his birth?

A. As far as I can understand the use of the English word, saying he is a human being is a correct definition.

Q. So, there is no stage of pregnancy later than fecundation at which he suddenly becomes a human being?

A. Oh, that is very obvious sir, because if you start with the egg of a chimpanzee, if you don't look at the chromosomes, it is very much like, when it divides, the medilla of a human being. But everyone knows that a human being will never emerge from a chimpanzee being. We are at the very beginning either a chimp or a man and never can a chimp become a man or a man become a chimp.

Q. From the time of fecundation, is there any stage at which the new human being, the new human life is a part of the mother?

A. I think not sir, because genetically it is distinct from the first moment of fecundation because half of the patrimony is carried by the sperm, that is the genes of the father, so the child has only one half in common with his mother and the combination, the genetic combination, the genetic makeup of the child is a new one which has never been produced in the history of humanity. That can be calculated easily. Then it cannot be considered at any time as a piece of the mother.

Q. So, from the moment of fecundation he is an entirely separate, individual, human life?

A. I would not say, it is not entirely separated. It is an entirely individual human life, which is momentarily included inside the body of the mother. Not yet separated from the body of the mother, but I will make my answer precise. It is so obvious it is not a piece of the mother that you can make artificial fecundation and have the ovum separated from the body and the sperm separated from the body, have it fecundated, look at it for a few days so that it divides in a few cells, introduce it to a foster uterine mother and you get an entirely normal individual which has none of the genetic qualities of the mother because the mother in that case is only a foster mother. Here we have the finite and complete experimental proof that the entire process means a new life genetically entirely independent of the mother who can be either the true biological mother as is the best case for a human being, or eventually a foster uterine mother.

Q. So, putting the matter in simple terms. Professor, would it be right to say that after fecundation the mother really provides the baby with a home until birth?

A. I would say a little more than a home, sir; I would say that she provides the home and the nurture, and I hope also the love.

Q. Just coming to this question of nurture, Professor, would you describe precisely how the mother nurtures the child while the child is in the uterus?

A. It's a very complex system but the first step is not in the hand of the mother. It is in the hand of the tiny human being. At around five days after fecundation, this microscopic human being, one millimeter in diameter, sends a chemical message which forces the yellow corpus luteum inside the ovary to produce certain hormones so that the menses of the mother will be suppressed. It is in fact the baby which suppresses the menses of the mother and who takes over, if I can say, and it does to her what it likes, and you know it will do it again later. He is really capable of presiding over his own destiny. Now a little later he will bury himself inside the mucosa of the uterus and develop a kind of apparatus that I cannot better describe as a cosmonaut's suit which would make a little bulb which will have a little cord which will go to the big machine and the big machine would be able to take nutrients from the wall of the uterus through a special respiratory system. And it is the foetus which built this extra thing, this extra surrounding of him, this capsule, and the mother just provides by her blood all the nutrients which can go through the membranes so that the baby can be fed, but the whole machinery, I would say the whole space capsule he has, is built by the foetus.

Q. So the foetus is very much in control of his environment?

A. Not entirely, but most of it.

Q. Does the foetus decide when he is going to be born?

A. As far as we know it seems so. Not in pathological cases, in which the mother has some difficulty, so that the pregnancy could end earlier, but during a normal pregnancy, it seems that the signal, the chemical signals of termination of pregnancy and of going in labour and normal delivery is given by the foetus.

Q. You mentioned that at a very early stage, the 'Tom Thumb' stage I think you called it, the foetus is capable of movement. May I read you a description written by a doctor of a six week foetus and ask for your comments on that. The doctor who is writing this description describes how during an operation on the mother, he was handed the baby, in the baby's amniotic sac and the sac was intact, in one piece, and was transparent, he could see into it, and the doctor's description is this:

'Within the sac was a tiny, one-third inch human male, swimming extremely vigorously in the amniotic fluid, while attached to the wall by the umbilical cord. This tiny human was perfectly developed, with long tapering fingers, feet and toes. The baby was extremely alive and swam about the sac approximately one time per second with a natural swimmer's stroke.'

Does that, in your opinion, typify the sort of activity that a foetus would engage in at that age?

A. I would guess so. It seems a relevant description.

Q. Now, have you ever heard it suggested that a human conceptus is other than human?

A. No.

Q. You see, you say that it is not a chick or it's not an amoeba, it's not a tumour, it's not a fish or quadruped. I wondered whether somebody suggested that it was?

A. Yes sir, it has been suggested. It was an old theory of Mr. Haeckel, who was supposing that evolution was recorded more or less, inside the embryonic development, and he was supposing that at the beginning the human egg is an amoeba, and later the tiny embryo is a kind of fish, later a kind of tadpole. The reason why I quoted that, sir, is that it is an old hypothesis which is entirely ruled out by the facts.

Q. Would you know of any scientist who would, today, dispute what you are saying in this regard?

A. No sir, I don't know.

Q. How long ago was it that that person put forward that hypothesis?

A. Around a hundred years ago, sir.

Q. You would have a number of professional colleagues who would not call a conceptus a human being, would you not?

A. It is hard to tell. If I was speaking of the conceptus as a baby, most of them would disagree, and I would myself disagree, but saying a human being, I don't see anybody disagreeing on that.

Q. I am going to suggest to you Professor, that no one would disagree that the conceptus is human. There is no dispute on this at all, but there are valid disputes or disagreements by intelligent and respected people in the scientific world and the medical world who say it is human but we do not call it a human being. Have you colleagues that would fall into such a group?

A. No sir, because I have seen yet nobody saying that a being is not a being.

Q. I haven't heard anyone say that either, Professor, but I am suggesting to you that you may well have colleagues who accept and it would be foolish of course to deny, that the conceptus or the zygote or the embryo, they accept that this is human, and that if left to develop it will become a human being, but they do not call it a human being at that stage?

A. Oh, that can happen that some people do not call something the way they should. That's very possible sir. I would not argue that.

Q. Yes. But you see, you are saying what they should do.

A. I am very simple-minded, sir. I want to make clear that for me a living system which is developing by its own virtues corresponds to the word 'being'. There is no other word. In French we would say en etre, it means the same thing. Now, if that being is human and if you and the person you are quoting do agree on that, I cannot understand why they cannot agree that this being, being human, is a human being. I am sorry, but it seems to me to be just a matter of knowing what we say. Now, if you want to tell me that some people do refrain from using that definition, which is a scientific one, because of the implication they see in those words, that may be done, but it's very far away from scientific description. '

Q. You have just used the term that the expression 'human being' is a scientific description?

A. Yes sir.

Q. Do all scientists agree with you in that statement?

A. That a human being is a scientific description? Yes, sir.

Q. That the term 'human being' is a scientific description of a conceptus?

A. Yes, sir. Of a human conceptus.

Q. Yes, of a human conceptus. You say all scientists agree with you on that, do they?

A. I would say that all of them would agree on the matter. Whether they would pronounce the word as you said is another point. But on the matter they would agree the thing is a being, the thing is human. Sure.

Q. Do I understand you to say that scientifically, there is human life at each stage before birth?

A. Oh, not doubt sir.

Q. I take it that you have read a great deal of the literature on the topics about which you have given evidence, in French and in English?

A. Yes.

Q. In any other language?

A. German, Italian, Spanish, Danish.

Q. Now, the thing, or the conceptus, at the first cell stage is not a being in the same way as there is a being created subsequently in the womb. I suggest to you that when the cell divides it becomes a zygote?

A. It is a zygote as soon as it has become fecundated.

Q. If I can take one of these now while it occurs to me, Professor. Professor Veale will describe the contents of a hen egg as a 'chick embryo'. Would you dispute that description of the contents of a fertilized hen egg?

A. Yes, I would accept it as a chick embryo, and if you were asking me for more precision I would tell you that it is a chicken being.

Q. Now whether you describe it as a chick embryo or a chicken being, you are in fact describing the same thing, are you not?

A. No sir. While I am speaking about a chicken embryo, I am speaking of a being who has a given age. When I am speaking about a chicken beirg it can have any age. It can be very old. It can be not puber. It can be a tiny chicken or it can be inside the egg. It is not the same thing. In humans I would say a human being for a school boy and for a grown up. But if you ask me whether I suppose a grown up is the same thing as a school boy I would say no. But I would say both of them are human beings.

Q. Professor, would you care to give us your definition first of conceptus. We talked this morning about conceptus, about foetus, about embryo?

A. What we call a conceptus, broadly speaking, is the result of fecundation, so that all necessary information and all sufficient information is gathered, so that this being can be defined as belonging to such or such kind and being a full member of it, genetically speaking.

Now, when we speak about embryo, it's a little later. It's a matter of age. It has aged and developed itself into the special form we call embryo. When he is a little more grown, after two months, we call him a foetus and when he is just born we call him a newborn. When he goes to school we call him a school boy and so on. Those are stages of development of a certain person.

Q. The one question which falls into this section I suppose is the definition of a human being and I am not sure whether we have a simple, precise definition of a human being as Professor Lejeune would define a human being. Would you give us a definition of a human being?

A. A human being is a member of our species.

Q. And you would not want to define it any more than that?

A. I am a biologist sir. If I was asked about another species I would give the same answer. Changing the species, indeed.

Q. Professor, before the adjournment we were starting a discussion about a zygote and I think we have established that you would call the conceptus or the single cell formed on fecundation a human being. Accepting your definition for the moment I suggest to you that the conceptus is more than a human being?

A. No. It is a given age of a human being.

Q. I suggest to you that the conceptus or the zygote divides and part of it becomes a placenta, part of it becomes an umbilical cord and part becomes an embryo.

A. That is correct.

Q. Would you call the placenta a human being?

A. I would call it a part of a human being, one of the things a human being is able to make. Exactly as I would call a nail part of a human being and not a human being itself.

Q. Is the placenta part of the human being which is the embryo or part of the human being which is the mother?

A. The placenta is made by the embryo as you know so it cannot be part of the mother.

Q. The placenta is part of the human being that is the embryo?

A. That is one of the parts of the human being like your hair or part of your being, but you cannot be reduced to your hair.

Q. So if you were to describe the human being while it is a foetus you might have to call it the embryo plus the umbilical cord plus the placenta and that constitutes a human being?

A. No, that is..let me think about it. Your question is a little complicated for me...I would consider that the human being is the foetus and that the surroundings he has produced are part of him. Yes, I would say, I do not know the word, a 'disposable' part.

Q. Is trisomy likely to occur in cases of women over a particular age?

A. While the risk of chromosomal disease, especially for trisomy 21, is increased with the aging of the mother, that is, it is increasing exponentially with the aging, to give an idea, the risk, at the best age for reproduction which is roughly 25, between 23 and 26, the risk is one in 2000 and at the reproductive time around 45 years old the risk would go up to one% maybe 2%.

Q. Moving on now, in the hospital in which you are in charge of the department, I take it that some of the children at least under your control, are suffering from Mongolism or Down's Syndrome?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell us anything about the attitude, the happiness, or the quality of life of the children themselves?

A. If they are kept in their family and if they are loved by their parents, I would say they are surely among the happiest people in the world. They do not worry about anything. They are very easy going, and as far as the child is concerned, I would say he is very happy.

Q. I take it that you could not yourself be party to a termination because you believe that it is the killing of a human being?

A. It is not I believe, sir. It is I am sure, and nobody discusses that when you have a baby at around thirty, perhaps 25 weeks, at that size if you laid him without killing outside the womb, everybody looking at the fellow would not ask himself has it begun to be a human being. Everybody would know that it was a tiny human being dying on the operating table. That is not a belief, sir it's an efficient knowledge.

Q. And you say that, because of the increased knowledge which you have, and the accepted knowledge that enables you to describe the embryo, and I take your definition of embryo as a human being, that this involves the killing of a human being and because of that fact, you could not be party to it, is that right?

A. Oh, that is right sir. I don't measure the humanness with kilogrammes, with centimetres, but just as the fact they are a member of our species.

Q. Now do you accept that other people can genuinely say that they do not regard the embryo as a human being?

A. Oh, sir, if they say that they do not, then probably they do not. But it is not a reason for me to believe they are right.

Q. No, I am not asking you to believe that they are right. I am asking you do you accept that they can reach this decision in good faith?

A. I don't know that, sir. Who can be inside the brain and inside the heart of the people. We are speaking about scientific fact. It is easy that we get clear with that. Now, if you ask me whether somebody, thinking in another way than I, is bona fide, you are asking me to read in her heart and I cannot.

Q. So that you would not want to pass any judgment on a person who says that in good faith they can terminate a pregnancy but who would also say in good faith that I could not possibly kill another human being?

A. I would consider, sir, that they are making a scientific mistake.

Q. Are they making a moral mistake?

A. I have said scientific mistake.

Q. No, I am asking you, would you say they are making a moral mistake?

A. Now, if we are going to speak about moral, you would first tell me whether it is moral to eliminate a member of our species, and then I would answer you.

Q. I understand that one of the possibilities of conception is what is called a hydatiforme mole.

A. Oh, no sir. Because it is related with a disease which is called mole hydatiforme, and it is very true that in some cases after fecundation some disease, we do not know really the mechanism of which, transforms the conceptus into a mass of vesicles which can nowhere get any human form. That's very true. It's very rare, but we have to know that this can occur on normal babies so that only vesicles develop on the placenta. Then I would say that an early mole is a process which can kill a human conceptus but not change the nature of the tiny dead-body. Now, when it was said in the paragraph you quoted that sometimes it happens that the conceptus will not go to term even if undisturbed, that's very true and it does represent maybe one third of all the pregnancies. But I cannot agree that it has no statistical implication. It means that any conceptus has at least two chances in three to survive, but then I would precisely put the point that does not give us any reason to say that the one which eventually would be naturally aborted was not a human being. It's the same thing when you are in front of a corpse. It's not because it is dead that you can say it was not a human being. That has no significance. And I would say that really if abortion sometimes eliminates an already dead human being, that can occur, but statistically speaking, that is not the prospect of abortion, because if it was supposed that the baby would die by itself nobody would take care about using any process to kill him. Then I think this kind of argument, that a human being sometimes does die in utero is not relevant to the discussion. It is not because sometimes when you are in the woods one of the fellows there could be already dead that you have to try to shoot him.

Q. So you are quite prepared and would want to describe the conceptus that is killed by the development into a hydatiforme mole or that is spontaneously aborted, at whatever stage, you would still want to call that conceptus a human being?

A. I would say it has been a human being, but not for long, early killed, early dead.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons submitted herein, the Court should hold that the preborn human is an individual and accordingly, should be declared a person for purposes of the 14th Amendment of the United States Constitution pursuant to the definition set forth in Title 1 United States Code Section 1.

Respectfully submitted,

ROBERT L SASSONE

Attorney for Amicus Curiae

NO. 88-605
IN THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES
OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L WEBSTER, ET AL., APPELLANTS
V
REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, ET AL.
RESPONDENTS

Affidavit of mailing of amicus brief copies, Rule 28.2

State of California } ss.
City of Santa Ana, County of Orange }

Robert L. Sassone, being first duly sworn on his oath deposes and says:

Robert L. Sassone is a member of the Bar of the United States Supreme Court admitted October 26, 1971. To his knowledge, on February 23, 1989, within the particular time and permitted time for serving of said amicus brief pursuant to Rule 28.2, he deposited in the United States mailbox at Santa Ana, CA 92701 pursuant to Rule 28.2 with first class postage prepaid 40 copies of the attached amicus brief in the present case properly addressed to the Clerk of the United States Supreme Court and three copies of said amicus brief to each party addressed as follows:

ROGER K EVANS, ESQ.
DARA KLASSEL, ESQ.
BARBARA OTTEN, ESQ.
PLANNED PARENTHOOD
FEDERATION OF AMERICA, INC
810 7TH AVE.
NEW YORK, NY 10019

FRANK SUSSMAN, ESQ.
THOMAS M. BLUMENTHAL
SUSMAN, SCHERMER,
RIMMEL & SHIFREN
10TH FLOOR
7711 CARONDELET AVE.
ST. LOUIS MISSOURI 63105

WILLIAM WEBSTER, ATTORNEY GENERAL
MICHAEL L. BOICOURT, ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL
JERRY L. SHORT, ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL
6TH FLOOR BROADWAY BUILDING
PO BOX 899
JEFFERSON CITY, MISSOURI
65102

_____
ROBERT L. SASSONE, Affiant

Subscribed and sworn to before me on February 23, 1989.

_____
LAWRENCE D. SASSONE, Notary Public

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, ET A.L., APPELLANTS

v.

Reproductive Health Services, ET A.L.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR AUSTIN VAUGHN AND CRUSADE FOR LIFE, INC. AS AMICUS CURIAE SUPPORTING APPELLANTS

ROBERT L. SASSONE
Attorney at Law
900 North Broadway • Suite 725
Santa Ana, California 92701
(714) 547-5611

MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE A BRIEF AS AMICUS CURIAE ON BEHALF OF WEBSTER

AUSTIN VAUGHN, a Roman Catholic bishop from New York, and CRUSADE FOR LIFE, INC., a Californis 501c(3) educational and charitable corporation hereby respectfully move for leave to file a brief amicus curiae in the present case. Requested consent of respondent has not been obtained. Thomas M Blumenthal of respondent stated to attorney for amicus that an agreement of the parties ensured consent if written consent of one party is obtained, so perhaps consent of respondent has just been delayed.

INTEREST OF AMICI CURIAE

Bishop Vaughn has repeatedly arrested and jailed for trespassing at abortion clinics. Crusade of Life, Inc., Donald S Smith founder and chairman, Beverly Cielnicki, president, is a US and international Protestant Evangelical 501 (c)(3) right to life organization. It is probably the oldest and is one of the largest Protestant right to life organizations. Amici provide a short summary of early Christian attitudes toward abortion and show why these attitudes should be considered.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Item	Page
Motion for leave to file a brief as amicus curiae on behalf of Webster	i
Interest of each amicus curiae	ii
Summary of argument
The New Testament and the early community	1
American Christian church & abortion	38
Two conflicting theories of law	41
Court should not always act as if there were no God	45
Conclusion	59

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Authority	Page
1. John T Noonan, Jr "The Morality of Abortion" Harvard University Press, Cambridge, Mass. (1970, 1972)	iii
Notes begin with Noonan's note 17, Noonan's notation system is followed so some numbers are omitted since previously referred to.
17. Clyde Pharr, "The Interdiction of Magic in Roman Law" 63 Transactions and Proceedings of the American Philological Association 272-73 (1932)	4
18. Plutarch, Romulus 22	5
19. R H Charles, 2 A Critical Commentary and Exegesis of Revelations 178 (1920)	6
20. Theodore Camelot, "Didache," 3 Lexikon fur Theologie and Kirche 369 (1959) and Jean-Paul Avdet, "La Didache: Instructions des Apotres" 197 (Paris, 1958)	7
21. Montagne Rhodes James (1953) "Apocryphal New Testament" Oxford revEd)	10, 11
23. Pedagogus 2. 10. 96. 1, "Die griechischen christlichen Schriftsteller der ersten drei Jahrundert"	12, 22
24. "Embassy for the Christians, Patrologia Graeca" 6.919	14, 32, 33, 34
25. "Corpus Scriptorum Ecclesiasticorum Latinorum" (CSEL)	15, 25, 26, 27, 29, 30, 31
26. T Mommsen, Romisches Strafrecht 613 (1899)	16
27. Apologeticum ad nationes"	17
28. "De Anima" ed. J H Waszink 25.5-6 (1947)	20

Authority	Page
29. Franz Dolger, "Antike und Christendum" vol. 4 at 46	20
31. Cyprian, "Epistle"	22
32. J D Mansi, "Sacrorum conciliorum nova et amplissima collectio"	24
34. "Didiscalia et constitutiones apostolorum 7.3.2, ed Francis X Funk (Paderborn, 1905)	25
37. Augustine "De origine animae" 4.4 (PL 44.527);	26
37. Jerome, "On Ecclesiastes" 2.5	26
40. Palomo Gonzales "El Aborto en San Augustino	29
42. Seneca: "Fragmenta"	32
48. Roger John Huser, "The Crime of Abortion in Canon Law" (Washington, 1942)	36, 37 33-39
50. "Womanly Questions, Die irische Kanonsammlung", F W H Wasserscheben (Leipzig, 1885)	37
51. John T Noonan, Jr, "Contraception" Cambridge, Mass. 1965	37
52. Burchard of Worms Interrogatory"Decretum" 19-4, PL 140.972	37
53. Hans Kelsen, The Pure Theory of Law, trans, Max Knight from 2d ed. (Berkely: U of California Press, 1967)	44

SUMMARY

The framers of the Constitution, Bill of Rights and 14th Amendment were not only men. They were for the most part of that class of men called "Christian men ". In that part of the Douglas papers relating to the abortion decisions, it is obvious this is overlooked. The attitude of the Justices was Kelsen like. They ignored both the possibility of God existing and the certainty that the possibility of God existing colored the intent of the framers of the Constitution, Bill of Rights and 14th Amendment.

Accordingly, the first 38 pages of this brief comprise a quote from John T Noonan, Jr. "The Morality of Abortion" Harvard University Press, Cambridge Mass. (1970, 1972), (according to a professor of such history, the best short summary of early Christian thought on early Christian abortion teaching), pages 7-19. Noonan was a professor of Law at the U of California when he wrote and is now a Federal judge.

The balance of the brief discusses the depth of Christianity as many of the framers would have known it and believed it, a belief which may still be held by most and color the opinions of many Americans, even many of those Americans who no longer claim or never claimed to be Christians. It is hoped will help the Court understand why many of the framers would not have intended to frame a Constitution, Bill of Rights or later a 14th Amendment which might make unconstitutional a law penalizing abortion, characterized by Pope and many Protestants as an "unspeakable crime". (language more extreme than that used to describe murder because of the innocence and vulnerability of the victim).

The New Testament and the Early Community

The specific Christian teaching on abortion developed in a theological context in which the commands of the Old Testament to love God with all your heart (Deut. 6:5) and to love your neighbor as yourself (Lev. 19:18) were singled out as the two great commandments on which depended "the whole law and the prophets" (Matt. 22:40). The standard for fulfillment of these commandments was set in terms of the sacrifice of man's life for another (John 15:13) and embodied in the self-sacrifice of Jesus. Jesus told the disciples, "This is my commandment, that you love one another as I have loved you" (John 15:32). In terms of his example, the commandment was "a new commandment" (John 13:34). The Christian valuation of life was made in view of this commandment of love.

The place of children in the Christian community was broadly established in the words of the Lord, "Suffer little children (paidia) and do not prevent them from coming to me" (Matt. 19:14; Mark 10:14; Luke 18:16). In Luke 18:15, the children the Lord welcomed were expressly described as "newborn babies" (brephe). The ethos of the infancy narratives reflected a high interest in infant and fetal life. The infanticide practiced by Herod and its violent threat to the life of Jesus formed the introduction to the life of the Messiah (Matt. 2:1-18). Mary was described as having in her womb what was "from the Holy Spirit" (Matt. 1:18). In Luke she was greeted in pregnancy by Elizabeth "as the mother of my Lord," and the "fruit" of her womb was then described as "blessed" (Luke 1:42). The infant (brephos) in Elizabeth's womb "leaps" when Elizabeth is greeted by Mary (Luke 1:40). The interest in the behavior of this holy but not miraculous child of Elizabeth and the interest in the life in Mary's womb reflected the valuations of a community sensitive to the living character of the embryo, and the Gospel accounts must in turn have enhanced that sensitivity. What was unspoken was in its way as important as what was said in reflecting community valuations, attitudes, expectations. It was not necessary in this community to say that a man who protected the state by killing infants was not a good man. It was necessary to say that the first reaction of Joseph to Mary's unexplained pregnancy was "to put her away" (Matt. 2:19); it was not necessary to say that his first thought was not to procure an abortion.

At the level of specific moral rule, the Apostle Paul denounced the foolish carnality of the Christian community in Galatia (Gal. 3:1-6), reminded them that there was a law which was fulfilled in one word, "Love your neighbor as yourself" (5:14), and set out specific types of behavior which violated this law of love (5:19-21). The works of the flesh included not only "lecheries" and "wraths" but pharmakeia (5:20). Pharmakeia is a term best translated as "medicine" in the sense in which a North American Indian medicine man makes medicine.[17] It is the employment of drugs with occult properties for a variety of purposes, including, in particular, contraception or abortion.[18] Paul's usage here cannot be restricted to abortion, but the term he chose is comprehensive enough to include the use of abortifacient drugs. The association of these drugs with sins of lechery and wrath was indeed a constant aspect of the Christian approach to pharmakeia (the practice of "medicine") and pharmaka (the drugs employed).

17. See Clyde Pharr, "The Interdiction of Magic in Roman Law," 63

The same association and same comprehensive use of the term appeared in the Apocalypse. The sinners who were Transactions and Proceedings of the American Philological Association 272-73 (1932). The word is regularly mistranslated as "sorcery" or "witchcraft" in English Bibles.

18. Plutarch, Romulus 22, in Parallel Lives, trans. B. Perrin (New York, 1914-1926).

not saved "did not repent of their homicides nor their medicine (pharmaka) nor their fornications nor their thefts" (9:21). The pharmakai, the medicine men, were condemned by the Lord with the homicides and the fornicators (21:8). Those outside the heavenly city were "the dogs and the medicine-men and the fornicators and the homicides and the idolaters and everyone who loves and practices falsehood" (22:15). [19]

That abortion could have been specifically in the mind of the authors of Galatians and the Apocalypse, and that it was specifically dealt with by the early Christian communities, is 19. "Dogs" may mean simply "heathen," but it was also applied to the sodomitic priests who served Astarte. See R. H. Charles, 2 A Critical Commentary and Exegesis of Revelations 178 (1920).

established by several contemporary writings. The most important is the Didache, or Teaching of the Twelve Apostles. This ancient and authoritative statement of Christian principles in Syria was composed no later than A.D. 100 and may well have been written much earlier. [20] Here a list of precepts was given for the instruction of the Christian: "You shall not kill. You shall not commit adultery. You shall not corrupt boys. You shall not fornicate. You shall not steal. You shall not make magic. You shall not practice medicine 20. The later date is preferred by Theodore Camelot, "Didache," 3 Lexikon fur Theologie and Kirche 369 (1959). An early date, connecting the work with an apostolic mission at Antioch, is preferred by the author of a recent detailed study, Jean-Paul Avdet, La Didache: Instructions des Apotres 197 (Paris, 1958).

(pharmakeia). You shall not slay the child by abortions (phthora). You shall not kill what is generated. You shall not desire your neighbor's wife" (Didache 2.2). In this list of related sins, one sentence expressly prohibited abortifacients. The commands on either side of this sentence dealt with other aspects of the same sin, as the commandments on sexual sins complemented each other. Abortion was ranked as a principle sin included with those sins expressly named by the Ten Commandments.

In the kernal of the Didache, which is probably its oldest part, the Two Ways, the Way of Life was contrasted with the Way of Death. The latter way was followed by sinners who included those who practice "medicine" and those who are "killers of the child, who abort the mold (plasma) of God." Again there was a complementary character to the acts denounced: pharmakeia, killing of the child, and abortion. The offense of abortion was seen as an offense against God because it attacked what He had made. It was associated with the sinful use of drugs to prevent birth and with the slaying of the child. It may be that both abortion of the mold and killing of the child were mentioned so that any distinction between formed and unformed fetuses would not provide an escape.

The somewhat later Epistle of Barnabas was based on the Didache and provided a commentary by its paraphrases and additons. It put the commandment on abortion in the Didache 2.2 in this framework: "You shall love your neighbor more than than your own life. You shall not slay the child by abortions. You shall not kill what is generated" (Barnabas 19.5). The proscription was thus related to the love of neighbor. The killing of the fetus to save one's own life was implicitly rejected.

A third writing is of special relevance to the teaching of the canonical Apocalypse. This is the Acocalype of Peter, a species of apocalyptic literature which "ranked next in popularity and probably in date to the canonical Apocalypse of St. John."[21] Here there was a pit of torment for sinners, among them women "who have caused their children to be born untimely and have corrupted the work of God who created them." The phrasing was close to the "abort the mold of God" of the Way of Death in the Didache. Some of these women had conceived the children in fornication; others had husbands who were punished with them because "they forsook the commandments of God and slew their children."[22] The offense described was killing what God had made, an offense heightened because it was mothers who had killed their own offspring.

21. Montague Rhodes James, The Apocryphal New Testament 505 (Oxford, rev. ed. 1953).

The Fathers

Later in the second century the writing of the "most learned" of the

22. Id. at 510 (James's translation from the Ethiopic text). In the same style the much later Apocalypse of Paul condemns women who "defiled the creation of God when they brought forth children from the womb," i.e., by abortion (id. at 545).

Fathers, Clement of Alexandria, also contained a statement on abortion. In the Pedagogus, Clement, the founder of the first school of Christian theology, sought to present Christ as the supreme educator for Christians and to provide teaching on Christian morality to the turbulent Christian community at Alexandria. He declared that Christians do not, in order to hide their fornication, "take away human nature, which is generated from the providence of God, by hastening abortions and applying abortifacient drugs (phthoriois pharmakois) to destroy utterly the embryo and, with it, the love of man."[23] Here there is the same nexus of ideas found in the first century. Drugs to destroy offspring are associated with lechery. Their use is condemned not merely because they furnish an aid to sexual sin or incorporate magic, but because they offend God in destroying what He has shaped and because they violate the love of neighbor in destroying the fetus.

23. Pedagogus 2.10.96.1, Die grieschen christlichen Schriftsteller der ersten drei Jahrhundert (hereafter GCS).

The foregoing documents were all addressed to Christian communities containing converts and were directed to impressing the new Christian morality upon them. Other evidence of Christian belief is furnished by the Christian claims addressed to the pagans. The contention was made that Christians are "homicides or devourers of men." The second-century philosopher and Christian convert Athenagoras answered this charge in his apologia for Christianity to the emperor: "How can we kill a man when we are those who say that all who use abortifacients are homicides and will account to God for their abortions as for the killing of men. For the fetus in the womb is not an animal, and it is God's providence that he exist."[24] The dedicated Christian defense of life at the embryonic stage seemed to Athenagoras the surest proof of the Christian reverence for life.

In a similar vein the lawyer Minucius Felix repelled the charge of infanticide in his apologia (c. 190-200): Who would believe that the tender bodies of infants would be destroyed? "No one would believe it unless he dared it." In charging this crime the pagans reveal their own conduct. They expose their unwanted children to wild beasts and birds or strangle them. "By drinks of drugs they extinguish in their viscera the beginning of a man-to-be and, before they bear, commit parricide." These things are derived from their gods, for Saturn devoured his own children.[25] The use of the term parricidium is especially striking here. Roman law had no generic term for the "killing of a man," and so Minucius used the closest legal term in use, "parricide," the killing of a near relation, designating a crime punished with great severity by the law. It conveyed the idea of heinous killing at the same time that Minucius expanded its meaning far beyond its recognized legal meaning to encompass abortion.[26] In describing the pagans' practice, he expressed his own judgment that it was wrong. At the same time he made the suggestion, of much psychological interest, that the Greek myth of a god devouring his children was related to abortion.

24. Embassy for the Christians, Patrologia Graeca 6. 919 (hereafter PG).

25. Octavius, CSEL 2. 43.

In a parallel passage Tertullian in his apologia to the pagans dismissed the charge of infanticide practiced by Christians and asserted: "For us, indeed, as homicide is forbidden, it is not lawful to destroy what is conceived in the womb while the blood is still being formed into a man. To prevent being born is to accelerate homicide, nor does it make a difference whether 26. On the meaning of parricidium see T. Mommsen, Romisches Strafrecht 613 (1899).

you snatch away a soul which is born or destroy one being born. He who is man-to-be is man, as all fruit is now in the seed."[27] The substance is the same as the Two Ways: the mold in the womb may not be destroyed. The offense is expressed as the killing of a potential human, an act which seems forbidden by the commandment, "You shall not kill."

27. Apologeticum ad nationes 1.15. The relation of Tertullian to Minucius is discussed in Marti Sordi, "L' apologia del martire romano Apollonio come fonte dell' Apologeticum di Tertulliano e i rapporti fra Tertulliano e Minucio," 18 Rivesta di storia della Chiesa in Italia 169-188 (1964). Another example of apologetical criticism of pagan inhumanity toward children is provided by Lactantius, Divinarum institutionum 6. His strong terms seem principally aimed at infanticide and the abandonment of children to beasts, but may include abortion and reflect the teaching of the Didache when he says that "with wicked hands they corrupt the works of God." The central thought is, "It is always wrong to kill a man; this animal God willed to be sacred," Patrologia latina 6, 707-708 (hereafter PL).

In his treatise on ensoulment Tertullian appealed to a mother's experience of the being within her to establish that a living and therefore ensouled being existed in pregnancy: "In this matter, there is no more fitting teacher, judge, witness, than one of this sex. Reply, you mothers, you bearers of children, let the sterile and the masculine be silent, the truth of your nature is sought." He continued the argument by noting that dead embryos were extracted from a womb and asked:

How are they dead unless they were first alive? But still in the womb an infant by necessary cruelty is killed when lying twisted at the womb's mouth he prevents birth and is a matricide unless he dies. Therefore there is among the arms of physicians an instrument by which with a rotary movement the genital parts are first opened, then with a cervical instrument the interior members are slaughtered with careful judgment by a blunt barb, so that the whole criminal deed is extracted with a violent delivery. There is also the bronze needle by which the throat-cutting is carried out by a robbery in the dark; this instrument is called an embryo--knife from its function of infanticide, as it is deadly for the living infant. This Hippocrates taught, and Asclepiades, and Erasistratus and Herophilus, the dissecter of adults, and the milder Soranos himself,--all of them certain that a living being had been conceived and so deploring the most unhappy infancy of one of this kind who had first to be killed lest a live woman be rent apart. Of this necessity of crime, Hicesius, I believe, did not doubt, as he added souls to those being born from blows of cold air, because the word itself for "soul" among the Greek relates to such cooling. [28]

Tertullian is here not making direct moral judgments, as he is focusing on the argument that even this kind of fetus has been alive. But the suggestion of Franz Dolger that this passage accepts therapeutic abortion is clearly wrong. [29] What the physicians find necessary Tertullian finds a 28. De anima, ed. J. H. Waszink, 25.5-6 (1947). I have adopted Waszink's learned and helpful suggestions on translation.

29. Franz Dolger, Antike und Christentum, vol. 4, at 46. See the extended refutation of Dolger by Constancio Palomo Gonzalez, El aborto en San Augustino at 221-228 (Salamanca, 1959).

crime, and he uses the strongest terms of vituperation to stigmatize it--"slaughtered" (caeduntur), "victim of a crime" (facinus), "throat-cutting" (iugulatio, a fierce, vulgar term), "infanticide" (infanticidium), "crime" (scelus). His harsh and sarcastic rhetoric deliberately contracts the "careful judgment" of the physician with the "violent delivery" effected like "a robbery in the dark."

In addition to its expression in formal moral teaching and apologias to the gentiles, the Christian belief was expressed in the course of controvery within the Church. Abortior was a serious charge in ecclesiastical disputes. When the ex-slave Calixtus, bishop of Rome, permitted Christian women to marry their slaves though the marriages were unrecognized by Roman law, some women did not want to draw attention to their union, and used drugs to produce sterility or "bound themselves tightly to expel a fetus already engendered." According to Calixtus' critic and bitter rival, Hippolytus, this conduct was homicide, and Calixtus was responsible for encouraging it. [30] When Novatian broke from Rome because its bishop accepted the repentance of apostates, his foe Cyprian wrote of him that he was himself guilty of serious sin: he had struck his pregnant wife to cause an abortion. He has "committed parricide"; "he has killed a son who was being born." [31] A lawyer like Minucius, Cyprian used the legal term

30. Hippolytus, Elenchos 9.12.25, GCS 26.250.

31. Cyprian, Epistle 52, CSEL 3.619.

"parricide." The charge of a crime inexpiable in life was no doubt especially effective against a man who denied others an opportunity to repent.

As the Church emerged as a legal religion and a social force in the fourth century, the sentiments on abortion so uniformly expressed in the first two centuries of Christian life took the form of legislation. There already existed a rule excluding from the Church for life women who conceived in fornication and committed an abortion. The Council of Ancyra in 314, a gathering of a dozen Eastern bishops representing Syria and Asia Minor, denounced such women, who "slay what is generated and work to destroy it with abortifacients"; but "more humanely" the Council reduced their penance to ten years. [32] The Council retained the life penance for voluntary homicide, so that the reduction marked a recognition of mitigating circumstances in the character of the crime, while its gravity was indicated by the still severe penalty imposed. In the West, in some contrast, the movement was toward greater sanctions. At Elvira on the Iberian peninsula, a council held in 305 excommunicated women committing abortion after adultery and declared that they were not to be readmitted even at the point of death. [33]

These laws, like the earlier condemnations, made no distinction between the formed and unformed fetus.

32. Council of Ancyra, canon 21, J. D. Mansi, Sacrorum conciliorum nova et amplissima collectio (hereafter Mansi) 2. 5. 19.

33. Council of Elvira, canon 53, Mansi 2. 16.

In the course of the fourth century this distinction, based for Christians on the Septuagint translation of Exod. 21: 22, became a focus for analysis. In the East the Apostolic Constitutions, an apocryphal, set of apostolic canons from Syria, condemned the killing of a "formed fetus." [34] In the West, St. Jerome explained to a female correspondent, Algasia, that "seeds are gradually formed in the uterus, and it is not reputed homicide until the scattered elements received their appearance and members." [35] Augustine, commenting on a Latin translation from the Septuagint, observed that at Exod. 21 the question of ensoulment was usually raised, and "because the great 34. Didiscalia et constitutiones apostolorum 7. 3. 2, ed. Francis X. Funk (Paderborn, 1905).

35. Epistles 121. 4, CSEL 56. 16.

question about the soul is not to be hastily decided by unargued and rash judgment, the law does not provide that the act pertains to homicide, for there cannot yet be said to be a live soul in a body that lacks sensation when it is not formed in flesh and so not yet endowed with sense."[36] This was a distinction accepted out of a cautious agnosticism on ensoulment; both Jerome and Augustine affirmed that, in fact, man did not know when the rational soul was given by God.[37]

As far as Jerome and Augustine were concerned, the theoretical distinction led to no difference in

36. On Exodus 21.80, CSEL 28.147. The old Latin text spoke of "aborting an immature one," A. E. Brooke and Norman McLean, The Old Testament in Greek (1909)

37. Augustine, De origine animae 4.4 (PL 44.527); Jerome, On Ecclesiastes 2.5.

moral disapprobation. They simply adopted language broad enough to condemn both contraceptive acts and acts destroying the fetus after conception. Jerome wrote to his star pupil Eustochium on how to preserve her virginity among the temptations to adolescents in Rome. He denounced those Christian girls who, saying "all things are pure to the pure," had affairs and sought to prevent or conceal pregnancy. Some "will drink sterility and kill a man not yet born". Others will use potions to commit abortions. These are parricides, and as sometimes the abortifacients are fatal to them, too, they go to judgment thrice condemned as adulteresses, killers of their children, and killers of themselves.[38]

38. Jerome, Epistle 22, To Eustochium 13, CSEL 54.160-61.

Here, in the language of Minucius, abortion became parricide, and the age of the fetus was unmentioned.

Augustine in his anti-Pelagian work, Marriage and Concupiscence, analyzed abortion with his usual attention to psychology. Using terms that seem to anticipate modern analyses of sadism, he described it as the work of minds characterized by "lustful cruelty" or "cruel lust." Speaking of the married who avoided offspring, he declared, "Sometimes (Aliquando) this lustful cruelty or cruel lust comes to this that they even procure poisons of sterility, and if these do not work, they extinguish and destroy the fetus in some way in the womb, preferring that their offspring die before it lives, or if it was already alive in the womb, to kill it before it was born. Assuredly if both husband and wife are like this, they are not married, and if they were like this from the beginning, they come together not joined in matrimony but seduction. If both are not like this, I dare to say that either the wife is in a fashion the harlot of her husband, or he is an adulter with his own wife."[39] Augustine thus condemned three kinds of acts: contraception, the killing of the fetus before it is formed or "lives," and the killing of the live fetus. The analysis was a new approach in treating each of these acts as a sin against marriage.[40]

39. Augustine, De nuptiis et concupiscentia 1.15.17, CSEL 42.229-30.

40. In his El aborto en San Augustino, Constancio Palomo Gonzalez states that Augustine considered abortion to be homicide and entitles one section of this book "Abortion, A Grave Sin of Homicide According to St. Augustine." However, he cites no text where Augustine so teaches. True, Augustine holds every killing of a man to be homicide, as

The preservation of life within the womb also became a reason for restricting what St. Paul in the First Epistle to the Corinthians had set outin terms of justice, the right to Gonzalez argues at 217. True, Augustine speaks of the infusion of the soul in the uterus by God. True, for Augustine the distinction between formed and unformed, which he accepted from the Septuagint, was not the same as a distinction between souled and soulless (Gonzalez at 141-142). Speaking of embryos "dead" in the womb, which had to be extracted to prevent the death of the mother, Augustine said he did not dare deny that they had lived (Enchiridion c. 86, PL 40.272). In The City of God, Augustine declared he found nothing relevant to the resurrection of the dead which did not relate to "those of all kinds who have died in their mothers' wombs" (De civitate Dei 12.13). This statement, Gonzalez well notes, supposes the belief that the fetus was ensouled at all stages. But while it may be argued from this belief that Augustine should have called abortion homicide, he did not do so, and his reservation can only reflect his uncertainty about the time of ensoulment.

Stronger language is found in Augustine's old teacher, At. Ambrose, who had denounced the use of a "parricidal potion" of married mothers "to take away life before it is transmitted," Hexameron 5.18.58, CSEL 32.184. Ambrose, while speaking thus of parricide, had emphasized in particular the cruelty of mothers in destroying their children and invoked the "piety" of birds to their young to rebuke them.

intercourse within marriage (1 Cor. 7:3-5). Led by Stoic thought to restrict intercourse to procreative purpose along, many Christian writers prohibited the necessarily nonprocreative intercourse of the pregnant. But an additional reason for the prohibition was found in the danger to the embryo that such intercourse was believed to create. Commenting on the pregnancy of Elizabeth in the Gospel of Luke, Ambrose stated the belief that intercourse in pregnancy "contaminated" the offspring.[41] Even more forcefully, Jerome incorporated a quotation from Seneca vigorously attacking intercourse from "affection," not "judgment," and urging restraint at least in pregnancy, so as not to 41. Expositio evangelii secundum Lucam 1-43-45, CSEL 32.38-39.

"destroy the offspring."[42] Thus the risk of abortion became a reason for limiting what St. Paul had described as duty.

The principal texts quoted from Jerome and Augustine were to be the loci classici on abortion in the West. In the East, St. John Chrysostom preached against abortion as encouraged by married men engaged in intercourse with prostitutes: "You do not let a harlot remain only a harlot but make her a murderess as well."[43] In the most definitive statement by a leader of the Greek Christian community, St.

42. Contra Jovinianum 1.49, in Seneca: Fragmenta n. 84, ed. F. G. Haase (Leipzig, 1897). In its original context in Seneca, the injunction not to destroy the offspring could be taken as a warning against abortion of any kind.

43. Homily 24 on the Epistle to the Romans, PG 60.626.27.

Basil of Cappadocia set out in a letter to Amphilocius the standards of the Church as he knew them in the late fourth century. The distinction founded on the Septuagint was rejected: "The hair-splitting difference between formed and unformed makes no-difference to us." "Whoever deliberately commit abortion are subject to the penalty for homicide."[44] The penance, however, was that set by Ancyra: ten years. Unlike Ancyra, Basil did not restrict his condemnation to women who conceived in fornication. Like Jerome he noted that often the potions killed the mothers, too. Like the Didache, he made his condemnation repetitiously: In general, sodomists, homicides, medicine men (pharmakoi), adulterers, and 44. Letters 188, PG 32.672.

idolaters were condemned together: [45] specifically, those were classed as homicides who "gave abortifacient drugs" (amblothridia pharmaka) and those who "receive what entraps the embryo." [46] Basil's comprehensive summing up on abortion in a document later characterized as "The Canonical Letter" was to constitute the fundamental norm on this behavior for the Greek Church. [47]

By 450 the teaching on abortion East and West had been set out for four centuries with clarity and substantial consistency. There was a distinction accepted by some as to the unformed embryo, some consequent variation in

45. Id. at 674.
46. Id. at 678.
47. On the authority of "The Canonical Letter," see J. Gribomont, Introduction to PG 32 (rev. 1960).

the analysis of the sin, and local differences in the penance necessary to expiate it. The sin itself was often associated with lechery, sometimes with marriage. The usual method of accomplishing abortion was by drugs, sometimes associated with magic, sometimes with danger to the user. The motive animating it was seen variously as shame, as avarice, as lust. Although therapeutic and social reasons for abortion were known from the best of doctors and philosophers, these reasons were never mentioned as justification. All the writers agreed that abortion was a violation of the love owed to one's neighbor. Some saw it as a special failure of maternal love. Many saw it also as a failure to have reverence for the work of God the creator. The culture had accepted abortion. The Christians, men of this Greco-Roman world and the Gospel, condemned it. Ancient authorities and contemporary moralists had approved, hesitated, made exceptions; the Christian rule was certain.

Transmission, 450-1450

In the period from 450 to 1100, when monks and bishops were the chief transmitters of Christian moral ideas, the teaching on abortion was reiterated. It was conveyed by enactments against abortion by local synods. [48] It was conveyed by collections which contained the canons of Elvira or the canons of the more prestigious council of Ancyra. By the eighth century Ancyra was the law of 48. See Roger John Huser, The Crime of Abortion in Canon Law 33-39 (Washington, 1942).

the Frankish kingdom of Charlemagne. [49] It was conveyed by collections which contained St. Jerome on homicide by abortifacients. [50] The penitentials developed by the monks for use in hearing confession regularly prescribed specific penances for abortion, ranging from one to ten years for the killing of an embryo. [51] When interrogatories for use in questioning penitents were devised in the tenth century, questions on abortion were included. [52] The

49. Id. at 21.

50. E.G. in the eighth century, "Simulated Virgins and Their Morals," in Womanly Questions, Die irische Kanonsammlung, ed. F. W. H. Wasserschebe n (Leipzig, 1885).

51. See Noonan, Contraception supra n. 16, at 164. Some penitentials have lesser penalties for the destruction of what is less than an embryo-apparently a reflection of the old distinction between the formed and the unformed.

52. Burchard of Worms, "Interrogatory," Decretum 19-4, PL 140. 972.

early Christian and patristic attitudes were faithfully preserved in the various channels communicating the teaching of past authority and instilling its observance.

AMERICAN CHRISTIAN CHURCH AND ABORTION

The early Christian attitude toward abortion supra, p1-38, is important because, unlike other branches of knowledge, older sources may have been more important in the thinking of the framers of the Constitution, the 14th Amendment and Title 1 USC 1, who were primarily Christian in attitude. Up until about 1930, every major Christian Church not only opposed abortion, but also had such respect for God's role in procreation that they even opposed chemical and mechanical birth control, in part because of the Christian sources cited previously herein.

Between 1900 and 1960, abortion was regarded as such a despicable crime that it was not usually mentioned by name in the American media, but rather was rather by euphemisms.

In the 1960's, pro abortion sentiment grew until most Main Line Protestant churches favored abortion, at least for the so called hard cases. Many Main Line church leaders publicly advocated abortion liberalization. Evangelical, Fundamentalist and Catholic churches, in contrast, continued to oppose abortion. In contrast to Main Line leaders, most Evangelical and Fundamentalist leaders did not publicly oppose abortion, but substantially limited their acts to internal church activities until about ten years ago.

Christianity is the world's greatest religion in terms of numbers of adherents and in terms of spread. It is the only religion with substantial numbers in substantially every area of the world. Christianity claims to be Divinely established by Jesus Christ who was the Son of God, was the Second Person of the Blessed Trinity, died for us and rose from the dead. It claims to give the believer a total world view and blueprint for living. While difficulty of change is subjective, Christianity may require the non believer becoming a believer to make more and more difficult changes in life style than any other major religion. As St Paul indicates, if Christ did not rise from the dead, Christians are the most pitiable of people. It follows that if Christ was not God, Christianity is the world's greatest fraud.

The Gospel claims that Christ is the tree and we the branches. Interestingly, since the Main Line Protestant churches accepted abortion, they have been losing millions of members in the US. Catholics have been holding even. Evangelical and Fundamentalist Protestants have increased substantially in number. This was associated in time with the Main Line churches denying what had been an important Christian belief held by every Christian church which has survived for any substantial period of time. As the Court will know from recent news stories, the recent trend in Main Line Churches has been to recede from the advocacy of abortion that dominated from the late 1960's to recently.

TWO CONFLICTING THEORIES OF LAW

In reading the hundreds of pages of notes of Justice Douglas recently made public which relate to prior abortion decisions and the right to privacy, one notes the absense of any consideration of God or the evil or good of abortion. It is difficult to accurately consider the US Constitution and Amendments which relate to such a fundamentally religion related problem without considering the religious background which would have been important to the framers. The notes seem to show a consideration only of a number of men who are trying to exert their influence and their personal opinions and prejudices in the most politically effective way possible.

The Douglas notes portray a thinking process very distant from the roots of the framers and the Common law. For instance, one early English judge shortly after Bracton took his head in his hands by telling the King who wanted to try cases that although the King was an educated man, he was not sufficiently experienced in the law to be a good judge. He dared to remind the king of the heirarchy, that Divine law was above the king's law.

This heirarchy was very much on the minds of the many of the framers of our Constitution and 14th Amendment as proven by the Reconstruction debates. America was founded on the belief that rights are given to men by God and men surrender certain of these rights to government. There is a contrasting theory, whose most prominent modern exponent was the Austrian jurist Hans Kelsen. This Court, by eliminating the US abortion law without considering the previously mentioned religious roots, has obviously adopted Kelsen's view, even if never having heard of Kelsen or the long line of scholars who have argued the relative strengths of the two contrasting views.

In Kelsen's view, the legal order is the source of all legal rights and a "person" is merely the personification of such legal rights. [53] In Kelsen's words, "The physical (natural) person is, thus, no natural reality but a construction of juristic thinking." [54] In substance, Kelsen means might makes right. This disagrees with the US post World War II morality which was used to justify the War Crimes Trials. The Kelsen theory, of course, antedates Kelsen. It contradicts US tradition, but has a substantial basis in US history, especially slavery, oppression of Blacks contrary to Reconstruction Amendments and Civil Rights Laws, oppression of women and certain minorities such as treatment of Chinese especially during the 1800s, treatment of Japanese from 1942-1945, and of course this Court's 53. Hans Kelsen, The Pure Theory of Law, trans. Max Knight from 2d ed. (Berkely: U of California Press, 1967), 95.

54. Ibid., 94

abortion decisions.

COURT SHOULD NOT ALWAYS ACT AS IF THERE WERE NO GOD

Should this Court always act as if there is no God, particularly when analyzing laws forbidding conduct forbidden by Christianity? Should this Court ignore traditional American Christian thought when interpreting language of the framers if it can find a vocal modern minority who call themselves Christian and urge change?

While God has been declared dead by certain theologians, and is often treated as if he did not exist by media and many powerful Americans, it is impossible to prove He does not exist. The main purely logical reasons for believing in God's existance are four:

The first is from causality. The universe, limited in all its details, could not be its own cause, any more than a clock could assemble itself without a clock maker. There must be a cause, and if the cause itself is caused, each succeeding cause also has a cause until we finally get back to an uncaused cause. If there is no such, once there was nothing, and nothing cannot cause the universe.

A second reason is from intuition. The stamp of God's handiwork is so clearly impressed upon creation and upon man that most people in all nations instinctively believe there is a God. We do not have to convince ourselves that there is a God. We have to persuade ourselves there is no God. And no one attaining such temporary persuasion has been able to find valid reason for it.

The sense of right and wrong is a third reason. If people are nothing more than a set of chemicals thrown together by luck or coincidence, why do we all have a conscience? Why do even those like the Nazi War Criminals have to proclaim that what they did was right or at least blameless or excuseable if there was blame? why did slave owners have to justify themselves, to force those not believing in slavery to acquiesce in it spreading to new states, to return fugitive slaves, to admit the rightness of slavery, when by so pushing too hard, they knew they might cause and in fact did cause the destruction of US slavery? Why do the abortionists have to push so hard to get others to admit the rightness of abortion? Why do you care so much about this Court and your decisions? If there is no God, what difference will it make in a few years? What difference does it really make now?

A sense of justice is another reason. You who try to do justice must know better than most that justice is not always done in this world. There should be, there must be a just God who in another world balances the scales.

These arguments were known to at least some of the framers in great detail and would have strengthened their anti Kelsen beliefs. There is no room herein to amplify all the arguments, but to show their strength, first cause will be discussed in greater detail. (We use best available knowledge which admittedly exceeds what the framers knew. The cause argument was well known in detail before the framers, however.)

It cannot be argued that the universe always exi ted or developed without a cause.

We can tell the approximate distance and velocities of galaxies in relation to our own by red shift of the light, and a variety of other clues. Galaxies generally recede from each other at a velocity proportional to distance, so that we believe about 20 billion years ago the entire known universe exploded from a single relatively small volume.

Could the universe be like a giant accordian, first expanding, then contracting without beginning or end? No. We can tell the concentration of matter in the universe by the rotation of clusters of galaxies and even considering invisible matter, the initial explosion was about ten times more powerful than necessary to ensure that the universe expands forever. Since it cannot ever contract back to the big bang point, it cannot be an accordian like universe alternating expansion and contraction and must have had a beginning and therefore a creator.

We owe our new understanding of the universe to modern scientists, the two most profound theoreticians of which probably are Einstein and Hawking. Einstein initially appeared brain damaged and was a very late talker and Hawking is severely crippled and unable to physically care for himself. Some think their defects enabled the introspection necessary to play in their minds with sufficiently complex thoughts to think more profoundly. If this court had legalized abortion and the post birth euthanasia made respectable by the same ethic sooner, and their mothers had known of their defects, the two perhaps most important men of the twentieth century might have been aborted or killed "for their own good" after birth when their defects became obvious. Needless to say, Hawkings's thoughts are likely to do more good for humanity than the evil of the inconvenience of caring for him and those similarly afflicted.

In addition to the previous conditions, it appears that conditions for development of life are restricted so that life would not exist in our galaxy by mere chance. Many unusual factors are necessary for life to develop. Scientists have calculated that within a million or so years mankind is likely to explore the entire galaxy. If there are older civilizations, they should have been here already since even a million years is insubstantial compared to the past life of the galaxy. If they came, in view of the goodness and unusual character of the earth, they should have stayed. From their absense, we can infer that we are almost certainly the most scientifically advanced civilization in the galaxy.

Among other necessary and unusual factors are:

If the big bang had been slightly less powerful, the universe would have been pulled together by gravity before the formation of the galaxies. If slightly more powerful, the individual atoms would not have formed stars and planets. There are numerous other "lucky" factors about the big bang.

A star must be about the size of the sun. If bigger, it will evolve too quickly and burn out before life develops. If smaller, it will evolve too slowly and not heat up to balance changes in a planet's atmosphere caused by the first life, thereby changing planet surface temperature and causing the developing planet's life to die. Double stars could not develop life, and most stars have companions. If the earth were 1% farther from the sun, it would be a lifeless iceball, while if it were 4% closer, it would be a lifeless slightly cooler version of Venus, but still too hot. The sun as such stars do, has gradually warmed and is now putting out about 50% more heat than three billion years ago, but changes in the earth's atmosphere generated primarily by developing life have continually balanced the gradual increase in solar activity, keeping earth temperature relatively constant within the range where water is a liquid. What is the chance that in billions of years of history, life would have begun to develop at just the correct time and continue to develop at just the correct rate to continually walk the atmospheric temperature tightrope with a gradually heating sun? Liquid water, with many unusual characteristics found in no other known substance, is the only known substance capable of supporting many reactions necessary to support life.

A planet developing life apparently must be within about 10% of earth's size. If smaller, it will not retain the required atmosphere (witness the moon). If larger, it will retain too much gas. In addition, early reactions necessary to build up the complex chemicals necessary for life are more likely to work in the direction of destruction of the larger molecules. It appears that the most reasonable chance for life to develop is if there is a tide which can only be caused by an enormous and close moon like ours, which is unlikely to form near an earth like planet. Under best current theories of planet formation, there should have been only one bigger earth, not nearly twin planets like the earth and moon, because of the long term complicated gravity in the earth's vicinity.

In addition, there is no known mechanism making evolution likely to develop intelligent life once life exists. Why does one go from one celled to multi celled life? From plant to animal? How does one evolve from a chromosome 48 species to a chromosome 46 species and simultaneously rewrite the complex code necessary to differentiate man even from a close relative like the chimp, much less make major changes? Mutation could do it, but the mutant must have a similar mate to breed children and identical twins are of the same sex.

The odds against each of these and other necessary events happening by chance so as to develop intelligent life in a galaxy as we believed existed during the past ten billion years are possibly trillions of times larger than the number of stars in the known universe. It takes less faith to believe in God than a Godless universe.

Amici do not claim to be superior to others. Nevertheless, if one believes in God, amici believe for the following reasons, it is very reasonable to believe in Christianity as most Americans always have. It is the world's largest religion in terms of numbers, and has been for centuries. It is the world's most widespread religion, the only one with substantial numbers of adherents substantially everywhere. It has been the most widespread probably since at least the Fourth Century.

Historically, it is substantially certain that Christ lived. How else explain the beginning of Christianity and its growth during three centuries of persecution by the world's greatest empire, and in spite of the execution of substantially all its early major leaders. How else could new leaders have been persuaded to step forward to their almost certain future torture death other than by a strong personal belief beginning from the time when many personally knew Christ? Why else ancient churches over the places of his birth, life and death? If Christ lived, he claimed to be God and probably was.

Philosophically, Christianity alone gives an adequate solution and explanation of the origin, condition and purpose of the human race. More Christians have voluntarily given up their lives rather than their faith than adherents of any other religion or movement. Who are these people now going to jail by the tens of thousands for trespass protesting this Court's abortion decisions? Compare the sublimity of the most sublime teaching of the Bible with the best philosophy or teaching from any other source.

Christianity and Christians have done more to elevate the human race and to better the lot of mankind than any other religion or philosophy. While slavery and other evils were tolerated too long, a disproportionate number of these evils diminished or vanquished as a result of efforts of Christians and Christian nations. Even modern democracy and representative government are to a great extent the fruit of Christians and Christian philosophy.

Some excellent early work was done by pre Christian Greeks, by Arab mathematicians, by Chinese and others, but science is largely a Christian invention. It is the science which is the offspring of Christians and Christianity which has today given substantially the entire world a better quality of material life than ever before.

CONCLUSION

There was good reason then for the Christian belief and the heirarchy of God's law above man's law referred to in the Declaration of Independence and relied on by the framers, and this Court should not continue to ignore such heirarchy in interpreting the work of the framers.

Respectfully submitted,

ROBERT L SASSONE, Attorney for amici

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, ET AL., APPELLANTS

v.

Reproductive Health Services, ET AL.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR BERNARD N. NATHANSON, M.D. AS AMICUS CURIAE SUPPORTING APPELLANTS

ROBERT L. SASSONE
Attorney at Law
900 North Broadway • Suite 725
Santa Ana, California 92701
(714) 547-5611

MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE A BRIEF AS AMICUS CURIAE ON BEHALF OF WEBSTER

BERNARD N NATHANSON, MD hereby respectfully moves for leave to file a brief amicus curiae in the present case. Requested consent of respondent has not been obtained. Thomas M Blumenthal of respondent stated to attorney for amicus that an agreement of the parties ensured consent if written consent of one party is obtained, so perhaps consent of respondent has just been delayed.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Item	Page
Motion for leave to file a brief as amicus curiae on behalf of Webster	i
Interest of amicus	ii
Summary of argument	iii
Statements from Dr Nathanson´s publications	1

INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE

BERNARD N NATHANSON, MD was one of the primary leaders of the pro abortion movement. He initially favored this Court´s abortion decisions. He presided over the world´s largest abortion clinic, from which data was taken to prove the potential safety of legal abortion done well. He was a founder and leader of NARAL.

Advancing technology in the 1970´s convinced him that the preborn human is an individual, so that he had been wrong in advocating abortion. He wrote of this data in two books. He believes that this data will be of assistance to this Court in this case.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The present brief is limited to one topic, evidence from Fetology and related Medical Science that preborn humans at all stages of development after fertilization are and must be individuals. This information is subsequent to the information from Professor Liley submitted in another amicus brief. This information is current as of the mid to late 1970´s, but is believed to still be accurate. It convinced Bernard Nathanson, MD, considered by some at one time to be the world´s leading abortionist, that abortion killed a human individual. Dr Nathanson was a founder of NARAL, on its executive committee, and coined many of its most effective slogans. As he states elsewhere in his books, he knows from personal knowledge that some of the statistical data used to justify abortion was false, dreamed up because it would be effective, and without any basis in reality. He presided over the world's largest abortion clinic after legalization. His clinic developed the statistical data used in court and legislatures to justify the safety of legal abortion.

The present brief, commencing on page 1, except where indicated, is taken from Dr Nathanson's two books, "Aborting America", Library of Congress No. 79-7069 and The Abortion Papers, Library of Congress No.83-081126. Certain information is taken from his two movies, "Silent Scream" a movie of a suction curettage abortion, and "Eclipse of Reason", a movie of a D and E abortion.

I was co-founder of the National Association for Repeal of Abortion Laws (now the National Abortion Rights Action League) in 1969, and served as medical consultant to that organization until my resignation in 1975. As one of the key architects of abortion political strategy in the United States I was responsible for the coining of the many passwords and shibboleths, such as "freedom of choice" and "a private matter between a woman and her doctor," which have too long passed for serious argument in this infinitely complex and incendiary issue.

I was also the world's leading abortionist. I did abortions in New York when they were illegal by claiming they were necessary to preserve the patient's life. When abortion became legal, I presided over the world's largest abortion clinic. It did 60,000 abortions in the 19 months I presided. Data from my clinic was published in prestigious medical journals and used to prove the safety of abortion in courts and legislatures.

I have also taken a middle position. Quoting in part my article "Deeper into Abortion" from the November 28, 1974 New England Journal of Medicine:

"Some time ago--after a tenure of a year-and-a-half--I resigned as director of the Center for Reproductive and Sexual Health. The Center had performed 60,000 abortions with no maternal deaths--an outstanding record of which we are proud. However, I am deeply troubled by my own increasing certainty that I had in fact presided over 60,000 deaths.

There is no longer serious doubt in my mind that human life exists within the womb from the very onset of pregnancy, despite the fact that the nature of the intrauterine life has been the subject of considerable dispute in the past.

We must courageously face the fact--finally--that human life of a special order is being taken. And since the vast majority of pregnancies are carried successfully to term, abortion must be seen as the interruption of a process that would otherwise have produced a citizen of the world. Denial of this reality is the crassest kind of moral evasiveness.

The phrase 'between a woman and her physician' is an empty one since the physician is only the instrument of her decision, and has no special knowledge of the moral dilemma or the ethical agony involved in the decision. Furthermore, there are seldom any purely medical indications for abortion. The decision is the most serious responsibility a woman can experience in her lifetime and at present it is hers alone.

Our sense of values has always placed the greatest importance upon the value of life itself. With a completely permissive legal climate for abortion (and I believe that we must have such a climate--that abortion must be unregulated by law) there is a danger that society will lose a certain moral tension that has been a vital part of its fabric. In pursuing a course of unlimited and uncontrolled abortion over future years, we must not permit ourselves to sink to a debased level of utiliarian semiconsciousness."

But the more I learned, the more I moved from pro-choice to pro-life. I now urge this Court to declare what medical science has known for generations, that the not yet born human is an individual and therefore a person.

In mid pregnancy, it is easy to see that the fetus is an individual as shown by my film of a D and E abortion, "Eclipse of Reason." Even about 10 weeks, it is easy to see that the unborn is an individual, as shown by my film of a suction curettage abortion entitled "Silent Scream." That approximately inch long individual communicates with you. He expresses fear and apprehension when he detects the sound of the suction tip that will hunt him. He shows intelligence when faced with a new situation, he recognizes the best response is flight from superior force and he successfully hides for a time. At first he seems to be winning, but eventually the suction tip removes so much amniotic fluid that he no longer has sufficient space to hide and is caught and sucked apart.

I have written two books, "Aborting America" and "The Abortion Papers" which trace my odyssey. I now quote from them in part in hope that any reasonable person learning what I learned will come to the same conclusion.

"For those of us in the 1960s who had no identifiable religious convictions and who were now convinced that technology had eliminated the surgical risks of abortion, why should we not then commence to advocate permissive abortion? Admittedly we had some dim, inchoate sense that something was being destroyed. It was something that could be seen on X-ray but not until the end of the fourth month of pregnancy, and it was something that we could hear with a special stethoscope but, again, not until the beginning of the fifth month. Indeed, even the mother herself could not verify that she was pregnant--that there was something human inside her--until she felt it move in the middle of the fifth month. So to believe that there was something demonstrably human in the uterus at the fourth, sixth, or eighth week of pregnancy was quite simply an act of faith: You couldn't see it, you couldn't hear it, and therefore you couldn't really know it. Sure, some women would abort it, cast it out spontaneously, and then the physician would see it as a meaty mass with a sac of fluid, within which was a tiny, immobile, often disorganizing creature which resembled nothing so much as a tadpole. Even though we accepted intellectually that, undisturbed, this curious creature would ultimately have gone on to become a human being, it was something else in the early stages of pregnancy. It was as if the creature, more sea urchin than human, dwelt in an ethical sanctuary; so mysterious, so exotic in appearance, so silent in its uterine exile that it could not be a factor in a consideration of the physician's duty to the living pregnant human female.

Ultrasound, or sonography, is a medical success story of the 1970s, ranking with transplant immunology and CAT scanning. It is a diagnostic method which relies on the use of high frequency sound waves passing through the body and giving off echoes as the sound waves hit various tissues of different densities.

Ultrasound, cool and safe, allowed us to measure the ventricles of the brain, the diameter of the great vessels, and the chambers of the heart of the child. And finally in the early 1970s, the refinement known as realtime ultrasound, the continuous projection of the ultrasonic images as a motion picture, revealed the tiny heart coiling and thrusting, the lungs and chest wall expanding and contracting in the familiar kinetics of breathing, and even the eyes moving about in their jerky rhythms.

No more images frozen on a polaroid film, as we had with the old-style scanners; instead, we had realtime, with immediacy and motion, and the child was now moving in our continuum of time. If you doubt the importance of motion, watch a television program which features nothing but still photographs with a voice overlay; you find yourself yearning for the figures in the photographs to move, to become animate beings in this moment of time. For want of a better term, I will call what is lacking the "dimension of time" (not an original formulation with me; relativists such as Einstein spoke of the dimension of time with a fine disregard for gadgets such as motion pictures and televisions way back at the turn of the twentieth century). Simply put, life is motion although motion is not necessarily life; planets move, and light spurts out in unimaginably speedy waves.

So realtime ultrasound added two essential elements to the old static black-and-white pictures of the A and B scanners: motion and contemporaneity. Watching the fetus move was exciting enough, but of course we could have constructed time lapse films of the fetus using the static images of the old B-scanner just as biologists do when they wish to study how a flower unfolds. That would have been interesting but always an artifact, a trick. We not only had motion but contemporaneity: The motion of a child was in our time frame, and this realization catapulted us into the world of the unborn, the Era of Prenatality. Communication back and forth was finally a reality.

The first scientific papers based upon the use of realtime ultrasound began appearing in 1976, and logically concerned themselves with the movements of the child. Amazingly, these early investigations disclosed that the child begins moving at six weeks and the movements, feeble at that stage, are not perceived by the mother. Not until ten weeks following the beginning of fetal movement does the mother begin to perceive the movements herself. And when she finally does begin to perceive them, she only feels one-third of them. Two out of three movements, even in advanced pregnancy, are not felt by the mother. Watching that realtime ultrasound screen we quickly became aware that the child is virtually always in motion during its waking periods. Through the use of electronic heart monitoring in combination with the imaging of the child with realtime ultrasound, we divined that the child has a fairly well defined sleep-wake cycle of about twenty mintues; it's awake for twenty minutes and then sleeps for twenty minutes.

By 1976, researchers in England, using realtime ultrasound, had demonstrated conclusively that the human unborn actually makes breathing movements in the uterus. This observation had been made many years earlier in animals such as fetal lambs, and many investigators hypothesized that the human unborn also breathed. However, the breathing had never been shown on an imaging apparatus before. Not only that, but the technology in 1976 became sharp enough for us to ascertain that the human unborn breathed on an average of from thirty to ninety times a minute depending on its physical--and perhaps even its emotional--state. In the undisturbed state, the breathing pattern was regular, shallow, and even, but if stress were placed on the fetus, such as a sudden sharp deprivation of the oxygen supply or even a loud noise or a rude jolt to the abdomen of the mother, the breathing became more of an irregular nervous gasp, identical to the respiratory pattern that you or I would adopt if we were suddenly badly frightened, or if someone were trying to strangle us. Of course the unborn doesn't breathe air; it takes amniotic fluid in and out of its lungs, but the movements of the chest and diaphragm and the various patterns of the breathing are in all essential ways indistinguishable from ours.

Machinery fine enough to detect and even quantify breathing movements certainly was up to the task of watching the heart beat. Training that realtime ultrasound apparatus on the chest of the child allowed us first to appreciate that the heart begins to beat far earlier than our old stethoscopes indicated at seventeen weeks. The realtime machine was even better than the Doppler apparatus which could pick up heartbeats at ten or eleven weeks. The realtime machine saw the tiny heart fluttering at four weeks. This solved a serious problem in the practice of obstetrics: Sometimes we suspected that an early child had died, but we could not prove this one way or another since pregnancy tests do not turn negative until almost two weeks following its death; now we could look directly at the heart and tell at a glance whether it was beating. From there it was only a short step to beginning a careful study of the heart of the unborn child in order to diagnose disorders. In both children and adults, echocardiography (ultrasound) is now widely used to image the heart and discover structural or functional disorders. In the same way, realtime ultrasound could now be trained on the unborn child's heart. The next step will inevitably be intrauterine cardiac surgery, of such delicacy that it may have to be done with lasers or some similar fine surgical technique. But rest assured--it will be with us soon.

No organ system is hidden from the relentless probing and pulsing beam of the ultrasound machine. Study of the urinary tract of the unborn child has shown that it is in all ways identical to ours, and complex and demanding surgery has been already performed on the unborn child during pregnancy for obstructions and similar disorders of the urinary tract. The brain, the blood vessels, the bones, and the joints have all been studied, probed, and evaluated. The brain itself has even been operated upon in pregnancy: In cases of congenital hydrocephalus (water on the brain resulting from faulty formation of the drainage system of fluid which normally surrounds the brain and spinal cord) fetal surgeons, using realtime ultrasound imaging, have inserted tubes into the brain in order to drain off the excess fluid. Thus the brain is spared the accumulating pressure which would ultimately flatten and severely compromise it if unrelieved.

With increasing refinement of the machinery, we are seeing more and more of the unborn child and translating the information we obtain into clinically useful concepts. For example, the ability to watch it move and breathe has allowed us to construct a "biophysical profile" similar in many ways to an annual check-up examination. By observing the frequency of breathing movements, the pattern of gross movements of the body, the muscular tone, the volume of the surrounding amniotic fluid (we can see the fluid with realtime ultrasound and can fairly accurately estimate the actual amount), and, with the aid of the electronic heart monitoring apparatus, the patterns of the heart rate in response to rest and movement. With these five observations a formula has been worked out to assess quite accurately the health of the child. Thus, in a woman whose baby is overdue or who has some other condition which may threaten her child, ultrasound has now allowed us to give the baby a "check-up" at appropriate intervals and to deliver the baby in good condition when the check-up examination indicates that we should do so.

The machinery gets more and more refined and delicate. We can even observe the rapid eye movements of the baby beginning at the twentieth week of pregnancy; we can predict how healthy its nervous system will be ten or twenty years from now based upon these observations. Think how fine and exquisitely precise this machinery must be to allow us to make such sensitive determinations!

Recently we have been able to see the sexual organs of the male on the ultrasound screen as early as fourteen weeks. The sexual organs are identifiable at ten weeks if you could see the baby directly. Now we can predict sex without the amniocentesis procedure. This knowledge has unlimited medical value: Some male babies are afflicted with diseases such as hemophilia whereas female babies never are; thus, in a family in which there is hemophilia and we know this particular baby is a male, we can make the appropriate preparations for this baby in terms of its medical needs after birth (hemophilia does not affect the baby until after birth and indeed usually not until nine months to a year later). But it's a reasonable probability that with the advances in genetic engineering--the ability to insert a healty gene into the body to replace an unhealthy one such as the one which fails to manufacture the Factor VIII, the missing item in these hemophiliac babies--we shall be able within a relatively short period to correct such a defect before the baby is born.

But there is an even more valuable reason to know the sex of the baby before its birth. In other years, much of the mystique of birth, and therefore the mistaken belief that life begins at birth, was the reality that we knew virtually nothing about the baby before birth, not even such a seemingly simple and certainly fundamental fact as its sex. Now with the masses of information we have of the baby before it is born, especially the certain knowledge of its sex, the mystery of prenatality is dispelled, and once and for all the myth of life beginning at birth should be entombed forever.

Incidentally, not only can we now ascertain the sex of the baby prenatally with ultrasound, but we now have positive information that female babies can ovulate while still in the uterus. Though it is not a common phenomenon, even the notion that it can happen while the female baby is still unborn is astonishing. It is yet another piece in the increasingly undeniable picture of the unborn child as one of us.

As long ago as 1906 a physician named Cremer was able to pick up the electrocardiogram of the unborn child with the most primitive machinery. Nothing further was done in this area until the early 1960s when there was again a flurry of interest in the fetal EKG, now utilizing infinitely more sensitive and more precise instrumentation. Even so, it was an interesting though essentially fairly esoteric matter. After all, the unborn child does not have heart attacks or hardening of the arteries while still in-utero. Edward Hon, an obstetrician in California, then devised a method of continuous EKG fetal monitoring by means of a computer which could calculate with the lightening speed characteristic of such technology the instantaneous fetal heart rate from one moment to the next. Consider: If you take your own pulse and you want to calculate your pulse rate per minute, you would have to keep taking it every ten or fifteen seconds in order to know what the rate is four or five times a minute. To know what the rate is sixty times a minute would be quite simply impossible for you or me. But if we had an EKG machine from which a computer could calculate the interval of time between one heartbeat and the next then the computer could also instantly calculate the heart rate from one second to the next. This is the principle of the electronic fetal heart monitor. In fact, most of the machines now use the ultrasound machine instead of the EKG to pick up the heart action that the computer calculates from. Before electronic fetal heart monitoring we used to think that the heart rate of the healthy unborn child was pretty well fixed in a relatively narrow range between 140 and 160 (remember the old wives tale about girls' heart rates being faster than boys'). Now we know that the fetal heart rate changes from moment to moment. Indeed, if it doesn't we suspect serious illness. We now know that the fetal heart rate undergoes obvious and drastic changes in response to everything, from being pushed externally through the mother's abdomen, reacting to a loud sound, to being deprived of oxygen. Recognizable patterns have been worked out which permit us to identify sick babies, knowing only the heart rate patterns; we either treat these babies or deliver them.

The ability to monitor the heart rate of the child from moment to moment has opened the door to studying the reactions of the child to various stimuli other than those which pertain directly to labor and delivery. And of course this machinery is used at present primarily to monitor the baby during the stressful time of birth. Remember, you and I respond to external influences by a change in our heart rate; danger speeds up the heart, pleasure may restore the usual slower rate, and sleep slows it down further. Similarly, we now know that the baby responds to the movements of its own limbs or trunk by speeding up its heart; this is the basis of the so-called nonstress test. We consider that the child is sick if the monitor fails to show the acceleration of the fetal heart rate in response to its own movements. The child must either be treated promptly or delivered quickly. But we also know that the healthy baby will respond to such annoyances as an automobile horn by speeding up its heart. Dr. Marcello Zugaib in St. Louis devised a test in which an automobile horn is honked next to the baby, and if it is healthy, it will speed up its heart rate by ten to fifteen beats per minute. Other investigators believe that the unborn child can distinguish between individual sounds, such as music or voices. We know that it perceives the sound of the blood periodically rushing through the mother's major blood vessels; years ago some imaginative person devised a tiny toy which simulates the sound of the maternal heartbeat and is useful for calming fretful babies in their cribs. They seem to remember the sound from their prenatality period.

Electronic heart monitoring has enabled us to precisely identify the sleep-wake cycle of the unborn child. Because the sleep state dulls the reaction pattern of the human, the heart rate remains constant and does not accelerate in response to external noise. The unborn child has a rather constant twenty minute sleep-wake cycle, and in the twenty minutes during which he is asleep, the heart rate does not vary in response to stimuli. But if you doubt that he is asleep, you merely have to prod him either externally through the mother's abdomen or push on his head during a vaginal examination. Immediately you will see the heart rate speed up and the body movements resume. It is probably not too far-fetched to postulate that the unborn child dreams during these sleep periods. Rapid eye movements characteristic of our own deep sleep periods can be identified in the unborn child, and these eye movements are said to be typical of the dream state. Electroencephalograms (brain-wave technology) seems to confirm that the unborn child dreams during these rapid eye movement periods. To find out the content of the dream, we must await better technology in the near future.

Another piece of new technology that is now in rather restricted use but has enormous potential is the procedure of fetoscopy. Here an exquisitely fine optical instrument is inserted into the uterus through the mother's abdomen, and the child can be viewed directly. No more highlights and shifting shadows as with the ultrasound machine, which for all of its miraculous abilities is still an indirect picture much like a fluoroscopy. With fetoscopy we are looking at the child eyeball to eyeball, seeing it in living color. The instrument itself is about a foot long, and is about one-twelfth of an inch in diameter. There is a light at the far end and an eyepiece at the observer's end. The instrument is pushed through the abdominal wall and then through the wall of the uterus, carefully avoiding the afterbirth, and literally confronts the child. Sometimes the light is so strong that the child flinches when the light is switched on. Most of the research with this instrument has been done at such centers as Yale University, the University of Toronto, and in Tokyo, but as the instrument itself becomes more refined and obstetricians become more experienced with the technique there is no doubt that it will become in time a rather standard procedure for hospital fetologists. At the present time there is risk of precipitating premature labor or miscarriage with it, and the actual figure for this risk runs about five percent--not an acceptable figure for casual inquisitive viewing of the unborn child but certainly acceptable where the technique is necessary for the diagnosis of fetal illness.

What can we do with fetoscopy and where is it applicable in fetology? One obvious use for it is in studying the limbs, extremities, eyes, face, and other fine features which ultrasound is simply not able to do at present. The skin can be observed, and skin diseases have been diagnosed in utero. But the main advantage of this technology is the ability to thread two devices through the instrument. First of all, we can thread a fine needle which we can insert into a blood vessel of the unborn child and actually carry out blood tests on it, even as we can in adult patients. Thus we can diagnose hemophilia, clotting disorders, sickle cell disease, anemia, and a host of other blood disorders. We can also thread through the length of the instrument a biopsy forcep, an instrument which can take a piece of tissue for analysis. In this way, we have been able to actually take a biopsy of the liver of the unborn child and study that organ with its enzymes and complicated chemistry. We have been able to take biopsies of the skin and diagnose congenital skin diseases. We can even take biopsies of the afterbirth itself to determine its health, and whether it will be able to serve and support the child through the entire length of the pregnancy.

But exciting as this instrument is for diagnostic purposes, think how fantastically useful the fetoscope will be in the future! For treatment of those unborn children with vitamin deficiencies or infections and for those with growth disorders or endocrine disturbances, medications could be given directly into the mouth or even injected right into the skin. For those unborn children with conditions requiring surgery, the instrument could be used to visualize the area to be operated on (a fused set of fingers, a palate which is not developing properly and threatens to become cleft if allowed to continue untreated), and surgery could be carried out via a laser beam or an ultra fine cautery threaded through the instrument. After all, we routinely perform complicated surgery on the female reproductive organs through the laparoscope, an optical instrument inserted through the naval, and it's not too visionary to believe that in the very near future we will be able to do complex and demanding surgery on the unborn child through the fetoscope.

Amniocentesis is a technique which has also been of great help to the fetologist. It currently has an undeserved bad name because it is often used for search-and-destroy missions on handicapped unborn. However, it has allowed us to identify those babies severely affected with Rh disease and either to transfuse them with blood while still in utero or else to deliver them in a timely manner. It has permitted us to identify those children who have passed the due date for delivery and are in jeopardy from "post-maturity", a condition which occurs when the due date is passed by two weeks and the afterbirth begins to fail in its many vital functions. We can identify those children with "neuraltube defects", conditions such as spina bifida in which coverings over the spinal cord are imperfectly formed or missing. In the future, fetal surgery and fetal medicine will be able either to reverse these conditions at their onset or to prevent them entirely.

The amniotic fluid is the environment in which the unborn child lives, very much like our air. We have been able to take samples of that fluid for analysis to determine the health of the fetal environment, as well as to understand better how the unborn child eliminates its waste products, how it manufactures and controls its fluid environment, and a great many other vital functions including the regulation of the quantity and density of the fluid. The fluid is an important protective device for the baby as it shields him from the effects of a direct blow and prevents squeezing or compressing forces from harming him. For example, we know from analysis of dissolved sodium in the fluid that the unborn child replaces the entire volume of its fluid environment about eight times a day. In short, far from being only a lottery basket for selecting out those handicapped unborn doomed to die by the abortionist's hand, the amniotic fluid is the repository of a wealth of important data which has allowed us to arrive at an increasingly sophisticated view of our state of prenatality.

Another technology which has allowed us to perceive the unborn child directly is hysteroscopy. A hysteroscope is a long slender optical instrument, similar to the fetoscope or even the laparoscope, with a light at the far end and an optical eyepiece at the observer's end. But instead of being thrust directly through the abdominal wall later on in pregnancy, this instrument is pushed up through the cervix in early pregnancy at four, five, or six weeks. Peering through the eyepiece with the light on at the opposite end, one can see the six week old infant clearly. We can even study the face, fingers, and toes--in fact, the entire young child. Life magazine, belatedly coming to the conviction that the unborn child is an identifiable human being both anatomically and ethically, has published a series of startlingly clear, dramatic photos of the unborn child taken through the contact hysteroscope. One can see the eyes, count the fingers and the toes, and even see the blood vessels of the child through its incredibly fine, translucent skin!

Leaving aside for the moment the individual technologies, let's look at the unborn child as a whole--holistic fetology, as it were. There is a book published in 1982 by Drs. Ernst Niedermeyer and Fernando Lopes Da Silva entitled Electroencephalography--a long tongue-twister for brain-waveology. The book is published by Urban and Schwarzenberg, and Chapter Nine deals with the development of the brain and the appearance of brain-waves in the unborn child. The authors go on to state that there is unquestionable brain-wave activity at the level of the pons (mid-brain) at ten weeks gestation, and cortical (higher brain) activity at twelve weeks. Actually, brain-waves have been recorded from the unborn child as early as six weeks in other publications. In an amusing and enlightening article published in the prestigious British Medical Journal on January 26, 1980, Drs. H. B. Valman and J. F. Pearson make the following statement: "The fetus's environment is disturbed by sounds, light, and touch, and he responds to these distubances by moving." The article is entitled "What the Fetus Feels," and it goes on to detail how the fetus responds to loud noises such as the slamming of a door or loud music, how the ultrasound machine used for monitoring the fetus will often provoke the fetus to increased activity, and how the fetus may be able to perceive sound frequencies too high and too low for the adult ear. The authors go on to state that the repeated and frequent flashing of a light will often quiet an active fetus, that the fetus makes facial expressions and even smiles at eleven weeks, and that it signals its reaction to pain by increasing its heart rate and movement.

Fetology is a science only ten years old. Still, the volume of scientific information and vital data proceeding from it is an unbelievedly massive flow. This book would literally be four or five times its projected length if we were to discuss in detail all the information we have concerning the unborn child. As an example: The Cumulated Index Medicus is an enormous book brought out annually and can be found in any medical library. It lists every scientific article published throughout the world by subject. In 1981, the Index listed approximately two thousand articles concerning the fetus, on a wide variety of subjects. In contrast, in that same year, 1981, there were only four hundred scientific articles published on the subject of abortion: a ratio of five serious scientific articles on fetology to one on abortion. (I suspect that the large majority of articles on abortion were not published in reputable scientific journals such as the one encompassed by the Cumulative Index Medicus but in such magazines as Mother Jones and Hustler.)

The accumulating weight of evidence for the scientific certainty of the unborn child as a human being and a legitimate member of the human community has created increasing fissures in the monolithic resistance of the pro-abortion groups.

John C. Flether, from the National Institutes of Health in Washington, D.C., and Dr. Mark I. Evans reported their experiences in interviewing women in the early part of pregnancy who were privileged to watch their infants on the realtime ultrasound screen. The women were asked if they would still entertain the thought of abortion after having seen their babies move, breathe, and do all those inexpressibly endearing things that all babies do, born or unborn. Both women categorically rejected the abortion option, one stating it thus: "I feel that it is human. It belongs to me. I couldn't have an abortion now."

What sets this article apart from the general run of medical publications is first, its provenance: Fletcher is an ethicist of unimpeachable credentials from the universally respected nonpolitical governmental agency known as the National Institutes of Health. Unlike the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta, a long-time breeding ground for abortion advocates such as Grimes, Tyler, and Cates, the N.I.H. has attempted to preserve a reasonable objectivity in its medical pronouncements. Further, as I stated above The New England Journal of Medicine has been anything but neutral in the abortion conflict.

Thus, for the Journal to have accorded editorial space to this article which undermines the most powerful argument the pro-abortion forces have historically leaned upon--that the unborn child is a sub-human, a creature of lesser worth--is a signal development. The article also suggests strongly that we have misled the ontological point: that there is a phase of our lives spent in a curious sort of imprisonment for a period of nine months which is comparable to other passages in our lives and which the authors term "prenatality." Recall if you will that in my editorial piece in the Journal eight years earlier I had stated that:

"Life...is a continuous spectrum that begins in utero and ends at death--the bands of the spectrum are designated by words such as fetus, infant, child, adolescent, and adult." Fletcher and Evans have suggested that the first nine months of life--the first band of the spectrum--be called "prenatality." Fletcher and Evans relied exclusively on the technology of realtime ultrasound in assessing their patients change of mind on the question of the humanity of the unborn child and the acceptability of abortion following the viewing of the unborn child on the screen.

Still other observers have chronicled bonding between fathers and the unborn during ultrasound viewing, and more recently Dr. Wulf Utian working in an in vitro fertilization program at the Mount Sinai Medical Center in Cleveland has documented bonding between the prospective mother and the dividing fertilized egg. When informed that the division of the egg had ceased, that the egg was no longer viable and, therefore, unsuitable for implantation into her uterus, one mother stated that she felt as if she had: "just suffered a stillbirth." Even more astonishing is Utian's entirely unsolicited observation that the medical team conducting the in vitro fertilization program--the physicians, nurses, laboratory technicians, and sonographers--became caught up emotionally in the work to the extent that they experienced a bonding to the developing unborn themselves. He states it thus: "As eggs are collected and fertilization is attempted in the laboratory, there are strong feelings by the team toward the early cleaving embryo...

My experience with an in vitro fertilization program, although also anecdotal, would confirm that "bonding" may occur even before the embryo is placed in the mother's uterus."

Alpha's biochemical biography begins with implantation. The group of cells that will become the placenta produces hormones that enter the mother's bloodstream and prevent menstruation, now and throughout pregnancy. Otherwise, no life can develop and alpha will "miscarry" and be washed away into oblivion. It is absolutely the case that the great bulk of developments from implantation and beyond are initiated by alpha. It is thought that even the impetus for the start of labor comes from alpha when it is ready to leave the womb.

The mother is not aware of it, but her body fights against the "invasion" at implantation. It mounts an immune attack because of the different antigenic makeup of the two organisms, mother and alpha. The mother's body instinctively recognizes alpha as a foreign object to be repulsed, just as it does when an alien kidney is transplanted. Alpha thus is clearly--biochemically--an "other", distinct and immunologically different. Immune systems are exquisitely complex, individualized, and antagonistic to each other; in tissue transplant work, one must go through dozens of matchings to find a feasible "fit."

In the United States, EEG work received little attention until the studies of Bernstine and Borkowski in 1955, 1956, and 1959, which showed EEG tracings beginning at 43 to 45 days. They found that in these earliest graphs, alpha's sleep spindles were not unlike those during the sleep of adults, and later in pregnancy the response to sedatives, stimulants, and oxygen deprivation shown by EEG activity was also similar to that in the adult. In a 1964 paper read at the A.M.A convention, Hannibal Hamlin of Massachusetts General Hospital applied EEG findings on alpha to the Harvard Criteria for death and stated: "At an early prenatal stage of life, the EEG reflects a distinctly individual pattern that soon becomes truly personalized." EEG research in utero became far more precise in 1969 with the development of new and more sensitive electrodes. Because the line of birth has been made so important by the Supreme Court rulings, I should also mention the work of Lawrence Chik et al, at the Perinatal Clinical Research Center,

Case Western Reserve University, showing that EEG activity in alpha's brain does not change abruptly at the time that birth occurs.

Is this "human life"? Human it unquestionably is, since it is organically part of the human species. "Life" also fits if we follow the common dictionary meaning (in this case, the Random House, unabridged): that state "manifested by growth through metabolism, reproduction and the power of adaption to environment through changes originated internally".

To say that it is not human life is a statement of faith, one that flies in the face of biology, as statements of faith sometimes do.

Here, Ladies and Gentlemen, look at this television tape and deny that that responsive, thumb-sucking, ear-scratching breathing little fellow (ultrasound is now refined enough to determine sexual apparatus as well) in there is a human being. Watch him sleep, see him waken with a start, jump at the sound of a noise, cock his ear at soothing music. Draw close as we insert the fetoscope into the uterus and minutely inspect his features, count his fingers, draw blood from his umbilical vein, inject him with thyroid extract for his underactive thyroid, transfuse him with blood for his anemia, and even operate on him for his obstructed bladder and his malfunctioning kidneys. And that's only today's technology! Tomorrow's will be more convincing, more demanding.

Speaking for the "discipline of medicine," we know that there is an independent, self-initiating biological entity from the point when the sperm unites with the egg, and we are able to discern its presence and activity beginning with implantation. If this is not life, what is?

CONCLUSION

It is a pity that the Court cannot observe the best evidence, that you cannot go to a premature infants' ward and hold an infant older than some in the womb, then observe cousins of their age and younger in the womb via modern technology. Seeing is believing as I learned, and nowhere in the 14th Amendment does it say personhood depends on residence. If the Court does not declare the preborn to be persons, by default it will be defining them as Untermenschen with all that implies, regardless of the fine distinctions of the opinion of the present case.

Respectfully submitted,

ROBERT L SASSONE, Attorney for Amicus

NO. 88-605
IN THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES
OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L WEBSTER, ET AL., APPELLANTS
V
REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, ET AL.
RESPONDENTS

Affidavit of mailing of amicus brief copies, Rule 28.2

State of California } ss.
City of Santa Ana, County of Orange }

Robert L. Sassone, being first duly sworn on his oath deposes and says:

Robert L. Sassone is a member of the Bar of the United States Supreme Court admitted October 26, 1971. To his knowledge, on February 23, 1989, within the particular time and permitted time for serving of said amicus brief pursuant to Rule 28.2, he deposited in the United States mailbox at Santa Ana, CA 92701 pursuant to Rule 28.2 with first class postage prepaid 40 copies of the attached amicus brief in the present case properly addressed to the Clerk of the United States Supreme Court and three copies of said amicus brief to each party addressed as follows:

ROGER K EVANS, ESQ.
DARA KLASSEL, ESQ.
BARBARA OTTEN, ESQ.
PLANNED PARENTHOOD
FEDERATION OF AMERICA, INC
810 7TH AVE.
NEW YORK, NY 10019

FRANK SUSSMAN, ESQ.
THOMAS M. BLUMENTHAL
SUSMAN, SCHERMER,
RIMMEL & SHIFREN
10TH FLOOR
7711 CARONDELET AVE.
ST. LOUIS MISSOURI 63105

WILLIAM WEBSTER, ATTORNEY GENERAL
MICHAEL L. BOICOURT, ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL
JERRY L. SHORT, ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL
6TH FLOOR BROADWAY BUILDING
PO BOX 899
JEFFERSON CITY, MISSOURI
65102

_____
ROBERT L. SASSONE, Affiant

Subscribed and sworn to before me on February 23, 1989.

_____
LAWRENCE D. SASSONE, Notary Public

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,

Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,

Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES
COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR THE SOUTHWEST LIFE AND LAW CENTER, INC., AMICUS CURIAE, IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

DAVID BURNELL SMITH
4607 N. 24th Street, #100
Phoenix, Arizona 85016

Counsel of Record
for Amicus Curiae

JOHN J. JAKUBCZYK
Southwest Life and Law Center
Post Office Box 10127
Phoenix, Arizona 85064

Attorney for Amicus Curiae

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES	ii
INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE	1
SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT	2
ARGUMENT	2
CONCLUSION	13

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES: Page

Deal v. Sexton, 144 N.C. 110 (1907) 11

Gulf, Colo. R.S. Fe Ry. v. Ellis, 165 U.S. 150 (1897) ... 8

Lochner v. New York, 198 U.S. 45 (1905) ..... 2, passim

Monongahela Navagation Co. v. United States, 148 U.S. 312, 324 (1893) 8

Moore v. City of East Cleveland, 431 U.S. 494 (1977) 10

Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U.S. 319 (1937) 8

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) ..... 2, passim

State v. Schenk, et al., No. 99611095 (Jan. 31, 1989) .. 5

Steinberg v. Brown, 321 F. Supp 741 (N.D. Ohio 1970) 9, 10

Thellusson v. Woodford, 4 Ves. 227, 322, 31 Eng. Rep. 117 (1798) 10

Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986) ..... 5, passim

United States v. Caroline Products Co., 304 U.S. 144 (1938) 3

West Coast Hotel Co. v. Parrish, 300 U.S. 379 (1937) 3

West Virginia Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624 (1943) 10

CONSTITUTION AND STATUTES

Page

Amend. V ..... passim

Amend. XIV (Due Process Clause) ..... passim

Arizona Revised Statutes 13-3603 4

OTHER AUTHORITIES

Page

Annis, The Child Before Birth (1978) 6

Arey, Developmental Anatomy (1965) 6

A. Bickel, Morality of Consent (1975) 2

Black's Law Dictionary 4th ed. (1968) 6

California Medicine 113: 67-68 (1970) 7

Castiglioni, A History of Medicine (2nd Ed.) 8

Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, 82 Yale L. J. 920 (1973) 2

Garfield, Privacy, Abortion and Judicial Review: Haunted by the Ghost of Lochner, 61 Wash. L.R. 293 (1986) 3

Gray, Anatomy of the Human Body (25th Ed., 1948) 7

Grisez, Abortion: The Myths, the Realities, and the Arguments, (1970) 11

C. Hertwig, Textbook of Embryology of Man and Mammals (Transl. 1905) 7

Life, 30 April 1965, "Life Before Birth" 7

Lupu, Constitutional Theory and the Search for a Workable Premise, 8 U. Dayton L. Rev (1983) 2

Montgomery, Abortion and the Law, New Perpectives on Human Abortion (1981) 4

Noonan, A Private Choice (1979) 2

Noonan, Morality of Abortion (1970) 8

Perez, Substantive Due Process Revisited: Reflections on (and Beyond) Recent Cases, 71 N.W. V.L. Rev. (1976) 2

M. Perry, The Constititution, The Court and Human Rights, 144.1 (1982) 2

Prosser, Law of Torts (1964) 12

Rugh and Shettles, From Conception to Birth (1971) 6

P. Weiss, Principles of Development: A Textbook for Experimental Embryology, 309 (1989) 7

Webster's Seventh New Collegiate Dictionary (1969) 6

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,

Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,

Appellees,

BRIEF FOR THE SOUTHWEST LIFE AND LAW CENTER, INC., AMICUS CURIAE, IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS

INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE

Southwest Life and Law Center, Inc. is a not-for-profit pro-life legal and educational organization formed to provide legal assistance to those involved in protecting the lives of women and their preborn children. The Center has its headquarters in Phoenix, Arizona and responds to legal and law related inquiries from pro-life individuals and groups throughout the Southwest as well as the rest of the nation. The Center has received permission from the Appellants and Appellees to file a brief amicus curiae in support of Appellants in Webster v. Reproductive Service Inc., Supreme Court Docket No. 88-605, which permissions have been filed with the Clerk of the U.S. Supreme Court.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

A. Roe v. Wade represents the illegitimate intrusion of the substantive due process doctrine of Lochner v. New York. Roe is judicial legislation of the most blatant kind and should be overruled along with its progeny. States have the right to legislate to restrict or proscribe abortion and therefore, the Missouri statute should be upheld in its entirety.

B. Medical and scientific data establish the humanity of the preborn child. A human being is a person at law. The Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments to the U.S. Constitution protect the right to life of persons. The Fourteenth Amendment prevents any state from denying the right to life of any person without due process of law. Therefore, this court should rule that the preborn (unborn) child is a person with the same due process right to protection under the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments.

ARGUMENT

A. Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) represents an illegitimate revival of the substantive due process doctrine of Lochner v. New York, 198 U.S. 45 (1905) and as such has been criticized by leading jurists as nothing more than judicial legislation.[1] M. Perry described the decision as "perhaps the paradigmatic example of a court constitutionalizing non-constitutional values."[2] Critics have argued that Roe "cut fundamental rights adjudication loose from the constitutional text."[3] Members of the court

[1]A. Bickel, The Morality of Consent, 27-28 (1975). Ely, The Wages of Crying Wolf: A Comment on Roe v. Wade, 82 Yale L. J. 920 (1973).

[2]M. Perry, The Constitution, the Court and Human Rights, 144.1 (1982). See also, J. Noonan, A Private Choice (1979).Perez, Substantive Due Process Revisited: Reflections on (and Beyond) Recent Cases, 71 NW. V.L. Rev 417, 420 (1976).

[3]Lupu, Constitutional Theory and the Search for a Workable Premise, 8 U. Dayton L. Rev. 579, 583 (1983).

have been no less critical of Roe. Chief Justice Rehnquist, in his dissent in Roe, stated that > "The result [Roe] reaches is more closely attuned to the majority opinion of Mr. Justice Peckham in [Lochner]. As in Lochner and similar cases applying substantive due process standards to economic and social welfare legislation, the adoption of the compelling state interest standard will inevitably require this Court to examine the legislative policies and pass on the wisdom of these policies in the very process of deciding whether a particular state interest put forward may or may not be compelling. The decision here to break pregnancy into three distinct terms and to outline the permissible restrictions the State may impose in each one, for example, partakes more of judicial legislation than it does of a determination of the intent of the drafters of the Fourteenth Amendment." Roe at 174.

Mr. Justice Rehnquist did not find a right of abortion in the Constitution because none exists. The history of state and federal legislation on the subject had been a proper perogative of the states both in the civil and criminal law context. Specifically, his dissent noted incisively that by the time the Fourteen Amendment was adopted in 1868, there were 36 laws enacted by state and territorial legislatures limiting or prohibiting abortions. Roe at 176.

Mr. Justice White did not mince words as he described the effect of Roe. "A raw exercise of judicial power," Mr. Justice White wrote in his dissent, "an improvident and extravagant exercise of the power of judicial review." Roe at 222.

This Court is well aware of the history of Lochner and its fall from grace during the 1930's[4] which culminated in the Court's rejection of substantive due process in U.S. v. Caroline Products Co., 304 U.S. 144 (1938).[5] Roe v. Wade, despite protestations from the majority, invalidated 50 state laws as this Court dictated to the states terms and conditions regarding an activity previously considered criminal. In Arizona, criminal abortion prior to Roe was a felony punishable by a term in the state prison of not less than two nor more than five years.[6] As with most abortion statutes written prior to and during the 19th Century, concern over evidentiary issues cautioned a less severe penalty when compared to homicide statues.[7]

[4]See, e.g. West Coast Hotel Co. v. Parrish, 300 U.S. 379 (1937), See also Garfield, Privacy, Abortion and Judicial Review: Haunted by the Ghost of Lochner, 61 Wash. L.R. 293, 300. (1986).

Mr. Justice Blackmun, however, refused to fully examine the history of such state laws and their roots in both common sense and Anglo-American history. Indeed, Mr. Blackmun went to great pains to provide his own "history" of the law and abortion, a history that conveniently ignored the substantive recognition of the child in ventre sa mere at the state and federal level. The result was this incredible statement:

> We need not resolve the difficult question of when life begins. When those trained in the respective disciplines of medicine, philosophy, and theology are unable to arrive at any consensus, the judiciary at this point in the development of man's knowledge, is not in a position to speculate as to the answer. Roe at 159.

As will be developed in Section B of this brief, the [5]Court upheld the constitutionality of a federal statute prohibiting shipment of "filled" milk.

[6]A.R.S. 13-3603, Renumbered by Laws 1977, Ch. 142 sec. 99, eff. Oct. 1, 1978. Formerly A.R.S. 13-201; historical note: Pen. Code 1901 Sec. 243.

[7]Montgomery, "Abortion and the Law," New Perspectives on Human Abortion (1981).

Court then, and even more so now, had abundant medical and scientific evidence to deduce the underlying and essential concern: the humanity of the preborn child. This court did not need to discuss "potential life", but rather, life with potential. As the Roe majority failed to seriously consider the first legal hurdle concerning the child's humanity, it was required to resurrect the ghost of Lochner in order to secure not just a liberty of contract — but the liberty to contract for an abortion. However, poorly reasoned cases make for bad law, and Roe's judicial progeny have left a wake of despair and confusion at the federal and state levels.

Since Roe, the court in its zeal to withstand legislative enactments has, in Justice Burger's words, > "[gone] so far as to say that the State may not even require that a woman contemplating an abortion be provided with accurate medical information concerning the risks inherent in the medical procedure which she is about to undergo and the availability of State-funded alternatives if she elects not to run those risks." Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists (Burger, C. J. dissenting at 783.

In Thornburgh the Court, per Blackmun, stated that "the printed materials...seem to us to be nothing less than an outright attempt to wedge the Commonwealth's message discouraging abortion into the privacy of the informed consent dialogue between the woman and her physician." Id. at 762. (emphasis added). [This passage is ironic when considered in light of recent testimony concerning the practices at a local Phoenix abortion clinic. The RN-Administrator testified under oath that the only time the doctor saw the patient (also referred to as "client") was during the procedure itself. There was no "dialogue" or "consultation" with the women clients by the doctor prior to the abortion. As a general proposition the doctor did no pre-abortion nor post-abortion counseling for the "clients" of the clinic. See Transcripts from State v. Schenk, et al., Phoenix Municipal Court, Case No. 99611095-OC, Jan. 31, 1989.]

The Court in Roe went far afield from its purpose in reviewing the Texas and Georgia abortion statutes. Its action in 1973 declaring all state laws proscribing abortion unconstitutional was an improper and excessive use of judicial power and ought to be restrained. This Court is not bound by the doctrine of stare decisis in such situations where the Court has strayed from its constitutional mandate. This Court therefore, in upholding the Missouri statute, should have no consternation over a clear and unequivocal repudiation of Roe v. Wade and its progeny.

B. 1. Medical and scientific data establish the fact that the preborn child is a human being. That the Court in Roe v. Wade, was unable to determine this reality from the scientific literature in 1973, highlights the questionable logic of the decision. Mr. Justice Blackmun stated in the opening paragraphs of his opinion that "one's philosophy, one's experience...one's attitudes toward life and family and values...are all likely to influence and to color one's thinking and conclusions about abortion." Id. at 116. Mr. Justice Blackmun then cited issues of population growth, pollution, poverty and the like as further concerns which complicate the issue. To this rhetoric, the scientific and legal question is asked: what has this to do with whether or not the fetus[8] is a human being and therefore deserving of the protection of law? An examination of medical texts and their explanation of the fetus reveal a living human organism whose individual beginning can be traced to an event called fertilization when the male sperm combines with the female ovum to form a single cell medically identified as a zygote.[9] This zygote contains all of the genetic information which will later manifest itself in identifiable human characteristics.[10] Left alone this organism will grow and develop during gestation and after approximately nine months will be born.[11] As the reknowned French geneticist, Dr. Jerome LeJeune, stated before the Separation of Powers Subcommittee of the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee in May 1981, "Life has a very very long history, but each human being has a very neat beginning: the moment of conception." Even among those who wished to see a legalization of abortion before Roe v. Wade, there was an admission that abortion was the taking of a human life. In September 1970, an editorial in California Medicine entitled "A New Medical Ethic" presented the following observation:

[8]Fetus — [NL, fr. L, act of bearing young, offspring; akin to L. fetus, newly delivered fruitful]: an unborn or unhatched vertebrate esp. attaining the basic structural plan of is kind; specif. a developing human from usually three months after conception to birth. Webster's Seventh New Collegiate Dictionary, at 309, (C&G Merriam Co. 1969). See also, Black's Law Dictionary, 4th Ed. (1968): Foetus. In medical jurisprudence, an unborn child. An infant in ventre sa mere.

> "The process of eroding the old ethic and substituting the new has already begun. It may be seen most clearly in changing attitudes toward human abortion. In defiance of the long held Western ethic of intrinsic and equal value for every human life regardless of its stage, condition, or status, abortion is becoming accepted by society as moral, right, and even necessary. It is worth noting that this shift in public attitude has affected the churches, the laws, [9]See Arey, Developmental Anatomy (Philadelphia: W. B. Saunders, 1965) Robert Rugh and Landrum Shettles, From Conception to Birth (New York: Harper and Row 1971).

[10]See Annis, The Child Before Birth (Ithaca N.Y. Cornell U. 1978).

[11]Life, 30 April 1965, "Life Before Birth." See also, Gray, Anatomy of the Human Body 56-57 (C.M. Goss, 25th ed. 1948); C. Hertwig, Textbook of the Embryology of Man and Mammals (E.L. Mark Transl. 1905); P. Weiss, Principals of Development: A Textbook for Experimental Embroyology 309, 14-17 (1989).

and public policy rather than the reverse. Since the old ethic has not yet been fully displaced it has been necessary to separate the idea of abortion from the idea of killing, which continues to be socially abhorrent. The result has been a curious avoidance of the scientific fact, which everyone really knows, that human life begins at conception and is continuous whether intra- or extra-uterine until death. The very considerable semantic gymnastics which are required to rationalize abortion as anything but taking a human life would be ludicrous if they were not often put forth under socially impeccable auspices. It is suggested that this schizophrenic sort of subterfuge is necessary because while a new ethic is being accepted the old one has not yet been rejected.[12]

Perhaps it was this "old ethic" which was reflected during the last 1900 years with Western Civilization's acceptance of the Hippocratic Oath[13] as the ethical standard for physicians. Yet Justice Blackmun dismissed this standard as a "Pythagorean manifesto and not the expression of an absolute standard of medical conduct." Roe at 132 (citing Edelstein). Unfortunately, it is clear that Justice Blackmun was so obsessed with reversing the abortion laws in Roe that all historical and medical evidence acknowledging the humanity of the unborn child would be ignored or twisted to support reversal. Yet some members of this Court have recognized

> "first, that the fetus is an entity that bears in its cells all of the genetic information that characterizes a member of the species homo sapiens and distinguishes an individual member of that species from all other, and second, that there is no non-arbitrary line separating a fetus from a child or, indeed, an adult human being." Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747, 792 (1986) (White J., joined by Rehnquist, J. dissenting).

[12]California Medicine, 113: 67-68, September (1970).

[13]The relevant part states, "I will give no deadly medicine to anyone if asked nor suggest any such counsel: and in like manner I will not give to a woman a pessary to produce abortion." See Castiglioni, A History of Medicine, (2nd Ed., E. Krumbhaer, translator and editor). See also, Noonan, "An Almost Absolute Value in History" The Morality of Abortion, 1, 307 (J. Noonan, Ed. 1970).

This court should acknowledge the clinical and objective medical evidence and determine that it is not discussing "potential life" but human life with potential. Having recognized the humanity of the preborn, this Court should acknowledge their inalienable right to life.

2. A human being is a person at law. As axiomatic as this statement first appears, its very essence had been challenged in Roe. The Missouri Statute, subject of this appeal, attempted to remind us that the U.S. Constitution incorporated the basic values of the Declaration of Independence.[14] This Court in Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U.S. 319 (1937), stated that there are rights protected by the due process clause as those which are

> "...implicit in the concept of ordered liberty...principles of justice so rooted in the traditions and conscience of our people as to be ranked as fundamental...fundamental principles of liberty and justice which lie at the base of all our civil and political institutions...[so that] neither liberty nor justice would exist if they were sacrificed". Id. at 325-328.

The right to life is essential to the exercise of any other civil or legal rights. Only human beings can enjoy the right to life as it is understood to apply to persons. Corporations, ships, railroads are all "persons" as created by law, yet none enjoy a right to life in the common understanding of the word. Therefore, if "life" as understood in the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments must apply to persons, these persons must be human beings, which of necessity includes the class of preborn human beings, conceived though not yet born. In Steinberg v. Brown, 321 F. Supp 741 (N.D. Ohio 1970), a three judge panel rejected a challenge to Ohio's abortion laws, stating that "once human life has commenced, the Constitutional protection found in the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments impose upon the state a duty of safeguarding it." Steinberg at 746-47.

[14]See, Gulf, Colo. R.S. Fe Ry. v. Ellis, 165 U.S. 150, 160 (1897). Monongahela Navagation Co. v. United States, 148 U.S. 312, 324 (1893).

Members of this court have attempted to focus the debate back to the fundamental issue to determine protection for the preborn by questioning the validity of Roe. In Thornburgh, Mr. Justice White stated, "The time has come to recognize Roe v. Wade... departs from a proper understanding of the Constitution and to overrule it." Id. at 788. Chief Justice Burger in his dissent said, "No governmental power exists to say a viable fetus should not have every protection required to preserve its life." Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 484 (Burger, C. J. dissenting). Mr. Justice White added that > "the government interest at issue is in protecting those who will be citizens if their lives are not ended in the womb...the state's interest in the fetus as an entity in itself, and the character of this entity does not change at the point of viability under conventional wisdom. Accordingly, the state's interest, if compelling after viability, is equally compelling before viability." Id. at 795.

Mr. Justice Blackmun in Roe acknowledged that "if this suggestion of personhood is established, the appellant's case of course collapses, for the fetus' right to life would be guaranteed specifically by the Amendment." Roe at 156-157. He then commenced a "literal" reading of the Fourteenth Amendment in order to exclude the unborn child from the class of persons and thus deny protection. He incorrectly argued that there were no cases which grant such protection. Yet the federal district court in Steinberg stated that "a new life comes into being with the union of human egg and sperm cells."[15] A limited reading of the Fourteenth Amendment by Blackmun would invalidate numerous decisions in which the Court applied the broad understanding of the basic equal protections of life, liberty, and property to all persons.[16] A proper reading therefore of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments would include a due process right to the basic protection of a right to life. Such a determination would recognize an inalienable right existing in all human beings, whether alive before or after the event of birth.

3. It has been said that our Founding Fathers believed that the right to acquire and own property provided the person with an ability to protect other basic rights in that he could determine what those rights were and then exercise them for his benefit. This right is not given by government, but recognized by government as inalienable or residing with the person. (See e.g. Remarks of Justice Kennedy at Midwinter Meeting of American Bar Association Dec. 1988.)

In the history of Anglo-American Common Law, the unborn child has had a right to property as understood by the laws of discent and distribution. In the famous English case of Thellusson v. Woodford, 4 Ves. 227, 322, 31 Eng. Rep. 117 (1798), Judge Butler wrote about the rights of the unborn child:

> "Let us see what the nonentity can do. He may be vouched in a recovery, though it is for the purpose of making him answer over in value. He may be an executor. He may take under the Statute of Distribution. He may take by devise. He may be entitled under a charge for raising portions. He may have an injunction, and he may have a guardian."

---

[15]Steinberg, at 746.

[16]See, Moore v. City of East Cleveland, 431 U.S. 494 (1977). West Virginia Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624 (1943).

Grisez, in his examination of the unborn child's rights in property law inquired,

> "If an unborn child inherits a portion of land, and this land is sold without the child being suitably represented at a legal process authorizing the disposal of his estate, can the child have the sale set aside? In Deal v. Sexton, (1907), a North Carolina court ruled that the child could recover from those claiming this title. Why? The court held that the child was to be allowed to recover because it had not been made a party to the case, and "a person must have an opportunity of being heard before a court can deprive him of his rights..." The court also held "that the inheritance vested immediately in the plaintiff, while in ventre sa mere, upon the death of the father..." Both points are important. If the inheritance vest immediately, the right of the unborn child is not merely a fiction contingent for its legal effect upon his later birth. If the rights of the unborn must be protected under the general principle that a person must have an opportunity to be heard before a court can deprive him of his rights, then however much a fictional person the unborn child may be thought to be, his fictional personality entitles him to the due process guaranteed to every person by the U.S. Constitution." Grisez, Abortion: The Myths, the Realities, and the Arguments, at 364.

Property law is not the only area wherein the unborn child's persona has been respected. Prosser, in his treatise on Torts wrote,

> "So far as duty is concerned, if existence at the time is necessary, medical authority has recognized long since that the child is in existence from the moment of conception, and for many purposes its existence is recognized by law...
> Viability of course does not affect the question of the legal existence of the fetus, and therefore the defendant's duties; and it is a most unsatisfactory criterion, since it is a relative matter, depending on the health of mother and child and many other matters in addition to the state of development. Certainly the infant may be no less injured; and all logic is in favor of ignoring the stage at which it occurs." Prosser, Law of Torts, 355, 356 (1964).

When one has examined the various disciplines which recognize the humanity of the unborn child, one is tempted to paraphrase Justice Blackmun in Roe. For we can easily resolve the question of when life begins. Those trained in medicine, philosophy and law have examined the empirical scientific data and arrived at a consensus. The judiciary, at this point in the development of man's knowledge, can provide a definite answer. Individual human life begins at fertilization. The unborn child deserves the basic protection of its right to live under the due process and equal protection clause.

Finally, this Court should avoid the temptation to simply reverse Roe v. Wade and return the matter to the states, ante Roe. Sixteen years have passed since Roe and the issue is as controversial as in 1973. While most states will restrict or outlaw abortion, some states through the state court process may continue to allow legal abortion. The equal protection issue then looms before the Court once again. For what is the difference between a four month old unborn child living in a state which allows abortion and an unborn child living in a state which does not permit abortion? Can the latter state in order to protect the child's life, prohibit the mother from travelling to an abortion state to obtain an abortion?

As there is no physiological difference between children, the accident of location would become the discriminating factor. Location has been an improper tool of discrimination in the past and it would be so today. The Court should therefore take the additional step of recognizing the personhood of the child and return the means of enforcement to the states.

CONCLUSION

There is no valid basis to sustain Roe v. Wade and its judicial legislation of the abortion issue. The proper province for regulation of abortion is with the states, provided the states recognize that the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments apply to the preborn human being. There is no valid legal basis to support the claim that unborn children are excluded from the definition of "person" in the Fourteenth Amendment. The Missouri law should be sustained and the District and Appellate decisions reversed.

RESPECTFULLY submitted this 23rd day of February 1989.

DAVID BURNELL SMITH
4607 N. 24th Street, #100
Phoenix, Arizona 85016

Counsel of Record
for Amicus Curiae

JOHN J. JAKUBCZYK
Southwest Life and Law Center
Post Office Box 10127
Phoenix, Arizona 85064

Attorney for Amicus Curiae

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I hereby certify that three copies of the foregoing brief of the Amicus Curiae Southwest Life and Law Center, Inc. have been sent by U.S. Mail, postage prepaid, on this Twenty-Third Day of February 1989 to:

William L. Webster
Attorney General

Jerry L. Short
Assistant Attorney General

P. O. Box 889
Jefferson City, Missouri 65102

Counsel for Appellants

Roger K. Evans
810 Seventh Avenue
New York, New York 10019

Counsel for Appellees

All parties required to be served have been served.

DAVID BURNELL SMITH

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

No. 88-605

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 23 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICE, et al.,
Appellees

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

---

BRIEF OF AMICUS CURIAE INTERNATIONAL RIGHT TO LIFE FEDERATION IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, ET AL.

JOHN J. POTTS *
of the Bar of the Supreme Court of
New Mexico
Professor of Law
School of Law
Valparaiso University
Valparaiso, IN 46383
(219) 465-7855

RICHARD T. STITH, III
of the Bar of the Supreme Court of Indiana
Professor of Law
School of Law
Valparaiso University
Valparaiso, IN 46383
(219) 465-7871

Attorneys for Amicus Curiae

* Counsel of Record

WILSON - EPES PRINTING CO., INC. - 789-0096 - WASHINGTON, D.C. 20001

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES	ii
STATEMENT OF INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE	1
SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT: ROE v. WADE IS AN ABERRATION IN COMPARATIVE WESTERN JURISPRUDENCE	2
ARGUMENT	3
I. The United States Is The Only Nation To Decide To Constitutionalize A Right To Elective Abortion	3
II. The Democratic Compromises Reached In Developed Western Nations Are Significantly More Protective Of Unborn Life Than Is Roe v. Wade	6
III. Roe's Unique Abortion Policy May Be Explained By The Fact That It Alone Has Refused To Describe The Fetus As Human And Alive Throughout Pregnancy	9
CONCLUSION	13

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases: Page

Bellotti v. Baird, 443 U.S. 622 (1979) 7
Bruggerman and Scheuten v. Federal Republic of Germany, 3 Eur. Hum. Rts. Rep. 244 (1977) 4
City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., 462 U.S. 416 (1983) 7
Decision of 11 October 1974, Constitutional Court, [1974] Erklärungen des Verfassungsgerichtshofs 221 [Austria] 4, 10
Decision of 15 January 1975, [1975] A.J.D.A. 134 [France] 4, 10
Decision of 18 February 1975, Corte Costituzionale, n.27 [1975] 98 Foro It. (Giurisprudencia Costitutzionale e Civile) 515 [Italy] 4, 5, 10
Decision of 25 February 1975, [1975] 39 BVerfGE 1 [West Germany] 5, 9, 11
Decision of 19 March 1984, 344 Boletim do Ministerio da Justica 197 (March 1985) [Portugal] .. 4, 10
Decision of 11 April 1985, STC 53/1985 (Pleno), 119 Boletin Official del Estado 10 (Suplemento, 18 mayo 1985) [Spain] 5, 9, 12
Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973) 8
Morgentaler v. The Queen, 1 S.C.R. 30 (1988) [Canada] 4, 8
Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) ..... passim
Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians & Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986) 8

Constitutional Provisions:

Constitution of Ireland, Eighth Amendment 6
Constitution of 1978, Art. 15 [Spain] 5
Basic Law, Art. 2 [West Germany] 5, 9

Treaty Provisions:

American Convention on Human Rights, Art. 4 (1) (1969) [Organization of American States, "Pact of San Jose, Costa Rica"] 6
United Nations Declaration of the Rights of the Child, Preamble, Para. 3 (1959) 6

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Other Authorities: Page

G. Calabresi, Ideals, Beliefs, Attitudes, and the Law (1985) 7
M. Cappelletti & W. Cohen, Comparative Constitutional Law (1979) 4, 5, 10
M.A. Glendon, Abortion and Divorce in Western Law (1987) 3, 7, 8
Jonas and Gorby, West German Abortion Decision —A Contrast to Roe v. Wade, 9 JOHN MARSHALL J. PRAC. AND PROC. 551 (1976) 5, 11
Quinlan, The Right to Life of the Unborn—An Assessment of the Eighth Amendment to the Irish Constitution, 1984 B.Y.U. L. REV. 371 6
H. Reis, Das Lebensrecht des Ungeborenen Kindes als Verfassungsproblem (1984) 10
Stith, New Constitutional and Penal Theory in Spanish Abortion Law, 35 AMER. J. COMP. L. 513 (1987) 5, 6, 7, 12

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

No. 88-605

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICE, et al.,
Appellees

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

---

BRIEF OF AMICUS CURIAE INTERNATIONAL RIGHT TO LIFE FEDERATION IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANTS WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, ET AL.

STATEMENT OF INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE

The International Right to Life Federation is a multinational non-profit organization formed to achieve world-wide equal protection for all living humans, from the time their lives begin at conception until their natural deaths.

The Federation's headquarters are located at Av. Ed. Dapples 23—1006 Lausanne, Switzerland. The Federation is incorporated under the laws of Washington, D.C. Board members include: Dr. J.C. Willke (U.S.A.), Mrs. Phyllis Bowman (U.K.), Vice-President; Dr. Silvio Ghielmi (Italy), Treasurer; William Sherwin (Ireland), Secretary; Peter Barry Martin (New Zealand); Rev. Maurice Wanga (Kenya); Dr. Marie Mignon Mascarenhas (India); Mrs. Jacqueline Owen (Canada), and Mario Zivkovic (Yugoslavia).

The Federation has a particular interest in the case of Webster v. Reproductive Health Services, U.S. No. 88-605, because the case profoundly affects the concerns of the Federation's U.S. affiliate, the National Right to Life Committee, Inc.

In addition, the Federation is especially concerned about abortion law in the United States because this nation is the least protective of unborn life of all countries in the developed West. If the U.S. moves back into the mainstream of Western law on abortion, by permitting legislative protection of the unborn, a significant number of lives may be saved. Even if full equal protection for the unborn is not now achieved, the Federation would regard any reversal of Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) to be an important step in the right direction.

Furthermore, the International Right to Life Federation is concerned to bring international and comparative law to this Court's attention in order to promote greater world harmony and understanding on the divisive issue of abortion.

Through their counsel, both parties have consented to the appearance of this amicus.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Roe v. Wade is an Aberration in Comparative Western Jurisprudence

The purpose of this amicus brief is to inform the Court that its 1973 Roe v. Wade[1] abortion decision has not been persuasive to the international legal and judicial communities and, therefore, should be reevaluated by this Court. Roe remains isolated in its peculiar exaltation of a right to abortion.

[1] 410 U.S. 113 (1973).

Particularly in three of its implicit central theses, Roe is out of the mainstream of comparative constitutional jurisprudence. These theses are the following: (1) that abortion rights should be made largely a matter of constitutional law, (2) that the proper abortion policy is to provide no protection for the fetus prior to viability, and very little protection even thereafter, and (3) that we do not know whether the fetus is in fact human and alive. Each of the three arguments which follow focuses upon one of these unusual Roe theses.

The set of legal systems used below for comparative purposes is the twenty-member group of developed nations assembled by Prof. Mary Ann Glendon in her recent book Abortion and Divorce in Western Law (Cambridge: Harvard University Press, 1987). These are: Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, England, Finland, France, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, West Germany, and the United States of America.

ARGUMENT

I. The United States Is the Only Nation to Decide to Constitutionalize a Right to Elective Abortion.

In most nations of the world, abortion policy has not been the subject of constitutional intervention by a high court, remaining determined by a wide variety of legislative schemes, as discussed in the second argument below. Research has revealed only eight significant foreign constitutional decisions relating to the status of abortion. Unlike Roe, four decisions have upheld legislative authority in this area, those of Austria,[2] France,[3] Portugal,[4] and the European Commission on Human Rights.[5] Two others imposed only relatively minor limits on legislation protecting the unborn, by no means mandating elective abortion, those of Canada [6] and Italy.[7] Moreover, [2] The 1974 Austrian decision held constitutional a law permitting elective abortion in the first trimester, but also indicated that equal protection requires the punishment of abortion after viability if post-natal infanticide is punished. Decision of 11 October 1974, Constitutional Court, [1974] Erklärungen des Verfassungsgerichtshofs 221, 234-35 G 8/74. Translation found in M. Cappelletti and W. Cohen, Comparative Constitutional Law 615, 620-21 (1979).

---

[3] The 1975 decision of the French Conseil Constitutionnel held constitutional a law permitting abortion during the first ten weeks of pregnancy in cases of "distress." Decision of 15 January 1975, [1975] A.J.D.A. 134. Translation found in Cappelletti and Cohen, supra note 2 at 577.

[4] The 1984 Portugese decision upheld the constitutionality of a law permitting abortion for serious causes: grave and irreversible damage to the mother's health, grave and incurable damage to the fetus, and pregnancy resulting from rape (the last two only during the first sixteen and twelve weeks of pregnancy, respectively). Decision of 19 March 1984, 344 Boletim do Ministerio da Justica 197 (March, 1985).

[5] The European Commission on Human Rights ruled in 1977 that Article 8 of the European Convention, which protects private life against governmental interference, does not invalidate national rules punishing abortion in early pregnancy. Bruggerman and Scheuten v. Federal Republic of Germany, 3 EUR. HUM. RTS. REP. 244 (1977).

[6] The recent Canadian decision declares unconstitutional the slow and complex Canadian procedures for certification that a woman may receive a therapeutic abortion, on the grounds that they unnecessarily endanger the health of pregnant women. The majority does not reach the issue of the status of the fetus and does not affirm a broad liberty to abort. Morgentaler v. The Queen, 1 S.C.R. 30 (1988).

[7] The Italian decision of 1975 declared unconstitutional a law which punished all but necessity-based abortions, on the grounds that it gave inadequate consideration to the woman's health. The Court specifically approved criminal law limitation of abortion in two foreign high courts have struck down "pro-choice" legislation partially depenalizing abortion, in order to provide greater criminal law protection for the fetus throughout [8] pregnancy. Both in West Germany [9] and in Spain [10], the courts have found the unborn child to come within the protection offered by their respective constitutional clauses [11] guaranteeing to "everyone" the right to life. As a result, the German constitutional court explicitly, and the Spanish court implicitly, require that penal law not leave abortion entirely unpunished, even in the first trimester.[12] In a third nation, Ireland, abortion has the interest of the fetus, and, in dictum, went so far as to require legislative protection for the fetus when no injury or danger to the mother is involved. Decision of 18 February 1975, Corte Costituzionale, n.27 [1975] 98 Foro It. I (Giurisprudencia Costituzionale e Civile) 515. Translation found in Carmosina et al. Cappelletti and Cohen, supra note 2 at 612-14.

---

[8] However, the West German decision, infra note 9, does not decide fetal status, nor the permissibility of abortion, during the first thirteen days after conception—for this early period was not governed by the statute upon which the Court was called to rule. [The word "fetus" is used in this brief to refer to the unborn at all stages of pregnancy, from conception onward, even though medical usage is more restricted.]

[9] Decision of 25 February 1975, [1975] 39 BVerfGE 1. Translated into English by Jonas and Gorby, West German Abortion Decision—A Contrast to Roe v. Wade, 9 JOHN MARSHALL J. PRAC. AND PROC. 551 (1976).

[10] Decision of 11 April 1985, STC 53/1985 (Pleno). 119 Boletin Oficial Del Estado 10 (suplemento, 18 mayo 1985). English summary and discussion found in Richard Stith, New Constitutional and Penal Theory in Spanish Abortion Law 35 AMER. J. COMP. L. 513 (1987).

[11] "Jeder hat das Recht auf Leben. . ." Basic Law, Art. 2, Sec. 2, Sentence 1. "Todos tienen derecho a la vida. . .", Constitution of 1978, Art. 15. The Italian decision also seems to ground fetal protection in a similar rights provision. Supra note 7 at 613.

[12] See discussion in Stith, supra note 10 at 524-27. Both Germany and Spain go on to permit laws which depenalize only "hard-been strongly restricted by means of a constitutional amendment.[13] These positions are in accord with important international human rights declarations which refer explicitly to legal protection prior to birth.[14]

II. The Democratic Compromises Reached in Developed Western Nations Are Significantly More Protective of Fetal Life Than Is Roe v. Wade.

Bt it noted first of all that democratic compromises on abortion have in fact been reached in nations with whom we usually compare ourselves. That is, the oft-repeated statement that there is no political middle ground on abortion is simply false, according to the comparatist Prof. Mary Ann Glendon. Neither "pro-lifers" nor "pro-choicers" are satisfied with most of this legisla-ship" abortions, i.e. abortions which occur where continuation of pregnancy is "too much to demand" by penal law (is "unzumutbar" and "inexigible" respectively), referring to complex continental penal law doctrines. Many commentators, however, interpret these courts to be saying only that hardship abortions may be "excused" by law, not that they may be "justified". See extensive discussion in Stith, id. at 541-58.

---

[13] Ireland adopted the following amendment to its constitution in 1983: "The State acknowledges the right to life of the unborn and, with due regard to the equal right to life of the mother, guarantees in its laws to respect, and, as far as practicable, by its laws to defend and vindicate that right." See John A. Quinlan, The Right to Life of the Unborn—An Assessment of the Eighth Amendment to the Irish Constitution, 1984 B.Y.L.U. REV. 371, 385.

[14] Human rights protection in the Western hemisphere includes the unborn. Article 4 (1) of the O.A.S.-sponsored 1969 American Convention on Human Rights (which the United States has signed but, according to information available, not yet ratified) provides: "Every person has the right to have his life respected. This right shall be protected by law and, in general, from the moment of conception." Paragraph 3 of the Preamble to the 1959 United Nations Declaration of the Rights of the Child reads: "Whereas the child, by reason of physical and mental immaturity, needs special safeguards and care, including appropriate legal protection, before as well as after birth. . ."

tion, but the possibility of further future change makes present compromise less unpalatable. And the majority in the middle, which there as here tends not to belong to either ideological camp, finds in these laws a fair reflection of its values. As a result, she argues, abortion is not the central divisive issue in Europe that it is in the U.S.[15]

Prof. Glendon hypothesizes that the careful avoidance of "rights" language by the legislatures and courts in Europe has contributed to this climate of greater toleration and willingness to compromise.[16] When abortion is there forbidden, the prohibition is often done in the name of the "value" of human life.[17] And, when abortion is permitted, the "depenalization" of, rather than the "right" to, abortion is spoken of. The difference here is one both of substance and of symbol. Rights are litigious in nature, while values are more easily shared. Moreover, in our day rights (particularly "fundamental" rights) have a near-sacrality that cannot fail to shock those who find them abhorrent. The phrase "fundamental right to abortion" seems calculated to maximize injury to the sensibilities of those who respect unborn life. Dean Guido Calabresi has pointed to the need, on sensitive issues like abortion, for the law's rhetoric to reflect the values on both sides[18]—as do the abortion laws and decisions of most other nations. The U.S. Supreme Court should cease to impose its current abortion policy upon the nation precisely because the Court needs to invoke a "fundamental right to privacy" as the constitutional basis for that

---

[15] M. A. Glendon, Abortion and Divorce in Western Law 40 (1987).

[16] Id., 24, 38. By contrast, the U.S. Supreme Court has not shied from referring to a "constitutional right to terminate a pregnancy" Bellotti v. Baird 443 U.S. 622, 639 (1979), also calling it a "fundamental" right City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc. 462 U.S. 416, 419 n.1 (1983).

[17] See Stith, supra note 10 at 519-32.

[18] G. Calabresi, Ideals, Beliefs, Attitudes, and the Law 109 (1985).

policy. In following Roe, the Court cannot avoid the inflammatory rhetoric against which Glendon and Calabresi caution us.

According to Prof. Glendon, in those developed Western nations where abortion policy has been determined by democratic mechanisms, rather than by judicial fiat, the following rules prevail: In two countries, abortion remains illegal, except where the defense of necessity is considered to apply.[19] In the great bulk of advanced industrial nations, abortion is available, but only for cause.[20] In only five legal systems outside the U.S. is abortion freely elective, and then only in approximately the first trimester.[21] No nation has followed Roe in providing no protection for the fetus during both the first two trimesters, nor in allowing protection thereafter only when the abortion does not contribute to maternal "health" as very broadly defined by this Court to include almost every conceivable reason which a woman would have for a third-trimester abortion.[22] Thus the U.S. remains at an isolated extreme even among nations allowing abortion.

---

[19] Belgium and Ireland, as reported in Glendon, supra note 15 at 13-24.

[20] Canada, Portugal, Spain, Switzerland, England, Finland, France, West Germany, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, and The Netherlands. Id. The legal situation in Canada is now in flux due to the decision reported supra note 6.

[21] Austria, Denmark, Greece, Norway, and Sweden, with only Swedish law permitting elective abortion until eighteen weeks. Supra note 15 at 22-24.

[22] Roe's companion case, which should be "read together" with Roe (according to Roe, supra note 1 at 165), defines "health" to be related to "all factors . . . relevant to the well-being of the patient." These factors include those that are "emotional", "psychological", and "familial". Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, 192 (1973). The recent Supreme Court decision of Thornburgh v. Am. College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986) reemphasizes that even after viability there cannot be "any 'tradeoff' between the woman's health and additional percentage points of fetal survival".

III. Roe's Unique Abortion Policy May Be Explained by the Fact that It Alone Has Refused to Describe the Fetus as Human and Alive Throughout Pregnancy.

It is surprising to find such a degree of discrepancy about abortion policy among roughly equally advanced Western nations. Modern life makes like demands upon us all. And our fundamental constitutional values are quite similar.

Indeed, something like an implicit constitutional right of "privacy" is part of the constitutional order even of that country whose high court has imposed the greatest restrictions on abortion.[23] Research has revealed no developed Western nation in which the interests of individual women are denied constitutional protection.

It is the other side of the balance where the difference lies. Constitutional courts do not deeply disagree with Roe about the rights of women. But contra Roe,[24] those which have clearly addressed the issue of the factual status of the fetus find unanimously that actual (not merely potential) human life exists in the womb and is destroyed by abortion.[25] The West German court's reasoning here is profound:

---

[23] Article 2, Sec. 1 of the West German Basic Law reads in part: "Everyone shall have the right to the free development of his personality . . ."

[24] Roe v. Wade, supra note 1, calls the fetus "potential life" (at 150, 154), "prenatal life" (at 151, 155), "potential human life" (at 159), "only the potentiality of life" (at 162), "fetal life" (at 163), and "the potentiality of human life" (at 162, 164)—the last referring to the period after viability. It also states "We need not resolve the difficult question of when life begins" (at 159), and ". . . a legitimate state interest need not stand or fall on the acceptance of the belief that life begins at conception or at some other point prior to live birth" (at 150). Putting all this together, one gathers that the Court does not know whether "life" (in the sense of "human" life) exists prior to birth. But the Court thinks its potentiality does—in the form of "prenatal" or "fetal" life.

[25] The decisions of West Germany and Spain explicitly recognize the prenatal existence of human life, as discussed supra notes 10-12,

> The process of development . . . is a continuing process which exhibits no sharp demarcation and does not allow a precise division of the various steps of and infra notes 26-27. The brief French opinion cites as authority the phrase "Considering that the law [permitting some early abortions] referred to this Conseil Constitutionnel does not authorize any violation of the principle of respect for every human being from the very commencement of life . . . except in case of necessity. . . ." Decision of 15 January 1975, [1975] A.J.D.A. 134, as translated in Cappelletti & Cohen, supra note 2 at 577-78. The Italian decision observes that Art. 2 of the Constitution guarantees the inviolable rights of man, "among which must be placed, although with the particular characteristics unique to it, the legal situation of the foetus". Cappelletti translation. Id. at 612, 613. ["Concepito" is the actual Italian word here, so a better translation would be "conceptus", emphasizing that the Court is referring to a period including very early pregnancy.] The Italian tribunal later emphasizes obligatory protection for "the life of the foetus [now translating 'feto']," at 614, even while declaring that an embryo is not yet a person, at 613, and that abortions for serious maternal health reasons must be permitted. Corte Costituzionale, Decision of 18 February 1975, n.27 [1975] 98 Foro It. I (Giurisprudencia Costituzionale e Civile) 515, 516. Even the Austrian decision, which alone holds that fully elective abortion in the first three months of pregnancy is constitutional, seems to concede "that throughout the whole duration of the pregnancy both the mother's life and the nascent human life constitute constant life", stating that the legislature is constitutionally free to protect the fetus by making abortion punishable. Decision of 11 October 1974, Constitutional Court, [1974] Erklärungen des Verfassungsgerichtshofs 221, 234-35 G 8/74, as translated by Cappelletti & Cohen, supra note 2 at 615, 620-21. The Portuguese decision of 19 March 1984 unanimously holds that the constitutional principle of the inviolability of human life embraces "intrauterine human life", even though it goes on to declare a limited disprotection of that life to be constitutional. Decision of 19 March 1984, 344 Boletim do Ministerio da Justica 197, 216, 230 (March 1985). Thus all European national constitutional decisions recognize actual rather than only potential human life in the unborn and permit significant constitutional protection for that life, with the precise degree of protection left largely up to the legislature. See generally, H. Reis, Das Lebensrecht des Ungeborenen Kindes als Verfassungsproblem (Tübingen: J.G.B. Mohr, 1984). In no case is religious doctrine the basis for the finding of life.

> development of the human life. The process does not end even with birth; the phenomena of consciousness which are specific to the human personality, for example, appear for the first time a rather long time after birth. Therefore, the protection . . . of the Basic Law cannot be limited either to the "completed" human being after birth or to the child about to be born which is independently capable of living.[26]

The West German court argues that as long as we protect newborn infants, whose human development is significantly incomplete, consistency requires protection prior to birth. Indeed, consistency requires a theory of protection which either values the organic continuum of biological human life or else values the still-undeveloped potentiality for higher "phenomena specific to the human personality"—for these are the only non-religious sources of inherent value which the infant possess at birth. In other words, the Court maintains that if we think newborns inherently worthy of protection, the only normative theories available to us also require the protection of life even in the early weeks of pregnancy. The reverse argument must also hold: If we refuse to recognize the existence and value of early prenatal life, we cannot consistently affirm the inherent dignity even of postnatal life.

The German decision concludes that no distinction concerning the right to life may constitutionally be made between the born and the unborn.[27] Other courts have not been so strongly egalitarian, but the recognition that [26] [1975] 39 BVerfGE 1, 37; Jonas and Gorby translation, supra note 9 at 638. See also infra note 27 concerning the "inherent" dignity of individual human life.

[27] Id. The German court emphasizes that, in opposition to the National Socialist devaluation of individual life, the new federal constitutional order is based upon the concept "that human beings possess an inherent worth" and it demands "unconditional respect for the life of every individual human being." [1975] BVerfGE 1, 67. Jonas and Gorby translation, supra note 9 at 662.

human lives are lost in abortion makes legislative protection for the fetus appropriate.[28] Even Roe itself implies that if this Court's factual doubt concerning whether the fetus is both human and alive had been removed, protective abortion laws could have been upheld.[29]

Along with its proclamation that abortion is part of a fundamental right, Roe's refusal to concede that human life exists before birth has shocked abortion opponents on this side of the Atlantic. Those opposed to abortion here think that the fact of life is clear and even obvious—and all European high courts agree with them. Unlike their European counterparts, American pro-lifers feel that their courts are not even willing to listen to the clear-cut evidence they present, and this feeling cannot but contribute to their frustration and anger. Since the Missouri legislation at issue in the present case specifically finds that human life begins at conception, reexamination of Roe on this point is especially appropriate. If this Court were to recognize that actual human life exists in the womb, or at least that legislative protection based on the judgment that it exists is sensible and legitimate, we could all move toward greater mutual understanding in this area.

---

[28] The Spanish tribunal, for example, reasons that human life is a "superior", "fundamental", and "central" value under the Constitution. Supra note 10 at 18-19. See also Stith, supra note 10 at 517-25.

[29] Supra note 1 at 159.

CONCLUSION

In deciding to constitutionalize abortion rights, in abolishing virtually all legislative protection for the unborn, and in denying that we know the fetus to be both human and alive, Roe v. Wade stands in isolation in Western constitutional jurisprudence.

Wherefore, the amicus curiae prays that this Court reevaluate its original findings in Roe, for the reasons stated above, and find for appellants William L. Webster, et al.

Respectfully submitted,

JOHN J. POTTS *
of the Bar of the Supreme Court of
New Mexico
Professor of Law
School of Law
Valparaiso University
Valparaiso, IN 46383
(219) 465-7855

RICHARD T. STITH, III
of the Bar of the Supreme Court of Indiana
Professor of Law
School of Law
Valparaiso University
Valparaiso, IN 46383
(219) 465-7871

Attorneys for Amicus Curiae

* Counsel of Record

The following students at Valparaiso University School of Law assisted in the preparation of this brief: Gregory H. Brack, Henry A. De Jong, Karl Hellested, Samuel W. Jarjour, Timothy D. Lucero. School affiliation and professorial titles used in this brief are for identification purposes only.

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

No. 88-605 (54)

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
MAR 28 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,

Appellants,

—against—

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,

Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF AMICI CURIAE OF THE NATIONAL COUNCIL OF NEGRO WOMEN, INC.; NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE, INC.; THE AMERICAN INDIAN HEALTH CARE ASSOCIATION; THE ASIAN AMERICAN LEGAL DEFENSE FUND; COMMITTEE FOR HISPANIC CHILDREN AND FAMILIES; THE MEXICAN AMERICAN LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATION FUND; THE NATIONAL BLACK WOMEN'S HEALTH PROJECT; NATIONAL INSTITUTE FOR WOMEN OF COLOR; NATIONAL WOMEN'S HEALTH NETWORK; ORGANIZACION NACIONAL DE LA SALUD DE LA MUJER LATINA; ORGANIZATION OF ASIAN WOMEN; PUERTO RICAN LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATION FUND; WOMEN OF COLOR PARTNERSHIP PROGRAM OF THE RELIGIOUS COALITION FOR ABORTION RIGHTS; WOMEN OF ALL RED NATIONS, NORTH DAKOTA; YWCA OF THE U.S.A., AND OTHER ORGANIZATIONS IN SUPPORT OF APPELLEES.

Wendy R. Brown
Medgar Evers College
Center for Law & Social Justice
1473 Fulton Street
Brooklyn, New York 11216

Cathy Bell
National Conference of Black Lawyers
126 West 119th Street
New York, New York 10026

Joan P. Gibbs
Mary M. Gundrum
*Rhonda Copelon
Center for Constitutional Rights
666 Broadway
New York, New York 10012
(212) 614-6464

Barbara Wolvovitz
National Lawyers Guild
55 Sixth Avenue
New York, New York 10013

Counsel of Record*

ATTORNEYS FOR AMICI CURIAE

TABLE OF CONTENTS

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES iv

CONSENT OF THE PARTIES 1

INTEREST OF AMICI CURIAE 2

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT 2

ARGUMENT 9

POINT I

THE REVERSAL OF ROE v. WADE WOULD HAVE A DISPROPORTIONATE ADVERSE IMPACT ON POOR WOMEN. 9

A. Poor Women And Women Of Color Will Resort To Illegal Abortions In Disproportionately High Numbers As They Did Before Roe. 9

B. Broad Access To Abortions Has Demonstrably Protected Women From The Horrors Of Illegal Abortions. 20

POINT II

THE IMPACT OF ADOPTING AN UNDUE BURDEN THRESHOLD WILL BE TO PRECLUDE LEGAL AND SAFE ABORTIONS FOR POOR WOMEN, WHO ARE DISPROPORTIONATELY WOMEN OF COLOR; STRICT SCRUTINY OF ALL SIGNIFICANT BURDENS IS NEEDED TO AVERT THAT IMPACT . . . 23

A. Strict Scrutiny Of All Significant Burdens On The Fundamental Right To Abortion Is Required Under The Equal Protection Clause In Order To Avert Disproportionate Impact Based On Wealth And Race. . 25

B. An "Undue Burden" Threshold For Strict Scrutiny Of Abortion Restrictions Is Indeterminate And Will Lead To Confusion, To Prejudice Or To No Standard At All 30

C. The Cumulative Impact Of Restrictive Regulations Which Would Be Permissible Under An "Undue Burden" Standard Will Effectively Preclude Abortion For Poor Women Who Are Disproportionately Women Of Color. 36

1. Laws Requiring That All Abortions Be Performed In Hospitals Would Effectively Preclude Abortions For Poor Women And Women Of Color. 36

a. Poor Women Do Not Have Access To Hospitals For Abortions. 37

b. Hospitalization Requirements Will Increase The Cost of Abortions By At Least Five Times 40

c. Complicated Preconditions Preclude Access. . 46

d. Delay Which Results In Increased Danger To Life And Health And In Increased Costs Would Be Inevitable 48

e. Hospitalization Requirements Carry Additional Emotional And Psychological Burdens 51

2. The Cumulative Impact Of Many Restrictive Regulations Will Further Deny Access. 54

3. The Cumulative Effect Of An Undue Burden Threshold Will Force Poor Women To Obtain Illegal Abortions. . . 59

CONCLUSION 61

APPENDIX

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES

Abele v. Markle, 351 F. Supp. 224 (D.Conn. 1973) 62, 63

Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416 (1983) . . passim

Beal v. Doe, 432 U.S. 438 (1977) . 60

Bellotti v. Baird (I), 428 U.S. 132 (1976) 55

Bellotti v. Baird (II), 443 U.S. 622 (1979) 55

Boddie v. Connecticut, 401 U.S. 371 (1971) 26, 27

Buck v. Bell, 274 U.S. 200 (1927) 30

Carey v. Population Services International, 431 U.S. 678 (1978) 34

Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973) 46

Doe v. Kenley, 584 F.2d 1362 (4th Cir. 1978) 11

Dunn v. Blumstein, 405 U.S. 330 (1972) 28

Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S. 438 (1972) 34

H.L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398 (1981) 55

Harper v. Virginia Board of Elections, 383 U.S. 663 (1966) 26

Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980) 26, 28

Leigh v. Olson, 497 F. Supp. 1340 (D.N.D. 1980) 57

Lubin v. Panish, 415 U.S. 709 (1974) 26

Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977) 28, 41

Margaret S. v. Edwards, 488 F. Supp. 181 (E.D.La. 1980) . . . 57

Margaret S. v. Treen, 597 F. Supp. 636 (E.D. La. 1984), aff'd, 794 F.2d 994 (5th Cir. 1986) . . . 58

McRae v. Califano, 491 F. Supp. 630 (E.D.N.Y.), rev'd on other grounds sub nom., Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980) . . 11, 44, 60

Memorial Hospital v. Maricopa County, 415 U.S. 250 (1974) . . 28, 29

Ortwein v. Schwab, 410 U.S. 656 (1973) 27

Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976) 55

Reproductive Health Services v. Webster, 662 F. Supp. 407 (W.D. Mo. 1987), aff'd, 851 F.2d 1071 (8th Cir. 1988) 58, 59

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) . passim

San Antonio Independent School District v. Rodriguez, 441 U.S. 1 (1973) 22

Shapiro v. Thompson, 394 U.S. 618 (1969) 28

Skinner v. Oklahoma, 316 U.S. 535 (1942) 26, 29

Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986) 30, 55

U.S. v. Kras, 409 U.S. 434 (1973) 27

Women's Health Services, Inc. v. Maher, 482 F. Supp. 725 (D. Conn. 1980), vacated and remanded on other grounds, 636 F.2d 23 (2d Cir. 1980) 43

Zablocki v. Redhail, 434 U.S. 374 (1978) 26, 27

STATUTES

Wash. Rev. Code §§9.02.060 to 9.02.080 (Supp. 1975) 9

Alaska Stat. §11.15.060 (1970) . . . 9

Haw. Rev. Stat. §453-16 (Supp. 1971) 9

N.Y. Penal Code §125.05, subd. 3 (Supp. 1972-1973) 9

Wis. Stat. §940.04(6) (1969) 63

MISCELLANEOUS

Alan Guttmacher Institute, Issues in Brief 12 (1985) 39

Alan Guttmacher Institute, Safe and Legal: 10 Years' Experience With Legal Abortion in New York State 23 (1980) 19, 20, 21, 49

Benditt, Second-Trimester Abortion In The United States, 11 Fam. Plan. Persp. 358 (1979) 49, 50

Binken, Gold & Cates, Illegal-Abortion Deaths in the United States: Why Are They

Still Occurring? 14 Fam. Plan. Persp. 163, 166 (1982) 5, 22, 44

Center on Social Welfare, Policy & Law, Analysis of 1988 Benefit Levels in the Program of Aid to Families with Dependent Children 1, Table 1 (1988) 42

Cates & Rochat, Illegal Abortions in the United States: 1972-1974, 8 Fam. Plan. Persp. 86 (1976) 5

Center for Disease Control, U.S. Dept. of Health & Human Services, Abortion Surveillance Report, 1978 (1980) 48

Center for Disease Control, U.S. Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare, Abortion Surveillance Report 10 (1970) 5

Center for Disease Control, U.S. Dept. of Health & Human Services, 36 Surveillance Summaries 4055 (1987) 45

Committee on Ways and Means, U.S. House of Representatives, 100th Cong., 2d Sess., Background Material and Data on Programs Within The Jurisdiction of The Committee on Ways and Means 428 (Committee Print 1988) 42

Erhardt, Tietze & Nelson, United States:

Therapeutic Abortions in New York City, 51 Studies in Fam. Plan. 8-9 (1970) 12

Gold, Therapeutic Abortions In New York: A 20 Year Review, 55 Am. J. Pub. Health 964-65 (1965). . 13, 18

Gould, Carrie Buck's Daughter, Natural History Mag. (July 1984) 30

Hall, Present Abortion Practices in Hospitals of New York State, 23 New York Medicine 124 (1967) 13

Henefin, Prenatal Screening in Reproductive Laws for the 1990's A Briefing Handbook 133 (Taub & Cohen 1988) 47

Henshaw, Forrest & Blaine, Abortion Services in the United States, 1981 and 1982, 16 Fam. Plan. Persp. 119 (1984) 40, 41, 51

Henshaw, Forrest, Sullivan & Tietze, Abortion Services in the U.S., 1979-1980, 14 Fam. Plan. Persp. 5 (1982) 39, 52

Henshaw, Forrest & Van Vort, Abortion Services in the United States, 1984 and 1985, 19 Fam. Plan. Persp. 67-69 (1987) . . . 41, 42

Henshaw & O'Reilly,

Characteristics of Abortion Patients in the United States, 1979 and 1980, 15 Fam. Plan. Persp. 5, 11 (1983) 37, 38

Henshaw & Silverman, The Characteristics and Prior Contraceptive Use of U.S. Abortion Patients, 20 Fam. Plan. Persp. 158 (1988) 11

Henshaw & Wallisch, The Medicaid Cutoff and Abortion Services For The Poor, 16 Fam. Plan. Persp. 170 (1984) . . . . . passim

Institute of Medicine, Legalized Abortion and Public Health 64 (1975) 19

Irwin, The New Abortion Laws: How are They Working? 48 Today's Health 21, 23 (1970) 13

Kahan, Baker & Freeman, The Effect of Legalized Abortion on the Morbidity Resulting from Criminal Abortion, 121 Amer. J. Obstet. Gynec. 114 (1975) . . . 22

Lincoln, Doring-Bradley, Lindheim & Cotterill, The Court, the Congress and the President: Turning Back the Clock on the Pregnant Poor, 9 Fam. Plan. Persp. 207 (1977) 44

Lin-Fu, Population Characteristics and Health Care Needs of

Asian Pacific Americans in Public Health Reports (1988) 4, 17, 53

Lupfer & Silber, How Patients View Mandatory Waiting Periods for Abortion, 13 Fam. Plan. Persp. 75 (1981) 56, 57

National Abortion Federation, Celebrating Roe v. Wade: Dramatic Improvements in American Health 6 (Jan. 1989) . 41

Niswander, Medical Abortion Practices in the United States in Abortion and the Law 53 (Smith 1967) 11, 16

Official Journal of American College of Obstetrics and Gynecology (Aug. 1962) 14, 19

Pipel, The Abortion Crisis in The Case For Legalized Abortion Now 101 (Guttmacher 1967) 13

Polgar & Fried, The Bad Old Days: Clandestine Abortions Among the Poor in New York City Before Liberalization of the Abortion Law, 8 Fam. Plan. Persp. 125 (1976) 12

Ryser, Racial Differences in Abortion Seeking, 12 Contraception 199-201 (1975) . . 50

Schwarz, Septic Abortion 7 (1968) 10

Shelton, Brann & Schulz, Abortion Utilization: Does Travel Distance Matter? 8 Fam. Plan. Persp. 260 (1976) 39

Sneiderman, Abortion: A Public Health and Social Policy Perspective, 7 Rev. L. & Soc. Change 187, 194 (1978) 19

Star, 1,000,000 A Year: The Growing Tragedy of Illegal Abortion, Look Mag. (Oct. 19, 1965) 12, 14

Swartz & Paranjpe, Abortion: Medical Aspects In A Municipal Hospital, 47 Bulletin of the New York Academy of Medicine 845-456 (1971). 14

Tietze, United States: Therapeutic Abortions, 1963 to 1968, 1 Studies in Fam. Plan. 5 (1979) 12

Tietze & LeWitt, Deaths from Abortions in the United States, 1933-1968 17

Torres & Forrest, Why Do Women Have Abortions? 20 Fam. Plan.

Persp. 169 (1988) 49, 51

Trussell, Menken, Lindheim & Vaughan, The Impact of Restricting Medicaid Financing for Abortion, 12 Fam. Plan. Persp. 120 (1980) 5, 42, 49

U.S. Dept. of Commerce, Bureau of Census, The Hispanic Population in the United States: March 1988, Series P-20, No. 431 (1988) 3

U.S. Dept. of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, General Population Characteristics, United States Summary, 1980 Census Population (May 1983) 39

U.S. Dept. of Health & Human Services, 1 Report of the Secretary's Task Force on Black and Minority Health 71 (1985) 47

U.S. Dept. of Health & Human Services, 1 Report of the Secretary's Task Force on Black & Minority Health 57-58 (1980) 4, 23

U.S. Dept. of Health & Human Services, 1 Report of the Secretary's Task Force on Black & Minority Health 51 (1986) 3, 39

Van Der Tak, Abortion, Fertility, And Changing Legislation: An International Review 72-74 (1974) 10

Woo, Asian In America: Challenges for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), published by the Office for Racial Justice and Asian Mission Development Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (May 1987) 4

NO. 88-605

IN THE

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM WEBSTER, et al.,

Appellants,

-against-

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,

Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF AMICI CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLEES

CONSENT OF THE PARTIES

Amici Curiae file this brief with the consent of both parties in support of the position advanced by the Appellees. Letters of consent have been filed with the Clerk of this Court.

INTEREST OF AMICI CURIAE

The more than 100 civil rights, women's, labor and religious organizations joining in this brief as Amici Curiae represent various segments of American society with diverse interests. See Appendix. All Amici share an urgent concern that the Court clearly and unequivocally reaffirm Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973). They fear that any tampering with the right to abortion recognized in Roe will have a powerful, adverse impact on the liberty, equality and health of poor women and women of color.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

While women of all classes and colors will be endangered by any dismantling of the constitutional framework of Roe v. Wade, 410

U.S. 113 (1973), the burden will fall most heavily and inexorably on poor women, a vastly disproportionate number of whom are women of color--African-American,[1] Latina,[2]

---

[1]Of 26.5 million African-Americans in the United States, 34% had incomes below the poverty level in 1980; 18.9% were unemployed. U.S. Dept. of Health & Human Services, 1 Report of the Secretary's Task Force on Black & Minority Health 51 (1986).

[2]According to the 1988 Bureau of Census report on the Latino population:

> About 1.2 million of the 4.6 million Hispanic families, or 26%, were living below the poverty level in 1987...Their poverty rate was about 2 1/2 times as high as that for non-Hispanic families. There has been no significant change in the poverty rate of Hispanic families between 1982 and 1987.

U.S. Dept. of Commerce, Bureau of Census, The Hispanic Population in the United States: March 1988, Series P-20, No. 431 (1988).

Native American[3] and Asian.[4] Women of color were over-represented among the women who died, were left sterile or suffered other [3]Although 1.5 million Native Americans constitute less than 1% of the total U.S. population, 29% lived below the poverty level in 1979. 13% were unemployed. U.S. Dept. of Health & Human Services, 1 Report of the Secretary's Task Force on Black & Minority Health 57-58 (1980).

---

[4]In 1979, of the then 3.7 million Asian Americans, 24.4% had incomes lower than $10,000, 11.9 percent had an income of $5,000 and 10.2% lived below the poverty line. Lin-Fu, Population Characteristics and Health Care Needs of Asian Pacific Americans in Public Health Reports 21 (1988).

These figures do not account for the different economic status among various groups classified as Asian. As one commentator has observed, "it is sometimes difficult to use the term 'Asian' with any precision or significance" because of the "wide diversity of groups that are included under the nomenclature 'Asian', including Burmese, Cambodian, Chinese, Filipini, Hmonmg, Indian, Indonesian, Japanese, Korean, Laotian, Malaysian, Mien, Singaporean, Thai, Vietnamese, and several other groups." Woo, Asian In America: Challenges for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), published by the Office for Racial Justice and Asian Mission Development Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (May 1987).

serious medical complications as a result of illegal abortions prior to this Court's decision in Roe v. Wade, and would be similarly effected by its reversal.[5]

Indeed, permissible governmental restrictions on access to abortions for both adult and teenage women already adversely impact on poor and young women.[6] Any further retreat

---

[5]In 1972, women of color represented 64% of the deaths associated with illegal abortion. Cates & Rochat, Illegal Abortions in the United States: 1972-1974, 8 Fam. Plan. Persp. 86, 87 (1976). In 1975, after legalization, the percentage rose to 80%. Id. In Georgia, 88% of women who died from illegal abortions between 1965 and 1969 were African-American. Center for Disease Control, U.S. Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare, Abortion Surveillance Report 10 (1970).

[6]See, e.g., Binken, Gold & Cates, Illegal-Abortion Deaths in the United States: Why Are They Still Occurring? 14 Fam. Plan. Persp. 163, 166 (1982) (absence of public funding played a primary role in one third [all women of color] of the deaths from illegal abortions between 1975 and 1979); Trussell, Menken, Lindheim & Vaughan, The Impact of Restricting Medicaid Financing for Abortion, 12 Fam. Plan. Persp. 120 (1980) from Roe v. Wade will eliminate the safety net provided by relatively inexpensive legal abortions and will force women to undergo the desperation, horrors and dangers of illegal abortion. (Point I)

To illustrate the danger of tampering with the core framework of Roe v. Wade, Amici focus this brief on the suggestion that restrictions on abortion should not be subject to strict scrutiny unless they constitute an "undue" burden on the right to abortion. See Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416, 453 (1983) (O.Connor, J., dissenting).

This suggested departure from the Court's jurisprudence of fundamental rights is (1977-1978 funding restrictions doubled unmet need for Medicaid abortions); Henshaw & Wallisch, The Medicaid Cutoff and Abortion Services For The Poor, 16 Fam. Plan. Persp. 170 (1984) (42% of Medicaid-eligible women delayed abortion for financial reasons).

---

inconsistent with the very notion of a fundamental right. The right to abortion is no less vulnerable to hatred, intolerance, prejudice and misunderstanding than any other fundamental right. Only strict scrutiny of all forms of interference can guarantee that necessary burdens on the right to choose abortion are distinguished from superfluous or obstructionist ones. (Point II.A)

To adopt a requirement that the burden be "undue" before strict scrutiny is triggered will permit a vast array of burdensome regulation that will preclude many women, but particularly poor women and women of color, from access to safe legal abortion. Moreover, what constitutes an "undue burden" is not generally determinable, but depends on conditions which vary greatly from community to community and on the particular circumstances of each woman's life. "Undue burden" is a subjective and easily manipulable standard that will allow courts and legislatures to act on a deep prejudice toward women's right to self-determination and equality. (Point II.B).

Finally, Amici examine the cumulative effect of several specific restrictions which members of this Court have suggested would not meet an "undue burden" standard. (Point II.C)

ARGUMENT

POINT I

THE REVERSAL OF ROE v. WADE WOULD HAVE A DISPROPORTIONATE ADVERSE IMPACT ON POOR WOMEN.

A. Poor Women And Women Of Color Will Resort To Illegal Abortions In Disproportionately High Numbers As They Did Before Roe.

While Roe v. Wade benefited women of all classes, races and ages, its effect on the health and mortality of poor women, particularly women of color, was, and still is, especially significant. At the time of this Court's decision in Roe v. Wade, abortions were illegal in most of the United States.[7]

---

[7]Between 1969 and 1973 when this Court ruled in Roe, the restrictive statutes of at least 8 states had been struck down by federal courts throughout this country. See Roe, 410 U.S. at 154-155. Four others had been repealed by state legislatures. Alaska Stat. §11.15.060 (1970); Haw. Rev. Stat. §453-16 (Supp. 1971); N.Y. Penal Code §125.05, subd. 3 (Supp. 1972-1973); Wash. Rev. Code §§9.02.060 to 9.02.080 (Supp. 1975). Before those changes, however, anti-abortion laws did not keep women from

In a majority of states, abortions were permitted only to save the life of pregnant women; in 14 others, more "liberal" laws allowed abortions to prevent grave impairment to the woman's health. Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 118, n.2.[8] For poor women, however, the different legal standards made little, if any practical difference.[9] obtaining abortions. While no official data exist on the number of illegal abortions that were performed in the years prior to Roe v. Wade, it was estimated that between 200,000 and 1.2 million women each year obtained illegal abortions. See, e.g., Schwarz, Septic Abortion 7 (1968); Van Der Tak, Abortion, Fertility, And Changing Legislation: An International Review 72-74 (1974).

---

[8]14 states adopted some form of the American Law Institute model statute which permitted abortions if there was "substantial risk that continuance of the pregnancy would gravely impair the physical or mental health of the mother or that the child would be born with grave physical or mental defect, or that the pregnancy resulted from rape, incest or other felonious intercourse."

[9]By 1967, only three states had laws which permitted abortions for reasons other than to protect the woman's life. However,

Laws restricting access to abortion, however, did not prevent women from seeking abortions.[10] While a small number of upper even after doctors began to read statutes with "life-only" exceptions more expansively, to include psychiatric problems and fetal defects, private patients had 20 times more abortions than public patients. Niswander, Medical Abortion Practices in the United States in Abortion and the Law 53 (Smith 1967).

---

Similarly, in an analogous context, even a broad construction of the term "life-endangerment" to include health considerations (see Doe v. Kenley, 584 F.2d 1362 (4th Cir. 1978)) made no difference in access to funded abortions. In 1978, Virginia reported only 9 Medicaid abortions, a decrease of 99.8% from 1979 when Virginia covered 5,200 medically necessary abortions. McRae v. Califano, 491 F. Supp. 630 (E.D.N.Y.), rev'd on other grounds sub nom. Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980) (hereinafter "McRae Record" at T.1534).

[10]Nor would similar laws prevent abortions today. Now women of color obtain 31.4% of all legal abortions. Of women who had legal abortions in 1987, 31.9% were unemployed, 25.5% were less than 19 years old, 33.1% had incomes of less than $11,000 and 23.8% were Medicaid covered. Henshaw & Silverman, The Characteristics and Prior Contraceptive Use of U.S. Abortion Patients, 20 Fam. Plan. Persp. 158, 162 (1988).

and middle class women had access to safe, sanitary abortions in private hospitals and doctors' offices,[11] and some others were able

[11]Two researchers, for example found that

> In the 1960's, prior to liberalization of New York State's restrictive abortion law, an average of 400 legal ("therapeutic") abortions were performed each year. Poor and minority-group women were virtually precluded from obtaining safe, legal procedures, the overwhelming majority of which were obtained by white women in the private hospital services on psychiatric indications. Most of the poor and minority-group women seeking to obtain abortions, it may be presumed, were among the 50,000 New York City women estimated to have clandestine abortions annually in the preliberalization years.

Polgar & Fried, The Bad Old Days: Clandestine Abortions Among the Poor in New York City Before Liberalization of the Abortion Law, 8 Fam. Plan. Persp. 125 (1976). See also Star, 1,000,000 A Year: The Growing Tragedy of Illegal Abortion, Look Mag. (Oct. 19, 1965); Erhardt, Tietze & Nelson, United States: Therapeutic Abortions in New York City, 51 Studies in Fam. Plan. 8-9 (1970); Tietze, United States: Therapeutic Abortions, 1963 to 1968, 1 Studies in Fam. Plan. 5 (1979).

Nationwide, private patients obtained four to afford travel to safer illegal providers, poor women, unable to afford the cost of either long distant trips[12] or private doc-times as many hospital abortions as did public ward patients. Irwin, The New Abortion Laws: How Are They Working? 48 Today's Health 21, 23 (1970). See also Pipel, The Abortion Crisis in The Case For Legalized Abortion Now 101 (Guttmacher 1967) (93% of in-hospital abortions in New York State were performed on white women who were able to afford private rooms); Hall, Present Abortion Practices in Hospitals of New York State, 23 New York Medicine 124 (1967) (one abortion for every 266 births at private hospitals; one for every 989 at public hospitals); Gold, Therapeutic Abortions In New York: A 20 Year Review, 55 Am. J. Pub. Health 964-65 (1965) (ratio of safe and legal hospital abortions, per live births for white women was more than five times that among women of color and 26 times that among Puerto Ricans).

[12]According to one 1965 newspaper article:

> [I]n New York. . .[abortions] cost $800 to $1,500--more and more American women find it economic to seek them outside the U.S. For $953, a Chicago woman can fly round trip to Japan, where abortions have been legal since 1948.
>
> * * * *
>
> An estimated 10,000 U.S. women annually patronized San Juan, Puerto Rico where abortion is illegal, but easy to get.

tors, were forced to resort to illegal abortions under the most frightening, unhygienic and often life-threatening conditions.[13] Permanent loss of reproductive capacity or death were not uncommon.[14]

A reporter for the New York Daily News found that 18 doctors worked in six abortion clinics, "often throughout the night."

West Coast women find it more convenient to go to Tijuana, Mexico, just south of San Diego... Star, 1,000,000 A Year: The Growing Tragedy of Illegal Abortion, Look Mag. (Oct. 19, 1965).

[13]Various methods were employed by women desperate to terminate an unwanted pregnancy and by nonmedical practitioners: "intracervical douche--soap, products advertised for feminine hygiene, etc.; intrauterine foreign body--rubber, plastic, or metal; cathartics with or without quinine; ergot compounds; and corrosives such as potassium permanganate tablets." Swartz & Paranjpe, Abortion: Medical Aspects In A Municipal Hospital, 47 Bulletin of the New York Academy of Medicine 845-856 (1971).

[14]The following case history from an August 1962 article in the Official Journal of the American College of Obstetrics and Gynecology is illustrative of the fate suffered by poor women seeking to terminate unwanted pregnancies prior to Roe.

Because of the generally poor quality of health care available in their communities, women of color were disproportionately repre-

---

> C.H., a 29 year old Black woman with three children, was admitted with a history of vomiting, diarrhea, lower abdominal cramps for three days and vaginal bleeding for one day. [She was 10 weeks pregnant]. The cervix was dilated and some tissue was presenting. Her condition was deteriorating, and antibiotics and blood transfusions were administered and a curettage was performed. In spite of this, her condition continued downhill, and on the fourth hospital day an exploratory operation was performed and there was gross pus in the pelvis and a one inch perforation in the top of the uterus. A hysterectomy was performed accompanied by additional blood transfusions. Her condition continued to deteriorate, and death occurred on the 9th hospital day. On the 3rd day a history of intra-uterine douche with a detergent 4 days prior to admission had been obtained.

sented among those who died or were left sterile by illegal abortions. One study estimated that mishandled criminal abortions were the principal cause of maternal death in the United States, in the 1960's, killing 5,000 women a year. Niswander, Medical Abortion Practices in the United States in Abortion and the Law 53 (Smith 1967). However, women of color risked their lives at much higher rates than did white women if they chose not to continue their pregnancy.[15]

---

[15]According to one study of "Deaths from Abortions in the United States, 1933-68,":

> Mortality rates from abortion have remained much higher among non-white women than among white women. Moreover, the relative difference in rates between the two groups has increased substantially over the past three decades. In 1933, the mortality rate from abortion was twice as high for non-white women (15.4 [per 100,000 women of reproductive age]) as for white women (8.3); in 1968, it was seven times as

In 1965, in New York, for example, although there were 4 abortion deaths for every 100,000 live births for white women; for non-white women there were 56 abortion deaths per 100,000; for Puerto Rican women,[16] there were > high (1.4 compared with 0.2). Although the rates declined for both groups, the decline was relatively much greater for whites than for non-whites. The higher mortality rates for non-white women result, at least to a considerable extent, from the poorer quality of abortionists and of after care available to them.

---

Tietze & Lewit, Deaths from Abortions in the United States, 1933-1968.

[16]Statistics were not uniformly kept on all races or ethnic groups. In New York, statistics were broken down to identify whites, non-whites and sometimes Puerto Ricans and blacks. In other parts of the country, statistics for whites included Latinas. Additionally, no figures exist for Asian Pacific Americans because up until quite recently, they were submerged in the category of "others". Lin-Fu, Population Characteristics and Health Care Needs of Asian Pacific Americans in Public Health Reports (1988).

61. N.Y.C. Dept. of Health Statistics (Oct. 14, 1969).

The overall maternal mortality rate from illegal abortions reveals a similar disparity. Between 1951 and 1962, that rate was nine times higher for African-American women than for white women in New York City. Gold, Therapeutic Abortions in New York: A 20 Year Review, 55 Am. J. Pub. Health 964-65 (1965). Half of all deaths of women of color associated with pregnancy were due to complications following an abortion, while only one-fourth of all white maternal deaths resulted from such complications. Id.

The health implications of illegal or self-abortions are difficult to measure, because these abortions were so often carried out in secret.[17] One small indicator of the [17]The health hazards that accompany self abortion are particularly severe. Inserting chemicals or instruments, like coathangers or darning needles into the uterus can cause infection, injury to the membranes of the vagina, perforation of the uterus, injury to other organs, bleeding, and air embolism. Institute of Medicine, Legalized Abortion and Public Health 64 (1975).

gravity of the problem was the number of hospitalizations for problems arising from attempted self or illegal abortions. In 1969, in New York City, municipal hospitals reported 6,524 admissions for septic and incomplete abortions.[18]

A case history recounted the story of a 25 year old Latina woman with three children. She was 4 months pregnant and had attempted to induce an abortion with a crochet hook. After a week of bleeding, abdominal cramping and foul-smelling discharges, she was hospitalized for 31 days. She went into shock, was jaundiced and bruised and went into kidney failure several times. Official Journal of American College of Obstetrics and Gynecology (Aug. 1962)

[18]In 1970, the first year of legalized abortions, the number of admissions for complications from illegal abortions fell to 3,600. Sneiderman, Abortion: A Public Health and Social Policy Perspective, 7 Rev. L. & Soc. Change 187, 194 (1978). See also Alan Guttmacher Institute, Safe and Legal: 10 Years' Experience With Legal Abortion in New

B. Broad Access To Abortions Has Demonstrably Protected Women From The Horrors Of Illegal Abortions.

Following legalization of abortion in New York in 1970, the decline in maternal deaths was sharper and deeper in New York State than in 19 states where restrictive laws were still being enforced.[19] Between 1967-1969 when abortions were not legal in New York, and 1970-1972 when they were legal, the average annual rate of abortion-related death

---

York State 23 (1980). These figures actually understate the breadth of the problem because many women suffering similar injuries are treated as outpatients or resort to self help.

[19]Alan Guttmacher Institute, Safe and Legal: 10 Years' Experience With Legal Abortion In New York State 22 (1980). In 1969 there were 24 deaths from illegal abortions in New York City alone. That number fell to 3 deaths in 1971 after abortion was broadly legalized in New York. N.Y.C. Health Services Administration (Feb. 12, 1972) fell by 51% in New York State[20]. In the 19 comparative states the decline was substantially less--29%. Id. at 17.

After legalization, the change nationally was similar. Despite the drop in the overall number of maternal deaths after Roe,[21] however, a greater percentage of women of color than white women continued to die from illegal abortions. Between 1975 and 1979, several years after abortion was legalized, 82% of the women who died after illegal abortions were African-American and Latina.

---

[20]In 1972, the maternal mortality risk for women of color was 27.7 deaths per 100,000 births and only 9.6 deaths for white women. The death rate per 100,000 legal abortions was also more than twice as high for women of color (5.7 for non-whites as opposed to 2.4 for whites). Id. at 21.

[21]Following national legalization the pace of decline was more rapid in the 19 states. In the four years following Roe, the death rate in those states fell to about the same level as in New York. (13 deaths per 100,000 births). Id.

Binken, Gold & Cates, Illegal-Abortion Deaths in the United States: Why Are They Still Occurring? 14 Fam. Plan. Persp. 163 (1982).[22]

This data, and data on health complications from illegal abortions among the poor, even after legalization, suggest that access to abortion must be very broad to ensure against unconscionable discrimination. See San Antonio Independent School District v. Rodriguez, 441 U.S. 1, 20 (1973).[23] Any dilution of Roe v. Wade spells a return to an era when women seeking abortions had to risk

---

[22]One third sought illegal abortions because legal abortions were either too expensive or not readily available in their areas. Id.

[23]A study in a major urban hospital near Atlanta, Georgia revealed that at least among medically indigent groups, legal abortion does not entirely displace illegal abortion and that the availability of legal abortion must be very broad indeed to undercut the use of illegal means. Kahan, Baker, & Freeman, The Effect of Legalized Abortion on the Morbidity Resulting from Criminal Abortion, 121 Amer. J. Obstet. Gynec. 114-116 (1975).

their lives in order to obtain one.

POINT II

THE IMPACT OF ADOPTING AN UNDUE BURDEN THRESHOLD WILL BE TO PRECLUDE LEGAL AND SAFE ABORTIONS FOR POOR WOMEN, WHO ARE DISPROPORTIONATELY WOMEN OF COLOR; STRICT SCRUTINY OF ALL SIGNIFICANT BURDENS IS NEEDED TO AVERT THAT IMPACT.

The State of Missouri proposes that even if the Court continues to recognize the right to abortion as fundamental, the Court should adopt a higher threshold for triggering strict scrutiny than for other fundamental rights. Brief for Appellants at 19. Under the proposed standard, unless state regulations constitute an "undue burden" on the fundamental right to choose abortion, strict scrutiny need never be applied and state laws need only be rationally related to any state interest, including the state interest in potential life. See Akron v. Akron Center for

Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416, 453 (1983) (O'Connor, J., dissenting)

Although this proposed change in the standard of review appears to be an innocuous, less sweeping means of undoing the Roe v. Wade framework, the result would be essentially identical to a wholesale judicial rejection of the fundamental right to abortion for most women.

Because equality with respect to the exercise of fundamental rights is a paramount aspect of equal justice, because an "undue burden" standard is indeterminate and subject to arbitrary application, and because it would effectively foreclose millions of poor women, women of color and young women from the ability to exercise their fundamental right, this Court should reject any modification of the threshold for the application of strict scrutiny established in Roe v. Wade and reaffirmed in Akron.

A. Strict Scrutiny Of All Significant Burdens On The Fundamental Right To Abortion Is Required Under The Equal Protection Clause In Order To Avert Disproportionate Impact Based On Wealth And Race.

This Court has recognized that seemingly small burdens on the exercise of fundamental rights may preclude their enjoyment by the poor or people of color. Only strict scrutiny of all state-created obstacles can assure that the right to a safe, legal abortion will not be precluded for those without great resources or special connections.

Strict scrutiny is required under the liberty prong of the due process clause because of the preciousness of the fundamental right and its vulnerability to social prejudice and intolerance. The principle of equal protection also justifies strict scrutiny: it requires that fundamental rights be guaranteed equally to all.[24]

This Court has shown special solicitude for the disproportionate impact of fundamental rights-restrictive legislation on the basis of wealth or class. Thus, the Court has invalidated relatively minor financial restrictions on electoral participation, not because the poor are a suspect class, but because it is essential to guarantee the right to vote equally regardless of wealth.[25] The right of privacy has been likewise protected against such disproportionate impact. In Boddie v. Connecticut, 401 U.S. at 383 the Court invalidated a $45 filing fee for divorce because of the state's monopoly over the means of obtaining a divorce and the fundamental nature of the privacy interest.[26] In Zablocki v. Redhail, 434 U.S. at 387, the Court struck down a statute conditioning the right to marry on a judicial determination that support obligations were not in arrears and not likely to be affected. While finding that the statute created an impermissible procedural burden for those who could afford it, the Court emphasized that for the poor, the statute would operate as an absolute bar. Id. at 388.

---

[24]See, e.g., Skinner v. Oklahoma, 316 U.S. 535 (1942); Harper v. Virginia Board of Elections, 383 U.S. 663 (1966); Zablocki v. Redhail, 434 U.S. 374 (1978); Boddie v. Connecticut, 401 U.S. 371 (1971); cf. Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980) (equal access is guaranteed against state-created obstacles; even though it does not require affirmative governmental support).

[25]See, e.g., Harper v. Virginia Board of Elections, 383 U.S. 663 (1966) ($1.50 poll tax held impermissible burden); Lubin v. Panish, 415 U.S. 709 (1974) (candidate filing fee held impermissible burden).

From a constitutional perspective, there is no difference between a statute imposing a [26]Contrast U.S. v. Kras, 409 U.S. 434, 450 (1973) (upholding filing fees for bankruptcy) and Ortwein v. Schwab, 410 U.S. 656, 659 (1973) (upholding appellate filing fee).

---

filing fee and one which increases the cost of abortion. The added cost and its preclusive effect is imposed by the state and is not simply a consequence of an individual's poverty.[27] Strict scrutiny of any significant increase in cost is the only way to assure that only necessary costs, carefully tailored to a compelling interest, will be imposed so that the preclusive effect of state regulation on the poor will be kept to a minimum.

In assessing whether a restriction has an impermissible effect on the exercise of a fundamental right, the Court examines its deterrent as well as its penalizing effect. Shapiro v. Thompson, 394 U.S. 618 (1969); Dunn v. Blumstein, 405 U.S. 330 (1972); Memorial Hospital v. Maricopa County, 415

---

[27]Contrast Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297, 317 (1980); Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464, 475 (1977).

U.S. 250 (1974). Poor women will be significantly deterred from seeking legal abortions by burdensome regulations. Moreover, even for those women who should succeed, the added cost, procedural hurdles and delay, which escalate health risks and emotional distress constitute a penalty on the exercise of the right. Id. at 255-256 (increased health risk from delayed health care is a penalty on the right to travel).

Finally, it is critical to stress the importance of assuring equality in the exercise of procreative rights. Skinner v. Oklahoma, 316 U.S. at 541. In Skinner, the Court recognized the danger of giving the state power to select who was eligible to reproduce. The power to force unwanted pregnancy is no less destructive of the dignity of women and their right to shape their lives, express their values or create their families. To eliminate strict scrutiny of burdensome regulation in this area invests the state with power to coerce the child-bearing decisions of the poor.[28]

B. An "Undue Burden" Threshold For Strict Scrutiny Of Abortion Restrictions Is Indeterminate And Will Lead To Confusion, To Prejudice Or To No Standard At All.

There is a sensible and necessary simplicity in the standard for strict scrutiny in Roe v. Wade and its progeny. Regulations, which have no significant impact on the right to abortion are acceptable so long as they are rationally related to an important state health objective. Akron, 462 U.S. at 430. Once a regulation imposes an identifiable or significant burden on the right--once it has an impact on the woman's ability to make or effectuate her choice--it must be examined under the compelling state interest test. Akron, 462 U.S. at 434, 435. While there is an element of indeterminacy in the assessment of whether a regulation constitutes a significant burden, the test makes clear that anything which adversely affects the cost, timing, and accessibility of abortion is suspect. It requires neither complex value judgments about the degree of impact nor individualized determinations. It is a rule that is capable of general application.

---

[28]Justice O'Connor has made clear that the degree of scrutiny should not be influenced, as Justice White suggests in Thornburgh v. A.C.O.G., 476 U.S. 747, 795 (1986) (White, J., dissenting), by the presence of fetal life, but rather that the presence of fetal life should affect only the second part of the strict scrutiny test. This threatens the right of women, particularly poor women, women of color and disabled women to choose to procreate as well as to abort. The ignominious history of involuntary sterilization in this country counsels against any watering down of the standard of review. See Buck v. Bell, 274 U.S. 200 (1927); Gould, Carrie Buck's Daughter, Natural History Mag. (July 1984).

To require instead that a regulation be "unduly burdensome" is subject to a myriad of variables. On what basis does a court make this judgment? When does the burden of a waiting period become undue? At 24 hours? At 72 hours? One week? One month?

Moreover, it is impossible to establish a clear national standard because the question as to whether a regulation is unduly burdensome will vary from community to community, from state to state. It will vary according to the circumstances of each individual woman.[29]

---

[29]Take, for example, a hospitalization requirement. In State X, where hospitals have established freestanding abortion clinics, it may not increase the cost of first trimester abortion; in State Y, it may add $2000. In State X these hospital clinics are operative in every sizeable town. In State Y, there is only one provider and most women must travel 200 miles or more, necessitating overnight accommodations. For a woman of means in State Y, with no children or childcare, with job flexibility and a supportive family or friends, the hospitalization requirement may not be an "undue", in the sense of preclusive, burden; for a

Beyond the differences in women's familial, work, geographic and financial circumstances, an "undue burden" standard permits courts to pour their own moral beliefs and prejudices into this critical threshold determination. Hostility to abortion is fueled not simply by beliefs about the sacredness of the fetus, but also by anger at abortion as a symbol of women's taking some control over their lives--their decisions to be sexual, to reject or defer childbearing, or to chart a life's course that does not submit to the traditional notion of woman's role. For some courts, the operative, albeit improper, question is not whether the burden is undue or unfair, teenager, a woman on welfare, an assembly line worker, a school teacher, a single mother or a battered woman, the hospitalization requirement forecloses access to legal abortion. Is it enough that it unduly burdens some women's access? Will every woman's situation be subject to medical, judicial or some other form of review?

---

but rather whether the risks, inconvenience, frustration and shame involved in obtaining an abortion--i.e., the punishment--is enough.[30] This Court has announced the impropriety of dictating forced pregnancy as punishment for even "illicit" sexual activity. See, e.g., Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U. S. 438, 448 (1972); Carey v. Population Services International, 431 U.S. 678, 695 (1978); Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 148.

Amici agree with the Solicitor General that the effect of an "undue burden" standard would be arbitrary decisionmaking. Brief for the United States, at 22. The substitution of an "undue burden" standard for the current "significant burden" standard as the threshold for strict scrutiny will not only eviscerate the right to abortion; it will lead to inconsistent and irrational results in legislatures and courts. It will transform the current and workable threshold into a wholly unpredictable and highly prejudicial one.

---

[30]The Solicitor General's position in this case is illustrative. For him, denial of abortion would be an "undue burden," if the abortion resulted from rape or incest or perhaps from contraceptive failure. See Brief for the United States at 22, n. 16. A woman's sexual practices--whether she abstained or practiced sex--would be open to examination in every case. In many cases, she alone would bear the burden, stigma and terror of this inquiry although her pregnancy resulted from contraceptive failure or other circumstances beyond her control.

C. The Cumulative Impact Of Restrictive Regulations Which Would Be Permissible Under An "Undue Burden" Standard Will Effectively Preclude Abortion For Poor Women Who Are Disproportionately Women Of Color.

The effect of state regulations that restrict abortion, both individually and cumulatively, would be to create virtually impenetrable barriers between a woman and her ability to obtain a safe, legal abortion. Such obstruction would not save potential human life, but rather would force poor women and women of color to resort to illegal abortion with its resultant risks of death, maiming, trauma, and familial, social and economic disintegration.

1. Laws Requiring That All Abortions Be Performed In Hospitals Would Effectively Preclude Abortions For Poor Women And Women Of Color.

It has been suggested that a requirement that all abortions be performed in hospitals, might not be found to be an "undue burden," and therefore, might be upheld under minimal scrutiny. See Akron, 462 U.S. at 466-67 (O'Connor, J., dissenting). Amici will examine the adverse consequences of this requirement in order to exemplify the preclusive effect of an "undue burden" threshold for strict scrutiny on poor women and women of color.

a. Poor Women Do Not Have Access To Hospitals For Abortions.

To require that abortions be performed in hospitals[31] will place an added burden on the already inadequate delivery of health care to [31]In this case, Missouri's regulation does the opposite, i.e., it bans all abortions, even those which are privately funded, from being performed in public hospitals. This, too, will have a greater impact on women of color than on others. 28% of abortions obtained by women of color were performed in hospitals as opposed to only 17% for whites. Henshaw & O'Reilly, Characteristics of Abortion Patients in the United States, 1979 and 1980, 15 Fam. Plan. Persp. 5, 11 (1983).

---

the poor. For general health care, poor families are dependent on public hospitals which are severely overcrowded and understaffed.[32]

Even though hospitals are the ordinary source of medical care for the poor,[33] access to abortions in hospitals is limited and in most communities unavailable. In 1979-1980 only 17% of all public hospitals in the United States reported doing at least one abortion and only 22% of all abortions took place in hospitals, with a mere 32% of those hospitals providing abortions after 14 weeks

---

[32]Twice as many African-Americans and Latinos as whites reported hospitals and health clinics as their usual source of medical care. U.S. Dept. of Health & Human Services, 1 Report of the Secretary's Task Force on Black & Minority Health 189 (1986).

[33]Henshaw & O'Reilly, Characteristics of Abortion Patients in the United States, 1979 and 1980, 15 Fam. Plan. Persp. 5, 11 (1983).

of pregnancy.[34] For Native American women who live on reservations,[35] and African-American women in the rural South,[36] there

---

[34]Henshaw, Forrest, Sullivan & Tietze, Abortion Services in the U.S., 1979-1980, 14 Fam. Plan. Persp. 5, 6, 11, 12 (1982).

[35]Almost half a million Native Americans live on reservations and in historic trust areas. U.S. Dept. of Health & Human Services, 1 Report of the Secretary's Task Force on Black and Minority Health 58 (1986). Yet no Indian Health Service clinic or hospital were permitted to perform abortions even when there was private payment until 1982. Then federal regulations permitted abortions at Indian Health Service facilities, but only when the woman's life is endangered. Alan Guttmacher Institute, Issues in Brief 12 (1985).

[36]Almost 3.9 million African-Americans live in rural areas in the United States. U.S. Dept. of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, General Population Characteristics, United States Summary, 1980 Census Population (May 1983). A 1974 study in Georgia, found that the further a woman must travel to obtain an abortion, the less likely she is to get one. Distance especially disadvantages Black women, most of all, Black teenagers. Shelton, Brann & Schulz, Abortion Utilization: Does Travel Distance Matter? 8 Fam. Plan. Persp. 260 (1976).

has been even less access. To require that all abortions be performed at hospitals would severely restrict the numbers of abortion providers. Additionally, it would render abortion inaccessible to women in most communities in the country.

b. Hospitalization Requirements Will Increase The Cost of Abortions By At Least Five Times.

If states are permitted to require hospitalization for abortion throughout pregnancy, the cost of an abortion will increase artificially.[37] The cost of

---

In 1982, because of inadequate services, Mississippi and Arkansas had low abortion rates (respectively 9.3 and 12.9 for every 1000 women aged 15-44) in spite of having large African-American populations, which normally utilize services at a relatively high rate. Henshaw, Forrest & Blaine, Abortion Services in the United States, 1981 and 1982, 16 Fam. Plan. Persp. 119, 122 (1984).

[37]Costs imposed by unnecessary regulation are state-created obstacles to abortion and thus distinguished from costs borne as a consequence of a state's refusal to fund abortion. Akron, 462 U.S. at 444, n. 33 abortions in hospitals is at least five times greater than the cost of clinic abortions.[38] Although a first-trimester abortion in a clinic costs $200-300, the same abortion in a hospital costs $1200-1300. The cost for women who require second-trimester hospital abortions is even greater.[39] citing Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. at 474.

---

[38] In 1989, a first-trimester clinic abortion costs $200-300, a second-trimester clinic abortion costs $350-400 (for pregnancies of 13-16 weeks) plus $100 for each week thereafter. An abortion done in a hospital adds $1000 to that cost. National Abortion Federation, Celebrating Roe v. Wade: Dramatic Improvements in American Health 6 (Jan. 1989). See also Henshaw, Forrest & Van Vort, Abortion Services in the United States, 1984 and 1985, 19 Fam. Plan. Persp. 67-69 (1987) (in 1986, average cost of a clinic abortion was $208; of a hospital abortion, $735); Henshaw, Forrest & Blaine, Abortion Services In the United States, 1981 and 1982, 16 Fam. Plan. Persp. 119, 125-126 (1984) (in 1984, hospital abortions cost two to four times more than clinic abortions).

[39]At 20 weeks, a hospital abortion could cost $1850. National Abortion Federation, Celebrating Roe v. Wade: Dramatic Improvements in American Health 6 (Jan. 1989).

The cost of an in-hospital first-trimester abortion would be almost four times the average monthly AFDC payment ($375) for a family of three[40]. Medicaid-eligible women who receive an average of $375 per month for themselves and their children cannot afford $200-$300 for a first-trimester clinic abortion.[41] Yet many women, living in states

---

[40]Committee on Ways and Means, U.S. House of Representatives, 100th Cong., 2d Sess., Background Material and Data on Programs Within The Jurisdiction of The Committee on Ways and Means 428 (Committee Print 1988). For some women, the cost would be 10 times their monthly AFDC payment. A family of three in Alabama receives $118 per month; in Louisiana, $190. Center on Social Welfare, Policy & Law, Analysis of 1988 Benefit Levels in the Program of Aid to Families with Dependent Children 1, Table 1. (1988).

[41]Henshaw, Forrest & Van Vort, Abortion Services in the United States, 1984 and 1985, 19 Fam. Plan. Persp. 63 (1987) (average is $213). At current clinic rates, at least 20% of Medicaid-eligible women do not obtain abortions. Trussell, Menken, Lindheim & Vaughan, The Impact of Restricting Medicaid Financing For Abortion, 12 Fam. Plan. Persp. 120, 128 (1980).

which do not fund abortions, have managed to pay this sum by using all or part of their meager grants for daily living expenses.[42] Increasing the cost to $1200 or $1300 will foreclose that option, making illegal abortion, once again, the only choice for [42]Medicaid-eligible women pay for abortions wholly or in part out of their daily living expenses. Henshaw & Wallisch, The Medicaid Cutoff and Abortion Services for the Poor, 16 Fam. Plan. Persp. 170 (1984).

---

In one study, of 144 poor women seeking abortions, the 63% able to raise money to procure abortions did so by not paying rent or utility bills, pawning household goods, diverting food and clothing money from their meager grant or journeying to other states to obtain lower rates or fraudulently using a relative's insurance. Women's Health Services, Inc. v. Maher, 482 F. Supp. 725, 731 n.9 (D. Conn. 1980), vacated and remanded on other grounds, 636 F.2d 23 (2d Cir. 1980). If the children of the poor are homeless and hungry now, when abortion is safe and legal, countless more will suffer if regulations multiply the cost of abortion.

poor women.[43]

The increased cost of abortion is only part

---

[43]Indeed, between 1975 and 1979, 33% of those women who sought illegal abortions, and died as a result, did so because legal abortions were too expensive or not readily available in their area. Binken, Gold & Cates, Illegal-Abortion Deaths in the United States: Why are They Still Occurring? 14 Fam. Plan. Persp. 163 (1982). According to the Center for Disease Control, a Mexican-American woman who had two previous Medicaid abortions died after an illegal abortion in 1977 because she was unable to pay $100 for a safe and legal abortion. McRae v. Califano, 491 F. Supp. 630, 658 (1980), rev'd on other grounds sub nom. Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980).

Further, when the Hyde Amendment was passed, the Center for Disease Control ("CDC") estimated that if publicly-funded abortions were restricted in all states, 5 to 90 additional deaths would result each year. McRae v. Califano, 491 F. Supp. at 655. CDC found that in 1977, the first year of reduced Medicaid benefits, there was an increase in the number of illegal abortion deaths for the first time since 1972. Id. at 658. Additionally, it was estimated that a two week delay, due to difficulties in obtaining funds, would increase abortion deaths of Medicaid-eligible women by 60%. Lincoln, Doring-Bradley, Lindheim & Cotterill, The Court, the Congress and the President: Turning Back the Clock on the Pregnant Poor, 9 Fam. Plan. Persp. 207, 213 (1977).

of the financial burden created by a hospitalization requirement. The cost of travel, of overnight stays, of childcare and of lost time from employment need to be factored in.[44] The impact of a hospitalization requirement would fall especially heavily upon teenagers from poor families or those with no independent access to resources.[45]

---

[44]See Henshaw & Wallisch, The Medicaid Cutoff and Abortion Services For the Poor, 16 Fam. Plan. Persp. 180 (1984).

[45]Women under 20 had 27% of all abortions in 1983, 41% of which were performed after 16 weeks. Center for Disease Control, U.S. Dept. of Health & Human Services, 36 Surveillance Summaries 4055 (1987).

c. Complicated Preconditions Preclude Access.

Hospital requirements may also entail additional bureaucratic hurdles to abortion. Before Akron, 23 states required the approval of a hospital committee for second-trimester abortions. Akron, 462 U.S. at 426, n.9. Prior to Roe v. Wade many states required that abortions be approved by hospital committees and that the attending physician's judgment be confirmed by two other physicians. Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, 199 (1973).[46]

---

[46]Before Roe, poor women were less likely than privileged women to be certified to obtain abortions, even when treated in the same institution. Thus private patients in New York were about four times as likely to get certified for medical non-psychiatric conditions as poor patients. McRae Record at T.3523. In 1964, for example, there were 14 times more certifications for rubella at University Hospital than at Bellevue, the public part of the same hospital. Id.

Similarly, applications for life-threatening psychiatric reasons were approved

Poor women have less access to private doctors than do women of means, and rarely have a doctor who advocates for them. Illegal abortion would, therefore, look far less difficult than the prospect of finding and convincing up to six private doctors only for private patients before 1973. McRae Record at T.3529. Yet the stress of an unwanted pregnancy makes poor women all the more desperate. One study, of 90% of the poor women who got abortions at Bellevue Hospital between 1969 and 1970 found that 37.7% attempted either an illegal or self-induced abortion and 11% tried to commit suicide. Id. at T.3538, 3554.

---

This disparity also occurs in treatment of medical conditions, even though women of color suffer more from the conditions. For example, African-American women have higher rates of diseases that cause complications in pregnancy, including diabetes, cardiovascular disease, high blood pressure, and vaginal cancer than other women. U.S. Dept. of Health & Human Services, 1 Report of the Secretary's Task Force on Black and Minority Health 71 (Aug. 1985). One out of ten Black women is a carrier of sickle cell anemia. Henefin, Prenatal Screening in Reproductive Laws for the 1990's A Briefing Handbook 133 (Taub & Cohen 1988).

(three on abortion committee; the providing physician; and two more).[47]

d. Delay Which Results In Increased Danger To Life And Health And In Increased Costs Would Be Inevitable.

Requirements that increase the cost of abortion will also endanger women's health by delaying the performance of the procedure. Each week of delay in obtaining an abortion increases the risk of serious health complications by 20% and the risk of death by 50%.[48] Legalization has allowed most abortions to be performed earlier.[49] While only 10% of all abortions between 1972 and 1977 were second-trimester abortions, 57% of the deaths following legal abortions involved late abortions.[50] Between 1972 and 1977 African-American women having second-trimester abortions were three times more likely to [47]Hospital committees present other dangers as well. Before 1973, approval by a hospital abortion committee was often conditioned on the woman's agreement to have a concurrent sterilization operation. McRae Record at 476.

---

[48]Center for Disease Control, U.S. Dept. of Health & Human Services, Abortion Surveillance Report, 1978 (1980).

[49]In the six years following legalization of abortion in New York, the rate of second-trimester abortions performed fell by 50%. Alan Guttmacher Institute, Safe and Legal: 10 Years' Experience With Legal Abortion in New York State 19 (1980).

[50]Benditt, Second-Trimester Abortion In The United States, 11 Fam. Plan. Persp. 358 (1979); Torres & Forrest, Why Do Women Have Abortions? 20 Fam. Plan. Persp. 169 (1988). Among women who experienced abortion complications requiring a hospital visit, those who were Medicaid eligible in non-funding states had a two to four week-later average gestational age than did those who were not poor. Trussell, Menken, Lindheim & Vaughan, The Impact of Restricting Medicaid Financing for Abortion, 12 Fam. Plan. Persp. 120, 129 (1980).

die than white women.[51]

African-American, young, single and poor women were significantly more likely than others to have later abortions.[52] In 1982, Medicaid-eligible women had abortions two to three weeks later than others and 42% said that they delayed pregnancy testing or abortion for financial reasons.[53] Of the 29% of women who delayed abortion due to problems in making arrangements for them, 60% said they needed more time to raise money, 33%

---

[51]Benditt, Second-Trimester Abortion in the United States, 11 Fam. Plan. Persp. 358, 359 (1979).

[52]Ryser, Racial Differences in Abortion Seeking, 12 Contraception 199-201 (1975).

[53]Henshaw & Wallisch, The Medicaid Cutoff and Abortion Services for the Poor, 16 Fam. Plan. Persp. 170 (1984). Since the Medicaid cutoffs, delay has increased for poor women. 50% had abortions at 10 weeks or later compared to 37% in 1977. Id.

PUBLISHER'S NOTE:

The following pages are unavailable for filming:

51 & 52

poor women seeking abortions.[57]

For example, by contrast to the clinics established to provide abortion and family planning services, hospitals must handle the broad range of medical emergencies and health crisis. Abortion, a simple and safe procedure when done under appropriate conditions, must therefore compete with life-threatening situations for medical attention and time.

Beyond that, clinics provide an anonymous context for abortion whereas the confidentiality of hospital records is more dubious. Moreover, because hospitals are larger and deal with many health issues, women are more likely to run into employers or social [57]Asian Pacific women, whose medical needs and problems, have never been properly assessed because of cultural and language barriers, will be further disadvantaged. See, e.g., Lin-Fu, Population Characteristics and Health Care Needs of Asian Pacific Americans in Public Health Reports 21 (1988).

---

workers who may use knowledge of their abortion against them. By contrast, abortion clinic records are guarded and clinics provide environments which assure anonymity.

2. The Cumulative Impact Of Many Restrictive Regulations Will Further Deny Access.

Rigid in-hospital requirements are only one example of a broad range of regulations that would result from an undue burden standard. Each additional requirement which escapes strict scrutiny increases the physical, emotional and economic burdens. They must not be considered in isolation from one another.

In addition to hospitalization, a number of regulations struck down by this and lower courts under the Roe v. Wade framework, might not be considered sufficiently burdensome as to trigger strict scrutiny analysis. Intrusive and distorted "informed consent" requirements designed to frighten women from obtaining abortions, and onerous record-keeping and public disclosure requirements, which were intended to harass patients and providers, were struck down in Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986). These and more preclusive parental consent and notices rules,[58] or more intrusive spousal consent or notice requirements, Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976), might survive an unduly burdensome threshold.

That these and other requirements burden the choice of poor women and women of color is suggested by several additional examples. Some states or localities may require waiting periods of varying lengths as a precondition for a legal abortion. Akron, 462 U.S. at 416. Depending on the length of the waiting period,[59] and the number of weeks pregnant, women will suffer increased risk to health because of delay. Once again, the impact will fall most severely upon the most vulnerable. When Tennessee mandated a waiting period, low-income women incurred a 48% increase in the cost of abortion, as opposed to a 14% increase for higher-income women.[60]

---

[58] See Bellotti v. Baird (I), 428 U.S. 132 (1976); Bellotti v. Baird (II), 443 U.S. 622 (1979); H.L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398 (1981).

Obviously, where women must travel great distances, such as in North Dakota, the cost of two trips or two overnight stays could

---

[59]A 24-hour waiting period can result in an actual two to seven day delay depending on the days that particular services are available in the area. Akron, 462 U.S. at 450.

[60]Lupfer & Silber, How Patients View Mandatory Waiting Periods for Abortion, 13 Fam. Plan. Persp. 75 (1981).

become prohibitive.[61]

Anti-abortion statutes have also increased costs by mandating expensive and unnecessary requirements. In Louisiana, the state required frequent warrantless inspections of clinics, restrictive licensing and hospitalization. Margaret S. v. Edwards, 488 F. Supp. 181 (E.D.La. 1980). After this statute was declared unconstitutional, Louisiana enacted a new law requiring, among other things, mandatory hospitalization, a waiting period, ultra-sound testing for every abortion

---

[61]In North Dakota, where there was only one provider, one court found that these additional expenses placed a "significant and substantial burden on a large number of women, especially on women in areas of western North Dakota who would have to travel over 400 miles to obtain an abortion." Leigh v. Olson, 497 F. Supp. 1340, 1347 (D.N.D. 1980).

41% of all jobholders reported losing an average of $32.00 in pay because of the required second visit. Lupfer & Silber, How Patients View Mandatory Waiting Periods for Abortion, 13 Fam. Plan. Persp. 75, 77 (1981).

(adding $60-$195 to the cost in 1984) and that physicians personally counsel patients.[62]

In the Webster case before this Court, Missouri requires useless[63] and expensive viability tests which risk the health of the pregnant woman and substantially increase the cost.[64] Whereas these requirements are [62](This adds to the cost by requiring 20 to 30 minutes of the physician's time for each patient and reduces the quality of the counseling). Margaret S. v. Treen, 597 F. Supp. 636, 659-660 (E.D. La. 1984), aff'd, 794 F.2d 994 (5th Cir. 1986). In Ohio, doctors were also required to personally obtain informed consent from each patient. Akron, 462 U.S. at 416.

[63]Tests to determine fetal weight are unreliable and inaccurate; they are not medically appropriate until much later in pregnancy than at 20 weeks, when they are required by statute. Similarly, amniocentesis is contrary to accepted medical practice until 28-30 weeks. Webster, 851 F.2d at 1075 n.5.

[64]One test for "viability" is amniocentesis which, in Missouri, costs $200 to $250. Record at Maulik, T. V.1, 43, Reproductive Health Services v. Webster, 662 F. Supp. 407 plainly unconstitutional under the current framework, they could multiply and yet survive deferential and often "toothless" minimal scrutiny.

3. The Cumulative Effect Of An Undue Burden Threshold Will Force Poor Women To Resort To Illegal Abortions.

Any one of these requirements could tip the balance and lead a woman to take the drastic, but less procedurally complicated step of illegal or self-abortion. Certainly this will be the result in states whose hostility to abortion will be expressed through several expensive, intimidating, unnecessary, and time consuming restrictions.

The social and psychological costs of forcing women to choose between illegal (W.D. Mo. 1987), aff'd, 851 F.2d 1071 (8th Cir. 1988). Another test for "viability", which determines fetal weight, adds $125 to $250 to the cost. Webster, 851 F.2d at 1075 n.5.

abortion or life-shattering and often dangerous involuntary pregnancy are incalculable.[65]

The pain of poor women who face this constitutionally intolerable choice was articulated by Justice Marshall:

> An unwanted child may be disruptive and destructive of the life of any woman, but the impact is felt most by those too poor to ameliorate those effects. If funds for an abortion are unavailable, a poor woman may feel that she is forced to obtain an illegal abortion that poses serious threat to her health and even her life. See n.1 supra. If she refuses to take this risk, and undergoes the pain and danger of state-financed pregnancy and childbirth, she may well give up all chances of escaping the cycle of poverty. Absent day-care facilities, she will be forced into full-time childcare for years to come; she will be unable to work so that her family can break out of the welfare system or the lowest income brackets. If she already has children, another infant to feed and clothe may well stretch the budget past the breaking point. All chance to control the > direction of her own life will have been lost.

---

[65]See McRae v. Califano, 491 F.Supp. 630, 681-690 (E.D.N.Y.), rev'd sub nom. Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980) for comprehensive findings on the dangers of coerced child-bearing, particularly for poor women.

Beal v. Doe, 432 U.S. 438, 458-59 (1977) (Marshall, J., dissenting).

CONCLUSION

In 1973 in Roe v. Wade, this Court recognized that a woman's decision whether or not to terminate her pregnancy is a fundamental right. In doing so, the Court was not "creating" a fundamental right where none existed. Rather, the Court was merely recognizing a fact that was painfully obvious to women--that without the ability to control their reproductive lives they were stripped of the right of self-determination that is a given for men. Because of the fundamental importance of the decision whether or not to bear a child, women have historically been willing to risk their very lives in order to have an abortion and will continue to do so.

Nonetheless, this Court is being asked to undo what was done in Roe v. Wade and rule that the rights of a fetus are equal to or greater than those of the woman that must carry it. In essence, this Court is being asked to rule that states can legitimately force a woman to bear a child against her will.

In the 16 years that have passed since Roe v. Wade, nothing has occurred to justify such a change. The same moral and religious debates rage now as before, although they may be more strident now than in 1973.[66] The [66]In striking down Connecticut's re-enacted criminal abortion statute in 1973, the court in Abele v. Markle, 351 F. Supp. 224, 231 (D.Conn. 1973), recognized the nature of the conflicting views as follows:

> No doubt in the opinion of many people the nature of a fetus as a human being is a matter of absolute moral certainty. In their view, perhaps in the view of some of the legislators who enacted this statute, abortion is considered the deliberate same legal debate continues.[67] The same need exists for women with unwanted pregnancies to be able to obtain safe legal abortions. In fact, the only change that has occurred since 1973 is the composition of this Court and that surely can not justify the destruction > killing of a human being. We do not doubt the sincerity of those who hold this view, nor minimize the depth of their conviction in this regard. But under the Constitution, their judgment must remain a personal judgment, one that they may follow in their personal lives and seek to persuade others to follow, but a judgment they may not impose upon others by force of law.

[67]When this Court considered the constitutionality of the Texas abortion statute, other state legislatures had, like Missouri in this case, sought to save their laws by enacting preamble justifications stating that "the public policy of the state and the intent of the legislature is to protect and preserve human life from the moment of conception...." Abele v. Markle, 351 F. Supp. at 226. See also Wis. Stat. §940.04(6) discussed in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 159 n. 55. This Court rejected those efforts. "In view of all this, we do not agree that, by adopting one theory of life, Texas may override the rights of the pregnant woman that are at stake." Roe, 410 U.S. at 162.

of a right so fundamental to more than one-half of the population.

Because controlling one's reproductive life is so critical to a woman, regardless how this Court rules, it cannot and will not stop abortions. By permitting states to "burden" the choice to have an abortion, or to make abortions illegal once again, the Court can only make them unsafe--to force women, and particularly low income women, back to back alleys and butchers, back to coat hangers and catheters. Neither this Court nor the states can "protect" unwanted fetuses; they can only maim and sacrifice the women who carry them.

For the foregoing reasons, the Court should reject the invitation of the United States and the State of Missouri to withdraw constitutional protection for a woman's abortion choice and affirm Roe v. Wade.

Dated: New York, New York
March 29, 1989

Respectfully submitted,

JOAN GIBBS
MARY M. GUNDRUM
*RHONDA COPELON
Center for Constitutional Rights
666 Broadway, 7th Fl.
New York, New York 10012
(212) 614-6444

WENDY BROWN
Center for Law &
Social Justice
1473 Fulton Street
Brooklyn, New York 11216

CATHY BELL
National Conference of Black Lawyers
126 West 119th Street
New York, New York 10026

BARBARA WOLVOVITZ
National Lawyers Guild
55 Sixth Avenue
New York, New York 10013

*Attorney of Record
Attorneys for Amici Curiae

Counsel for Amici Curiae gratefully acknowledge the assistance of Sabrae Jenkins, of the Religious Coalition for Abortion Rights; B. Mullings, Sonia Martinez, and Dorothy Zellner of the Center for Constitutional Rights; and Jane Quimby, a second year student at Rutgers University School of Law-Newark in the production of this brief.

APPENDIX

INDEX TO APPENDIX

Statements of Interest	Page
A Woman's Place	1
Abuse and Rape Crisis Center	1
ActionAIDS	1
AIDS Education Task Force	3
Alliance Against Women's Oppression	4
All-Peoples Congress	5
American Indian Health Care Association	6
Asian American Legal Defense and Education Fund	6
Association of Latino Attorneys	7
Black Women's Agenda, Inc	8
Bridge Partnership Project, RCAR of Illinois	9
Brooklyn Pro-Choice Network	9
Brooklyn Women's Martial Arts, Inc	10
Brooklyn YWCA	11
Bronx National Organization of Women	11

Cathedral Church of St. John the Divine 12

Center for Constitutional Rights 13

Center for Law and Social Justice 13

Centre County Women's Resource Center 15

Centre de Sante des Femmes 15

Child Care Law Center 16

Chinatown History Project 16

Choices Women's Medical Center 17

Coalition of 100 Black Women of D.C., Inc 17

Columbia Law Women's Association 18

Comision Femenil Mexicana Nacional, Inc. 18

Committee for Hispanic Children and Families 19

Committee of Interns and Residents 20

Committee of Women of Color, Presbyterian Church (USA) 20

Communications Workers of America, Local 1180 21

D.C. Rape Crisis Center 22

Disabled in Action of Metropolitan New York 23

District 65, UAW, Technical, Office, and Professional Division 23

Education Committee of 100 Black Men of Los Angeles 24

Federation of Feminist Women's Health Centers 25

Feminist Women's Health Center 25

Gay Men's Health Crisis, Inc. 26

Hispanic Health Council 27

Institute for Community Research, Inc. 28

International Agency for Minority Artist Affairs 29

Judson Memorial Church 30

Junior League of Brooklyn 31

Latinos Contra SIDA 32

Los Angeles Feminist Women's Health Center 33

Los Angeles Gay and Lesbian Scientists 33

Metro D.C. Coalition for Choice 34

Mexican American Legal Defense and Education Fund 34

Mexican American Women's National Association 35

Michigan Republicans for Choice 35

Minority Prison Project 36

Mobilization for Youth Health Services 36

My Sister's Place 37

The Nation Institute 38

National Action Forum for Midlife and Older Women, Inc. 38

National Black Women's Health Project 39

National Center for Lesbian Rights 41

National Conference of Black Lawyers 42

National Council of Negro Women, Inc. 43

National Institute for Women of Color 44

National Lawyers Guild 45

National Minority AIDS Council 46

National Organization of Legal Services Workers 46

National Rainbow Coalition, New York State Chapter 47

National Urban League, Inc. 48

National Women's Health Network 49

National Women's Political Caucus 49

National Women's Political Caucus, New York State Chapter 50

Native American Community Board 51

New Directions for Women 51

New Jewish Agenda 52

New York Asian Women's Center, Inc. 52

New York Gray Panthers 53

New York Pro-Choice Coalition 53

New York State Coalition Against Domestic Violence 54

New York University Law Women 55

New York Women Against Rape 55

Oakhurst Presbyterian Church 56

Organizacion Nacional de la Salud de la Mujer Latina/National Latina Health Organization 57

Organization of Asian Women 58

Organization of Pan-Asian American Women 59

Permanent Commission on the Status of Hartford Women 59

Planned Parenthood of Atlanta Area 60

Project AWARE 60

Project Choice: AIDS Education for Co-dependent Women of Color 61

Puerto Rican Committee Against Repression 62

Puerto Rican Legal Defense and Education Fund 62

Rainbow Lobby, Inc. 63

Rockland Family Shelter 64

San Francisco Women Lawyers Alliance 65

San Francisco Women's Centers/Women's Building 65

Santa Fe Health Education Project 66

Staff at Domestic Violence Center of Chester County, PA 66

Stop Abuse for Everyone, Inc. 67

Students and Youth Against Racism 68

United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America 69

United Labor Action 70

United Probation Officers Association 71

Urban League of Greater Hartford, Inc. 72

Womancare Clinic 73

Women for Racial and Economic Equality 73

Women of All Red Nations, Minnesota 74

Women of All Red Nations, North Dakota 75

Women of Color Partnership Program, Religious Coalition for Abortion Rights 76

Women's Action Alliance 79

Women's Action Alliance, Inc. Women's Centers and AIDS Project 79

Women's AIDS Prevention Project 80

Women's International Resource Exchange 81

Women's Law Center, Inc. 82

Women's Project 83

Women's Studies Program, Hunter College 83

Workers World Party 84

YWCA of Greater Pittsburgh 85

YWCA of the Hartford Region, Inc. 86

YWCA of the National Capitol Area 87

YWCA of the U.S.A. 88

Individual Signatories to this Brief 89

A WOMAN'S PLACE of Doylestown, Pennsylvania provides shelter, counseling and legal advocacy to victims of domestic violence. Often, these are women with several young children who have no other resources. As part of our philosophy of empowerment for women, we are committed to reproductive and medical assistance for all women, regardless of their economic status.

* * *

The ABUSE AND RAPE CRISIS CENTER of Towanda, Pennsylvania, has, for ten years, provided services to victims of domestic violence and sexual assault in Bradford County, Pennsylvania. We support the right of victims of rape and incest to receive safe, legal abortions if they so choose.

* * *

ACTIONAIDS in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania provides direct services to two thirds of the people with AIDS in the Delaware Valley. Additionally, we provide support and assistance to their spouses, lovers, family members and care givers. Access to abortion services can be crucially important to women who are positive for the AIDS virus.

These women often need abortion services in order to save their own lives, as continued pregnancy can further endanger an already damaged immune system. They also need equitable medical coverage, including abortion, in order to have a true moral choice with regards to one of the most heartbreaking and difficult decisions -- that of whether or not to bear a child who may have AIDS. Because women at high risk of AIDS frequently discover their own HIV positive status as a result of giving birth to a child with AIDS, access to comprehensive reproductive health care, including abortion, becomes a matter of paramount importance. For medical, moral and emotional reasons these women cannot reasonably be required to carry future, inadvertent pregnancies to term.

* * *

AIDS EDUCATION TASK FORCE at St. Luke's/Roosevelt Hospital Center, in New York City, is an interdisciplinary group that provides ongoing AIDS education programs for all hospital staff. We wholeheartedly support every woman's right to safe, legalized termination of pregnancy as clearly outlined in Roe v.w Wade. The overturning of this decision would be a clear violation of the right to individual self-determination. In addition, it would strike a devastating blow to the country's entire health care field, even now reeling from the dual epidemics of AIDS and widespread drug usage.

The obvious scenario will find untold numbers of women once again relying on illegal, unsafe abortion procedures to terminate their pregnancies. A cursory check of most hospital records will attest to the numerous hospital admissions and protracted length of stay (and deaths) that were the result of the "no abortion" era. The AIDS Education Task Force hereby supports the "women of color" brief re: Webster.

* * *

The ALLIANCE AGAINST WOMEN'S OPPRESSION, headquartered in New York City, is a national multi-racial, lesbian and straight women's organization that works for equality and justice for women. Since 1978 we have worked for medicaid funding for abortions to assure that poor women, mainly Black and Latin, have access to all family planning options. We have helped to organize local and national activities in support of abortion rights.

* * *

The ALL-PEOPLES CONGRESS, based in New York City, is a national organization with chapters in communities in many major cities whose women members are Black, Latina, Asian, Native, white, students, lesbians, workers, unemployed, disabled, seniors, single heads of households and those on fixed incomes. It totally supports a comprehensive federal program of guaranteed reproductive rights and health care for all women, which includes safe, legal, affordable abortion. It opposes overturning this fundamental right as it would seriously impact upon millions of women, especially the poor, and young and Black, Latina, Native and Asian women.

* * *

The AMERICAN INDIAN HEALTH CARE ASSOCIATION is representative of the 35 urban Indian health programs nationally to provide health care to over 200,000 American Indians annually. The purpose of the American Indian Health Care Association is to work towards improving health status to American Indians to the highest possible level. The vast majority of urban Indian patients are low income and generally without alternative health care services and delivery. The American Indian Health Care Association recognizes that it is a woman's right to choose in terms of birth control and pregnancy.

* * *

The ASIAN AMERICAN LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATION FUND (AALDEF), founded in 1974, is a non-profit organization that addresses the legal needs of Asian Americans in New York and nationwide. AALDEF works with immigrant, low-income, and monolingual Asian American women, both in its general work and through its Women's Project. We believe that the framework established by Roe v. Wade has been beneficial to this segment of the Asian American Community, which is part of the community of poor women, working women and women of color represented by this amicus effort, and therefore join this brief in support of plaintiffs-appellees in this case.

* * *

The ASSOCIATION OF LATINO ATTORNEYS (ALA) in New York City is an association of activist lawyers, law students, and other legal workers committed to the political, social and economic empowerment of the Latino community in the United States. ALA recognizes the oppression of women within society. We are particularly sensitive to the historical discrimination against Latinas and other women of color. ALA seeks to protect the human and civil rights of all Latinos, promote equality among men and women, and to effect fundamental social change. ALA as amici in this case requests that the Supreme Court re-emphasize the rights recognized in Roe v. Wade, protecting the right of all women to control their lives and their futures.

* * *

The BLACK WOMEN'S AGENDA, INC. (BWA) in Washington, D.C. is a coalition of national Black women's organizations dedicated to equity and equality for Black women and their families. The BWA firmly believes that reproductive freedom is essential to our advancement.

* * *

The BRIDGE PARTNERSHIP PROJECT, RCAR OF ILLINOIS represents women of color, both religious and secular, who agree that abortion should remain a legal option. We feel that the attempt to legislate as scientific fact a specific time when life begins, in the face of many religious views which differ widely, is an infringement of our constitutional rights. Further, as the least economically powerful, women of color are most oppressed by restrictive abortion laws. Women of color must be represented in this argument.

* * *

The BROOKLYN PRO-CHOICE NETWORK is an independent organization that supports the right of all women to protect and determine their mental and physical health, regardless of economic status. Some of its goals are to insure women's choice as to when and if to bear children, maintenance of access to safe and legal abortion, and distribution of information on women's health issues. The Network supports these goals through petitioning, tabling, holding open meetings and forums and working with other local and national groups to organize and support pro-choice demonstrations and actions.

* * *

The BROOKLYN WOMEN'S MARTIAL ARTS, INC. teaches self-defense skills from its 150-member school to over 750 women each year in the New York Metropolitan area. A large majority of the participants in its program are women of color and low-income women. In order for women to control their bodies and their lives, access to legal abortion -- like the right to defend oneself against threats and assaults --is absolutely necessary.

* * *

The BROOKLYN YWCA (YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION) is part of the oldest worldwide women's membership organization dedicated to empowering women. The Brooklyn YWCA works to carry out the national YWCA imperative "to eliminate racism" and as such opposes any effort to restrict the access of poor and young women to quality health care services, as well as any attempt to deny them their right to reproductive freedom.

* * *

The BRONX NATIONAL ORGANIZATION FOR WOMEN of Bronx, New York feels that every woman has a right to choose. So far no one is telling men what to do with their bodies. As older women of color we have seen many women suffer in more ways than one. We certainly do not need to go back to the old ways of torture. Give all the women a chance to choose whether to have or not have children.

* * *

The CATHEDRAL CHURCH OF ST. JOHN THE DIVINE is the seat of the Bishop of New York and is located on one corner of the Harlem community. With a ministry to thousands of New York residents, the staff of the Cathedral counsels and works directly with many women and girls, most of whom are low-income and working women and women of color. It is clear that there is already a great difference in the medical assistance afforded women of the middle and upper income levels and those at the lower end of the spectrum. The Cathedral confronts regularly the trauma of this disparity and any proposed changes in the laws governing abortions, such as the Missouri law (Weber v. Reproductive Health Services, Inc.), would add a disastrous burden to the overall well-being of many of these women.

* * *

The CENTER FOR CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS (CCR), a litigation/education organization located in New York and Mississippi, was founded in 1966. Born of the civil rights movement and the struggles of Black people in the United States for true equality, CCR has litigated for voting rights, civil rights, and the fundamental and necessary right of each woman to obtain access to safe and legal abortion. CCR decries the disproportionate and potentially devastating effect that the limitation or loss of the right to abortion will have on women of color and low-income and working women, and we urge this Court to protect the right to accessible, safe and legal abortion in their names.

* * *

The CENTER FOR LAW AND SOCIAL JUSTICE at Medgar Evers College (CLSJ) is a research and advocacy institution created in 1985 to meet an existing need within the City of New York for a civil rights, social justice and legally oriented institution. CLSJ litigation and projects deal with civil and human rights issues such as education, health care, housing and the quality of life in communities of color. Preserving the constitutional rights to an abortion insures that women of color who choose an abortion are not choosing to risk their life and health, as was the case prior to 1970. Therefore, CLSJ joins with amici in urging this Court to reaffirm Roe v. Wade and the strict scrutiny standard of review announced in that decision and followed by its progeny. The continued effectiveness of our efforts to reach the goal of a society in which women are guaranteed equal protection under the law requires such a ruling by this Court.

* * *

The CENTRE COUNTY WOMEN'S RESOURCE CENTER of State College, Pennsylvania believes that whether a woman chooses motherhood, wifehood, an individual career, or a combination, her choice should be respected, and she should be provided with the necessary resources to reach her full potential in the areas of development she prefers. Her right to choose abortion should be respected and protected by the constitution.

* * *

The CENTRE DE SANTE DES FEMMES is a women's health clinic in Geneva, Switzerland attended by nearly 2,000 clients. We support the right to choose a safe, legal abortion. It is important, even essential, that women can have this choice. Outlawing abortion will increase maternal mortality.

* * *

The CHILD CARE LAW CENTER in San Francisco, California is the only legal services organization in the country exclusively dedicated to expanding the supply of affordable, quality child care. It has a particular emphasis on serving the needs of low-income women, and as such it strongly supports the rights of low-income women to have equal access to necessary services, whether they are health services which include abortion, or family support, such as child care.

* * *

The CHINATOWN HISTORY PROJECT in New York City seeks to document and interpret the history of Chinese-Americans in the New York City area. It is deeply concerned with the historic lack of economic, social and medical options available to our community and opposes, therefore, any further restrictions on the right of women to choose abortion.

* * *

CHOICES WOMEN'S MEDICAL CENTER is a New York State licensed medical facility serving over 30,000 patients a year in the New York City area for family planning, abortion and pre-natal care. Since its founding in 1971, Choices Women's Medical Center has been at the forefront of insuring high quality feminist women's health care to its patients and fighting politically to retain the right to choose.

* * *

The COALITION OF 100 BLACK WOMEN OF D.C., INC. is a non-profit consortium of professional African-American women with a shared goal of improving the quality of life for black women and their families in the Washington metropolitan area. The D.C. Coalition endorses the "women of color" brief because, regardless of our individual views on abortion, we must have the right to choose and we must have that right protected.

* * *

The COLUMBIA LAW WOMEN'S ASSOCIATION (CLWA) is a group of law students, professors, and members of the Law School administration of Columbia University in New York City concerned with both the role of women in the legal profession and how the law affects women's lives. To this second end, members provide legal assistance for battered women, organize pro-choice activities, and keep the Law School community informed of current decisions and events.

* * *

The COMISION FEMENIL MEXICANA NACIONAL, INC. in Los Angeles, California is the oldest and largest Hispanic women's organization in the United States. Historically, we have worked diligently to maintain reproductive freedoms for all women, but specifically for Hispanic women. Our organization is dedicated to the advancement of Latin women socially, politically, economically and through education. Our organization firmly believes that maintaining reproductive freedoms is crucial to our advancement.

* * *

The COMMITTEE FOR HISPANIC CHILDREN AND FAMILIES is a not-for-profit organization in New York City dedicated to promoting and strengthening the Hispanic family. In our community education efforts we seek to heighten awareness of issues such as domestic violence, teen pregnancy and child abuse and neglect. Clearly our goal is to mobilize our community in effective prevention strategies for these and other problems which afflict our community. Key to being able to confront these myriad problems is the need for quality and equitable medical care. We oppose the denial of access to health services including abortion for Hispanic women.

* * *

The COMMITTEE OF INTERNS AND RESIDENTS (CIR) is the nation's oldest and largest housestaff union, representing over 5,000 interns, residents and fellows in New York, New Jersey and Washington, D.C. For over 30 years, the CIR's struggle to improve residents' working conditions has been inseparable from its fight for quality patient care. The CIR strongly supports the right of all women tc safe, legal birth control and abortion.

* * *

The COMMITTEE OF WOMEN OF COLOR, PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH (USA), located in Louisville, Kentucky is a committee of racial ethnic women responsible for advocating, monitoring, planning and designing programs in response to issues in church and society impacting women of color and for facilitating the full participation of women of color in the church life. Its purpose is to work as women of color to help shape the corporate conscience of the church and society in order to eliminate racism, sexism, classism and ageism as they impact the lives of women of color and the lives of others.

* * *

The COMMUNICATIONS WORKERS OF AMERICA, LOCAL 1180 represents 8000 public sector workers in New York City. Seventy-five percent of the members are women; a majority are women of color. Many of the workers are involved in the delivery of services through municipal social service and health care facilities to the poor for whom this decision would have the greatest impact. An unfavorable ruling in this case could restrict the Union's ability to bargain health benefits for its members.

* * *

The D.C. RAPE CRISIS CENTER was established in 1972 to provide services to sexual assault survivors. The Center is interested in this case because we maintain a strong concern for issues that affect women, particularly low-income women and women of color. We believe that issues of economics, health, justice, education, etc. are all intertwined. Though our primary focus is violence against women, we consistently support actions that promote justice for women, which includes the right to reproductive freedom.

* * *

The DISABLED IN ACTION OF METROPOLITAN NEW YORK (DIA) strongly supports the right of women to choose not to have a baby and to obtain safe and affordable abortions. The prevailing prejudice of professional health care providers, however, is that disabled women are incapable of having and raising a healthy child. Thus, the right to choose to have a baby and not to be sterilized is equally important to disabled women. DIA, representing disabled people, participated in a complaint to obtain equal access to health care along with other groups representing women, racial minorities, older people and poor people.

* * *

The DISTRICT 65, UAW (TECHNICAL, OFFICE, AND PROFESSIONAL DIVISION) represents 10,000 workers, the majority of whom are women, and includes many single parents in the New York metropolitan area. We are committed to improving our lives in the work place and in the community. Many of our members are struggling for their survival and the survival of their families. It is on their behalf that we passionately support the right to choose. Our members are often the lowest paid employees in the work place, usually recently organized. The difficulties endured to support their families are overwhelming. The right to choose is a sacred right; it is the right to survive.

* * *

The EDUCATION COMMITTEE OF 100 BLACK MEN OF LOS ANGELES is concerned with motivating and assisting Black youth to succeed academically. As such, we have long understood the causal connections between unwanted pregnancy and the inordinately high drop-out rate of women of color, their lack of educational attainment, and their resultant dependency on social welfare and their lack of economic viability. We strongly believe that female reproductive rights are essential to the individual and we strongly support the "women of color" brief.

* * *

The FEDERATION OF FEMINIST WOMEN'S HEALTH CENTERS in Los Angeles, California is a national organization whose purpose is to promote reproductive rights for all women. The Federation coordinates the work of its member women-controlled clinics which provide women's health services, including abortion services and health education based on the self-help model.

* * *

The FEMINIST WOMEN'S HEALTH CENTER of Atlanta and Athens, Georgia is a non-profit organization established by women in 1977 to advocate, promote and protect reproductive rights for all women. Our goal is to enable women to make informed choices about their health care and reproduction through the provision of self-help health education and gynecological services. We work with others locally, nationally and internationally to insure that women have the information and power to control their bodies and their lives. Historically when abortion has been made illegal and/or inaccessible all women are denied the right to control their bodies and their lives and poorer women suffer disproportionately.

* * *

The GAY MEN'S HEALTH CRISIS, INC. (GMHC), based in New York City, is the nation's oldest and largest community-based AIDS service, education and advocacy organization. As of January 1989, approximately 4% of GMHC's 2,471 active clients were women. The majority of our female clients are women of color. GMHC is concerned that our female clients and women in general affected by the HIV epidemic be able to make their own medical decisions and that one option that must be available is a safe and legal abortion regardless of a woman's financial status.

* * *

The HISPANIC HEALTH COUNCIL is a research, training, and advocacy organization devoted to the improvement of the health and mental health status of Latinos, especially in the Hartford and Northeast region. Specifically, the Council seeks to reverse the current quality and quantity of health care services by improving them through information collection, education to providers, and advocacy at the local, state, and federal level. The Council has numerous projects on child abuse prevention, maternal-child health, reproductive health, substance abuse prevention, and AIDS research and prevention.

* * *

The INSTITUTE FOR COMMUNITY RESEARCH, INC. has as its mission the improvement of the quality and availability of critical information to underserved people in the Hartford, Connecticut capitol area and beyond. The Institute collaborates with organizations and institutions working in African-American, Puerto Rican, West Indian, and other ethnic and ethnic minority communities, as well as poor and working class communities. The Institute historically supports the access of low-income women and women of color to equal resources and services. Recognizing the complex social and economic factors that result in un-anticipated pregnancies among women of color and the lack of societal supports which women of color and poor women in general face in attempting to raise un-anticipated children; and the intolerable psychological and physical consequences of illegal abortion faced by poor women all over the world, the Institute supports the right of poor women and women of color to information about abortion and other reproductive health issues, and to the constitutional right to reproductive health self-determination, including the right to abortion and abortion counseling, and appropriate public financing to support these choices.

* * *

The INTERNATIONAL AGENCY FOR MINORITY ARTIST AFFAIRS (IAMAA) is a nationwide

membership organization based in New York City which serves as an arts, cultural and social service agency. One of our primary concerns is the promotion of women's rights. Our founder is Queen Mother Moore, who is now 91 years of age, and Ms. Flo Kennedy, attorney and feminist leader. The Executive Board of the IAMAA fully supports the freedom of choice of women pertinent to abortion and stands firmly against any modification of the Roe decision.

* * *

The JUDSON MEMORIAL CHURCH in New York's Greenwich Village is affiliated with both the American Baptist Church and the United Church of Christ. In 1967 it founded the Clergy Consultation Service on Abortion, a national organization of ministers, rabbis and nuns who counseled thousands upon thousands of women with "problem pregnancies" and referred those who chose abortion to physicians willing to perform them despite the law. The Clergy Consultation Service on Abortion disbanded in 1973 when the Supreme Court decision in Roe v. Wade was handed down.

* * *

The JUNIOR LEAGUE OF BROOKLYN welcomes all young women regardless of race, color, religion or national origin, who demonstrate an interest in and commitment to voluntarism and community service. The purpose of the Junior League is exclusively educational and charitable; and is to promote voluntarism and to improve the community through the effective action and leadership of trained volunteers.

The Junior League of Brooklyn recognizes the critical need for a just and humane environment which enables each woman to achieve her personal, professional and community goals. Specifically, we support legislation for the equal rights of women, including the ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment to the Constitution of the United States; reproductive freedom, family planning and other health care issues pertaining to women; equal opportunities for employment and advancement; economic security and training options for homemakers; equal access to credit.

* * *

LATINOS CONTRA SIDA of Hartford, Connecticut, is an independent organization which provides Latinos with AIDS/ARC and who are HIV positive and their family members education, outreach, counseling and support. AIDS affects everyone, especially Blacks and Hispanics of low socio-economic income.

* * *

The LOS ANGELES FEMINIST WOMEN'S HEALTH CENTER is a non-profit health center that provides quality specialized health care and self-help information for all women in a non-judgmental, compassionate and respectful manner. We encourage a better understanding of our bodies and enhancement of good health in a safe, private atmosphere that is woman-controlled. We are strong advocates for reproductive freedom!

* * *

The LOS ANGELES GAY AND LESBIAN SCIENTISTS is an organization of scientists and technical professionals who have always been interested in the issue of the right to privacy as a constitutional protection. We also deplore any discrimination based on minority status or economic status. Just as the AIDS crisis has affected our community's right to privacy and access to all possible medical treatment for the disease, so we perceive the potential discrimination in denying a woman's right to privacy and medical choice a terrible crisis of injustice.

* * *

The METRO D.C. COALITION FOR CHOICE in Washington, DC has as its purpose the mobilization of local support for the reproductive rights of all women and to represent the unique needs of the residents of the District of Columbia in the area of reproductive rights. Women of color make up a large percentage of the D.C. population, so we feel it is important to endorse this brief.

* * *

The MEXICAN AMERICAN LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND (MALDEF) is a national civil rights organization based in Los Angeles and established in 1967. Its principal objective is to secure, through litigation and education, the civil rights of Hispanics living in the United States. In this context, MALDEF has advocated on behalf of Hispanic women for equality of access to health services and facilities. Any restriction on a woman's right to choose an abortion will have a disproportionate impact on the Hispanic community's self-determination and ability to obtain equality of opportunity.

* * *

The MEXICAN AMERICAN WOMEN'S NATIONAL ASSOCIATION of Washington, D.C. is committed to improving the quality of life for all Hispanic women.

* * *

MICHIGAN REPUBLICANS FOR CHOICE in Grand Rapids, Michigan is a statewide organization of approximately 1000 men and women. They support the right of a woman to decide when to bear children and when not to bear children. They believe in the right to privacy and believe that right is supported in the constitution.

* * *

The MINORITY PRISON PROJECT of Memphis, Tennessee works for the protection of the men, women, and children imprisoned in the United States. We work to try and regain the rights for these humans, under the Constitution, that is denied them daily.

* * *

MOBILIZATION FOR YOUTH HEALTH SERVICES, INC. is a non-profit community-based organization of 400 clients and over 700 employers in New York City. We are dedicated to providing human home care services for our clients, the elderly and the handicapped. Ninety per cent of our employees are low-income minority women. A reversal of the right to choose a safe, legal abortion would deny low-income minority and other women an aspect of fair and equitable medical coverage.

* * *

MY SISTER'S PLACE of Washington D.C. is a shelter for battered women and their children. For ten years we have sheltered, advocated for, counseled with and been a friend to 2000 women and children who have been forced to leave their homes in order to find physical safety, peace of mind, and the right to make their own choices. My Sister's Place is a vehicle to self-determination for women whose right to choose has been invalidated. The right to self-determination, including how it extends to the right to choose abortion, is the principle upon which we are founded.

* * *

The NATION INSTITUTE of New York City is a non-profit foundation founded in 1966 which undertakes research, educational programs and other projects concerned with civil rights and civil liberties, particularly those protected by the First Amendment. The Supreme Court Watch project of The Nation Institute is an example of our commitment to these issues.

* * *

The NATIONAL ACTION FORUM FOR MIDLIFE & OLDER WOMEN, INC. in Stony Brook, New York was founded nine years ago by a group of professional volunteer women to inform the dramatically growing numbers of women over forty about health, economic and social issues of importance to them. The national and international newsletter, Hot Flash, goes to thousands of women throughout the United States, and thirty other countries of the world. One of its goals is not only to empower women with knowledge, but to oppose inequitable treatment of women of all ages. Reproductive freedom is important to all women of reproductive age, for themselves, their adult daughters and granddaughters.

* * *

The NATIONAL BLACK WOMEN'S HEALTH PROJECT (NBWHP) of Atlanta, Georgia was founded as a self help and health advocacy organization to improve the chronically poor and declining health status of Black women and their families. Today it consists of a network of 88 developing and established chapters in 24 states, serving a broad-based constituency of almost 2000 members. The purpose of the NBWHP is the definition, promotion, and maintenance of health for Black women, including full reproductive rights, the essential authority of every woman to choose when, whether, and under what conditions she will bear children. Because too many single family households in the United States are headed by Black women living in poverty, possessing less educational and job training opportunities, enduring inadequate, often non-existent child care services, subject to substandard housing conditions, and lacking access to appropriate health services of any kind; wherefrom, more than half of all Black children are poor, born of mothers receiving inferior, if any, prenatal care, suffering the highest rate of infant mortality and neo-natal deaths in the Western world; and because we lack fail-safe birth control methods, adequate human sexuality education, and suffer also the highest rate of teenage pregnancy in the Western world, we firmly insist upon continued access to safe, legal and affordable abortion. Restrictive abortion laws exacerbate the low socioeconomic status of women of color and the passage of such will further impugn the dignity of Black womanhood, leaving sterilization as the only publicly funded and permanent birth control method available to women of color. The lives of Black and other women of color will be disproportionately damaged as we are forced to rely on publicly funded health facilities where they exist.

* * *

The NATIONAL CENTER FOR LESBIAN RIGHTS (NCLR, formerly the Lesbian Rights Project) in San Francisco, California is a non-profit, public interest law firm dedicated to eradicating sexual orientation-based discrimination. For over a decade, NCLR has represented women in both state and federal courts in their efforts to preserve the privacy and integrity of their personal and family lives. NCLR attorneys have authored numerous law review articles and publications on privacy-related issues.

* * *

The NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF BLACK LAWYERS (NCBL), based in New York City, is an activist legal organization of Black lawyers, law professors, judges, law students and legal workers dedicated to serving as the legal arm of the Black community. NCBL and its chapters throughout the country have been actively involved in the continuing struggle for equal rights for women. We are deeply concerned over the prospect that the Court will abolish or further limit a woman's constitutional right to choose abortion. Therefore, we urge this Court to affirm the decision below and reaffirm the principles enunciated in Roe v. Wade.

* * *

The NATIONAL COUNCIL OF NEGRO WOMEN, INC. (NCNW), headquartered in Washington, D.C., is an umbrella organization of national organizations. It was founded in 1935 by Mary McLeod Bethune. From its inception NCNW has sought to harness the collective strengths of Black women in the struggle for civil and human rights. It has a half century of civil rights leadership and public service on behalf of women and their families in the United States and in developing African countries. Teenage pregnancy, health protection, job training, juvenile justice, education, career advancement, entrepreneurship, hunger, malnutrition and international development education are current program emphases. NCNW embraces 33 national organizations and 254 chartered community-based sections with an outreach to 4 million women in all walks of life whose mission is inspired by Mary McLeod Bethune to "Leave No One Behind."

* * *

The NATIONAL INSTITUTE FOR WOMEN OF COLOR (NIWC) of Denver, Colorado is a private, non-profit organization established in 1981 to promote educational and economic equity for all women of color (Black, Hispanic, Asian American, Pacific Islander, American Indian, and Alaska Native). NIWC has been a long-standing advocate of a woman's right to choose. More importantly, NIWC views reproductive choice as one aspect of a full range of reproductive health care services and recognizes the need to make these services accessible to women of limited economic means as well as to women of diverse racial and cultural backgrounds.

* * *

The NATIONAL LAWYERS GUILD (NLG), founded in 1937, is a national organization based in New York City which represents 7,000 legal practitioners in 200 chapters throughout the United States.

Throughout its long history, the NLG has been proud to represent people of color in their struggles for dignity and justice, and has taken pride in the increasing numbers of women in its own ranks and in the legal profession.

The NLG remains firmly committed to the proposition that each individual must have real opportunity and real autonomy. Without options and without choices to make, specifically without access to safe and legal abortion, women of color and women generally will be unable to exercise the necessary autonomy to have meaningful and productive lives.

* * *

The NATIONAL MINORITY AIDS COUNCIL is a national organization dedicated to creating a greater response among people of color to HIV/AIDS in our communities. The Council has as its primary focus leadership. As such we take stands on issues impacting on minority health. Therefore, we recognize the importance of supporting increased access to public health, and a national focus on public health for all women.

* * *

The NATIONAL ORGANIZATION OF LEGAL SERVICES WORKERS is a union with headquarters in New York City which represents about 3,000 staff attorneys, social workers, paralegals, and clerical personnel around the country. Our members provide free legal assistance to low income women in various civil cases, including matters related to domestic violence, health services, government benefits, and housing and homelessness issues.

* * *

The NATIONAL RAINBOW COALITION, NEW YORK STATE CHAPTER is a broad-based coalition of multi-racial ethnic, socio-economic and issue-oriented people from across the state of New York that are fighting for a better social environment for all the people of this state, particularly the "have-nots" in our society. We believe that women, particularly women of color and poor women, must have the right to safe legal abortions, and that access to legal abortions must be maintained. Furthermore, we believe that "the intentions of governments are written into the budgets." With this in mind we believe that the federal government and the government of the state of New York must continue to provide funds for poor women to obtain abortions.

* * *

The NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE, INC., founded in 1910, is the premier social service and civil rights organization in America. The League is a non-profit, community-based agency headquartered in New York City, with 113 affiliates in 34 states and the District of Columbia. Its principal objective is to secure equal opportunity for African-Americans and other minorities in every aspect of American life. The National Urban League supports women's legal right to medically safe abortions, and full access to comprehensive reproductive health services for African-American women and their families.

* * *

The NATIONAL WOMEN'S HEALTH NETWORK (NWHN) in Washington, D.C. represents over 8,000 individual and 300 institutional members. The membership is composed of women, including providers, consumers, physicians, professional women, older women and women of color. The Network is a resource on health issues, providing information to members of congress involved in health issues and testimony to the Food and Drug Administration on issues affecting women's health. It is also an advocacy organization representing the needs of its members for access to services and information, including the service of and information about abortion.

* * *

The NATIONAL WOMEN'S POLITICAL CAUCUS (NWPC) of Washington, D.C. is a nonprofit organization supporting the appointment and election of women to public office. NWPC also supports legislative initiatives at state and national levels to insure fairness and equity for all Americans. As an organization comprised of white women and women of color working together, we recognize and work to overcome the particular problems faced by women of color, particularly those who are poor, in receiving adequate health care and in safeguarding their right to choice in reproductive decisions.

* * *

The NATIONAL WOMEN'S POLITICAL CAUCUS, New York State Chapter is an organization whose platform includes support for pro-choice (all levels of choice) candidates for political office and lobbying for medicaid funds to fund abortions.

* * *

The NATIVE AMERICAN COMMUNITY BOARD of Andes, South Dakota works with Native American women in areas of health education and advocacy issues pertaining to health and reproductive rights. We have assisted over 1000 Native American people over the last year.

* * *

NEW DIRECTIONS FOR WOMEN (NDFW), a feminist newspaper in Englewood, New Jersey, is committed to publishing the many voices of feminism. We believe the diversity of the women's movement must be seen as one of its strengths. NDFW believes that when we understand the pervasive force of sexism, we will act to effect change. We support every woman's right to reproductive control. We wholeheartedly support Roe v. Wade and urge the Court to leave it intact.

* * *

The NEW JEWISH AGENDA (NJA) is a national organization headquartered in New York City committed to progressive human values and the building of a shared vision of Jewish life. We affirm the value of life and the right of all children to be born into a loving and caring environment. Women should be free to choose when and under what conditions they bring life into the world. The question of a woman's right to have an abortion involves complex moral and religious issues. In the case of Jewish law, abortion is not only permitted but mandated in certain circumstances. NJA will fight to retain safe, legal abortions and opposes depriving poor people of choices available to others.

* * *

The NEW YORK ASIAN WOMEN'S CENTER, INC. is a battered women's shelter program serving primarily battered women and their dependents in the Asian communities of New York City. We are committed to creating safe options for women, including issues concerning reproductive choice. Some of the women that we work with rely on public funding for abortion services; without such funding these women's lives are in serious jeopardy.

* * *

The NEW YORK GRAY PANTHERS is an intergenerational non-profit organization. One of our commitments is anti-discrimination in all its forms. We are interested in improving the system to attain equal rights for all.

* * *

The NEW YORK PRO-CHOICE COALITION is composed of individuals and organizations dedicated to winning full reproductive rights for all women. We call for safe, legal abortion, medicaid funding of abortion for poor women, access to birth control and health care, economic parity for women, affordable housing, and for the elimination of forced sterilization of Black, Puerto Rican, Native American and poor women.

* * *

The NEW YORK STATE COALITION AGAINST DOMESTIC VIOLENCE is a membership organization of battered women's shelters, safe home projects, counseling and advocacy organizations and individuals committed to empowering women and helping them to lead violence-free lives. The Coalition is an inclusive organization that works with all women, regardless of race, class, ethnicity or sexual orientation. The Coalition believes in women's rights to choice and in the accessibility of services to all women, regardless of economic status. This includes every woman's right to reproductive choice and to medical assistance.

* * *

The NEW YORK UNIVERSITY LAW WOMEN is an organization of female law students. As a legal organization for women, we are committed to maintaining legal rights for other women and for ourselves. Through projects such as the Battered Women's Project and the Women in Prison Project, we face the inequitable treatment of women of color and low-income women by the legal system. On behalf of ourselves as women of a variety of races and income levels and on behalf of those we seek to assist, we strongly oppose any further restrictions on the rights of women to take control of their own lives and bodies.

* * *

The NEW YORK WOMEN AGAINST RAPE (NYWAR) is a feminist, non-profit women's organization dedicated to ending sexual violence. NYWAR provides services through crisis intervention counseling, community education and organizing. NYWAR addresses the needs of under-represented populations, including women of color, lesbians and adolescents. In our work we are constantly confronted with the different treatment afforded women of privilege by the criminal justice and other systems. We strongly oppose the current inequities and the broadening of this gap in accessibility to health care services should Roe be overturned.

* * *

OAKHURST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH of Decatur, Georgia asserts that both our local church and our denomination support the right of all women to have access to safe and legal abortions. While none of us applaud abortions, we do affirm that the final decision must be made between a woman and God.

* * *

ORGANIZACION NACIONAL DE LA SALUD DE LA MUJER LATINA/NATIONAL LATINA HEALTH ORGANIZATION of Oakland, California was formed because we felt strongly that we ourselves needed to do something about the quality of our health, about the injustices, neglect and racism we as a group have suffered. Our physical selves suffer when our mental and emotional selves do not feel in control. Our health issues have not been addressed. Lack of awareness on the part of the medical profession and the language barrier have had a major impact on our access to medical care.

A reversal of Roe v. Wade would be most detrimental to Latinas and other women of color. Our access to abortion services and related reproductive care is already limited due to the language barrier. We need to expand services, information, and health education on sexuality and birth control that is culturally relevant and in our language so that we can make healthful educated decisions and are able to give informed consent. There has to be an end to discrimination based on race and class related to access.

* * *

The ORGANIZATION OF ASIAN WOMEN in New York City is comprised of Asian women from various ethnic backgrounds concerned about issues affecting our communities. We sponsor educationals on and organize in coalitions on anti-Asian violence, immigrant workers' rights and the rights of the undocumented, domestic violence in Asian communities, the sexual exploitation of Asian women here and abroad, and reproductive freedom, including access to inexpensive and safe abortions.

* * *

The ORGANIZATION OF PAN-ASIAN AMERICAN WOMEN is a national organization based in Washington, D.C. and founded in 1976 which seeks to combat discrimination and to achieve equal opportunities for Asian Pacific American women.

* * *

The PERMANENT COMMISSION ON THE STATUS OF HARTFORD WOMEN (PCSHW) represents all women in the City of Hartford, Connecticut. The Commission advocates for the rights of women in all areas of need, including health, employment, housing and day care, and is charged with working toward elimination of gender-based discrimination. The PCSHW endorses the women of color brief because poor women and women of color have the fewest resources and therefore depend on public health care facilities.

* * *

PLANNED PARENTHOOD OF ATLANTA AREA (PPAA) provides confidential services to women in the Atlanta area. PPAA supports a woman's right to choose abortion as a matter of privacy and personal choice. Approximately 70% of PPAA's clients are women of color.

* * *

PROJECT AWARE (Association for Women's AIDS Research and Education) in San Francisco, California is an epidemiologic and educational research study group focusing on women at high risk for HIV infection in San Francisco and the local Bay Area. Over one thousand women have been evaluated; many are of low income, have been pregnant, are pregnant, or anticipate pregnancy and have fundamental decisions to make in situations of active HIV infection or ongoing risk for HIV infection. Providing full information about reproductive choices is essential to the health and welfare of the mother and her current or possible pregnancies.

* * *

PROJECT CHOICE: AIDS EDUCATION FOR CO-DEPENDENT WOMEN OF COLOR in Oakland, California is involved with providing AIDS education to women who choose relationships with partners who are generally addicted to alcohol or drugs. The focus is to assist women to learn how to negotiate safe sex and needle-sharing practices to avoid contracting the HIV virus. It is imperative for women who, despite all efforts, become HIV positive and are pregnant to have access to appropriate medical assistance and have a choice to abort a child with a 30-50% chance of being HIV positive also. Safe affordable abortions must be available for women of color who choose them.

* * *

The PUERTO RICAN COMMITTEE AGAINST REPRESSION in New York City is dedicated to the struggle for the self-determination and independence of Puerto Rico, and to challenging racist and oppressive conditions in the U.S. Reproductive rights is of crucial importance to Puerto Rican women, inasmuch as 38% of them have been sterilized, many against their will, due to inadequate access to birth control and abortion.

* * *

The PUERTO RICAN LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATION FUND is a national organization based in New York City dedicated to protecting and furthering the civil rights of Puerto Ricans and other Latinos. The Fund's litigation efforts focus on the areas of employment, education, housing and voting rights, with a particular emphasis on safeguarding the rights of Puerto Ricans of low economic status. Puerto Rican women and other women of color are particularly vulnerable to discrimination and therefore the Fund supports efforts to protect their rights. The Fund opposes any efforts to overturn or in any way restrict the rights recognized in Roe v. Wade.

* * *

* * *

The RAINBOW LOBBY, INC. is an independent citizen's lobby working to strengthen and preserve democracy nationally and internationally. The majority of people in the United States support the right of a woman to choose an abortion. The Lobby is concerned about the enormous gap between the concerns of the majority of people in this country, i.e., for abortion rights for all women, and the public policy actually legislated by Congress. Our elected officials are more and more unaccountable to ordinary citizens, their constituents, and thus we don't hear any outcry against the Supreme Court's decision to take the Webster case.

* * *

The ROCKLAND FAMILY SHELTER, located in Spring Valley, New York, provides services to victims of domestic violence, sexual assault and homeless women and children. As a result of their victimization, many of the women with whom we work have lost their jobs and other financial resources, placing them at high risk of inadequate health care. These women are unable to afford health care services equal to those available to women of privilege. Our agency strongly opposes any legislation which will continue to perpetuate such inequities.

* * *

The SAN FRANCISCO WOMEN LAWYERS ALLIANCE is a progressive, activist bar organization that was founded in 1983 to provide a vehicle through which women lawyers could address women's issues and have an impact in the community. It provides a forum where women lawyers can work together on substantive legal and political projects and contribute their skills to enhance the position of women in our society. One of the issues of particular concern to our membership is freedom of choice and reproductive rights for all women.

* * *

The SAN FRANCISCO WOMEN'S CENTERS/WOMEN'S BUILDING is a community organization serving the public in various ways. We are concerned and active around issues for low-income and working women, especially women of color, single mothers, older women, disabled women and lesbians. One of our ongoing commitments is to reproductive and medical assistance to all women, regardless of their economic status.

* * *

The SANTA FE HEALTH EDUCATION PROJECT serves Santa Fe and rural northern New Mexico offering services in education, advocacy and organizing. Our goal is to develop effective self-help groups capable of solving local health problems. We believe that everyone should have access to good medical care which includes reproductive care and the right to a safe abortion.

* * *

The STAFF AT DOMESTIC VIOLENCE CENTER OF CHESTER COUNTY, PENNSYLVANIA: We are 100% of the staff at the Domestic Violence Center of Chester County in West Chester, Pennsylvania. We provide a hotline, safe housing, and comprehensive counseling to battered women. Our Center served 743 women and 144 children from July 1, 1987 to June 30, 1988. A great many of the women we serve are single parents with low incomes. These women must struggle to procure fair access to services, including health care services. We strongly oppose inequitable treatment for low-income women denied fair access to medical services including abortion.

* * *

STOP ABUSE FOR EVERYONE, INC. in Clarion, Pennsylvania, provides services to victims of domestic violence. Our agency's main goal of empowering women is based on providing options and encouraging women to make their own decisions. Taking away a woman's choice for an abortion is disempowering and therefore we strongly oppose any action which contributes to this oppression of women.

* * *

STUDENTS AND YOUTH AGAINST RACISM is a national organization based in New York City with chapters nation-wide whose women members include students and youth from many communities -- Black, Latino, Asian, Native American, white, lesbian, disabled, employed, unemployed, poor and heads of households. It organizes against racism and all forms of discrimination in this society. It strongly holds that full reproductive rights and quality health care is the right of all young people and that safe, legal abortions and birth control must be guaranteed and available to all youth, with Medicaid funding for those who need it. To deny safe, legal abortion would seriously harm the health of and discriminate against untold numbers of young women, especially the poor, unemployed, and Black, Latin, Asian and Native American who, without the funds to obtain safe abortions, would have to resort to dangerous, health-threatening abortions.

* * *

The UNITED ELECTRICAL, RADIO AND MACHINE WORKERS OF AMERICA (UE) is a national labor organization based in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania committed to organizing workers regardless of craft, race, nationality, sex, age, religion, political belief, or immigration status and to representing and defending its membership in their efforts to improve their wages, working and living conditions. The UE is fighting for expanded child care programs and parental leave policies to enable working parents to make their fullest contribution to both society and their families, and at its last convention declared that the Union "supports the right of women to choose to terminate a pregnancy or otherwise control their own bodies without interference and regardless of economic status."

* * *

UNITED LABOR ACTION (New York City) is a national network of unionists, labor activists and unemployed workers, whose members, including many women, are of all nationalities who organize for workers' rights, with special concern for the poorest and unorganized. It supports the right of working women to have their right to privacy in making personal decisions about their lives as one aspect of having an equal place at the work place and in society. It views that working women must be guaranteed choice in reproductive matters with safe, legal, affordable abortions, Medicaid funding, if needed, and decent jobs, pay equity, child care, parental leave and low-cost health care in order to decide whether or when to have children. Poor and working women have always had abortions; many died as a result prior to Roe v. Wade. To deny this right would hurt millions of working women, especially the poorest -- service workers, part-time and temporary workers, and minimum-wage earners, of which 60% are women. It would fall heaviest upon and discriminate against Black, Latina, Asian and Native American women who form a disproportionately high number of the poorest workers and would again be forced to resort to unsafe abortions.

* * *

The UNITED PROBATION OFFICERS ASSOCIATION is an organization that represents over 700 probation officers in New York City. Each day we come in contact with those in this city who have the least access to the benefits of an affluent society. These are the mothers and young women whose only access to abortion will be through the illegal "back alley abortionist" if there is any restriction on public funds for abortion. We therefore strongly oppose any laws which would restrict equal access to abortion for women regardless of their economic status.

* * *

The URBAN LEAGUE OF GREATER HARTFORD, INC. is an equal opportunity organization, non-partisan and non-profit. Its mission is to enable Blacks and other minorities to live on a par with all other Americans. The constitutional right to abortion must not be denied to any woman because of income, race, ethnic background or the community in which she lives. The proposed unavailability of abortion counseling, hospital/clinic-based abortions will directly lead to increases in unwanted pregnancies, child abuse and neglect, poverty, dropout rates, and the birth of addicted infants and those born with AIDS.

* * *

The WOMANCARE CLINIC in San Diego, California is a non-profit health center that provides quality specialized health care and self-help information for all women in a non-judgmental, compassionate and respectful manner. We encourage a better understanding of our bodies and enhancement of good health in a safe, private atmosphere that is woman-controlled. We are strong advocates for reproductive freedom!

* * *

WOMEN FOR RACIAL AND ECONOMIC EQUALITY (WREE), located in New York City, has its purpose the fight against racism and for achieving economic equality for women. WREE's philosophy is outlined in its Women's Bill of Rights. WREE is a grass roots, multiracial and multi-cultural organization. Although its members come from all economic levels, WREE is primarily concerned with the needs of working class women. One of WREE's Bill of Rights is "the rights to reproductive freedom, including federally funded birth control and abortion upon demand, sex education and an end to experimentation and sterilization abuse." We fully support the brief of women of color.

* * *

WOMEN OF ALL RED NATIONS, MINNESOTA in Minneapolis, Minnesota works for the personal and political empowerment of Native women on the grassroots level. We aim for sovereignty and self-determination for our people. It has been our experience that when women are denied the basic human right to control our own bodies, we are vulnerable to many kinds of abuse. Women of color in particular must retain the means to resist genocide.

* * *

WOMEN OF ALL RED NATIONS, NORTH DAKOTA in Fort Yates, North Dakota has monitored the Indian Health Service policy regarding the sterilization procedures available. Congress has mandated a report from IHS on this. Tubal ligation is the only major surgery available at IHS facilities. Statistics remain the same as ten years ago for sterilizations.

Native American populations have been decimated by many factors. As one of the most regulated populations, indeed, in the world, Native Americans exist by the policies of the National Government. Many of those regulations do not allow for the choice, participation or development of their own programs. As Native American women who are concerned with the sterilization of our population, so we are greatly concerned with the imposition of not having the freedom to choose abortions. The Women of All Red Nations is committed to the freedom to choose in any situation.

* * *

The WOMEN OF COLOR PARTNERSHIP PROGRAM OF THE RELIGIOUS COALITION FOR ABORTION RIGHTS, located in Washington, D.C., is a national effort to educate women of color concerning public policies surrounding the issue of reproductive choice and its disproportionate affect on women of color. As the injustices of racism, sexism and classism engulf the day-to-day choices available to African-American, Latin American, Native American and Asian/Pacific American women, access to reproductive health care affects every element of our lives. This program seeks to identify and address not only reproductive rights issues but also reproductive health care concerns from the unique perspectives of women of color to include: (1) the right to choose or not to choose abortion; (2) family planning and all methods of birth control; (3) teen pregnancy; (4) prenatal care; (5) child care; and (6) medical abuses against women of color.

This organization is extremely concerned about the continued existence and perpetuation of illegal abortions, sterilization abuse, forced Caesarian sections, the use of Depo-provera, and the lack of sufficient prenatal care for women of color. The economics of this country dictates that the "haves" may choose to purchase whatever health services they may need or want. The "have nots" hold very few choices in their lives and in many instances must rely on the federal government. We are concerned about the numerous public policies which create a negative impact on the ability of women of color to make a difficult decision, the unnecessary sacrifices that she and her family may have to make because of a lack of resources and the degradation that she must undergo to carry out her decision. We believe that all women, regardless of race or class, should have access to a safe and legal abortion. Lastly, we believe that the right to choose abortion is a personal decision to be respected and made in consultation with a woman's doctor, her family, with spiritual guidance but without governmental interference.

* * *

The WOMEN'S ACTION ALLIANCE, located in New York City, is a national organization founded in 1971 dedicated to the full equality of all women. While we work toward this end by providing educational programs and services to women and women's centers around the country, we recognize that any progress toward equality is impossible when women do not maintain the right to control their own bodies. The right of all women to a safe and legal abortion, regardless of race or economic status, is intrinsic to any notion of gender equality and a central tenet is the struggle of women everywhere for individual dignity and self-determination.

* * *

The WOMEN'S ACTION ALLIANCE, INC. WOMEN'S CENTERS AND AIDS PROJECT in New York City works extensively with community-based organizations serving women of color, young women, and low income women. We are keenly aware of the importance of maintaining a full range of reproductive options for these and all women. If abortion services or access to abortion were to be restricted, these women would have no alternative but to seek dangerous alternatives to safe and legal abortion. A return to the days of back-alley abortions would indicate a shameful and dangerous disregard for the lives of women in this country.

* * *

The WOMEN'S AIDS PREVENTION PROJECT of Atlanta, Georgia is a non-profit education and outreach service that provides information and opportunity to prevent the spread of HIV, AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases in women. The Women's AIDS Prevention Project is operated by women for women who are interested in having more control of our health care, our bodies and our lives through wellness and through choice. We work towards promoting empowerment in women of color in order that we may end oppression of women including the denial of funds and access to abortion and other reproductive choices. It is our interest that women of color have equal access and opportunity to choose our reproductive destiny with safety and with dignity.

* * *

The WOMEN'S INTERNATIONAL RESOURCE EXCHANGE (WIRE) in New York City distributes articles and information on women in the Third World. Right now WIRE is producing an article comparing sterilization in El Salvador and Cuba. This article is a case study that shows the connection between a woman's reproductive rights and her political and economic status within her society. One of WIRE's objectives is to bridge the gap between women in this country and women in developing countries. Regardless of the many differences between us, all women have the right to control their reproductive process and to have access to adequate health care and child care.

* * *

The WOMEN'S LAW CENTER, INC. of Baltimore, Maryland is an advocacy organization in the State of Maryland whose goal is to promote the legal rights of women through litigation, legislation and education. Our organization sees the privacy and reproductive rights issues raised in the Webster case as critical to the advancement of women's rights, and, indeed, as critical to preventing the loss of legal rights gained over the last sixteen years since the Roe v.

Wade decision.

* * *

The WOMEN'S PROJECT in Little Rock, Arkansas is a community-based nonprofit organization committed to the elimination of sexism and racism. Since 1981, the Women's Project has provided community education and assisted women in organizing around: violence against women and children; women's economic issues, especially those affecting low income women; and social justice issues such as sexism, racism, homophobia, ageism, ableism, classism and anti-Semitism.

* * *

The WOMEN'S STUDIES PROGRAM OF HUNTER COLLEGE in New York City is a cross-disciplinary program of academic courses, research and public education that involves some sixty faculty members, 2,000 students, and ongoing relations with many community organizations. Many of our courses, the scholarly research of our faculty, and our overall philosophy are concerned with expanding women's reproductive freedom. Maintaining full access to safe, legal abortion for all women is critical to this purpose.

* * *

The WORKERS WORLD PARTY is a national multi-chapter organization based in New York City whose members include working and poor women, youth, lesbians, seniors, disabled, unemployed and women on fixed incomes. It believes that every woman must be guaranteed choice and privacy regarding the critical and very personal issue of whether or when to have children and the right to control their own reproduction. To deny women this fundamental right to make the most personal decisions about their lives reinforces their subordinate status in society. Additionally, it further burdens young, poor, Black, Latina, Asian and Native women, who would have even fewer choices if legal abortion is overturned, and who, furthermore, would face a disproportionately higher number of complications by having to resort to unsafe abortionists or self-induced procedures.

* * *

The YWCA OF GREATER PITTSBURGH, as the YWCA nationally and locally, has been a strong voice for abortion rights dating back to 1967 when delegates to a YWCA National Convention voted to work to repeal all laws restricting or prohibiting abortions performed by a duly licensed physician. In 1973 delegates voted to support efforts to provide safe, low-cost abortions to all women who desire them. The YWCA also has as its number one imperative the elimination of racism wherever it exists and by any means necessary. Women of color are disproportionately impacted by the banning or restricting of abortions because they tend to have low incomes as a result of racism in America. This provides the basis for our interest in the CCR amicus brief.

* * *

The YWCA OF THE HARTFORD REGION, INC., in affiliation with the YWCA of the USA, believes "that there are times when respect for potential personhood should not override respect for the needs and lives of those already living...Legal restrictions and prohibition of abortions effect only poor women, depriving them of safe, medically approved abortions, while women of means can travel to locations where abortion is legal and safe. Thus the problem of unwanted pregnancies cannot be solved by outlawing abortions, and the denial of public funding for abortions prevents some women from exercising a constitutional right guaranteed to all." (From "The YWCA Position on Abortion Rights," June 1985, The National Board of the YWCA.)

* * *

The YWCA OF THE NATIONAL CAPITOL AREA, located in the D.C. Metropolitan area, has long been a leader in the struggle for racial justice and a strong advocate of reproductive freedom for women. As an organization whose mission is to serve women and girls and whose one imperative is the elimination of racism wherever it exists and by any means necessary, we are well aware of the twin burdens of racism and sexism. Thus, we are naturally concerned about the detrimental impact on women of color of any threats to reproductive freedom, including limitations on the right to choose abortion and on reproductive information and services that can be provided by publicly funded facilities. Such limitations will serve only to damage further the economic status of many women of color. Reproductive freedom must be preserved if women of color are to achieve economic equity.

* * *

The YWCA OF THE U.S.A. is a national membership movement with headquarters in Washington, D.C. that serves 2 million women and their families. The YWCA draws together women and girls of diverse experiences so that their lives may be open to new understanding and deeper relationships and that together they may join in the struggle for peace and justice, freedom and dignity for all people. The YWCA Mission states that the YWCA will work toward the elimination of racism wherever it exists and by any means necessary.

* * *

INDIVIDUAL SIGNATORIES

SYLVIA CHAVKIN, homemaker, teacher, New York City: Working with individuals in parenting courses I have observed how, if one can in some way control one's life and make choices, how much better lives can be helped psychologically and socially.

PHYLLIS CHESLER, author, professor, New York City.

ANA MARIA GARCIA, producer, filmmaker, Caparra Heights, Puerto Rico.

VICTORIA A. GORSKI, M.D., Bronx, New York: I teach family medicine, a discipline which places emphasis on prevention and advocacy for families. I care for patients in a community health center which serves a large minority and medicaid-eligible population. From both of these perspectives I see it as essential that all women, regardless of age, race, or financial status be allowed the right to have abortion as one safe, legal means of achieving effective family planning.

GWENYTH JACKAWAY, Mt. Vernon, New York.

CLARA Y. JONES, M.D., Bronx, New York.

SHEILA KEENAN, New York City: As an American citizen I wish to have the civil rights to make my own decisions in regard to reproductive rights including birth control and abortion choices. This is a private, hard-to-reach, overwhelming personal choice. The choice should be mine.

DINAH LEVENTHAL, Chair, Democratic Socialists of America Youth Section: We are an activist organization with over 1000 members on more than 40 campuses nationally. We work to fight poverty and racism; to empower students, particularly women and minorities. In the past few years, we have made a priority of work to defend reproductive freedom, including access to affordable abortions, as well as other health services, child care, and pay equity.

CYNTHIA F. MORENO, Chicago, Illinois: As a single parent, self-supporting head of household, woman of color, on a daily basis I come into contact with women who are in similar situations and are struggling to survive and raise our children to be contributing adults. I have been fortunate to have been afforded the opportunity to educate myself before I had children. I find it intolerable for the government of this or any country to dictate to me a decision that is MY RIGHT to make. Most of the women with whom I work are abused or homeless and have the right to be allowed to make their own choice. Economics should not figure into the decision process of a woman's right to choose.

JANE D. SAUNDERS, Boston, Massachusetts: For five years, previous to my current position as a Training Director, I worked at a federally funded family planning program in Western Massachusetts as a counselor. In that capacity, I saw many poor women (particularly Latina women because there is a large population of them in that area) who had birth control failures and saw no other reasonable alternative but an abortion since they did not have the economic base to have another child. Forcing these women to have another child in poverty serves no humane purpose on earth. The pain and agony of making this decision is more than enough for any person to have to deal with, making them break the law to have an abortion will not benefit our society in any way, shape or form. Until there is utopia in this country there will be a need to exercise freedom of choice regarding an abortion.

SAUNDRA D. SHEPHERD, M.D., New York City: The current attempt by those of the conservative persuasion to overturn abortion laws is another strategy to further disenfranchise those who already live at the mercy of American society. Before they ban abortion, let them enact legislation to protect all of the children who are already here -- hungry, without shelter, without access to education or medical care. The wealthy will continue to have abortion on demand if we allow Roe to be overturned, the poor will die in their crowded shelters and substandard housing, unable to afford good medical care before their pregnancies or for their abortions.

PAT SHONUBI, New York City: I strongly oppose an inequitable medical treatment system. Changes in Roe which would put the decision in the states' hands would restrict all women's rights but would impact on poor women without the means to circumvent the law. As before I believe abortions would go underground and poor women would be in more danger of getting botched-up abortions.

ANN SNITOW, author, professor, New York City.

TWENTY SPELMAN COLLEGE STUDENTS, Atlanta, Georgia: Spelman sisters are against the following: (1) women of color being denied by law to have an abortion because of an unwanted pregnancy that may arise due to rape, incest, or a birth defect; (2) limitations on the types of reproductive services made available to women of color; and (3) a continuing cycle of infant mortality, maternal morbidity, and despair amongst women of color.

LAURA UNGER, President, CWA Local 1150, New York City: My local represents AT&T workers in New York and New Jersey. Many are minorities, many are single parents, and approximately half of my members are women. Those with clerical titles are often in a position of living from week to week. The company has already declared its intention to cut our medical benefits. My members want and need safe, inexpensive and private access to abortions.

VIVIENNE VERDON-ROE and MICHAEL PORTER, independent filmmakers: We feel very strongly that a woman has the right to make decisions about her body.

CLAIRE JUN JIN YOO, New York City: I work for the Hotel Tenants' Rights Project (HTRP), a community organizing project of homeless women, building an organization to affirm, defend and advance the rights and interests of homeless women. HTRP is dedicated to the ideal of social justice and supports the rights of people in welfare hotels to have a decent standard of living, to be safe in their neighborhood and to have control over policies which affect their lives.

* * *

In addition to the above-named individuals, 221 women and men primarily from Hartford, Connecticut --but also from Washington, D.C.; Jersey City, New Jersey; Union City, New Jersey; West New York, New Jersey; New York City; Los Angeles; Chicago; Atlanta, Georgia, and Norwich, Connecticut -- signed a petition supporting this brief.[1]

---

[1](Copies of this petition are available from Sabrae Y. Jenkins, Women of Color Partnership Program, RCAR Educational Fund, Inc., 100 Maryland Avenue, N.E., #307, Washington, DC.)

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

FILED
MAR 30
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

IN THE
Supreme Court of the United States
OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,
v.
REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

BRIEF OF SEVENTY-SEVEN ORGANIZATIONS COMMITTED TO WOMEN'S EQUALITY AS AMICI CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLEES

(List of Amici Curiae on inside cover)

DAWN JOHNSEN
MARCY J. WILDER
NATIONAL ABORTION RIGHTS ACTION LEAGUE
1101 14th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 371-0779

JUDITH L. LICHTMAN
Counsel of Record
DONNA R. LENHOFF
MAXINE EICHNER
WOMEN'S LEGAL DEFENSE FUND
2000 P Street, N.W., Suite 400
Washington, D.C. 20036
(202) 887-0364
Attorneys for Amici Curiae

EVAN CAMINKER
MARCIA GREENBERGER
LOIS MURPHY
STEPHANIE RIDDER
MICHAEL C. SMALL
WENDY WEBSTER WILLIAMS
Of Counsel

WILSON - EPES PRINTING CO., INC. - 789-0096 - WASHINGTON, D.C. 20001

Amici Curiae

National Abortion Rights Action League
Women's Legal Defense Fund
League of Women Voters of the United States National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, Inc.
National Women's Law Center
NOW Legal Defense and Education Fund
Women's Law Project
American Association of University Women
National Association of Social Workers, Inc.
Women's International League for Peace and Freedom
Ms. Foundation for Women
Women's Equity Action League
Northwest Women's Law Center
Equal Rights Advocates, Inc.
Connecticut Women's Educational and Legal Fund, Inc.
National Woman Abuse Prevention Project
Wider Opportunities for Women
American Veterans Committee, Inc.
Voters for Choice/Friends of Family Planning
Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund, Inc.
Boston Women's Health Book Collective, Inc.
Human Rights Campaign Fund
American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees
Women Lawyers' Association of Los Angeles
Queen's Bench of the San Francisco Bay Area
Yale Journal of Law and Feminism Abortion Rights Council
Center for Women Policy Studies
Women's Equal Rights Legal Defense and Education Fund
Committee to Defend Reproductive Rights—CMRW
New York State Coalition on Women's Legal Issues Abortion Rights Mobilization
Women's Bar Association of Massachusetts
California Women Lawyers
National Gay & Lesbian Task Force
New York Women in Criminal Justice
Harvard Women's Law Association

Buffalo Lawyers for Choice
80% Majority Campaign
CHOICE
Women in Film
National Women's Conference Committee
Women's Law Association of the Washington College of Law of the American University
Choice Network of Tarrant County, Texas
Lawyers for Reproductive Rights
Gay and Lesbian Democrats of America
Women's Medical Fund, Inc.
Columbia-Greene Rape Crisis Center
Radical Women
D.C. Feminists Against Pornography
New Hampshire Women's Lobby
Institute for Women's Policy Research
Women's Equity Affiliates, Ltd.
Feminist Health Center of Portsmouth
Toledo Women's Bar Association
Washington Women United Fund for New Leadership
Women's Agenda
Missouri Women's Network
Hawaii Women Lawyers
National Women's Studies Association
Hawaii Women Lawyers Foundation
North Carolina Association of Women Attorneys, Inc.
Women's City Club of New York, Inc.
Illinois Women's Agenda
Feminist Institute
National Council for Research on Women
Tucson Women's Commission
League of Women Voters of Missouri
National Committee to Free Sharon Kowalski
Santa Barbara Women's Political Committee
Women Employed
National Gay Rights Advocates
Women's Center of the University of Connecticut
North Carolina Equity
Women's Rights Coalition International Center for Research on Women

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES	ii
INTEREST OF AMICI CURIAE	1
SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT	1
I. RESTRICTIVE ABORTION LAWS INTERFERE WITH WOMEN'S CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT TO LIBERTY BY RESTRICTING THEIR ABILITY TO MAKE FUNDAMENTAL DECISIONS ABOUT THEIR BODIES AND LIVES	4
A. Restrictive Abortion Laws Subject Women to Substantial Physical Intrusions and Risks In Violation of Their Fundamental Right To Bodily Integrity	6
B. Restrictive Abortion Laws Deprive Women Of The Freedom To Control The Course Of Their Lives And Restrict Their Ability To Participate In Society Equally With Men	12
II. THE STATE'S BALD ASSERTION OF A "COMPELLING" INTEREST IN PROTECTING POTENTIAL LIFE DOES NOT JUSTIFY A RETREAT FROM ROE v. WADE	17
A. A Critique Of Viability Does Not Absolve This Court Of Its Responsibility To Accommodate Women's Fundamental Right To Reproductive Autonomy	17
B. Recognition Of A Compelling State Interest In Protecting Potential Life Throughout Pregnancy Would Both Completely Eviscerate Women's Right To Choose Abortion And Portend Even Broader Invasions Of Women's Fundamental Rights	19
C. The Imposition Of Unparalleled Burdens Only On Women To Service The State's Asserted Interest In Potential Life Impermissibly Reflects And Reinforces Outmoded Stereotypes Of Women As Childbearers	24
CONCLUSION	30

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases	Page
Boos v. Barry, 108 S. Ct. 1157 (1988)	18
Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986)	4
Bradwell v. Illinois, 83 U.S. (16 Wall.) 130 (1872)	24, 26
Breedlove v. Suttles, 302 U.S. 277 (1937)	25
Califano v. Webster, 430 U.S. 313 (1977)	24, 25
Carey v. Population Services International, 431 U.S. 678 (1977)	4, 13
City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416 (1983)	6
City of Richmond v. J.A. Croson Co., 109 S. Ct. 706 (1989)	20, 21, 29
Cohen v. California, 413 U.S. 15 (1971)	20-21
Coy v. Iowa, 108 S. Ct. 2798 (1988)	18
Deaconess Hospital v. McRoberts, No. 874-00172 (St. Louis Cir. Ct. May 21, 1987)	22
Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973)	6
Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S. 438 (1972)	4, 21
Eu v. San Francisco County Democratic Central Committee, 57 U.S.L.W. 4251 (U.S. Feb. 21, 1989)	18
Frontiero v. Richardson, 411 U.S. 677 (1973)	1, 25, 26
Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965)	4, 21
Grodin v. Grodin, 102 Mich. App. 396, 301 N.W. 2d 869 (1981)	23
Harriss v. Pan American World Airways, Inc., 649 F.2d 670 (9th Cir. 1980)	14
Hoyt v. Florida, 368 U.S. 57 (1961), overruled, Taylor v. Louisiana, 419 U.S. 522 (1975)	24-25
Illinois State Board of Elections v. Socialist Workers Party, 440 U.S. 173 (1979)	18
In re A.C., 533 A.2d 611 (D.C. 1987), vacated & reh'g en banc granted, 539 A.2d 203 (D.C. 1988)	22
In re Guardianship of Pescinski, 67 Wis. 2d 4, 226 N.W.2d 180 (1975)	28
In re Klein, No. 1736-89 (N.Y. App. Div. Feb. 8, 1989)	20

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

	Page
In re Steven S., 126 Cal. App. 3d 23, 178 Cal. Rptr. 525 (1981)	23
Korematsu v. United States, 323 U.S. 214 (1944)	18
Loving v. Virginia, 388 U.S. 1 (1967)	4
Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390 (1923)	4
McFall v. Shimp, 10 Pa. D. & C. 3d 90 (Allegheny Cty. 1978) (per curiam)	27-28
Michael M. v. Sonoma County Superior Court, 450 U.S. 464 (1981)	12
Mississippi University for Women v. Hogan, 458 U.S. 718 (1982)	18, 25
Muller v. Oregon, 208 U.S. 412 (1908)	24, 25, 26
Olmstead v. United States, 277 U.S. 438 (1928)	3-4
Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U.S. 319 (1937)	4
People v. Stewart, No. M508197 (San Diego Mun. Ct. Feb. 27, 1987)	23
Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510 (1925)	4
Rochin v. California, 342 U.S. 165 (1952)	11
Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973)	passim
San Antonio Independent School District v. Rodriguez, 411 U.S. 1 (1973)	6
Schloendorff v. Society of New York Hospital, 211 N.Y. 125, 105 N.E. 92 (1914), overruled on other grounds, Bing v. Thunig, 2 N.Y.2d 656, 143 N.E.2d 3, 163 N.Y.S.2d 3 (1957)	28
Skinner v. Oklahoma, 316 U.S. 535 (1942)	4
Stallman v. Youngquist, 125 Ill. 2d 267, 531 N.E.2d 355 (1988)	23
Stanton v. Stanton, 421 U.S. 7 (1975)	25
Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians & Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986)	1, 2, 5, 13, 30
United States v. Kozminski, 108 S. Ct. 2751 (1988)	12
United States v. Vaughn, 117 Daily Wash. L. Rep. 441 (D.C. Super. Ct. Mar. 7, 1989)	22-23
United States Department of Justice v. Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press, 57 U.S. L.W. 4373 (U.S. Mar. 22, 1989)	13
Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S. 589 (1977)	13

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

	Page
Winston v. Lee, 470 U.S. 753 (1985)	10, 11
Wright v. Olin Corp., 697 F.2d 1172 (4th Cir. 1982)	14
Wygant v. Jackson Board of Education, 476 U.S. 267 (1986)	18
Constitution, Statutes and Legislative Materials
U.S. Const.:
Amend. I	18
Amend. IV	10
Amend. VI	18
Amend. XIII	11
Amend. XIV	passim
Minn. Stat. § 604.05(1) (1988)	27
Mo. Rev. Stat. § 1.205 (1986)	21, 23
House Committee on Education and Labor, Family and Medical Leave Act of 1988, H.R. Rep. No. 511, 100th Cong., 2d Sess. (1988)	14
Surgeon General's Report on Abortion, reprinted in 135 Cong. Rec. E906-E909 (daily ed. Mar. 21, 1989)	29
Title VII, 1964 Civil Rights Act, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e (1982)	14
Uniform Anatomical Gift Act § 2(b), (c) (1987)	27
Other Authorities
Alan Guttmacher Institute, Teenage Pregnancy: The Problem That Hasn't Gone Away (1981)	8
Amici Curiae Brief of Distinguished Scientists and Physicians, Including Nobel Laureates, in Support of Appellees, Webster v. Reproductive Health Services, 88-605	17
Blau & Ferber, Women in the Labor Market: The Last Twenty Years, in 1 Women and Work: An Annual Review 19 (L. Larwood, A. Stromberg & B. Gutek eds. 1985)	15
Brief Amici Curiae of Focus on the Family, and Family Research Council of America, in Support of Appellants, Webster v. Reproductive Health Services, 88-605	27

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

	Page
Brief of Amicus Curiae American Psychological Association in Support of Appellees, Webster v. Reproductive Health Services, 88-605	9
Brief of Covenant House and Good Counsel, Inc., Amici Curiae (Supporting Appellants), Webster v. Reproductive Health Services, 88-605	27
Brief for the United States as Amicus Curiae Supporting Appellants, Webster v. Reproductive Health Services, 88-605	5
Brief of the United States Catholic Conference as Amicus Curiae in Support of Appellants, Webster v. Reproductive Health Services, 88-605	27
Cates, Legal Abortion: The Public Health Record, 215 Science 1586 (1982)	10
Cates, Smith, Rochat & Grimes, Mortality from Abortion and Childbirth, Are the Statistics Biased?, 248 J. A.M.A. 192 (1982)	9
Center for Population Options, The Facts: Teenage Childbearing, Education, and Employment (1987)	13, 14
D. Danforth, M. Hughey & A. Wagner, The Complete Guide to Pregnancy (1983)	7
Defendant's Memorandum of Points and Authorities in Support of Demurrer to Complaint Without Leave to Amend and in Support of Motion to Dismiss, People v. Stewart, No. M508197 (San Diego Mun. Ct. Feb. 27, 1987)	23
Fielding, Adolescent Pregnancy Revisited, 299 Mass. Department of Public Health 893 (1978)	13
C. Fried, Right and Wrong (1978)	13
Fried, Correspondence, 6 Phil. & Pub. Aff. 288 (1977)	13
Fuchs, Women's Quest for Economic Equality, 3 J. Econ. Persps. 25 (1989)	12, 15, 16
I. Garfinkel & S. McLanahan, Single Mothers and Their Children: A New American Dilemma (1986)	15
Karst, Book Review, 89 Harv. L. Rev. 1028 (1976)	1
W. Keeton, D. Dobbs, R. Keeton & D. Owen, The Law of Torts (5th ed. 1984)	27

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

	Page
Kolder, Gallagher & Parsons, Court-Ordered Obstetrical Interventions, 316 New Eng. J. Med. 1192 (1987)	22
O'Neill, Role Differentiation and the Gender Gap In Wage Rates in 1 Women and Work: An Annual Review 50 (L. Larwood, A. Stromberg & B. Gutek eds. 1985)	15
J. Pritchard, P. MacDonald & N. Gant, Williams Obstetrics (17th ed. 1985)	6, 7, 8, 9, 10
Regan, Rewriting Roe v. Wade, 77 Mich. L. Rev. 1569 (1979)	28
Restatement (Second) of the Law of Torts § 314 (1965)	27
Risking the Future: Adolescent Sexuality, Pregnancy, and Childbearing (Vol. 1) (C. Hayes ed. 1987)	14
S. Romney, M.J. Gray, A.B. Little, J. Merrill, E.J. Quilligan & R. Stander, Gynecology and Obstetrics: The Health Care of Women (2 ed. 1981)	8
R. Schwarz, Septic Abortion (1968)	9-10
L. Silver & S. Wolfe, Unnecessary Cesarean Sections: How to Cure a National Epidemic (1989)	8
R. Spalter-Roth & H. Hartmann, Unnecessary Losses: Costs to Americans of the Lack of Family and Medical Leave (1988)	14
C. Tietze & S. Henshaw, Induced Abortion: A World Review (1986)	9
L. Tribe, American Constitutional Law (2d ed. 1988)	27-28
Wilcox, Weinberg, O'Connor, Baird, Schlatterer, Canfield, Armstrong & Nisula, Incidence of Early Loss of Pregnancy, 319 New Eng. J. Med. 189 (July 28, 1988)	20
Winkler & Van Keppel, Relinquishing Mothers in Adoption: Their Long-Term Adjustment, Monograph No. 3, Institute of Family Studies (1984)	12

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

	Page
Winton, Skin Diseases Aggravated by Pregnancy, 20 J. Am. Acad. Dermatology 1 (1989)	8
Women's Bureau, Office of the Secretary, U.S. Dep't of Labor, Leaflet No. 88-2, 20 Facts on Women Workers (1988)	15
Women's Work, Men's Work: Sex Segregation on the Job (B. Reskin & H. Hartmann eds. 1986)	14, 15, 16

BRIEF OF SEVENTY-SEVEN ORGANIZATIONS COMMITTED TO WOMEN'S EQUALITY AS AMICI CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLEES

INTEREST OF AMICI CURIAE

Amici curiae share a common concern for the judicial protection of women's rights, including the constitutional right to reproductive autonomy. Because we believe that no ruling of this Court has had a more positive effect on the lives of American women than Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), we submit this brief to explain why this Court should maintain its protection of the right to choose abortion as defined in Roe v. Wade through Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians & Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986).

The more specific interests of each of the seventy-seven amici curiae are set forth in Appendix A.[1]

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Although the constitutional protection afforded reproductive autonomy is cast in the doctrinal terms of the liberty-based right of privacy, the scope of such protection must be informed by an awareness of its implications for women's equality as well.[2] If this Court were to uphold abortion restrictions that force pregnant women to bear children, it would render empty the constitutional promise of liberty for women by profoundly structuring

---

[1] Amici curiae file this brief with the consent of all parties and letters of consent have been filed with the Clerk of the Court pursuant to Rule 36.

[2] Significantly, the Court decided Roe v. Wade in the same Term in which it condemned "our Nation['s] . . . long and unfortunate history of sex discrimination," Frontiero v. Richardson, 411 U.S. 677, 684 (1973) (plurality), and began protecting women from state legislation that would limit women's opportunities to the role of homemaker and mother. See Karst, Book Review, 89 Harv. L. Rev. 1028, 1036 (1976) ("Not merely the sex discrimination cases, but the cases on contraception, abortion, and illegitimacy as well, present various faces of a single issue: the roles women are to play in our society.").

their lives. Moreover, it would do so for women alone; men are not required to endure comparable burdens in the service of the state's abstract interest in promoting life. To ensure that the constitutional guarantee of liberty "extends to women as well as to men," this Court must secure women's right to choose abortion lest it "protect inadequately a central part of the sphere of liberty that our law guarantees equally to all." Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 772.

Freely chosen and planned childbearing is often a joyous experience. But because "few decisions are more personal and intimate, more properly private, or more basic to individual dignity and autonomy than a woman's decision . . . whether to end her pregnancy," id., forced motherhood threatens the core of a woman's constitutionally valued autonomy in two distinct ways.

First, state interference with abortion violates the principle of bodily integrity that underlies much of the Fourteenth Amendment's promise of liberty. The process of bearing a child involves the most intimate and strenuous exercises of the female body and psyche; compelling a woman to devote her body, mind and soul to continue an unwanted pregnancy constitutes an invasion of our deepest sense of privacy and the primacy of self-determination. Forced continued pregnancy also entails a more tangible violation of physical liberty by subjecting women to a host of physical burdens and risks that range from prolonged discomfort and pain during pregnancy and delivery, to a substantial risk of specific medical complications, and even to death. State abortion restrictions thus require women—and women only—to endure physical intrusions and risks that are greater than those previously found by this Court to violate the constitutional principle of bodily integrity.

Second, state interference with abortion denies women the capacity to control their own lives in the most basic of ways. The bearing and raising of children often places severe constraints on women's employment opportunities and therefore threatens their ability to support themselves and their families. Moreover, teenagers' inability to postpone motherhood until they have completed a basic education and are psychologically and financially equipped properly to care for children largely predetermines the paths their lives will take before they have even developed their own identities and aspirations. Hence, the imposition of abortion restrictions both belies the constitutional promise of personal autonomy and curtails women's ability to participate equally with men in the public world.

Bald assertions of an unabridged state interest in protecting the potentiality of human life, proclaimed to be sufficiently "compelling" to justify these major invasions of all aspects of women's personal autonomy, must be viewed by this Court with great skepticism. There is no logical stopping point at which such an asserted interest could be cabined. Thus, this Court's cognizance of this interest as "compelling" would not only result in the unprecedented evisceration of a fundamental right; it would also provide states with an open-ended invitation to impose a wide range of other liberty-curtailing policies on pregnant women, dictating their employment, health care, diet, exercise, and even leisure activities.

Moreover, that a state chooses to advance its interest in potential life by restricting women's reproductive autonomy, thereby resurrecting archaic stereotypes about women's proper role in society, counsels further against recognition of that interest as "compelling." States never impose comparable physical burdens or risks on men in requiring them to protect other persons; by singling out only women to sacrifice their bodies and autonomy to protect the mere potentiality of life, abortion restrictions both reflect and reinforce the stereotype that breeding children is women's "natural role." This Court cannot safely cede control over the availability of abortion to a political process that can be expected to undervalue both the importance to women of this aspect of their fundamental liberty and the burdens and risks of forced motherhood. "The greatest dangers to liberty lurk in insidious encroachment by men of zeal, well-meaning but without understanding." Olmstead v. United States, 277 U.S. 438, 479 (1928) (Brandeis, J., dissenting).

ARGUMENT

I. RESTRICTIVE ABORTION LAWS INTERFERE WITH WOMEN'S CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT TO LIBERTY BY RESTRICTING THEIR ABILITY TO MAKE FUNDAMENTAL DECISIONS ABOUT THEIR BODIES AND LIVES.

The liberty-based right to privacy includes the right "to be free from unwarranted governmental intrusion into matters so fundamentally affecting a person as the decision whether to bear or beget a child." Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S. 438, 453 (1972). Indeed, control of one's own reproductive capacities is a prerequisite to the exercise of many of the other fundamental choices that are protected from government interference by the Fourteenth Amendment's liberty guarantee, choices by which people determine their participation in the public world, define their personal lives and structure their families.[3] Thus, the decisions whether and when to bear a child lie, for women, "at the very heart" of the fundamental right to liberty. Carey v. Population Servs. Int'l, 431 U.S. 678, 685 (1977).[4]

---

[3] This Court has held that the Fourteenth Amendment guards not only those rights enumerated by the Constitution but also "those fundamental liberties that are 'implicit in the concept of ordered liberty,' such that 'neither liberty nor justice would exist if they were sacrificed.'" Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186, 191-92 (1986) (quoting Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U.S. 319, 325-26 (1937)). The Court has long protected the liberty to decide when or whether to marry, see Loving v. Virginia, 388 U.S. 1 (1967), how to raise and educate children, see Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510 (1925); Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390 (1923), and when or whether to conceive or bear children, see Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965); Skinner v. Oklahoma, 316 U.S. 535 (1942).

[4] The Court's recognition of the right to choose abortion followed directly from its holding that states may not prohibit the use of contraceptives. A woman's liberty interest in making her own decision concerning whether she will bear a child does not diminish after conception occurs. Indeed, as Justice Stevens points out, "if one decision is more 'fundamental' to the individual's freedom than the other, surely it is the postconception decision that is the more serious." Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 776 (Stevens, J., concurring).

At some time in their lives, most women willingly choose to bear and raise children. For many of them, having a wanted child is a joyful and enriching experience. Yet bearing and raising children also entails significant risks and burdens which not all women can assume at all times and in all circumstances. The constitutional guarantee of liberty protects the right of women to assess those risks and burdens, and to decide if and when they are prepared to assume them.

State restrictions on abortion therefore violate women's fundamental right to liberty in at least two different ways.[5] First, they infringe on a woman's right to bodily integrity by imposing on her tremendous physical intru-

---

[5] The Solicitor General argues that the proper constitutional inquiry is whether a woman has been afforded a "meaningful opportunity" to avoid an unwanted pregnancy, taking into account such options as abstinence and contraception. Brief for the United States as Amicus Curiae Supporting Appellants, at 22 n.16. Not only is this proposed inquiry inconsistent with Supreme Court precedent, but its factual premise that women who become pregnant have in some sense consented to the pregnancy belies reality. Abstinence during the forty years a woman is fertile is not a viable way of life for most women, and sterilization, while effective, requires women permanently to sacrifice rather than exercise their "interest in procreative choice." Id. Moreover, no other method of contraception is 100% effective, and many present significant health risks that make them inappropriate for many women. Finally, the large number of women, especially teenagers, who never receive proper information about contraception cannot be said to have a meaningful opportunity to avoid pregnancy. These women and others who are the inevitable losers in the contraceptive lottery no more "consent" to pregnancy than pedestrians "consent" to being struck by drunk drivers.

Indeed, underlying the Solicitor General's position appears to be the outmoded view that women ought not engage in sexual intercourse for reasons other than procreation and that those who do—unlike their male partners—deserve to be punished with an unplanned pregnancy.

sions and significant physical risks and pain. This Court has held that less invasive and dangerous government-imposed bodily intrusions violate the constitutional guarantee of liberty. Second, because the birth of a child significantly circumscribes a woman's life choices, state restrictions on abortion infringe on the fundamental "freedom of choice in the basic decisions of . . . life" protected by the Fourteenth Amendment. Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, 211 (1973) (Douglas, J., concurring) (emphasis omitted).[6]

A. Restrictive Abortion Laws Subject Women to Substantial Physical Intrusions and Risks In Violation of Their Fundamental Right To Bodily Integrity.

A woman's body must adjust dramatically to provide nourishment and space for a developing fetus.[7] During pregnancy, her uterus changes from pear-shaped to nearly spherical and, by the end of pregnancy, has increased to 500 to 1000 times its original capacity. As her uterus enlarges, it displaces and compresses other bodily organs including her heart, appendix and gastrointestinal tract. A woman's resting pulse rate increases by ten to fifteen beats per minute, and her heart may [6] This Court has held that laws that interfere with women's right to choose abortion or any other fundamental right must be strictly scrutinized and cannot stand absent a compelling state interest. See, e.g., City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416, 461 (1983). See generally San Antonio Indep. School Dist. v. Rodriguez, 411 U.S. 1, 38 (1973) (strict scrutiny required if law has "'deprived,' 'infringed,' or 'interfered' with the free exercise of some such fundamental personal right or liberty").

Justice O'Connor has proposed that strict scrutiny be applied in the abortion context only to laws that "unduly burden" women's abortion decisions. Akron, 462 U.S. at 461-65 (O'Connor, J., dissenting). But unless the undue burden standard is intended to apply to all fundamental rights (which would drastically rewrite this Court's fundamental rights jurisprudence), its application would impermissibly single out for weaker protection the one fundamental right unique to women.

[7] J. Pritchard, P. MacDonald & N. Gant, Williams Obstetrics 181-205, 218, 260-63 (17th ed. 1985) [hereinafter Williams Obstetrics].

increase slightly in size. Her average total weight gain during pregnancy is about 25 pounds.[8]

Although the extent of the physical burdens associated with pregnancy and childbirth varies from woman to woman and the joy of having a wanted child can positively influence the way a woman experiences those physical changes, most women experience pain and significant discomfort. Even the healthiest of women may experience nausea, intermittent vomiting, increased frequency of urination, fatigue, back pain, difficulty sleeping, labored breathing and water retention.[9]

Women also risk many serious, albeit less common, medical complications, including toxemia of pregnancy or preeclampsia (combination of high blood pressure, water retention and protein in urine), eclampsia (preeclampsia plus convulsions potentially leading to coma), gestational diabetes (glucose intolerance during pregnancy), thromboembolic disease (vascular inflammation and blood clots potentially leading to fatal pulmonary embolism), and cardiomyopathy (enlargement of the heart resulting in congestive heart failure).[10]

Labor and delivery, during which a woman's body must meet extraordinary physical demands, pose additional risks. Women usually experience extreme pain during the process of labor and vaginal delivery, which in most cases lasts for six to twelve hours and in some cases longer.[11] Vaginal delivery also entails substantial

[8] Id. at 182, 188, 194, 197.

[9] Id. at 181-210, 218, 260-63.

[10] Id. at 526-30, 600, 731. The recommended treatment for some of the serious complications is complete bed rest until delivery. Id. at 750-51. Some pregnancy-related medical problems such as hemorrhoids and varicose veins (which can cause severe discomfort and swelling, requiring surgery) can persist beyond delivery. Id. at 261-62.

[11] D. Danforth, M. Hughey & A. Wagner, The Complete Guide to Pregnancy 228-31 (1983).

risk of infection and laceration.[12] The dangers are magnified in the approximately one in four deliveries that are accomplished by cesarean section, including risks from general anesthesia, infection and blood clots.[13] Pregnancy-related death also remains a distinct possibility, even for healthy women. Death can result from hemorrhage, hypertension, infection or other complications from cesarean deliveries.[14]

The dangers normally faced are compounded for women in "high risk" groups. Medical conditions such as systemic lupus erythematosus, multiple sclerosis, asthma, diabetes and acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) can be exacerbated by the physical changes attending pregnancy.[15] These risks are even greater for older or very young women.[16] The stress of carrying an unwanted pregnancy can aggravate other medical ailments, including high blood pressure and asthma, thereby increasing the woman's risks of serious physical consequences beyond that normally faced.[17]

---

[12] S. Romney, M.J. Gray, A.B. Little, J. Merrill, E.J. Quilligan & R. Stander, Gynecology and Obstetrics: The Health Care of Women 626-27, 632, 637 (2d ed. 1981) [hereinafter Gynecology and Obstetrics].

[13] L. Silver & S. Wolfe, Unnecessary Cesarean Sections: How to Cure a National Epidemic 9, 13 (1989).

[14] See Williams Obstetrics, supra note 7, at 3. In 1986, 270 women died during childbirth in the United States. Delivery by cesarean section increases approximately four-fold the risk of death in childbirth. L. Silver & S. Wolfe, supra note 13, at 12.

[15] See Williams Obstetrics, supra note 7, at 597, 600, 609, 619-20; Winton, Skin Diseases Aggravated by Pregnancy, 20 J. Am. Acad. Dermatology 1, 7 (1989). Medications that normally control preexisting conditions often pose risks to fetal development, requiring women either to accept those risks or to sacrifice their own health. See Williams Obstetrics, supra, at 260.

[16] See, e.g., Williams Obstetrics, supra note 7, at 3, 539; Alan Guttmacher Inst., Teenage Pregnancy: The Problem That Hasn't Gone Away 29 (1981).

[17] See Gynecology and Obstetrics, supra note 12, at 726. Knowledge of fetal anomaly or of a disease, such as AIDS, that may be passed on to the fetus, also greatly increases stress during pregnancy.

This Court's protection of the right to choose abortion is based in part on its recognition of the serious physical risks attending pregnancy: "[t]he detriment that the State would impose upon the pregnant woman by denying this choice [whether to have an abortion] altogether is apparent. Specific and direct harm medically diagnosable even in early pregnancy may be involved." Roe, 410 U.S. at 153. Indeed, the trimester approach developed in Roe reflected the fact that a first trimester abortion was safer than continued pregnancy. See id. at 163.[18]

Legal abortion remains far safer than childbirth. In terms of mortality, "abortion through the 15th week of pregnancy is at least tenfold safer than childbearing." Cates, Smith, Rochat & Grimes, Mortality From Abortion and Childbirth, Are the Statistics Biased?, 248 J. A.M.A. 192, 196 (1982). "Moreover, the risk of death from legal induced abortion is no higher at any point in gestation than is the risk of childbearing." C. Tietze & S. Henshaw, Induced Abortion: A World Review 110 (1986). Similarly, the non-fatal health risks associated with legal abortion are very limited and substantially lower than those risks, described above, created by continued pregnancy and delivery.[19]

---

[18] Roe also relied on the fact that most women faced with an unwanted pregnancy experience a significant improvement in mental health and outlook after an abortion. Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 153; see Brief of Amicus Curiae American Psychological Association in Support of Appellees (noting that studies of mental health of pregnant women before and after abortion reveal significant reductions in symptoms of stress after abortion and discussing methodological problems in research relied on by amici curiae supporting Appellants).

[19] Williams Obstetrics, supra note 7, at 483-88. By contrast, prior to Roe, illegal abortions performed by back-alley abortionists led to the deaths of at least hundreds and perhaps thousands of women each year, and countless other women suffered serious, often permanent, injuries, including sterility. See R. Schwarz, Septic Abor-

Because after conception has occurred, continued pregnancy entails both a protracted bodily invasion and significantly greater burdens and risks than abortion, a state's decision to prevent women from choosing abortion is an unprecedented affront to the constitutional principle of bodily integrity. Indeed, because this principle is so deeply and historically embedded in our common law [20] as well as our constitutional traditions, it is not surprising that government has rarely attempted to impose analogous intrusions in other contexts.[21] But the principles underlying this Court's infrequent treatment of state-mandated intrusions in such contexts demonstrate that forced childbearing visits unacceptable violations upon women's bodily integrity.

For example, in Winston v. Lee, 470 U.S. 753 (1985), the Court held that, in part because of "the extent of [its] intrusion upon the individual's dignitary interest in personal privacy and bodily integrity," id. at 761, a state could not, consistent with the Fourth Amendment, compel a criminal defendant to submit to an invasive surgical operation in order to retrieve a bullet necessary for the state's prosecution. By comparison, a state-mandated continued pregnancy more profoundly violates a woman's "dignitary interest in personal privacy." She is constantly aware for nine months that her body is not wholly her own; the state has conscripted her body for its own ends.[22] tion 7 (1968); Cates, Legal Abortion: The Public Health Record, 215 Science 1586 (1982); see also Williams Obstetrics, supra at 484 ("Serious complications of abortion have been most often . . . associated with criminal abortion.").

---

[20] See discussion infra at pp. 27-29.

[21] Indeed, the few contexts in which states have attempted such intrusions on bodily integrity have generally involved criminal defendants, over whom states traditionally exercise a great deal of authority, and courts have declared even these intrusions to be unconstitutional. Pregnant women's bodily integrity and liberty are entitled to at least as much constitutional protection.

[22] By contrast, a woman desiring to carry her pregnancy to term perceives the growing fetus as a welcome presence within her body

Moreover, the Court in Winston also found that the criminal defendant's right to bodily integrity would be violated by the state's imposition of the risks inherent in a surgical procedure consisting of a small incision in his skin and retrieval of the bullet. By comparison, one in four pregnant women delivers by cesarean section, which requires a much larger incision in the woman's abdomen, and is accompanied by all the risks, pain and permanent disfigurement associated with invasive surgery. In Rochin v. California, 342 U.S. 165 (1952), this Court overturned a conviction based on evidence obtained from a "shocking" bodily invasion consisting of the forced stomach pumping of a criminal suspect. The pain and discomfort associated with having one's stomach pumped is comparable to the physical effects of pregnancy, including morning sickness, which is experienced by many pregnant women on a recurring basis, and the compression of bodily organs that results from the enlargement of the uterus. Given that these isolated aspects of pregnancy involve risks and burdens comparable to those found unacceptable when imposed upon criminal defendants, the entire pregnancy and childbirth experience certainly constitutes an intolerable bodily intrusion when imposed by the state on unwilling pregnant women.

In sum, the physical burdens imposed by the compelled continuation of pregnancy amount to a significant invasion of women's bodily integrity.[23] As Chief Justice rather than an invasion of her privacy. Cf. Winston, 470 U.S. at 765 ("When conducted with the consent of the patient, surgery requiring general anesthesia is not necessarily demeaning or intrusive. In such a case, the surgeon is carrying out the patient's own will concerning the patient's body and the patient's right to privacy is therefore preserved. . . . [But where the state] proposes to take control of respondent's body * * * [t]his kind of surgery involves a virtually total divestment of respondent's ordinary control over surgical probing beneath his skin.").

---

[23] While a woman might choose to bear children gladly and voluntarily, statutes that curtail her abortion choice are disturbingly suggestive of involuntary servitude, prohibited by the Thirteenth Amendment, in that forced pregnancy requires a woman to provide

Rehnquist has recognized, women "suffer disproportionately the profound physical, emotional, and psychological consequences" of pregnancy. Michael M. v. Sonoma County Superior Court, 450 U.S. 464, 471 (1981). For women to maintain bodily integrity, as men do, they must not be subject to state coercion forcing them to carry their every pregnancy to term.

B. Restrictive Abortion Laws Deprive Women Of The Freedom To Control The Course Of Their Lives And Restrict Their Ability To Participate In Society Equally With Men.

Few events can more dramatically constrain a woman's opportunities in life than an unplanned child. Because under present social conditions most women assume primary responsibility for raising their children,[24] having an unwanted child would limit their ability fully to participate in public life. Moreover, for many women who would find it difficult to shoulder the numerous burdens accompanying childrearing, forced motherhood would relegate them (certainly for long periods and perhaps permanently) to a daily struggle to make ends meet; any hopes of fulfilling their own plans and dreams would be shattered. Denying women's ability to control when and whether to bear children, thereby denying women the capacity to define their paths through life in the most continuous physical service to the fetus in order to further the state's asserted interest. Indeed, the actual process of delivery demands work of the most intense and physical kind: labor of 12 or more grueling hours of contractions is not uncommon. Cf. United States v. Kozminski, 108 S. Ct. 2751 (1988) (criminal involuntary servitude is present where compulsion of services is achieved by use of physical or legal coercion).

---

[24] Fuchs, Women's Quest for Economic Equality, 3 J. Econ. Persps. 25, 25 (1989). Although women could relinquish their infants for adoption, the vast majority do not, generally because doing so is exceedingly traumatic. See, e.g., Winkler & Van Keppel, Relinquishing Mothers in Adoption: Their Long-Term Adjustment, Monograph No. 3, Institute of Family Studies (1984).

basic of ways, would contravene the principle of personal autonomy underlying the Fourteenth Amendment's liberty guarantee.[25]

Forced motherhood would particularly limit life's options for teenagers who become pregnant, even before they have the opportunity to define their own identities and aspirations or prepare for the weighty responsibilities of motherhood. Childbearing presently curtails most teenagers' ability to obtain even the most basic education: eight out of ten who currently become mothers at age seventeen or younger do not complete high school, and four of ten who have a child by the age of fifteen do not finish even eighth grade.[26] Early motherhood also constrains teenagers' ability to earn a decent income. In part because of their limited educational experience, teenage mothers receive lower hourly wages and earn less annually for the rest of their lives than women who post-

---

[25] Among the fundamental rights protected by the Fourteenth Amendment is the "interest in independence in making certain kinds of important decisions." United States Dep't of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 57 U.S.L.W. 4373, 4377 (U.S. Mar. 22, 1989) (quoting Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S. 589, 599-600 (1977)); see also Carey v. Population Servs. Int'l, 431 U.S. 678, 684-85 (1977). As Charles Fried has recognized:

> "What a person is, what he wants, the determination of his life plan, of his concept of the good, are the most intimate expressions of self-determination, and by asserting a person's responsibility for the results of this self-determination we give substance to the concept of liberty." C. Fried, Right and Wrong 146-47 (1978). See also Fried, Correspondence, 6 Phil. & Pub. Aff. 288-89 (1977) (the concept of privacy embodies the "moral fact that a person belongs to himself and not others or to society as a whole").

Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 777 n.5 (Stevens, J., concurring).

[26] Fielding, Adolescent Pregnancy Revisited, 299 Mass. Dep't Pub. Health 893, 894 (1978). Moreover, less than two percent of teenage mothers complete college, compared to more than one-fifth of those women who do not bear children until age 24. Center for Population Options, The Facts: Teenage Childbearing, Education, and Employment 1 (1987).

pone childbearing.[27] These teenage mothers earn about half as much income as those who first give birth in their twenties, and sixty-seven percent of families headed by teenage mothers live below the poverty level.[28]

Even for many women who become pregnant after their teens, opportunities in the public world are severely constrained. Many women lose their employment during pregnancy because employers unlawfully discriminate against them or do not adapt their jobs either to perceived fetal hazards[29] or to the perceived physical constraints of pregnancy;[30] many other women lose their jobs or suffer significant financial hardships because employers do not provide or do not pay for job-protected leave for childbearing or infant care.[31] Over the long term, because today's workplace generally does not accommodate the responsibilities of those caring for young children, and because day care often is inadequate, unavailable or unaffordable, many mothers (especially those who are young, unmarried, minority, or lower income) must leave their jobs in order to care for their children.[32]

---

[27] This comparison holds true even when factors such as socioeconomic status are taken into account. Risking the Future: Adolescent Sexuality, Pregnancy, and Childbearing (Vol. I) 130 (C. Hayes ed. 1987).

[28] Center for Population Options, supra note 26, at 1 (figures for families with children aged five or younger).

[29] Courts have upheld exclusionary fetal hazard policies in the workplace, even though they appear to violate Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e (1982). See, e.g., Wright v. Olin Corp., 697 F.2d 1172 (4th Cir. 1982).

[30] See, e.g., Harriss v. Pan American World Airways, Inc., 649 F.2d 670 (9th Cir. 1980).

[31] See House Comm. on Educ. & Labor, Family and Medical Leave Act of 1988, H.R. Rep. No. 511, 100th Cong., 2d Sess. 18-25 (1988); R. Spalter-Roth & H. Hartmann, Unnecessary Losses: Costs to Americans of the Lack of Family and Medical Leave 5 (1988).

[32] See Women's Work, Men's Work: Sex Segregation on the Job 73-74 (B. Reskin & H. Hartmann eds. 1986) [hereinafter Women's Work]. Working outside the home for pay is not inherently incompatible with childrearing. However, societal allocation of resources, in concert with established employment practices, operate to disadvantage individuals raising children.

Others must either accept part-time work with significantly less pay and few if any job benefits[33] or move to less skilled positions so that they can work a regular schedule.[34] Even those remaining in their original jobs often cannot advance because their child care responsibilities conflict with job requirements as presently defined.[35]

As a result, childbearing imposes severe financial constraints on women,[36] many of whom depend on their income to support themselves. Indeed, 60% of women in the labor force are either single (25%), divorced (12%), widowed (4%), separated (4%), or have husbands whose annual earnings are less than $15,000 (15%).[37] Many of these women even now do not make ends meet; already, women maintain 51% of families below the poverty level, including 75% of poor black families, 49% of poor Hispanic families, and 42% of poor white families.[38]

---

[33] See Blau & Ferber, Women in the Labor Market: The Last Twenty Years, in 1 Women and Work: An Annual Review 19, 28 (L. Larwood, A. Stromberg & B. Gutek eds. 1985); O'Neill, Role Differentiation and the Gender Gap in Wage Rates, in 1 Women and Work: An Annual Review, supra, at 50, 57.

[34] Women's Work, supra note 32, at 74.

[35] Id.

[36] Compared to childless women, mothers earn considerably less per hour and their wages drop sharply with each additional child. Fuchs, supra note 24, at 35. For example, of white women between the ages of 30 and 39 who worked more than 1,000 paid hours in 1986, those with 3 children earned 70 cents to every dollar earned by women with no children. Id. No similar relations between children and hourly earnings exists for men who become fathers. Id.

[37] Women's Bureau, Office of the Secretary, U.S. Dep't of Labor, Leaflet No. 88-2, 20 Facts on Women Workers 2 (1988) (based on March 1987 statistics).

[38] Id. at 4; see also I. Garfinkel & S. McLanahan, Single Mothers and Their Children: A New American Dilemma 12-15 (1986).

If this Court were to overrule Roe, thereby depriving women of the right to control the frequency and timing of their pregnancies, it would deny women the ability to plan and shape their futures and assume their place in the public world.[39] Some of those who suffer will be teenagers for whom many of life's options will be foreclosed even before they have finished growing up. Some will be single mothers, whether widowed, divorced, or never married, who are struggling to feed and care for the children they already have. Some will be older women, married or single, who have already raised a family. If women were denied the ability to control their reproductive capacities, the Fourteenth Amendment's promise of liberty would be rendered hollow for them.[40]

---

[39] Because Roe v. Wade has afforded women greater control over the timing of their childbearing, women have been able to plan for and minimize somewhat the accompanying burdens. In part as a result, women as a class have experienced significant economic gains over the past 16 years, gains that would be jeopardized were the Court to deprive women of the right to choose abortion. In fact, since Roe, women's labor force representation has increased significantly, and the occupations in which they work have become significantly less sex segregated. Women's Work, supra note 32 at 23-24. Moreover, the wage gap between women and men has diminished. Economist Victor Fuchs demonstrates that the group most responsible for the decrease in the wage gap between women and men that occurred between 1980-1986 was composed of women born between 1946 and 1950 who were in their late thirties in 1986. A key difference between these women and those born half a decade before is that they had substantially fewer children, Fuchs, supra note 24, at 36-37, and more control over the timing of the children they did bear.

[40] Overruling Roe would severely constrain the lives, not only of women who become pregnant, but of all women. If women no longer had the right to choose abortion, all women capable of bearing children would have to attempt to plan their lives knowing that, as long as contraceptive devices fail, their lives might be interrupted at any time by an unwanted pregnancy.

II. THE STATE'S BALD ASSERTION OF A "COMPELLING" INTEREST IN PROTECTING POTENTIAL LIFE DOES NOT JUSTIFY A RETREAT FROM ROE v. WADE.

A. A Critique Of Viability Does Not Absolve This Court Of Its Responsibility To Accommodate Women's Fundamental Right To Reproductive Autonomy.

According to this Court, the state has an "important and legitimate interest in protecting the potentiality of human life."[41] For any given pregnancy, however, promoting this interest by prohibiting abortion necessarily deprives a pregnant woman of her fundamental right to decide whether and when to bear a child. The Court in Roe concluded that the state's interest becomes sufficiently compelling to override a woman's right only after the point of fetal viability, and even then only in cases in which the woman's health is not endangered by continued pregnancy.

Both Missouri and the Solicitor General now ask this Court to relabel the state's interest in protecting potential life as compelling prior to viability so as to override a woman's right at all times. This extraordinary request is based solely on the assertion that viability provides an unworkable dividing line. Current medical evidence reveals that this critique is unfounded.[42] But even were the critique acceptable, the conclusion that the state's interest is always compelling would not logically follow; the unworkability of viability as a dividing line would equally support the opposite conclusion: that the state's interest in protecting potential life is never sufficiently compelling to outweigh a woman's fundamental right to choose abortion. Hence, the critique of viability merely begs the central question of how to evaluate the state's asserted interest in the context of abortion restrictions.

---

[41] Roe, 410 U.S. at 162.

[42] See, e.g., Amici Curiae Brief of Distinguished Scientists and Physicians, Including Nobel Laureates, in Support of Appellees.

Where giving effect to a state interest—even one asserted to be "compelling" in the abstract—entails interference with the exercise of a fundamental right, such as the right to choose abortion, this Court struggles to protect the right and closely scrutinizes the context and manner in which the interest is asserted. The Court has carefully evaluated, for example, whether the state's proposed infringement on the right is narrowly tailored to promoting the asserted interest,[43] whether the manner in which the state pursues the interest may reflect or perpetuate stereotypes,[44] and whether the interest outweighs in importance the protection of a particular right in a particular context.[45] These inquiries reflect a consistent judgment that even extremely weighty interests do not easily justify interference with fundamental rights;[46] therefore, this Court must examine closely Missouri's asser-

---

[43] See, e.g., Eu v. San Francisco County Democratic Cent. Comm., 57 U.S.L.W. 4251, 4253 (U.S. Feb. 21, 1989); see also Illinois State Bd. of Elections v. Socialist Workers Party, 440 U.S. 173, 185 (1979) (states must "adopt the least drastic means to achieve their ends").

[44] See, e.g., Mississippi Univ. for Women v. Hogan, 458 U.S. 718, 726 (1982).

[45] See, e.g., Wygant v. Jackson Bd. of Educ., 476 U.S. 267, 286 (1986) (O'Connor, J., concurring) ("[A] state interest in the promotion of racial diversity has been found sufficiently 'compelling,' at least in the context of higher education, to support the use of racial considerations in furthering that interest.") (emphasis added).

[46] Thus, for example, the Court has recognized that, although "as a general proposition" the government "has a vital national interest" in protecting foreign diplomats in accordance with international law, that interest is not "automatically . . . compelling" when its assertion infringes upon First Amendment rights. Boos v. Barry, 108 S. Ct. 1157, 1165 (1988); see also Coy v. Iowa, 108 S. Ct. 2798, 2802 (1988) (defendant's Sixth Amendment rights "outweighed" state's interest in "protecting victims of sexual abuse"); Korematsu v. United States, 323 U.S. 214, 244 (1944) (Jackson, J., dissenting) (Court cannot "distort Constitution to approve all that the [state] may deem expedient" and in the national interest when fundamental rights are at stake).

tion of an interest in potential life sufficiently compelling to prohibit abortion from the moment of conception.

While Missouri relies on its flawed critique of the viability distinction, several of Missouri's amici curiae suggest that support for the existence of a broad compelling interest in potential life lies in various states' recognition of the fetus as a legal person under property, tort and criminal law. This argument is unpersuasive. Without question, states possess sufficiently important interests to justify such recognition of the fetus in certain limited contexts. For example, granting a cause of action for prenatal injuries resulting from the tortious conduct of others compensates the subsequently born child and his or her parents for the injuries, and also deters such tortious acts.[47] These and similar measures properly promote the interests and well-being of the child, while at the same time promoting the interests of the pregnant woman. But acceptance of such measures provides no guidance for the treatment of the very different clash of asserted state interest and fundamental right involved in the abortion context.

B. Recognition Of A Compelling State Interest In Protecting Potential Life Throughout Pregnancy Would Both Completely Eviscerate Women's Right To Choose Abortion And Portend Even Broader Invasions Of Women's Fundamental Rights.

This Court has never accepted as compelling an asserted interest so broad that it would eliminate virtually all constitutional protection afforded a fundamental right. Were this Court to accept Missouri's blanket contention that its interest in potential life outweighs women's fundamental right to procreative autonomy at all stages of pregnancy, states would be free to criminalize abortion in virtually all [47] Similarly, penalizing third parties for causing a woman's pregnancy to terminate without her consent, either through civil wrongful death actions or criminal "feticide" laws, protects pregnant women from serious physical harm, severe bodily intrusion and the termination of wanted pregnancies.

---

circumstances,[48] to investigate all abortions to determine whether they were spontaneous or intentionally induced,[49] and then to prosecute for murder women who intentionally ended their pregnancies.[50] In analogous circumstances where a state proffered an interest which, if deemed compelling, would have had "no logical stopping point" and would have completely overridden a particular constitutional right, this Court has refused to recognize the interest as compelling. See, e.g., City of Richmond v. J. A. Croson Co., 109 S. Ct. 706, 723 (1989) (interest in redressing generalized societal discrimination deemed not to be sufficiently compelling to justify race-conscious remedies because it "has no logical stopping point") (citation omitted); id. at 723 (interest in providing role models deemed not to be sufficiently compelling to justify race-conscious remedies because it "could be used to 'justify' race-based decisionmaking essentially limitless in scope and duration").[51]

---

[48] Accepting Missouri's recharacterization would allow states to criminalize abortions even when a woman's pregnancy is the result of rape or incest, and when childbearing poses a serious risk to the woman's health or life. Cf. Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 118 (Texas criminal statute proscribed all abortions except those necessary to protect life of pregnant woman).

[49] Approximately 31% of all pregnancies terminate by spontaneous abortion prior to the third trimester. Wilcox, Weinberg, O'Connor, Baird, Schlatterer, Canfield, Armstrong & Nisula, Incidence of Early Loss of Pregnancy, 319 New Eng. J. Med. 189 (1988).

[50] Moreover, complete strangers could have free reign to intervene in the lives of women and their families. This troubling scenario was actually played out in the recent case of In re Klein, No. 1736-89 (N.Y. App. Div. Feb. 8, 1989). There, a man requested guardianship of his comatose, pregnant wife for the purpose of authorizing an abortion he believed could improve her chances of recovery. Two anti-abortion activists who had never even met the Klein family sought to intervene and prevent the abortion. Relying in part on Roe, a New York appellate court ruled that "these absolute strangers to the Klein family, whatever their motivation, have no place in the midst of this family tragedy." Slip op. at 4.

[51] See also Cohen v. California, 413 U.S. 15, 25 (1971) (interest in preserving public order deemed not to be sufficiently weighty to justify restrictions on free expression because it is "inherently boundless").

Indeed, recognition of a broad "compelling" interest in protecting potential life necessarily would legitimize many other state intrusions on procreative autonomy that would be "essentially limitless in scope and duration."[52] Missouri's reasoning would allow states to criminalize the use of any contraceptive devices, such as intrauterine devices and some oral contraceptives, that prevent implantation of a fertilized ovum after conception. More fundamentally, since the "potentiality" of life exists equally before sperm-ovum fusion as after, states could invoke the same "compelling" interest proffered here to justify laws prohibiting the use or sale of all contraceptives. At bottom, embracing the position advocated by Missouri would not only require the reversal of Roe, but would call into question Griswold and Eisenstadt as well.[53]

Moreover, embracing Missouri's position would provide states with an open-ended invitation to force pregnant women to act in whatever ways the state determined were optimal for the fetus, thereby reducing pregnant women to no more than fetal containers. A frightening perview of the potential intrusions is found in Mo. Rev. Stat. § 1.205 itself (part of which is at issue here), which states that "[t]he life of each human being begins at conception" and "[u]nborn children have protectable interests in life, health and well-being." A Missouri court relied on section 1.205 in ordering a pregnant woman to submit to a cesarean section against her wishes, finding that "the life, health and well-being" of her fetus "may be jeopardized" by her decision. Deaconess Hosp. v. McRoberts, No. 874-00172 (St. Louis Cir. Ct. May 21, 1987).

---

[52] Croson, 109 S. Ct. at 723.

[53] To be sure, the probability that any given act of sexual intercourse will lead to the birth of a child is less than 100%. But the probability that any given embryo will lead to a live birth is itself only approximately 69%, given the rate of spontaneous abortion. See supra note 49. In any case, some potential for life still exists even prior to conception, and if a state attempted to protect that life by proscribing the use of contraceptives, this Court would be hard-pressed to justify a constitutional ruling that the state's interest in postconception potential life is compelling but its interest in preconception potential life is not.

Within a month of this Missouri case, a District of Columbia court granted a hospital's similar request for an order compelling a woman who was critically ill with cancer to undergo a cesarean section, despite the unanimous objections of the woman, her family and her physicians and despite the uncontroverted fact that it might hasten the woman's death. See In re A.C., 533 A.2d 611 (D.C. 1987), vacated & reh'g en banc granted, 539 A.2d 203 (D.C. 1988). The fetus was not viable and did not survive; the woman herself died two days later. The District of Columbia Court of Appeals, which had refused to stay the order, issued an opinion subsequent to the woman's death in which it stated "we well know that we may have shortened [her] life span" but concluded that the value of her remaining life was outweighed by the "slim" chance that the fetus might survive. 533 A.2d at 613-14, 617.[54]

Although cases citing protection of fetal interests to justify other types of infringements upon pregnant women's autonomy have been relatively rare—largely because of Roe—a handful of such cases have arisen in the last decade. Courts have jailed pregnant women based on a belief that the women might act contrary to the interests of the fetuses they carried.[55] A woman was prosecuted [54] Courts in at least 11 states have ordered women to submit to cesarean sections. See Kolder, Gallagher & Parsons, Court-Ordered Obstetrical Interventions, 316 New Eng. J. Med. 1192 (1987) (also citing six cases in which courts refused to order such surgery).

[55] A District of Columbia court recently ordered the incarceration of a woman solely to prevent her from using cocaine during the remainder of her pregnancy. See United States v. Vaughn, 117 Daily Wash. L. Rep. 441 (D.C. Super. Ct. Mar. 7, 1989). The woman had pled guilty to the misdemeanor of second degree theft (for check forgery); the prosecutor recommended that the woman not be jailed and the judge stated that he would have accepted the recommendation but for the fact that the woman was pregnant and tested positive for cocaine use. In fact, the judge indicated that he might even jail a pregnant woman to prevent her from ingesting alcohol or smoking cigarettes. Id. at 442; see also In re Stevens S., 126 Cal. App. 3d 23, 178 Cal. Rptr. 525 (1981) (reversing juvenile court's order that woman with alleged mental illness be institutionalized during last two months of pregnancy; appellate decision came only after woman had given birth and had been released).

and faced imprisonment for allegedly waiting "many hours" before seeking medical help after she noticed some vaginal bleeding and experienced some uterine contractions.[56] In another case, a child was allowed to sue his mother to recover for prenatal injuries allegedly caused by the woman's failure to act as a "reasonable" pregnant woman.[57]

If this Court accepts a compelling state interest in the fetus from conception, laws like section 1.205 could be used to force women to submit not only to cesarean sections, but also to other types of surgery and medical treatment deemed to be in the interest of the fetuses they carry, including in utero fetal surgery. Pregnant women could be denied medical care needed to protect their own health, such as radiation or chemotherapy to treat cancer or the use of prescription or nonprescription drugs. A wide range of common conditions and conduct [56] The woman's pregnancy was complicated by a dangerous condition, placenta previa, which caused her to hemorrhage and lose a great deal of blood. Her son was born with severe brain damage and died within six weeks. The woman was prosecuted for causing her son's death through her own loss of blood. See People v. Stewart, No. M508197 (San Diego Mun. Ct. Feb. 27, 1987) (transcript of decision); Defendant's Memorandum of Points and Authorities in Support of Demurrer to Complaint Without Leave to Amend and in Support of Motion to Dismiss, People v. Stewart.

[57] Grodin v. Grodin, 102 Mich. App. 396, 301 N.W.2d 869 (1981). But see Stallman v. Youngquist, 125 Ill. 2d 267, 531 N.E.2d 355, 359 (1988) (court refused to recognize cause of action for prenatal injuries in suit filed by girl against her mother, noting that otherwise "[m]other and child would be legal adversaries from the moment of conception until birth").

arguably posing some threat to fetal health could provoke state intervention, criminal prosecution or civil liability, including: being overweight, being underweight, exercising, not exercising, failing to eat "well," failing to "stay off of her feet," smoking, drinking alcohol, ingesting caffeine, and suffering physical harm.

In short, acceptance of Missouri's assertion of a broad compelling interest in protecting potential life would do far more than eviscerate the fundamental right to abortion, already an unprecedented step at odds with the Court's consistent effort to balance state interests with individual rights. It would also provide the constitutional foundation for a frontal assault on other fundamental liberties.

C. The Imposition Of Unparalleled Burdens Only On Women To Service The State's Asserted Interest In Potential Life Impermissibly Reflects And Reinforces Outmoded Stereotypes Of Women As Childbearers.

Missouri's decision to advance its interest through previability abortion restrictions must also be rejected because it entails the resurrection of "archaic and overbroad generalizations" about women's proper role in society. Califano v. Webster, 430 U.S. 313, 317 (1977) (per curiam). States have long sought to restrict women's autonomy and opportunities for participation in public life, citing women's ability to bear children as the principal justification for this unequal and disadvantageous treatment. For example, states excluded women from certain professions,[58] limited the hours women could work outside the home,[59] and discouraged women's involvement in political and civic affairs.[60] [58] See, e.g., Bradwell v. Illinois, 83 U.S. (16 Wall.) 130 (1872) (women excluded from practice of law).

---

[59] See, e.g., Muller v. Oregon, 208 U.S. 412 (1908).

[60] See, e.g., Hoyt v. Florida, 368 U.S. 57 (1961) (women exempted from jury duty), overruled, Taylor v. Louisiana, 419 U.S. 522 (1975); Breedlove v. Suttles, 302 U.S. 277 (1937) (women exempted from paying poll tax if they "chose" not to vote).

For many years this Court accepted such detrimental treatment as the "natural" consequence of women's reproductive capacities and as furthering important state interests, such as "preserv[ing] the strength and vigor of the race." Muller v. Oregon, 208 U.S. 412, 421 (1908). This Court has now soundly rejected the outmoded view that "the female [is] destined solely for the home and the rearing of the family," Stanton v. Stanton, 421 U.S. 7, 14 (1975), and it has invalidated legislation that perpetuates women's image as the "'weaker sex' or . . . child rearers." Califano, 430 U.S. at 317. Despite the likely absence of malicious intentions and the widespread acceptance (even among women) of unequal treatment, the Court has recognized that the Constitution prohibits the state from disadvantaging any individual woman on the basis of stereotypes.[61]

The Court has therefore refused to accept asserted state interests that reflect "traditional . . . assumptions about the proper roles of men and women." Mississippi Univ. for Women v. Hogan, 458 U.S. 718, 726 (1982). In Hogan itself, the Court precluded Mississippi from operating a women-only nursing school, rejecting the state's asserted interest in increasing educational opportunities for women because the state's action gave "credibility to the old view that women, not men, should become nurses . . . ." Id. at 730.

Abortion restrictions reflect and reinforce the same stereotypes of women that this Court has found illegitimate. By requiring women to sacrifice their bodies and their liberty in ways that the state never demands of men, state laws manifest the stereotype that it is women's [61] See, e.g., Frontiero v. Richardson, 411 U.S. 677, 684 (1973) (plurality) ("[O]ur Nation has had a long and unfortunate history of sex discrimination . . . rationalized by an attitude of 'romantic paternalism' which, in practical effect, put women, not on a pedestal, but in a cage.").

---

"natural role" to bear children. The fact that the state's interest in depriving women of control over their own reproductive capacities can be cloaked in noble terms does not diminish the actual harm and invasion of liberty suffered by individual women denied abortion. And the fact that many people (including women) presently are not troubled by this stereotype is no more constitutionally relevant today than was the popularity of "romantic paternalism" many years ago. Just as previous state limitations on women's ability to participate in public life presumed that the "paramount destiny and mission of women are to fulfil[l] the noble and benign offices of wife and mother," Bradwell, 83 U.S. at 141, laws that deprive women of their ability to choose whether to end a pregnancy force women to fulfill that same destiny.

Moreover, reinforcing this stereotype by upholding restrictive abortion laws would lead states once again to restrict women's autonomy in the name of enforcing their "motherly duties" in the non-abortion contexts discussed above.[62] The Court held in 1908 that states could limit the hours women worked outside the home because work was thought harmful to reproductive capacity: "[working long hours has] injurious effects upon the body, and as healthy mothers are essential to vigorous offspring, the physical well-being of woman becomes an object of public interest and care in order to preserve the strength and vigor of the race." Muller, 208 U.S. at 421. We risk repeating and even worsening this "long and unfortunate history of sex discrimination," Frontiero v. Richardson, 411 U.S. 677, 684 (1973) (plurality), by allowing states, in the name of fetal protection, to control women's decisions and actions regarding employment, medical treatment, exercise, diet and overall lifestyle.[63]

---

[62] See discussion supra at pp. 21-24.

[63] Many of the amici curiae supporting Appellants reveal that their willingness to impose unprecedented burdens on women through forced childbearing stems from their own stereotyped views of women. Some amici curiae portray women as incapable of moral decisionmaking. See, e.g., Brief of Covenant House and Good Counsel, Inc., Amici Curiae 9-10, 17 (discussing wide variety of behavior of pregnant women that could harm fetus, from smoking to obtaining inadequate prenatal care, and concluding that state must protect potential life from conception "[i]f any children are to have reasonable assurances of healthy birth and productive life" (emphasis in original)). Others describe women as the victims of their own abortion decisions. See, e.g., Brief Amici Curiae of Focus on the Family, and Family Research Council of America, in Support of Appellants 13-24 (purporting to describe adverse medical and psychological risks of abortion, as well as "serious sexual problems experienced by women who had abortions"). Virtually all trivialize or deny entirely the tremendous harms to women's liberty, equality and health inflicted by state restrictions on abortion. See, e.g., Brief of the United States Catholic Conference as Amicus Curiae in Support of Appellants 15-19 (downplaying medical risks of pregnancy and denying existence of pre-Roe maternal mortality and morbidity due to illegal abortion).

Although Missouri asserts an interest in compelling unwilling women to sacrifice their bodies, health and well-being for nine months to protect potential life, Missouri and other states never impose comparable duties on men to protect actual life. The value that our law attaches to the individual right to liberty is so great that people are generally not required to reach out to aid another person, even when it is possible to save another from grave injury or certain death at little or no risk to one's self.[64] Particularly instructive is McFall v.

---

[64] W. Keeton, D. Dobbs, R. Keeton & D. Owen, The Law of Torts § 56, at 375-76 (5th ed. 1984); Restatement (Second) of the Law of Torts § 314 (1965); see also Uniform Anatomical Gift Act § 2(b), (c) (1987) (organ donations unlawful if made against wishes of decedent).

A small number of states require people to stop at the scene of or report an accident. These requirements do not, however, present passersby with any risk of physical harm. For example, the Minnesota Good Samaritan statute specifies that assistance is never required if providing it poses a "danger or peril to self or others." Minn. Stat. § 604.05 (1) (1988). Nor does the law ever require a father to put himself at appreciable physical risk to help his child. Professor Tribe notes that "the law nowhere forces men to devote their bodies and restructure their lives even in those tragic situations (such as organ transplants) where nothing less will permit their children to survive." L. Tribe, American Consti-

Shimp, in which the court refused to order a man to donate bone marrow, a procedure far less risky and painful than many aspects of pregnancy and childbirth, even though the donation was necessary to save the life of his cousin. According to the court:

> The common law has consistently held to a rule which provides that one human being is under no legal compulsion to give aid or to take action to save that human being or to rescue . . . . For our law to compel the Defendant to submit to an intrusion of his body would change every concept and principle upon which our society is founded. To do so would defeat the sanctity of the individual, . . . and one could not imagine where the line would be drawn.

10 Pa. D. & C. 3d 90 (Allegheny Cty. 1978) (per curiam) (emphasis in original).[65]

To permit the state's interest in potential life to prevail over women's fundamental rights would have the tutional Law 1354 (2d ed. 1988) (emphasis in original); see also Regan, Rewriting Roe v. Wade, 77 Mich. L. Rev. 1569, 1588 (1979) ("[C]onsider a simple burning building, with a child trapped inside. Would a court impose criminal liability on anyone, even the child's parent, who did not attempt to save the child at the risk of second-degree burns over one or two percent of his or her body? . . . [E]ven if the potential rescuer is specified to be the child's parent, liability is unlikely. In all other cases, the suggested imposition is unthinkable in the context of our legal system.").

---

[65] See also In re Guardianship of Pescinski, 67 Wis. 2d 4, 226 N.W.2d 180, 182 (1975) (rejecting family's attempt to force incompetent schizophrenic man to donate kidney to sister because of "the absence of real consent on his part," even where dire need of transfer was established).

In addition, the medical risks to which Missouri would subject unconsenting pregnant women starkly contrast with the right of consent afforded all others. Ordinarily when a person faces serious medical risks that might result from recommended surgery, the choice lies with that individual whether to accept those risks and consent to the procedure. At common law it was recognized that "a surgeon who performs an operation without his patient's consent commits an assault, for which he is liable in damages." Schloendorff v. Society of New York Hosp., 211 N.Y. 125, 129-30, 105 N.E. 92, 93 (1914), overruled on other grounds, Bing v. Thunig, 2 N.Y.2d 656, 143 N.E.2d 3, 163 N.Y.S.2d 3 (1957).

perverse effect of elevating fetuses to "superhuman" status by giving fetuses protections that states do not give to persons. This provides further evidence that this legislative "trade-off" rests upon an illegitimate stereotype that women are essentially, and "naturally," childbearers, and that women are therefore appropriate targets for a subordination of bodily freedom and autonomy that never has been and never would be placed in comparable fashion upon others in society. Just as the right of a potential donor or rescuer to refuse to help is fully protected by the common law's respect for bodily freedom, so too must the law respect the right of a woman to choose whether to undergo the great burdens of pregnancy and childbirth.

* * * * *

This Court is asked to view the state's interest in protecting potential life as so compelling that it eviscerates women's fundamental right to reproductive choice throughout pregnancy. The Court has never before found a purported state interest to be compelling in a context where that interest would justify intrusions with "no logical stopping point" on a fundamental right.[66] The Court in Roe understood and discharged its responsibility to protect fundamental rights from undue government interference by allowing women's right and the state's interest to supersede each other at different temporal stages of pregnancy. Retreating today from this commitment to the safeguarding of fundamental rights would cede complete control over women's (and only women's) reproductive autonomy (and hence a core aspect of their social, economic and political freedom) to a political process that frequently has failed to treat women fairly; particularly given the highly charged emotional environment in which legislative "balances" necessarily would be struck, legislatures can be expected again to undervalue both the importance of protecting women's autonomy and the burdens of state-imposed continued pregnancy and childbirth. Allowing state legislatures to dictate women's most intimate and fundamental decisions in life would fail utterly to respect the Constitution as an operative restraint on unwarranted legislative intrusions on fundamental liberties and would fail to discharge this Court's duty to be the "ultimate guardian" of those liberties.

---

[66] Croson, 109 S. Ct. at 723. Even if the Court found the asserted interest in protecting potential life "compelling," abortion restrictions would still fail heightened scrutiny because they are not the least restrictive means of promoting this interest. For example, the Surgeon General of the United States' recent report on abortion concludes that governments could curtail the incidence of abortion through various non-coercive means, such as implementing sex education programs and subsidizing the costs of childbearing and rearing for women bearing unplanned children. See Surgeon General's Report on Abortion, reprinted in 135 Cong. Rec. E906-E909 (daily ed. March 21, 1989).

CONCLUSION

To ensure that the constitutional guarantee of liberty "extends to women as well as to men," Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 772, this Court must reaffirm Roe v. Wade and prohibit states from forcing women to continue pregnancies through laws such as the Missouri provisions at issue in this case.

Respectfully submitted,

DAWN JOHNSEN
MARCY J. WILDER
NATIONAL ABORTION RIGHTS ACTION LEAGUE
1101 14th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 371-0779

JUDITH L. LICHTMAN
Counsel of Record
DONNA R. LENHOFF
MAXINE EICHNER
WOMEN'S LEGAL DEFENSE FUND
2000 P Street, N.W., Suite 400
Washington, D.C. 20036
(202) 887-0364
Attorneys for Amici Curiae

EVAN CAMINKER
MARCIA GREENBERGER
LOIS MURPHY
STEPHANIE RIDDER
MICHAEL C. SMALL
WENDY WEBSTER WILLIAMS
Of Counsel

Washington, D.C.
March 30, 1989

APPENDIX

APPENDIX

STATEMENTS OF INTEREST

THE NATIONAL ABORTION RIGHTS ACTION LEAGUE (NARAL), has 250,000 members in 34 state affiliates and the national organization. Founded in 1969, NARAL is the largest national organization dedicated solely to keeping abortion safe, legal and accessible. NARAL recognizes that guaranteeing women the full range of reproductive choices is critical to women's autonomy and equality.

THE WOMEN'S LEGAL DEFENSE FUND (WLDF) is a non-profit national advocacy organization of over 2500 members dedicated to challenging sex discrimination and to advancing women's concerns through the legal system. WLDF believes that reproductive freedom is fundamental to women's achievement of equality in society. Therefore WLDF makes this issue one of its highest priorities and has a long history of activism and legislative and judicial advocacy in this area.

THE ABORTION RIGHTS COUNCIL (ARC) was founded in 1968 and currently has 5,000 members and 12,000 supporters in the State of Minnesota. It has as its sole purpose keeping abortions safe and legal for all women. ARC opposes any further restrictions on women's access to abortions and supports the principles established in Roe v. Wade.

ABORTION RIGHTS MOBILIZATION (ARM) is a Section 501 (c) (3) organization, using lawsuits, education and other techniques to maintain separation of church and state and "to implement and guarantee a woman's right to legal abortion as decreed by the U.S. Supreme Court," following ARM's by-laws.

THE AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF UNIVERSITY WOMEN (AAUW), a national organization of over 150,000 women and men, is strongly committed to achieving legal, social, and economic equity for women. AAUW supports basic constitutional rights for all persons, including first amendment rights of free speech and separation of church and state, the right to privacy, and equal protection under the law. The right to reproductive choice continues to be a priority issue for AAUW.

THE AMERICAN FEDERATION OF STATE, COUNTY AND MUNICIPAL EMPLOYEES, AFL-CIO, is a union of over 1 million public employees, including over 300,000 health care workers. AFSCME also represents thousands of workers in social service agencies caring for abused, neglected and abandoned children. Over half of AFSCME's members are women.

THE AMERICAN VETERANS COMMITTEE, INC. (AVC), founded in 1943, is a national organization of veterans who served honorably in the Armed Forces of the United States in World War I, World War II, Korean War, or Vietnam War. AVC has filed amicus briefs in many court cases expressing AVC's strong belief that discrimination based on race, color, religion, sex, or national origin is detrimental to our Nation. AVC believes that the U.S. Constitution entitles a pregnant woman, in light of her unique burden of pregnancy, to determine whether to terminate her pregnancy, and that the Missouri statute involved in this case violates both that constitutional right and the right of medical personnel under the First Amendment to provide information about such termination to their patients.

BOSTON WOMEN'S HEALTH BOOK COLLECTIVE, INC. (BWHBC), is a non-profit women's health education and advocacy organization which seeks to empower individuals and groups to make informed personal and political decisions affecting health and medical care, especially as they relate to women. Founded in 1970, BWHBC operates a Women's Health Information Center near Boston and serves approximately 10,000 people each year. We have had a longstanding interest in reproductive rights, including access to safe, legal, affordable abortion services. Our 20 years of contact with thousands of women and their families has only reinforced our belief in the importance of contraception and abortion services for those who need and want them.

BUFFALO LAWYERS FOR CHOICE is an organization currently of approximately 50 attorneys—men and women—formed in 1989 in Buffalo. All the attorneys in the organization practice in Buffalo. Although they are from diverse backgrounds and practices, the group's members all have supported the right of women to choose abortion and have supported equality between men and women. Buffalo Lawyers for Choice intends to continue as an active organization supporting local groups that protect individuals' ability to control their bodies and their lives. Many of the members have been active in the past in Planned Parenthood of Buffalo and Erie County and in national Planned Parenthood organizations, as well as civil liberties organizations. Because of an intense interest in the rights of women and men to make their own decisions about reproductive issues, Buffalo Lawyers for Choice wishes to be recognized as an amicus Curiae in the Webster case.

CALIFORNIA WOMEN LAWYERS is an organization founded in 1973 for the primary purpose of improving the situation of women in the State of California. CWL is the largest women lawyers organization in the world, with several thousand individual members, and speaking for 30 women's bar organizations in California. From its inception, CWL's agenda has included increasing the numbers of women appointed to the bench, admitted to law schools, offered jobs and partnerships in law firms, and eliminating gender bias in the courts. It has also been committed to all issues affecting a woman's right to choice, lobbying against various parental consent bills and working with a broad-based coalition to encourage funding and support for programs supportive of choice.

THE CENTER FOR WOMEN POLICY STUDIES (CWPS), founded in 1971, was the first national policy research and advocacy institute focused exclusively on issues of women's social and economic rights. The Center's current programs include the National Resource Center on Women and AIDS, the first national effort focused exclusively on women, particularly low income women and women of color; a key concern is the potential abrogation of women's reproductive rights in the name of protecting public health. CWPS also is conducting the second stage—policy implementation and public education—of the Reproductive Laws for the 1990s Project. Finally, our Young Women's Project seeks to bring women in their twenties into the policy process and will address issues of reproductive choice from their perspectives.

For almost 20 years, CHOICE (Concern For Health Options: Information, Care & Education) has been an educator, consumer advocate, counselor, and information resource in the areas of reproductive health, sexuality, and maternity care. Because of its background and experience in public education and counseling, CHOICE was selected by the City of Philadelphia to operate its city-wide hotline for information on AIDS. CHOICE, through its information hotlines, teen improvisational theatre company, training center, and publications, has pursued an organizational philosophy that decisions regarding sexuality and reproduction are highly personal, and that those very private choices should not be constrained by private or public intimidation, economic or social status, lack of relevant information, or unwarranted governmental interference.

CHOICE NETWORK OF TARRANT COUNTY, TEXAS, is a coalition formed in 1983 and dedicated to keeping abortion safe and legal and to assuring reproductive freedom for all women, regardless of age or economic status.

THE COLUMBIA-GREENE RAPE CRISIS CENTER, based in New York, was founded in 1981. It assists approximately 400 women per year who have been the victims of sexual assault, and their families and friends, to overcome the trauma of sexual assault. It also serves 7,000 community residents per year through its sexual abuse prevention project. Pregnancy can result from any number of situations, many of which do not include "irresponsibility" on the part of the woman. The Rape Crisis Center sees many unwanted pregnancies resulting from sexual crimes and supports a woman's freedom of choice over her personal medical and emotional concerns, including the right to terminate an unwanted pregnancy.

Founded in 1977, THE COMMITTEE TO DEFEND REPRODUCTIVE RIGHTS—CMRW is a San Francisco-based grass roots organization with a nationwide membership of almost 2,000 people. CDRR-CMRW and its membership advocate the right to legal, affordable, and safe abortion services for all women, regardless of their age, race, income level, or sexual preference. CDRR-CMRW recognizes that the right to choose if and when to bear children is a fundamental and private right that every woman should be able to exercise free from coercion, governmental regulation, or intervention. CDRR-CMRW considers abortion a vitally important and needed health service and a constitutionally-protected right for all women.

THE CONNECTICUT WOMEN'S EDUCATIONAL AND LEGAL FUND, INC., was incorporated in 1973 as a nonprofit public interest law firm advocating for women's legal rights. We have over 400 members, and serve thousands of people in New England each year through our litigation, community education, research, and information and referral programs. We choose to join this brief as amicus curiae because we believe it is essential to protect the rights of women to choose safe and legal abortion. As an organization working for equality, we believe that every woman, without regard to religious belief, income, race, age or disability, must have an equal opportunity to control her own health and reproduction.

D.C. FEMINISTS AGAINST PORNOGRAPHY, founded in 1980, is a feminist community organization dedicated to community education on issues of sexism, racism, and sexual violence in the media. D.C. FAP provides slide shows, public discussions, and other community education activities in the Washington Metropolitan area, testified before the Meese Commission on Pornography, has debated both right wing puritans and pornographers on issues of women's rights, sexuality and other media issues.

THE 80% MAJORITY CAMPAIGN is a pro-choice research and information service which is very involved with activist organizations and abortion providers all over the country. The organization publishes an eight-page newsletter twice a month which provides information and analysis of the abortion issue to our subscribers. This commitment was undertaken out of the belief that the constitutional right to make reproductive decisions is fundamental to women's personal freedom and dignity. It would be a national tragedy to retreat from the acknowledgment of that right into the political arena where those who can shout the loudest often prevail.

EQUAL RIGHTS ADVOCATES, INC. (ERA) is a San Francisco-based public interest legal and educational corporation founded in 1974 that is dedicated to securing economic, social, and political equality for women. It has a long history of interest, activism, and advocacy in all areas of the law which affect equality between the sexes. ERA believes that the right to control one's reproductive life is fundamental to women's ability to gain equality in other aspects of society. This concern has been expressed through our participation as counsel and as amicus in numerous cases involving women's reproductive rights, including Committee to Defend Reproductive Rights v. Myers, 29 Cal.3d 252 (1981) and related cases.

The collective membership of the FEMINIST HEALTH CENTER OF PORTSMOUTH regard the decision to terminate or complete a pregnancy to be essential to the individual freedom of women everywhere. We believe the Constitution protects our right to make this most private decision and we urge the Justices of the Supreme Court to uphold the Constitution of the United States of America and protect our right to privacy.

THE FEMINIST INSTITUTE promotes social change that ensures women's autonomy and independence. Our women's health policy and pro-choice projects promote public policies that ensure women's control over their own bodies. We are concerned that, as women become free from subjugation to patriarchal control within the family, they in turn not become subject to state control of their reproduction. Control over one's own body is fundamental to the exercise of personal autonomy, without intervention or restriction by the government.

FUND FOR NEW LEADERSHIP, a political action committee founded in 1987, represents more than 250 young (ages 20-40) Democrats. The purpose of the Fund is to raise money for Democratic Party candidates and organizations, and to increase the political participation, knowledge, and campaign skills of young Democrats. The Fund also seeks to provide a forum for the discussion of contemporary social, economic, and political problems in America. The Fund for New Leadership is interested in the case of Webster v. Reproductive Health Services because we believe that women's right to choose abortion is closely related to women's equality in society. If women were to lose their reproductive rights, we feel that women's lives and women's opportunities to participate equally in society would be greatly diminished.

GAY AND LESBIAN DEMOCRATS OF AMERICA is a national organization of individuals and local organizations founded in 1982 to encourage the involvement of lesbians and gay men in electoral politics and public policy. Among the issues that GLDA has worked on are the protection of the right to privacy and of all civil rights. GLDA has supported efforts to protect the reproductive rights of women and thus is interested in the case of Webster v. Reproductive Health Services.

THE HARVARD WOMEN'S LAW ASSOCIATION was founded in 1969. It is currently celebrating its twentieth year at Harvard Law School, where women have been students for 38 years. Most of the almost 700 women currently attending Harvard Law School attend some Women's Law Association events; many participate in the Battered Women's Project which the Women's Law Association cosponsors. Over 200 women, almost one-third of the women at Harvard Law School, are paying, voting members of the Women's Law Association. Among the Women's Law Association's objectives are informing the law school and the broader community about issues of concern to all women at Harvard Law School and promoting women's rights, such as the right to choose an abortion.

HAWAII WOMEN LAWYERS is dedicated to the improvement of the status of women attorneys and the support of issues of concern to all women, so as to promote the advancement of all women.

THE HAWAII WOMEN LAWYERS FOUNDATION is a professional organization of women and men attorneys and others. One of its main purposes is to advance the status of women in the community. Members have been involved in many projects which aid women lawyers and women in the community in general. Foundation members are aware that women's right to choose abortion is constitutionally protected. Women must have the right to reproductive freedom if they are to have physical control over their own bodies. Without reproductive autonomy, women can neither control the course of their lives nor participate equally in society. The Hawaii Women Lawyers Foundation supports reproductive freedom for women and opposes any and all efforts to limit women's right to choose abortion.

THE HUMAN RIGHTS CAMPAIGN FUND is a lobbying organization representing the national gay and lesbian community. Since its founding nearly 10 years ago, the Campaign Fund has been committed to working toward full civil rights for lesbians and gay men and ultimately for all Americans. In pursuit of this goal, we are interested in any governmental actions—legislative, judicial, or administrative—that could affect civil rights.

Founded in 1975, the ILLINOIS WOMEN'S AGENDA is a statewide coalition of organizations and individuals committed to full equality and justice for women. Current IWA membership consists of several hundred individual members and over 50 affiliated organizations, representing 80,000 women throughout Illinois in the fields of law, academia, labor, and business, among others. The IWA develops and participates in a wide range of programs for women through research, public education, and advocacy.

THE INSTITUTE FOR WOMEN'S POLICY RESEARCH (IWPR) is an independent, nonprofit, scientific research institution established to respond to the need for women-centered, policy-oriented research. IWPR conducts research that addresses the full spectrum of issues that impact women's lives—with sensitivity to and consideration for diversity based on race, ethnicity, and class. The focus of the Institute's research is both national and international in scope. Organized in 1987 by Dr. Heidi Hartmann and Dr. Teresa Odendahl, and a Washington-based steering committee, the work of the organization is accomplished by four full-time and three part-time staff members with occasional assistance from consultants, interns, and volunteers. IWPR is supported with funds provided by foundations, women's groups, labor unions, and more than 400 individuals. In all aspects of its endeavors, IWPR is committed to expanding access, strengthening relationships, and fostering partnerships which strengthen the economic, social, and political well-being of all women. IWPR gives its full support to the amicus curiae brief in the case of Webster

v. Reproductive Health Services. IWPR urges the Court to uphold women's right to reproductive choice and to strike down the Missouri law, because, among other reasons, women's right to reproductive choice is a key element in their ability to achieve economic equity.

THE INTERNATIONAL CENTER FOR RESEARCH ON WOMEN (ICRW) is a nonprofit organization located in Washington, D.C., and founded in 1976, that works to improve the productivity and economic status of poor women in developing countries and to influence development policy on their behalf. ICRW's programs address the dual economic and family responsibilities of women through policy-oriented research, technical assistance, and public education. While primarily focusing on women's economic situation, ICRW programs also consider the important relationship between women's economic participation, their health, and their families' health. Whether in developing or developed nations, women's ability to control their reproduction must be considered a fundamental right and one that is crucial to women's health and their ability to participate fully in social and economic development.

LAMBDA LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATION FUND, INC. (LLDEF), founded in 1973 as a not-for-profit corporation in New York, is the nation's oldest and largest national legal advocacy organization working in furtherance of the rights of lesbians and gay men. Lambda's work has included challenging the constitutionality of statutes that criminalize private adult, consensual sexual contact, ending discrimination against gay people and people with AIDS, seeking recognition of lesbian and gay relationships, and seeking equal access to medical treatment for people with AIDS. As an organization representing the lesbian and gay community's belief in the constitutional right to liberty and bodily autonomy, Lambda strongly supports the position that women in our society are constitutionally entitled to make their own decisions about whether to choose abortion.

LAWYERS FOR REPRODUCTIVE RIGHTS has recently been founded by approximately 15 lawyers in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, to educate fellow lawyers and the public on legal issues of reproductive rights and to work to ensure that all reproductive options are available. Our organization is a revival of a group formed approximately eight years ago which at that time represented more than 800 lawyers in the Philadelphia metropolitan area.

THE LEAGUE OF WOMEN VOTERS OF MISSOURI (Missouri League) is a nonpartisan, nonprofit membership organization with 1,509 members and 16 local Leagues throughout the state of Missouri. The Missouri League has worked to promote public policies that affirm the constitutional right of privacy of the individual to make reproductive choices. For example, the Missouri League has distributed publications to legislators, the media, and the general public, and has cosponsored an annual educational forum on public policy on reproductive choices.

THE LEAGUE OF WOMEN VOTERS OF THE UNITED STATES (LWVUS) is a nonpartisan, nonprofit membership organization with members in state and local Leagues in all 50 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands. The LWVUS strongly believes that public policy in a pluralistic society must affirm the constitutional right of privacy of the individual to make reproductive choices. The LWVUS further believes that the Roe v. Wade decision is an important protection of this constitutional right.

THE MISSOURI WOMEN'S NETWORK is a banding together of Missouri organizations and individual women and men to facilitate communication, promote education, and to strengthen advocacy for women's issues based on the 1977 National Plan of Action for Women (adopted in Houston).

THE MS. FOUNDATION FOR WOMEN is the nation's only public, multi-issue, women's fund. The Foundation has long recognized that the extent to which women can control their reproductive capacities is a principal factor in determining the quality and character of their lives; this is especially true for poor women and women of color, who are often the first victims of anti-choice legislation. The Ms. Foundation for Women has been responding to attacks on reproductive freedom with a combination of grantmaking, technical assistance, and advocacy since its founding almost 15 years ago.

THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF SOCIAL WORKERS, INC. (NASW), a nonprofit professional association with over 120,000 members, is the largest association of social workers in the United States. Founded in 1955, NASW has chapters in every state as well as the Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico, and Europe. NASW is devoted to promoting the quality and effectiveness of social work practice, to advancing the knowledge base of the social work profession and to improving the quality of life through utilization of social work knowledge and skill. NASW is deeply committed to the principle of self-determination and to the protection of individual rights and personal privacy. The Association has been in the forefront of the struggle for women's equality, and is particularly concerned in the present instance that the state not override a pregnant woman's autonomy nor restrict her right to choose abortion.

The purpose of the NATIONAL COMMITTEE TO FREE SHARON KOWALSKI, founded in October 1987, is to ensure that, in particular, Sharon Kowalski, an adult disabled lesbian, receive rehabilitation and access to her partner currently denied by her father and guardian and, in general, the right to self-determination for lesbian and heterosexual women, gay men, and people with disabilities not be abridged. The National Committee, headquartered in Washington, D.C. has 17 local chapters and a membership of 4,000. We have pointed the amicus brief because without the ability to make decisions about one's body unencumbered by state prohibitions—for example, for a lesbian, whether to make love with a woman or, for any woman, whether to remain pregnant—the concept of individual freedom and autonomy becomes an empty reality.

THE NATIONAL COUNCIL FOR RESEARCH ON WOMEN is an independent association of established centers and organizations that provide institutional resources for feminist research, policy analysis, and educational programs for women and girls. The Council also works to strengthen ties with other national and international organizations and coalitions. Through its member centers and affiliates, the Council links over 2,000 women and men scholars and practitioners in this country and abroad and serves constituencies that include government, the media, business and industry, and the nonprofit sector, as well as the academic community and the general public.

THE NATIONAL FEDERATION OF BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL WOMEN'S CLUBS, INC. (BPW/USA) is the world's oldest and largest organization of working women. Founded in 1919, and with 125,000 members in 3,400 local organizations across the country, BPW/USA promotes full participation, equity, and economic self-sufficiency for working women. BPW/USA includes among its members men and women of every age, religion, race, political party, and socioeconomic background. BPW's platform commits us to "support reproductive freedom as a right for all women." We believe that if the Supreme Court reverses the decision of the lower courts in Webster v. Reproductive Health Services, this will seriously infringe on the reproductive freedom of all women and seriously limit our ability to achieve equity, economic self-sufficiency, and full participation in American society.

THE NATIONAL GAY & LESBIAN TASK FORCE (NGLTF) is a national membership advocacy and political organization to protect and advance the civil and social rights of lesbians and gay men. Founded in 1973, NGLTF has 15,000 members and offices in Washington, D.C. NGLTF strongly supports the reproductive freedom of all women and the expansion of a fundamental right to privacy for all people in the area of reproductive and sexual decision-making. Bodily integrity is an essential aspect of reproductive decisions and sexual privacy.

NATIONAL GAY RIGHTS ADVOCATES is a nonprofit public-interest law firm founded in 1978. NGRA engages in impact litigation throughout the country on behalf of lesbians and gay men. Today, NGRA has over 20,000 members from every state and the District of Columbia. Preserving the constitutional rights to liberty and privacy, rights that are principal components of a woman's right to choose abortion, are of fundamental concern to NGRA's work and its membership. If these essential rights are eroded, lesbians and gay men also will be denied equal participation in American society.

THE NATIONAL WOMAN ABUSE PREVENTION PROJECT is a national domestic violence information and policy resource center. Founded in 1986, the Project provides information, training, and technical assistance to battered women in their work, and develops policy guidelines for professionals on issues affecting battered women. We are joining the Women's Legal Defense Fund and NARAL as an amicus curiae in the Webster case because any decision weakening Roe v. Wade would greatly reduce the ability of many battered women, who often become pregnant as a result of forced sexual conduct, to protect themselves or to have the economic ability to leave their abuser.

THE NATIONAL WOMEN'S CONFERENCE COMMITTEE, formerly the IWY Continuing Committee of the 1977 First National Women's Conference (Houston, TX), is the nonprofit, all-volunteer Committee working to implement the National Plan of Action adopted by 2,000 delegates representing every state and territory, mandated by Congress to adopt recommendations to advance the status of women of the United States and to monitor progress on this National Plan of Action. Guaranteeing reproductive freedom to all women is one of the 25 priority planks in the National Plan of Action. Four hundred seventy members were appointed to the IWY Continuing Committee. Currently we are joined in our advocacy for women's rights by 14 statewide networks and many individual grassroots supporters.

THE NATIONAL WOMEN'S LAW CENTER is a Washington-based legal organization which has been working since 1972 to advance and protect women's legal rights. The Center's primary goal is to ensure that public and private sector practices and policies better reflect the needs and rights of women. The fundamental right to abortion recognized in Roe v. Wade is of profound importance to the lives, liberty, health, and safety of women throughout the country. Because of the tremendous significance to women of the freedom to choose whether to bear children, the National Women's Law Center seeks to preserve women's right to abortion.

THE NATIONAL WOMEN'S STUDIES ASSOCIATION, with a membership of nearly 4,000 feminist educators and scholars promotes the development of Women's Studies Programs, feminist scholarship, and education in a broad sense about women's lives. By studying, researching, and discussing women and gender relationships, NWSA believes we can understand systems that deny equality and envision alternative ways to structure society to guarantee that women and others who are denied privileges will have the opportunity to make choices about their lives and shape the world they live in. NWSA believes women cannot achieve equality without control over their reproductive lives. Historically women's oppression was cemented by state or religious control over whether, when, and how they bore children.

THE NEW HAMPSHIRE WOMEN'S LOBBY was formed in 1980. Its purpose is to bring about changes in laws, regulations, public attitudes, and perceptions relating to a woman's role in society by addressing the laws of the state of New Hampshire. We are a 1,000-member organization with a statewide board of 30, and believe that supporting this brief is in the best interests of greatest choice for New Hampshire women.

NEW YORK STATE COALITION ON WOMEN'S LEGAL ISSUES (COWLI) is a statewide organization established to identify and eradicate gender bias which is pervasive in our society. Among its other purposes, COWLI offers practical and substantive expertise and commentary on the effects on women of existing laws and of proposed legislation. COWLI also provides special assistance to the courts by drawing attention to the deleterious effects on women of biased implementation of laws. COWLI is particularly concerned with this appeal because it focuses on the critical issue of reproductive freedom. COWLI is committed to ensuring reproductive freedom for all, as well as gender equality in the Courts.

NEW YORK WOMEN IN CRIMINAL JUSTICE is an organization of women whose members include police, probation, and correction officers; judges, attorneys, and social workers; others who work in the criminal justice system; inmates and ex-offenders. Our main concerns are that offenders who go through the system not come out worse than when they went in, and that as many offenders as possible be diverted from the system. We also strongly support the right of a woman to choose abortion, knowing that the offspring of women in prison become the dysfunctional children in school and often the criminals of the future. The right to choose should not be restricted to only those women who can afford abortions (whether or not they remain legal); the right to choose should be available to all women, most especially those who understand the heavy burden that would be imposed upon both the children and the women in and just out of prison.

THE NORTH CAROLINA ASSOCIATION OF WOMEN ATTORNEYS, INC. (NCAWA), is a non-profit corporation founded in 1978 whose objects are the promotion of the participation of women in the legal profession and the promotion of the rights of women under the law. The NCAWA has been instrumental in the passage of laws affecting women on issues such as domestic violence, equitable distribution of marital property, and child support enforcement. There are approximately 1,700 women attorneys in North Carolina and almost one-third of all new lawyer applicants are women. We believe it is the obligation of all women attorneys, as well as the stated objective of our organization, to act as advocates for women's rights. In 1979 the NCAWA adopted a resolution endorsing the right of all women to exercise their reproductive freedom to carry their pregnancies to term with adequate prenatal care or to have an abortion. Based on this resolution and our objectives, the North Carolina Association of Women Attorneys joins in this amicus brief.

NORTH CAROLINA EQUITY, a nonprofit organization, is dedicated to the economic advancement of women. NC Equity serves as a catalyst on women's issues and advances networking of women. We support women's full realization and exercise of their most basic legal rights, including a woman's right to control her own body. This right must include her right to choose an abortion.

THE NORTHWEST WOMEN'S LAW CENTER is a private, nonprofit organization in Seattle, Washington, that works to advance the legal rights of women by means of litigation, legislation, education, and providing information and referrals. Protecting women's freedom of reproductive choice is one of the Law Center's priority issue areas. The Law Center has participated in several cases involving reproductive rights before the U.S. Supreme Court and other courts.

THE NOW LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATION FUND (NOW LDEF) is a non-profit civil rights organization that performs a broad range of legal and educational services nationally in support of women's efforts to eliminate sex-based discrimination and secure equal rights. NOW LDEF was founded in 1971 by the leaders of the National Organization for Women.

QUEEN'S BENCH OF THE SAN FRANCISCO BAY AREA is a bar association in the San Francisco area designed to promote the interests of women attorneys. Founded in 1921, it has almost 700 members. Queen's Bench is joining in this amicus curiae brief because of its concern in maintaining the fundamental legal principles affecting women that were established in Roe v. Wade.

RADICAL WOMEN is the oldest socialist feminist organization in the U.S. Formed in 1968, it has eight U.S. branches and one in Australia. The community-based organization includes working women, young and elderly women, women of color, and lesbians. The battle for women's rights, including the right to safe and accessible abortions, is crucial to women's equality, socially, politically, and economically. The right to abortion is a fundamental right to privacy and for the court to interfere is a gross injustice. The abolition of Roe v. Wade, or any changes whatsoever, will especially affect low-income women, namely women of color, who will not be able to obtain private services found by other women who can afford to pay.

THE SANTA BARBARA WOMEN'S POLITICAL COMMITTEE, a political action committee with over 300 members, was formed in 1987 with a commitment to increasing the role of women in the political and governmental processes of Santa Barbara and of the State of California. The Committee is also committed to furthering the interests of women as a group through the political process. Issues such as reproductive choice, pay equity, and child care are central to our concerns. Because the protection of the constitutional right of reproductive choice is our top priority for 1989, we are especially interested in the resolution of Webster v. Reproductive Health Services by the U.S. Supreme Court.

THE TOLEDO WOMEN'S BAR ASSOCIATION's purpose is to foster communication among women attorneys; promote and advance the position of and opportunities available to women attorneys in order to more accurately reflect the role of women in a democratic society; ensure women attorneys' participation in bar associations; and encourage participation in social and political areas affecting the community. It monitors legislation, policies, and practices which affect the status of and opportunities available to women and seeks changes where necessary. It promotes and provides continuing legal education in areas of current interest to the community and, in particular, to the legal profession; and gathers and disseminates information of interest to women.

THE TUCSON WOMEN'S COMMISSION was founded in late 1975 by the Mayor and Council of the City of Tucson to assist women in attaining full equality of opportunity in all aspects of life. The Tucson Women's Commission has long held that good public policy respects the principle of bodily integrity and trusts women's ability to make their own decisions about their reproductive lives. The Tucson Women's Commission also maintains that public policy in the best interest of women will support a full range of options, information, and services so that every woman has the ability to make real choices about when, whether, and under what conditions to bear a child.

VOTERS FOR CHOICE/FRIENDS OF FAMILY PLANNING is a national, independent, pro-choice political action committee. The mission of Voters for Choice is to preserve safe and legal abortion for all women by helping elect pro-choice candidates to U.S. Congress.

WASHINGTON WOMEN UNITED (WWU), founded in 1978, is a private nonprofit organization whose purpose is to lobby the Washington State Legislature on issues of concern to women. Reproductive choice is WWU's first legislative priority. The organization has opposed state legislation that would limit a woman's reproductive choice. WWU is also active in a state coalition that has worked to maintain Medicaid funds for abortion.

WIDER OPPORTUNITIES FOR WOMEN supports the amicus brief of the Women's Legal Defense Fund and NARAL regarding Webster v. Reproductive Health Services. Because of our 25-year history working for equality of opportunity and economic self-sufficiency for women and girls, we urge the Court to uphold women's right to choose abortion and to strike down the Missouri law.

WOMEN EMPLOYED is a national organization of working women, based in Chicago, with a membership of 1,500. Over the past 16 years, the organization has assisted thousands of working women with problems of sex discrimination. Women Employed works to empower women to improve their economic status and to remove barriers to economic equity through advocacy, direct service, and public education. Women Employed strongly believes that any limitation on women's reproductive rights will have a profoundly negative impact on women's opportunities to achieve economic equity.

WOMEN IN FILM, founded in 1974, is a nonprofit professional organization of approximately 1,500 members. Our goals are to improve the employment, depiction, and position of women in the film and television industries. We are particularly committed to expanding equal employment opportunities for women in film and television, and we believe that a commitment to equal opportunity must include a commitment to the principle of freedom of choice on issues relating to childbearing and abortion. We are based in Los Angeles, California.

THE WOMEN LAWYERS' ASSOCIATION OF LOS ANGELES (WLALA), founded in 1919, is the largest local bar association in the State of California emphasizing the concerns of women. WLALA has as members over 1,200 female and male lawyers, judges, and law students who are personally and professionally concerned with the importance of preserving a woman's right to choose for herself whether to terminate a pregnancy. WLALA last appeared as amicus curiae before this Court on this issue in Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986).

WOMEN'S AGENDA is a statewide, non-partisan, women's economic justice organization composed of 2,100 individual members and 150 endorsing organizations committed to equity and justice for women, opportunities for children, and security for families. Women's Agenda believes that every woman must have the fundamental right to choose whether or when to have children. If a woman does not have the right to control her fertility, she has no rights. Women's Agenda believes that reproductive freedom is a women's economic justice issue.

THE WOMEN'S BAR ASSOCIATION OF MASSACHUSETTS is a statewide bar association of over 1,000 members. The WBA is committed to the advancement of women attorneys and to the protection of all women in the legal system. Since its founding in 1978, the WBA has been particularly concerned with the protection of a woman's right to choice. It has filed amicus briefs in cases concerning public funding of abortion, restrictions on family planning agencies, and the rights of minors to abortion. The WBA also sponsors a panel of attorneys who represent minors seeking judicial consent for abortion and is a member of the Massachusetts Coalition for Choice.

THE WOMEN'S CENTER OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CONNECTICUT is committed to creating a social, economic, and political world that supports the full equity of women. Without unrestricted access to the full range of health care procedures, including abortion for women of all ages, equity cannot be achieved. Continued attacks aimed at limiting women's access to reproductive freedoms are directly contrary to establishing a system whereby women are afforded equal protection under the law.

THE WOMEN'S CITY CLUB OF NEW YORK, INC., founded in 1916, is a membership organization concerned with contemporary societal programs—with the welfare of men, women, and children, in promoting such welfare by advocacy of an efficient government and a just legal system. We are concerned with this case for the following reasons: we feel that the principle established in Roe v. Wade was a step forward in establishing the freedom of women for domain over their own bodies and that any step backward is a challenge to that freedom and the equality of women in our society.

THE WOMEN'S EQUAL RIGHTS LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATION FUND (WERLDEF) is a non-profit California corporation. Established in 1978, WERLDEF was organized to ensure that women will be treated equally under the law. We achieve our goals by educating women about their legal rights, and assisting them in vindicating those rights by providing access to the courts. WERLDEF often receives calls from women who are pregnant and in crisis because they are neither financially nor emotionally able to raise a child and who are psychologically unable to carry their pregnancy to term and then put their baby up for adoption.

THE WOMEN'S EQUITY ACTION LEAGUE (WEAL) was founded in 1968 as a national, nonprofit membership organization sponsoring research, education, litigation, and advocacy in order to advance the economic status of women. WEAL supports and recognizes a woman's constitutional right to reproductive choice. Basic to a woman's economic empowerment is the right to make a fully-informed decision regarding the planning of her family.

WOMEN'S EQUITY AFFILIATES, LTD., is a 501 (c)(4) Ohio corporation consisting of state affiliates, first established here in 1968, whose purpose is achieving and maintaining equal economic status for women. We are just now in the process of reestablishing our state groups. We are interested in the instant case because we know that an unplanned childbirth is an economic crisis, particularly for working women. The majority of American women are now working because our economy and their husbands cannot otherwise support them. We therefore object to our Justice Department's engaging in what amounts to legislation by entering into pending cases and enlarging the issues, to the economic disadvantage of women. The expense of rearing a child, including the workplace disadvantages to the caregiver, is a heavy legal sanction for the law to impose on an act which is not illegal.

Since the WOMEN'S INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE FOR PEACE AND FREEDOM was founded in 1915, it has stood for freedom and equality. Choice and control over one's own life and decisions are integral aspects of freedom and equality. To overturn Roe v. Wade or to limit in any way women's—and especially poor women's—access to abortion would be the gravest infringement upon the rights and opportunities for women to be truly free, equal, and self-defined. In 110 chapters across the U.S. and in 28 countries, WILPF works for a world free of racism and sexism; the building of a constructive peace through world disarmament; and the changing of government policies to meet human needs.

THE WOMEN'S LAW ASSOCIATION OF THE WASHINGTON COLLEGE OF LAW OF THE AMERICAN UNIVERSITY was founded in 1982. The association has 50 active members and sponsors events for the benefit of the entire law school community. The organization's purpose is to serve as a forum for the discussion of issues and the promotion of interests affecting women in the law school community and in society. As an organization committed to legal and social equality for women, we believe that the legal attempt of Webster v.

Reproductive Health Services to erode women's constitutional right to decide if and when to bear children seriously jeopardizes women's ability to be equal citizens in society.

THE WOMEN'S LAW PROJECT is a nonprofit law firm dedicated to advancing the status and opportunities of women. The Women's Law Project believes that the right to reproductive choice is an essential component of women's ability to play an equal role with men in this society, and has engaged in extensive litigation and public education designed to protect women's legal right to abortion. Since its founding in 1974, the Women's Law Project has challenged in the courts a wide variety of state statutes designed to restrict abortion rights, including the Pennsylvania statute invalidated by this Court in Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986).

THE WOMEN'S MEDICAL FUND, INC., is a volunteer charity, recognized by the Internal Revenue Service as a 501(c)(3), which has helped more than 3,000 women pay for abortion care. Founded in the 1970s, the Fund has helped victims of rape who were pregnant from that crime, victims of incest, women in jail and in prison, the mentally ill, battered wives impregnated by their batterers, destitute women living in shelters with their children, handicapped women, pregnant women with histories of repeated C-sections and other surgeries, and children as young as age 11. The Women's Medical Fund, Inc., hears daily from destitute women unwillingly pregnant. Our administrators are aware of the tragedies that are avoided because abortion is safe and legal.

WOMEN'S RIGHTS COALITION is an active legislative effort composed of more than 60 local and statewide organizations across the State of Oregon. Founded in 1973, the Coalition brings together a wide range of service, professional, and advocacy groups who have the common belief that Oregon women should have equal rights and reproductive freedom.

THE YALE JOURNAL OF LAW AND FEMINISM is a nationally circulated journal dedicated to addressing feminist issues in law and legal scholarship. Preservation of the legal right to abortion is central to our concerns because a woman's control over her body is a necessary starting point for our broader concerns about the status of women in society.

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
MAR 30 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

IN THE
SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES
OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

V.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

---

BRIEF OF AGUDATH ISRAEL OF AMERICA AS AMICUS CURIAE

DAVID ZWIEBEL
General Counsel
AGUDATH ISRAEL OF AMERICA
84 William Street
New York, New York 10038
(212) 797-9000

Attorney for Amicus Curiae

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

TABLE OF CONTENTS i

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES ii

INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE 1

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT 3

ARGUMENT 6

I. THE RIGHT TO ABORTION SHOULD NOT UNIVERSALLY BE DEEMED "FUNDAMENTAL"; ITS CHARACTERIZATION AS SUCH SHOULD DEPEND ON THE CIRCUMSTANCES SURROUNDING THE CLAIMED RIGHT 6

In Typical Cases, Where the Constitutional Source of the Abortion Right is the Personal Liberty/Due Process Clause, Its Exercise is Not "Fundamental" 6

Abortion Does Become A "Fundamental" Right When Its Performance is Necessary to Preserve the Mother's Life Or is Mandated Under Her Religious Beliefs 10

II. MISSOURI'S "FINDING" THAT HUMAN LIFE BEGINS AT CONCEPTION VIOLATES THE ESTABLISHMENT CLAUSE 13

CONCLUSION 18

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases Page(s)

Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986) 6-7

City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 426 U.S. 416 (1983) 17-18

Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979) 10

Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973) 6

Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980) 12, 13-14

Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602 (1971) 16

McGowan v. Maryland, 366 U.S. 420 (1961) 13-14

McRae v. Califano, 491 F. Supp. 630 (E.D.N.Y.), rev'd sub. nom. Harris v. McRae, 449 U.S. 297 (1980) 13

Reproductive Health Service v. Webster, 851 F. 2d 1071 (8th Cir. 1988) 18

Texas Monthly v. Bullock, ___ U.S. ___, 109 S. Ct. 889 (1989) 13

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) .....passim

Thomas v. Review Board of the Indiania Employment Security Division, 450 U.S. 707 (1981) 12

Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986) 8, 9, 10, 11, 14

Webster v. Reproductive Health Services, 57 U.S.L.W. 3441 (Jan. 10, 1989) 2, 12

Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205 (1972) 11, 12

Constitutional and Statutory Provisions Page(s)

U.S. Constitution, First Amendment .....passim

U.S. Constitution, Fourteenth Amendment .....passim

R.S. Mo. Sec. 1.205 ..... 13, 15

R.S. Mo. Sec. 188.025 15

R. S. Mo. Sec. 188.029 15

R. S. Mo. Sec. 188.205 15

R.S. Mo. Sec. 188.210 15

R.S. Mo. Sec. 188.215 15

Other Authorities

Mishnah, Tractate Oholoth 7:6 10

J. D. Bleich, Abortion in Halakhic Leterature, reprinted in Bleich, Contemporary Halakhic Problems 325 (Ktav/Yeshiva University Press 1977) 11

G. Kolata, Fetal Sex Test Used as Step to Abortion, N.Y. Times Dec. 25, 1988 6

L. Tribe, American Constitutional Law (2d Ed. 1988) 16

No. 88-605

IN THE
SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES
OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

V.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

---

BRIEF OF AGUDATH ISRAEL OF AMERICA AS AMICUS CURIAE

INTEREST OF THE AMICUS CURIAE

Agudath Israel of America is a national grassroots Orthodox Jewish movement with tens of thousands of members across the United States. It was founded in 1922 as the American arm of the world-wide Agudath Israel movement, for the purpose of uniting the American Orthodox Jewish community under its organizational banner. The movement is led, and its policies determined, by a group of prominent senior Orthodox rabbinical figures respected broadly as outstanding scholars of Jewish law and decisors of Jewish policy.

Informed by classical Jewish tradition which teaches that all human life is sacred, and possessed of the firm view that laws which undermine the sanctity of human life send a message that is profoundly dangerous for all of society, Agudath Israel of America speaks out frequently on a broad panoply of public policy issues that arise at the outset and conclusion of human life. At the same time, as a representative of a religious minority community whose constituents rely heavily on the religious freedoms guaranteed under the First Amendment, Agudath Israel of America is a staunch advocate of religious liberty for all Americans. Missouri's legislative finding that human life begins at conception implicates both of these concerns in a manner that, to some extent, creates a dilemma for Agudath Israel of America.

On the one hand, Agudath Israel of America heartily welcomes the Court's request that the parties address the question of whether the analytical framework of Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), should be "reconsidered and discarded in favor of [a] rational basis test," Webster v. Reproductive Health Services, 57 U.S.L.W. 3441, 3442 (Jan. 10, 1989). Reconsideration of a decision that has effectively legalized abortion on demand is, in our view, highly appropriate and long overdue. Jewish tradition accords fetal life significant protection; it rejects the notion that termination of pregnancy, even prior to fetal viability, is a matter of free choice within the province of the mother. Roe v. Wade has exacted such a heavy toll that we feel the time has come to break our silence at the Supreme Court level and urge reconsideration of the underlying decision.

On the other hand, though, any reconsideration of Roe v. Wade, particularly in the context of a state "finding" that human life begins at conception, carries with it the danger that abortions might be legislatively proscribed even where they are mandated by religious belief -- under sinaitic Jewish law, for example, where the mother's life is endangered. What is called for, in Agudath Israel of America's view, is a jurisprudential framework that is at once protective of human fetal life yet solicitous of religious freedom. It is the objective of this amicus brief to attempt to outline such a framework.

Through their respective counsel, the parties have consented to the appearance of this amicus curiae.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Like the court below, Agudath Israel of America believes that the Missouri legislature exceeded its constitutional authority in finding that human life begins at conception. We arrive at this conclusion, however, by a totally different route.

I. In our view, Roe v. Wade was decided incorrectly and should be overruled. In most cases, where the pregnancy poses no danger to maternal life and there is no religious mandate for abortion, and where the sole constitutional source of the claimed right to abortion is the personal liberty/due process right developed in Roe, 410 U.S. at 152-53, the right to abortion should not be accorded the status of a "fundamental" right. Accordingly, a legislative measure designed to restrict or prohibit abortion should generally be upheld even in the absence of any "compelling" state interest for the measure, so long as there is a rational basis for the legislation.

There are times, though, when abortion is necessary to preserve the mother's life, or when it is mandated under the mother's religious beliefs. In those exceptional circumstances, a woman's claimed right to an abortion may be grounded not only in her personal liberty/due process right, but also in her Fourteenth Amendment right to life or her First Amendment right freely to exercise her religion. In such cases, access to abortion is indeed a right that is "fundamental."

II. In developing public policy to regulate abortions, it was not necessary for Missouri's legislature to "find" that human life begins from the moment of conception. Whether human life is present in actuality or only in potential, a state's interest in protecting the fetus is sufficient to justify the types of abortion regulation Missouri has imposed on its citizenry.

Nor was it constitutionally permissible for Missouri to make such a finding. Defining human life as beginning from the moment of conception places the state's imprimatur upon a particular religious belief, in an area that has been the subject of considerable theological and doctrinal dispute. There is a fundamental distinction between defining human life, an inherently theological matter beyond the competence or authority of secular legislative bodies; and regulating human conduct, a secular governmental prerogative regardless of theological perspectives on human life.

The distinction is far from academic. For if a state legislature has the authority to define human life as beginning from the moment of conception, then it is at least arguable that from that moment the fetus is a "person" for purposes of the Fourteenth Amendment, entitled to due process of law before being deprived of life or liberty -- presumably even in cases where the fetus' continued development would endanger the mother's life. [I]f the fetus is a person who is not to be deprived of life without due process of law, and if the mother's condition is the sole determinant, does not the [preservation of maternal life] exception appear to be out of line with the [fourteenth] amendment's command?" Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 157 n.54.

This conundrum can best be avoided by prohibiting legislative bodies from conferring human status -- "personhood" -- upon fetuses. The establishment clause provides ample basis for such a prohibition.

ARGUMENT

I. THE RIGHT TO ABORTION SHOULD NOT UNIVERSALLY BE DEEMED "FUNDAMENTAL"; ITS CHARACTERIZATION AS SUCH SHOULD DEPEND ON THE CIRCUMSTANCES SURROUNDING THE CLAIMED RIGHT

One of the pillars upon which Roe v. Wade rested was the Court's determination that the right of abortion protected under the Fourteenth Amendment's personal liberty/due process clause was "fundamental," and thereby protected against governmental abridgment absent a compelling state interest. 410 U.S. at 155. Under prevailing jurisprudence, the right to abortion is no less "fundamental" when it is being done to avoid the birth of a child of the "wrong" sex (see G. Kolata, Fetal Sex Text Used as Step to Abortion, N.Y. Times Dec. 25, 1988) or for any other "convenience, whim, or caprice of the putative mother" (Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, 221 (1973) (White, J., dissenting)), than when it is being done to preserve the life of the mother or allow her to follow her religious beliefs. This need not be so -- and ought not.

In Typical Cases, Where the Constitutional Source of the Abortion Right is the Personal Liberty/Due Process Clause, Its Exercise is Not "Fundamental"

Recently, in Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986), the Court had occasion to consider the factors that go into the making of a right or liberty that is "fundamental":

> "Striving to assure itself and the public that announcing rights not readily identifiable in the > Constitution's text involves much more than the imposition of the Justices' own choice of values on the States and the Federal Government, the Court has sought to identify the nature of the rights qualifying for heightened judicial protection. In Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U.S. 319, 325, 326 (1937), it was said that this category includes those fundamental liberties that are 'implicit in the concept of ordered liberty,' such that 'neither liberty nor justice would exist if [they] were sacrificed.' A different description of fundamental liberties appeared in Moore v. East Cleveland, 431 U.S. 494, 503 (1977) (opinion of POWELL, J.), where they are characterized as those liberties that are 'deeply rooted in this Nation's history and tradition.' Id., at 503 (POWELL, J.). See also Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S., at 506."

Id. at 191-92. Applying these formulations to the asserted right of homosexuals to engage in acts of consensual sodomy, the Court noted that proscriptions against such acts had strong historical roots, both from ancient times and in the laws of the various states throughout most of American history. "Against this background, to claim that a right to engage in such conduct is 'deeply rooted in this Nation's history and tradition' or 'implicit in the concept of ordered liberty' is, at best, facetious." Id. at 194.

The same can be said with respect to most cases of abortion: It is facetious, at best, to claim that the concept of unfettered access to abortion prior to fetal viability is deeply rooted in our history and tradition, or that it is a necessary component of ordered liberty. We need not dwell on the point, since the Court has heard it made many times over in the years since Roe, both from within and from without. Suffice it for us to reiterate the persuasive analysis offered by Justice White, dissenting in Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747, 793-94 (1986):

> "If the woman's liberty to choose an abortion is fundamental, then, it is not because any of our precedents (aside from Roe itself) commands or justifies that result; it can only be because protection for this unique choice is itself 'implicit in the concept of ordered liberty' or, perhaps, 'deeply rooted in this Nation's history and tradition.' It seems clear to me that it is neither. The Court's opinion in Roe itself convincingly refutes the notion that the abortion liberty is deeply rooted in the history or tradition of our people, as does the continuing and deep division of the people themselves over the question of abortion. As for the notion that choice in the matter of abortion is implicit in the concept of ordered liberty, it seems apparent to me that a free, egalitarian, and democratic society does not presuppose any particular rule or set of rules with respect to abortion. And again, the fact that many men and women of good will and high commitment to constitutional government place themselves on both sides of the abortion controversy strengthens my own conviction that the values animating the > Constitution do not compel recognition of the abortion liberty as fundamental."

Indeed, there is a factor present in the abortion context that in a sense makes abortion on demand even less deserving of "fundamental rights" protection than consensual sodomy: the irrevocable harm done to the fetus. Whereas consensual acts of homosexual sodomy, in theory at least, are performed with the full knowledge and acquiescence of the parties involved, abortion is not. "The pregnant woman cannot be isolated in her privacy," observed the Court in Roe, 410 U.S. at 159, a factor that led Justice White to argue -- correctly, in our view -- that the abortion decision "must be recognized as sui generis, different in kind from the others that the Court has protected under the rubric of personal or family privacy or autonomy." Thornburgh, supra, 476 U.S. at 792 (White, J., dissenting; footnote omitted).

In typical cases, therefore, where a woman seeks an abortion neither because her life is in danger nor because her religion demands it, and where her claimed constitutional right to an abortion is grounded solely in her Fourteenth Amendment personal liberty/due process rights, the analysis in Bowers leads a fortiori to the conclusion that the right ought not be deemed "fundamental." Accordingly, states that seek to restrict or prohibit abortions in those cases should be permitted to do so on any rational basis, even in the absence of a compelling state interest.

Abortion Does Become A "Fundamental" Right When Its Performance is Necessary to Preserve the Mother's Life Or is Mandated Under Her Religious Beliefs

The conclusion that most abortions are not grounded in any "fundamental" right does not mean that access to abortion is never a "fundamental" right. In exceptional cases, it is. Specifically, where an abortion is sought to preserve maternal life, or as an expression of free religious exercise, the right to obtain one is indeed "fundamental."

Roe v. Wade itself makes clear that abortions in situations involving danger to the mother's life are entitled to enhanced constitutional protection. In those cases, as well as in cases where maternal health is at stake, states must permit abortions even subsequent to fetal viability. 410 U.S. at 163-64. See Thornburgh, supra, 476 U.S. at 768-69; Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379, 397-401 (1979). Reconsideration of the central holding of Roe -- that all abortions are expressions of a "fundamental" right -- by no means requires the Court to vitiate the enhanced constitutional status of at least those abortions performed to preserve the mother's life. Such abortions have long been permitted by civilized societies (see, e.g., Mishnah, Tractate Oholoth 7:6) and under the laws of the various states (see Roe, supra, 410 U.S. at 138-40). Employing the Bowers analysis cited above, access to abortion in such cases is "deeply rooted in this Nation's history and tradition" and, we submit, "implicit in the concept of ordered liberty." It is therefore entitled to be characterized as a "fundamental" right.

Moreover, for a state to deprive a woman the right to abortion even where her life is in danger is not merely to deprive her, without due process, of some vague sense of personal liberty protected under the Fourteenth Amendment; it is literally to deprive her, without due process, of the "life" the Fourteenth Amendment expressly guarantees. "Fundamental liberties and interests are most clearly present when the Constitution provides specific textual recognition of their existence and importance." Thornburgh, supra, 476 U.S. at 790 (White, J., dissenting). The Constitution comes a great deal closer to providing specific textual recognition of the right to abortion where the mother's life is in danger than where the pregnancy simply interferes with her conveniences.

In addition, even if preservation of maternal life by itself would not elevate abortion to the status of a "fundamental" right, there are times when the right to abortion should be deemed "fundamental" on the basis of the woman's religious beliefs. Under sinaitic Jewish law, for example, danger to a mother's life at any stage prior to parturition requires an abortion. See generally, e.g., J.D. Bleich, Abortion in Halakhic Literature, reprinted in the author's Contemporary Halakhic Problems 325, 354-56 (Ktav/Yeshiva University Press 1977). There may exist other situations as well in which a state's decision to outlaw abortion will burden a woman's First Amendment free exercise rights. In those relatively few cases, a rational basis should not be a sufficient basis for proscribing abortion.

Free exercise rights are indisputably "fundamental." E.g., Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205, 214 (1972). Accordingly, government may not burden free religious exercise unless it can show that "an inroad on religious liberty . . . is the least restrictive means of achieving some compelling state interest," Thomas v. Review Board of the Indiana Employment Security Division, 450 U.S. 707, 718 (1981); or, as the Yoder Court put it, "only those interests of the highest order and those not otherwise served can overbalance legitimate claims to the free exercise of religion." 406 U.S. at 215. Although the Court has not had occasion to consider the applicability of its free exercise jurisprudence to the abortion context -- Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297, 320-21 (1980), the one case where the issue was raised, was dismissed on this point because the plaintiffs lacked free exercise standing -- there is every reason to emphasize both its relevance and importance in any post-Roe regulatory framework.

If the Court will indeed use this case as a vehicle to "reconsider[ ] and discard[ ]" the fundamental right/compelling state interest framework of Roe v. Wade "in favor of [a] rational basis test" -- as it suggested it might when it accepted the case for review, 57 U.S.L.W. at 3442 (Jan. 10, 1989), and as we have urged it to do with respect to most abortions -- we would respectfully suggest that the Court at the same time emphasize that abortions necessary to preserve maternal life or mandated by religious belief continue to enjoy special status under the constitution.

II. MISSOURI'S "FINDING" THAT HUMAN LIFE BEGINS AT CONCEPTION VIOLATES THE ESTABLISHMENT CLAUSE

It is by now well known to even the most secular scholars of the law that there are serious divisions among (and to some extent even within) the various religions regarding the onset of human existence. See, e.g., Roe v. Wade, supra, 410 U.S. at 160-61; McRae v. Califano, 491 F. Supp. 630, 690-702 (E.D.N.Y.), rev'd on other grounds sub. nom. Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980). Missouri has "found" that "the life of each human being begins at conception" (R.S. Mo. sec. 1.205 (1.1)) -- thereby coming down four-square on the side of certain religious teachings and in opposition to others. Just last month, however, the Court reminded us that "[i]n proscribing all laws 'respecting an establishment of religion,' the Constitution prohibits, at the very least, legislation that constitutes an endorsement of one or another set of religious beliefs . . ." Texas Monthly v. Bullock, ____ U.S. ____, 109 S.Ct. 889 (1989).

To understand what it is about Missouri's "finding" that contravenes the First Amendment's establishment clause, it is instructive to contrast this case with another in which the Court specifically found no establishment clause violation. In Harris v. McRae, supra, 448 U.S. at 319-20, the Court considered and rejected the argument that the Hyde Amendment's restrictions on abortion funding were predicated on the Roman Catholic viewpoint "concerning the sinfulness of abortion and the time at which life commences," and that they therefore unconstitutionally established religion. Citing McGowan v. Maryland's teaching that a statute does not necessarily violate the establishment clause simply because "it happens to coincide or harmonize with the tenets of some or all religions," 366 U.S. 420, 442 (1961), and noting that the Hyde Amendment reflects "traditionalist" values toward abortion no less than religious values, the Court concluded that "the fact that the funding restrictions in the Hyde Amendment may coincide with the religious tenets of the Roman Catholic Church does not, without more, contravene the Establishment Clause." 448 U.S. at 319-20 (emphasis added).

Here, we submit, there is more. For the Missouri legislature has not merely created legislation requiring its citizens to act in a way that happens to coincide with a religious viewpoint; it has purported to make a "finding" of fact in an area that lends itself to theological debate but not to objective observation or legislative fact-finding.

Justice White, in his Thornburgh dissent, characterized the "question of when human life begins" as "unanswerable." 476 U.S. at 800. Upon reflection, it becomes apparent why this is so, at least in any scientifically rational sense. There are, of course, certain objectively verifiable physical stages of fetal development, commencing from the moment of conception, proceeding through the various levels of pregnancy, and culminating in the actual birth. Advances in biology and medical technology enable observers better to gauge these various stages of fetal development, so that we might know at exactly what point certain fetal organs are present, at what point the fetus achieves viability, and so on. Undeniably, science and technology enable us to gain greater insight into the wonder of human development. But that is as far as they, and rational human thought, can ever take us. The ultimate question -- Is human life present? -- requires a pre-existent supra-rational value system that is capable of defining the very essence of human existence. The great faiths provide those value systems, each according to its own traditions and teachings.

Legislatures are in the business of regulating human conduct, not opining on metaphysical theology. Had Missouri refrained from issuing its "finding" that human life begins at conception, and merely enacted the rest of the law at issue in this case -- restricting the use of public employees, public facilities and public funds for abortions (R.S. Mo. Secs. 188.205, 188.210, 188.215); requiring performance of abortions after the sixteenth week of gestation in a hospital (R.S. Mo. Sec. 188.025); requiring doctors to determine fetal viability prior to performing certain abortions (R.S. Mo. Sec. 188.029); even declaring that unborn children have certain protectable interests (R.S. Mo. Sec. 1.205 (1.2,1.3)) -- there would be no establishment clause problem. Regulation of human conduct toward fetal life need not be premised on a particular religious conception concerning the precise moment human life is present. Whatever one's views on that inherently religious question, the state has a substantial interest in the protection of fetal life -- which all agree is at least potential human life -- sufficient to justify the types of regulations Missouri has imposed upon the performance of abortions.

Indeed, had Missouri enacted legislation that defined human life as beginning from the moment of conception solely for the purpose of a specific law, there would also likely be no establishment clause problem. It would be clear that the state was merely adopting a shorthand version of defining the interests it was seeking to protect; no governmental imprimatur of religious endorsement would be discernible.

By taking the extra step, though, of issuing an unrestricted legislative finding, tied to no specific law, in an area that is inherently beyond legislative competence and susceptible only of religious dogma, Missouri has enacted legislation that has a "principal or primary effect" of advancing a particular religious viewpoint. Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602, 612 (1971). As Professor Tribe has observed, "when government needlessly uses means that are inherently religious, a message of endorsement is virtually unavoidable. By adopting the language and precepts of a religion as its own, government implies that non-adherents are outsiders." L. Tribe, American Constitutional Law, at 1285 (2d Ed. 1988). That is what Missouri has done here.

Much in the mortal world may hinge upon a state's right to jump into the theological fray. As the Court recognized in Roe v. Wade, defining a fetus as a person from the moment of conception could lead to great legal mischief:

> "When Texas urges that a fetus is entitled to Fourteenth Amendment protection as a person, it faces a dilemma. Neither in Texas nor in any other State are all abortions prohibited. Despite broad proscription, an exception always exists. The exception contained in Art. 1196, for an abortion > procured or attempted by medical advice for the purpose of saving the life of the mother, is typical. But if the fetus is a person who is not to be deprived of life without due process of law, and if the mother's condition is the sole determinant, does not the Texas exception appear to be out of line with the Amendment's command?

>
> "There are other inconsistencies between Fourteenth Amendment status and the typical abortion statute. It has already been pointed out ... that in Texas the woman is not a principal or an accomplice with respect to an abortion upon her. If the fetus is a person, why is the woman not a principal or an accomplice? Further, the penalty for criminal abortion specified by Art. 1195 is significantly less than the maximum penalty for murder prescribed by Art. 1257 of the Texas Penal Code. If the fetus is a person, may the penalties be different?"

410 U.S. at 157-58 n. 54. The point is obvious: Once a state has the right to define for all purposes the onset of human life, and chooses to define it as of conception, the constitutional protections of the Fourteenth Amendment (among others) should logically extend no less to a fetus than to any other person -- including his or her mother.

One way to avoid this conundrum, obviously, would be to reaffirm the Court's approach in Roe v. Wade, by finding that abortion is a "fundamental" constitutional right, and that a state therefore "may not adopt one theory of when life begins to justify its regulation of abortions." City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416, 444 (1983). That is what the courts did below. Reproductive Health Service v. Webster, 851 F.2d 1071, 1075-77 (8th Cir. 1988). As we have argued in Point I above, however, we do not believe that is the correct approach; we think the Court should strip the right to abortion of its "fundamental" status in typical cases. But that should not give states free reign to define the onset of human life -- for in so doing, they impermissibly establish religion.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, amicus curiae Agudath Israel of America respectfully submits that Roe v. Wade's holding that all abortions are expressions of a "fundamental" constitutional right should be overruled; that abortion should be deemed a "fundamental" right only where necessary to preserve the life of the mother or where mandated by the mother's religious beliefs; and that Missouri's legislative "finding" that human life begins at conception should be struck down as a violation of the First Amendment establishment clause.

Respectfully submitted,

DAVID ZWIEBEL
General Counsel
AGUDATH ISRAEL OF AMERICA
84 William Street
New York, New York 10038
(212) 797-9000

March 1989

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
MAR 30 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L .WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

---

BRIEF FOR THE NATIONAL ORGANIZATION FOR WOMEN AS AMICUS CURIAE SUPPORTING APPELLEES

JOHN S.L. KATZ
1440 New York Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 371-7000
Counsel for
The National Organization for Women

WILSON - EPES PRINTING CO., INC. - 789-0096 - WASHINGTON, D.C. 20001

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
INTEREST OF THE NATIONAL ORGANIZATION FOR WOMEN	1
SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT	2
ARGUMENT	3
I. ROE v. WADE SHOULD BE UPHELD	3
A. Roe v. Wade Was Correctly Decided	3
B. Reversing or Limiting Roe v. Wade Would Have Negative Results	13
1. Anti-Abortion Laws Do Not Prevent Abortions	13
2. Banning Abortion Threatens Women's Lives	15
3. Allowing the States to Regulate Abortions Will Reduce the Availability of Abortion in All States	17
4. Reconsidering Roe v. Wade Would Create Legal Confusion	18
II. STARE DECISIS PRECLUDES OVERRULING ROE v. WADE	20
A. Stare Decisis Should Be Given Strict Adherence Where Individual Rights Are at Stake	20
B. Roe v. Wade Is Consistent with Prior Precedent	23
III. THE MISSOURI STATUTE AT ISSUE HERE IS UNCONSTITUTIONAL	25
CONCLUSION	27

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES: Page

Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416 (1983) ..... passim
Bailey v. Alabama, 219 U.S. 219 (1911) 12
Beal v. Doe, 432 U.S. 438 (1977) 10
Bellotti v. Baird, 428 U.S. 132 (1976) 23
Carey v. Population Services International, 431 U.S. 678 (1977) 5, 23
Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979) 7, 23, 25
Connecticut v. Menillo, 423 U.S. 9 (1975) 24
Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36 (1977) 21, 22
Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973) 24
Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S. 438 (1972) 18, 23
Erie R.R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64 (1938) 22
Feldman v. United States, 322 U.S. 487 (1944) 9
Glidden Co. v. Zdanok, 370 U.S. 530 (1962) 22
Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965) 5, 18, 23
Harris v. McCrae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980) 23, 24, 26
Helvering v. Hallock, 309 U.S. 106 (1940) 21, 22
H.L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398 (1981) 23
Hurtado v. California, 110 U.S. 516 (1884) 8
Loving v. Virginia, 338 U.S. 1 (1967) 23
Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977) 24, 27
Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390 (1923) 23
Michael M. v. Superior Court of Sonoma County, 450 U.S. 464 (1981) 11
Mitchell v. W. T. Grant Co., 416 U.S. 600 (1974) 21
Monell v. Dept. of Social Services of the City of New York, 436 U.S. 658 (1978) 21, 22
McCleskey v. Kemp, 481 U.S. 279 (1987) 8
McFall v. Shrimp, 10 Pa. D. & C.3d 90 (C.P. Ct. 1978) 11
Olmstead v. United States, 277 U.S. 438 (1928) 4, 9
Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510 (1925) 23
Planned Parenthood Ass'n of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 51 (1976) 23, 25

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Planned Parenthood Ass'n of Kansas City, Missouri v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476 (1983) 23, 25
Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 538 (1896) 12
Poe v. Ullman, 367 U.S. 497 (1961) 6
Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977) 23
Pollack v. Farmer's Loan & Trust Co., 157 U.S. 429 (1895) 22
Reproductive Health Services v. Webster, 851 F.2d 1071 (1988) 1, 25, 26, 27
Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) ..... passim
Sendak v. Arnold, 429 U.S. 968 (1976) 24
Simopoulous v. Virginia, 462 U.S. 506 (1983) 23
Singleton v. Wulff, 428 U.S. 106 (1976) 24
Skinner v. Oklahoma, 316 U.S. 535 (1942) 23
Slaughter-House Cases, 83 U.S. 36 (1873) 12, 13
Solorio v. United States, 55 U.S.L.W. 5038 (1987) 21
Stanley v. Georgia, 394 U.S. 557 (1969) 23
Taylor and Marshall v. Beckham, 178 U.S. 548 (1900) 8
Thomas v. Washington Gas Light Co., 448 U.S. 261 (1980) 21, 22
Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians & Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986) ..... passim
Union Pacific Rwy. v. Botsford, 141 U.S. 250 (1891) 11
United States v. Classic, 313 U.S. 299 (1941) 6
Vasquez v. Hillery, 474 U.S. 254 (1986) 20, 22
Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S. 589 (1977) 27
Whitney v. California, 274 U.S. 357 (1927) 8
Williams v. Zbarez, 448 U.S. 358 (1980) 23

CONSTITUTION AND STATUTES:

Amend. XIII 12, 13
Mo. Rev. Stat. (Vernon Supp. 1986):
§ 1.205.1(1) 25
§ 188.029 25
§ 188.205 26
§ 188.210 26
§ 188.215 26

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

MISCELLANEOUS: Page

Brief of the United States as amicus curiae 5, 20, 21
Cates, Putting the Risk in Perspective, Contraceptive Technology Update (November, 1989) 16
Forrest and Henshaw, The Harassment of U.S. Abortion Providers in Abortion Services in the United States, Each State & Metropolitan Area, 1984-1985 (Guttmacher Institute 1988) 17, 18
Fox, Abortion Deaths in California, 98 Am. J. of Obst. and Gynec. 645 (1967) 14, 15
Frejka, Induced Abortion and Fertility in Abortion Services in the United States Each State & Metropolitan Area, 1984-1985 (Guttmacher Institute 1988) 16, 17
Gallagher, Prenatal Invasions & Interventions: What's Wrong with Fetal Rights, 10 Harv. Women L.J. 9 (1987) 19
Garfield, Privacy, Abortion, and Judicial Review, 61 Wash. L. Rev. 293 (1986) 5, 9
Goldberg, Equal Justice: The Warren Era and the Supreme Court (1972) 20, 22
Hearing on the Medical and Psychological Impact of Abortion Before the Human Resources and Intergovernmental Relations Subcomm. of the House Comm. on Governmental Operations, 101st Cong., 1st Sess. 26 (1989) (Statement of Dr. Jaroslav Fabian Hulka, Professor of Obst. and Gynec., School of Medicine, University of North Carolina) 14, 16
Hearing on the Medical and Psychological Impact of Abortion Before the Human Resources and Intergovernmental Relations Subcomm. of the House Comm. on Governmental Operations, 101st Cong., 1st Sess. 26 (1989) (Final Draft Report of the Honorable C. Everett Koop, M.D., Surgeon General of the United States) 13, 16

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Hearing on the Medical and Psychological Impact of Abortion Before the Human Resources and Intergovernmental Relations Subcomm. of the House Comm. on Governmental Operations, 101st Cong., 1st Sess. 26 (1989) (Statement of Ralph R. Reed, M.D., Acting Assistant Secretary for Health, United States Public Health Service, Department of Health and Human Services) 16
Huber, Restricting or Prohibiting Abortion by Constitutional Amendment: Some Health Implications, 27 J. of Repro. Med. 729 (1982) 16, 18
Leff, The Leff Dictionary of Law: A Fragment, 94 Yale L.J. 1855 (1985) 7
Levin, Rizzi, and Veprovsky, Management of Incomplete Abortion, 83 Am. J. of Obst. and Gynec. 9 (1962) 15
Luker, Abortion and the Politics of Motherhood (1984) 6
Monoghan, Stare Decisis and Constitutional Adjudication, 88 Columbia L. Rev. 723 (1988) 21
N.Y. Times, October 30, 1988 19
N.Y. Times, November 26, 1988 ..... 14, 15
Reid, Assessment and Management of the Seriously Ill Patient Following Abortion, 199 J. of Am. Med. Ass'n 141 (1967) 15
Rhoden, Trimesters and Technology: Revamping Roe v. Wade, 95 Yale L.J. 639 (1986) 7
Sherman, Fetal Rights, 11 Nat'l L.J. 25 (1988) 19
Stevenson and Yang, Septic Abortion with Shock, 83 Am. J. of Obst. and Gynec. 1229 (1962) 15
Tietze, Induced Abortion, A World Review 1986 (Guttmacher Institute 1986) 14, 15, 17, 18
Tribe, The Supreme Court, 1972 Term—Foreword: Toward a Model of Roles in the Due Process of Life and Law, 87 Harv. L. Rev. 1 (1973) 13
Westfall, Beyond Abortion: The Potential Reach of a Human Life Amendment, 8 Am. J. of L. & Med. 97 (1982) 19 World Abortion Trends, 9 Population 1 (Sept. 1982 (Population Crisis Comm.) 14

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

No. 88-605

WILLIAM L .WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

---

BRIEF FOR THE NATIONAL ORGANIZATION FOR WOMEN AS AMICUS CURIAE SUPPORTING APPELLEES

INTEREST OF THE NATIONAL ORGANIZATION FOR WOMEN

The National Organization for Women (NOW) submits this amicus curiae brief in support of the appellees in this case.[1] NOW urges the Court to affirm the well-reasoned decision below by the Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, Reproductive Health Services v. Webster, 851 F.2d 1071 (1988). NOW further asks this Court to decline to overrule or in any way limit this Court's ruling in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), and subsequent cases that the constitutional right to privacy "necessarily includes the right of a woman to decide whether or not to terminate her pregnancy." 410 U.S. at 170 (Stewart, J., concurring).

---

[1] NOW has the written consent of both parties, filed with the Court, to file this brief.

NOW is the largest feminist organization in the United States. NOW's purpose is to bring full equality to women. Fundamental to NOW's purpose is the right of women to control their own bodies and to determine if and when to bear children. Women's right to reproductive freedom impacts not only their right to privacy, but also their health and safety. NOW has a strong interest in any case, such as this one, that involves women's basic rights and liberties.

As a defender of women's rights, NOW believes that it has an absolute need and right to address what the Solicitor General and the State of Missouri have interjected as the central issue in this case: whether women will continue to make fundamental decisions regarding reproduction or whether that role will be usurped by the state.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Roe v. Wade was properly decided and should not be reconsidered. The right to choose an abortion is necessarily encompassed by the constitutional right to privacy. Attacks on Roe v. Wade stem from an unacceptable narrow view of the right to privacy, a distorted view of history and case law, and a mistaken belief that the scope of individual rights should be determined by state legislatures, rather than protected by the courts. Moreover, these attacks fail to recognize the crucial significance to women of the right to choose between an abortion and childbirth.

A reversal or limiting of Roe v. Wade would have far-reaching impacts. Statistics show that women will obtain abortions at the same rate, regardless of whether or not abortion is legal. Thus, the choice is not between abortion and childbirth, but between safe, legal abortions and the dangers of illegal abortions.

Undercutting Roe v. Wade would create legal confusion. In addition to the right to abortion, the right to contraception would be open to question. Without the protection of Roe v. Wade, women could be subjected to further encroachment on their privacy rights by states purporting to protect the fetus. Subordinating women's right's to those of the fetus could result in restrictions on individual liberty found nowhere else in our legal system.

The doctrine of stare decisis also weighs heavily against reversal of Roe v. Wade. Stare decisis precludes the arbitrary rejection of settled doctrine, particularly where, as here, the doctrine is consistent with precedent and has been upheld numerous times in the recent past. Even if there were some reason to question the rationale of Roe v. Wade, stare decisis would prevent the courts from erasing the sixteen years of fundamental societal change that were wrought in that decision.

The Missouri statute at issue here is unconstitutional, imposing severe restrictions on abortions similar to other restrictions struck down by this Court. Even judged under the less strict "undue burden" standard, the statute cannot stand.

I. ROE v. WADE SHOULD BE UPHELD

Roe v. Wade was correctly decided and should not be reconsidered by this Court. The attacks upon Roe v. Wade by, among others, the Solicitor General, are unconvincing. Moreover, a retreat from Roe v. Wade would have disastrous effects on women's health and lead to wide-spread disregard of any subsequently passed abortion restrictions. Finally, reversing or limiting Roe v. Wade would be bad law, opening to question the entire right-to-privacy line of cases and setting the dubious precedent that a woman's rights can be subordinated to those of a fetus at the whim of the state.

A. Roe v. Wade Was Correctly Decided

The Court's decision in Roe v. Wade was correct and should neither be reconsidered nor reversed. In Roe v. Wade, the Court carefully weighed the interests at stake and determined that the constitutional right to privacy

"is broad enough to encompass a woman's decision whether or not to terminate her pregnancy." 410 U.S. at 153. This conclusion was amply supported by precedent and fully in line with the principle that the Constitution provides "as against the government, the right to be left alone—the most comprehensive of rights and the right most valued by civilized man." Olmstead v. United States, 277 U.S. 438, 478 (1928) (Brandeis, J., dissenting).

The Solicitor General attacks Roe v. Wade for four reasons. He begins by asserting that the right to abortion is some lesser species of privacy right that has no grounding in American history and is not truly related to earlier right-to-privacy cases.[2] The Solicitor General then claims that if the state has an interest in potential life, that interest is equally compelling at all times during pregnancy.[3] Next, he argues that the Roe v. Wade court's division of pregnancy into trimesters and its premise that the state's interest in fetal life becomes compelling only at viability are untenable.[4] Finally, the Solicitor General suggests that the woman's right to abortion can best be governed by state legislatures.[5] The Solicitor General is wrong on all counts.

The Solicitor General argues that the Court should give a crabbed reading to the right to privacy, suggesting that the right is not "comprehensive" at all, and that the right to abortion is not constitutionally mandated. The Solicitor General appears to contend that unless it can be shown that the framers of the Constitution specifically considered and approved the right to abortion, that right is not cognizable. These conclusions are directly at odds with prior decisions by this Court. See, e.g., Thornburgh

---

[2] Brief of the United States as Amicus Curiae ("Solicitor General") at 11-15.

[3] Id. at 15-17.

[4] Id. at 17-20.

[5] Id. at 20-24.

v. American College of Obstetricians & Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747, 759 (1986) ("constitutional principles . . . provide the compelling reasons for recognizing the constitutional dimensions of a woman's right to decide whether to end her pregnancy"); Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416, 419 (1983) ("the right of privacy, grounded in the concept of personal liberty guaranteed by the Constitution, encompasses a woman's right to decide whether to terminate her pregnancy"); Carey v. Population Services International, 431 U.S. 678, 685 (1977) ("The decision whether or not to beget or bear a child is at the very heart of this cluster of constitutionally protected choices"); see also Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 486 (1965) ("We deal with a right of privacy older than the Bill of Rights, older than our political parties, older than our school system.")[6]

The Solicitor General cites anti-abortion laws enacted from the mid-Nineteenth Century up to the time that Roe v. Wade was decided as proof that the right to abortion has not historically been recognized.[7] This simple statement ignores the body of evidence, carefully presented in Roe v. Wade, that criminal laws restricting abortion "are of a relatively recent vintage."[8] As the Court noted:

> at the time of the adoption of the Constitution . . . a woman enjoyed a substantially broader right to terminate a pregnancy than she does in most States [at the time that Roe v. Wade was decided]. At least with respect to that early stage of pregnancy, and very possibly without such a limitation, the opportunity to make this choice was present in this country well into the 19th century.[9]

---

[6] See generally Garfield, Privacy, Abortion, and Judicial Review, 61 Wash. L. Rev. 293 (1986).

[7] Solicitor General at 16.

[8] 410 U.S. at 129; see generally id. at 129-147.

[9] Id. at 140-41.

It thus appears that the right to abortion remained unquestioned during most of this nation's first century. It is laws restraining the exercise of that right that are new and require justification.[10]

Even if the specific right to abortion were not envisioned by the framers, this Court has previously rejected claims that the Constitution protects only those rights specifically spelled out therein. In United States v. Classic, 313 U.S. 299, 316 (1941), Justice Stone explained that:

> in determining whether a provision of the Constitution applies to a new subject matter, it is of little significance that it is one with which the framers were not familiar. For in setting up an enduring framework of government they undertook to carry out for the indefinite future and in all the vicissitudes of the changing affairs of men, those fundamental purposes which the instrument itself discloses. Hence we read its words, not as we read legislative codes which are subject to continuous revision with the changing course of events, but as the revelation of the great purposes which were intended to be achieved by the Constitution as a continuing instrument of government.

See Poe v. Ullman, 367 U.S. 497, 543 (1961) (Harlan, J., dissenting) ("the full scope of the liberty guaranteed by the Due Process Clause cannot be found in or limited by the precise terms of the specific guarantees elsewhere provided in the Constitution").

As detailed below, Roe v. Wade was solidly grounded in a series of cases, stretching back to the early part of this century, recognizing that individuals have a right to protection from government interference in decisions regarding their private lives. Roe v. Wade is clearly in line with the "great purposes" of the Constitution.

---

[10] For a similar view, see generally Luker, Abortion and the Politics of Motherhood 11-39 (1984) and authorities cited therein.

The Solicitor General's claim that the state has an equal interest in life at all stages of pregnancy is also incorrect. The Court has repeatedly rejected attempts by states to assert their interests throughout pregnancy. See Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 163; Akron, 462 U.S. at 428. While a "powerful theological argument can be made for that position . . . [the Court's] jurisdiction is limited to the evaluation of secular state interests . . . the development of a fetus—and pregnancy itself—are not static conditions, and the assertion that the government's interest is static simply ignores this reality." Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 778 (Stevens, J., concurring).[11] See Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379, 386-89 (1979) (reviewing and affirming earlier holdings that state interest becomes compelling only at viability, and that viability must be determined in each case by the physician).[12] If the Solicitor General were correct, the state could impose detailed and burdensome restrictions upon women from the moment they became pregnant.[13] The Solicitor General proposes no standard under which state regulation could be limited were his argument accepted. His theory could result in overbroad, conflicting state regulation.

---

[11] See also Leff, The Leff Dictionary of Law: A Fragment, 94 Yale L.J. 1855, 1997 (1985) ("the relevant legal question ought not to be whether a fetus is "alive" or a "person" from the moment of conception, or the moment of viability, etc., as if the question were one of natural rather than social decision. A legal decision will still have to be made to whom the law ought to give protection and at what cost, paid by who[m]. . . .").

[12] The viability standard itself can be overly restrictive. For example, it is difficult to justify state control over late-term abortions in cases where the fetus is diagnosed as having an incurable defect that would condemn it to a short, pain-filled life. See Rhoden, Trimesters and Technology: Revamping Roe v. Wade, 95 Yale L.J. 639, 684-691 (1986). The decision whether to have an abortion in such a case is best left to the woman, who will in any event bear the consequences.

[13] See note 44, infra.

The assertion that Roe v. Wade's division of pregnancy into trimesters is untenable must similarly fall. In Akron, 462 U.S. at 429 note 11, this Court reaffirmed that the Roe v. Wade trimester system "continues to provide a reasonable legal framework for limiting a state's authority to regulate abortions." As the Court recognized in Roe v. Wade, an early abortion is safer than a later one; indeed, it is considerably safer for the woman than childbirth. See 410 U.S. at 163. The Solicitor General offers no reasonable alternative standard and no justification whatsoever for allowing the states to force unwilling women to carry early pregnancies to term.

Finally, the Solicitor General would turn over control of the reproductive aspect of women's lives to the various state legislatures, which he apparently considers appropriate arbiters of such purely personal choices, and would deny any role to the judiciary. The Solicitor General ignores the fact that important constitutional rights are at issue here. It is a fundamental tenet of constitutional jurisprudence that the judiciary is empowered to protect against "the occasional tyrannies of governing majorities," Whitney v. California, 274 U.S. 357 (1927) (Brandeis and Holmes, J.J., concurring), and that "liberty regulated by law cannot be permanently secured against the assaults of power or the tyranny of a majority, if the judiciary must be silent when rights existing independently of human sanction . . . are at the mercy of legislative action . . . ." Taylor and Marshall v. Beckham, 178 U.S. 548, 609 (1900) (Harlan, J., dissenting); see McCleskey v. Kemp, 481 U.S. 279, 343 (1987) (Brennan, J., dissenting) ("The Constitution declares that the majoritarian chorus may not alone dictate the conditions of social life").[14] [14] See also Hurtado v. California, 110 U.S. 516, 536 (1884) ("The limitations imposed by our constitutional law upon the action of the governments, both State and national, are essential to the preservation of public and private rights, notwithstanding the representative character of our political institutions. The enforcement of these limitations by judicial process is the device of self-governing communities to protect the rights of individuals and minorities, as well as against the power of numbers. . . ."); Feldman v. United States, 322 U.S. 487, 501 (1944) (Black, J., dissenting).

---

There is no guarantee that state legislatures, however well-intentioned, will adequately protect individual rights. Indeed, "[e]xperience teaches us to be most on our guard to protect liberty when Government's purposes are beneficient. . . . The greatest dangers to liberty lurk in insidious encroachment by men of zeal, well-meaning but without understanding." Olmstead, 277 U.S. at 479 (Brandeis, J., dissenting). See Garfield, supra note 6, at 359:

> Abortion laws attempt to solve, not so much a social problem, as an individual problem of great complexity and great import to the individual involved. In this context, the intractable nature of the problem leads to the conclusion, not that it should be left to the legislatures, but that it should be left to the individual. Whatever the decision may be, it is the individual who is going to have to deal with its consequences, not the state. When the consequences are so grave and far reaching, only the person who must bear them should be entitled to make the choice.

The Solicitor General suggests that the majority, in the person of State legislatures, should decide what for all women is a deeply personal, ethical and spiritual question and that the will of the majority should be absolute. Yet no decision can be more personal, more private, or more important to a woman than her choice whether or not to accept the risks and obligations of bearing a child. This decision is one which individual women are uniquely qualified to make. No legislature can possibly weigh the considerations that face individual women and craft regulations that adequately cover all cases. The choice whether to obtain an abortion can only be meaningfully exercised by individual women.

Throughout his argument, the Solicitor General ignores the impact of forced pregnancy on women, apparently not realizing the consequences of a reconsideration of Roe v. Wade. This Court, however, has recognized that the denial of the right to abortion would have a wide range of negative effects upon women forced to bear unwanted children. In Roe v. Wade, the Court explained:

> The detriment that the State would impose upon the pregnant woman by denying this choice altogether is apparent. Specific and direct harm medically diagnosable even in early pregnancy may be involved. Maternity, or additional offspring, may force upon the woman a distressful life and future. Psychological harm may be imminent. Mental and physical health may be taxed by child care. There is also the distress, for all concerned, associated with the unwanted child, and there is the problem of bringing a child into a family already unable, psychologically and otherwise, to care for it. In other cases, as in this one, the additional difficulties and continuing stigma of unwed motherhood may be involved.

410 U.S. at 153. These impacts can be even harsher on disadvantaged women, such as those who are poor, young or disabled, who are least able to cope with the burdens of compulsory pregnancy or unwanted motherhood.[15]

There is no authority for the proposition that the state can compel an individual to give up the right to control

---

[15] See Beal v. Doe, 432 U.S. 438, 458-59 (1977) (Marshall, J., dissenting):

> An unwanted child may be disruptive and destructive of the life of any woman, but the impact is felt most by those too poor to ameliorate those effects. If funds for an abortion are unavailable, a poor woman may feel that she is forced to obtain an illegal abortion that poses a serious threat to her health and even her life. . . . If she refuses to take this risk, and undergoes the pain and danger of state-financed pregnancy and childbirth, she may well give up all chance of escaping the cycle of poverty. Absent day-care facilities, she will be forced into full-time child care for years to come; she will be unable to work so that her family can break out of the welfare system or the lowest income brackets. If she already has children, another infant to feed and clothe may well stretch the budget past the breaking point. All chance to control the direction of her own life will have been lost.

See also Michael M. v. Superior Court of Sonoma County, 450 U.S. 464, 473 (1981), where then-Justice Rehnquist concluded for the Court that "virtually all of the significant harmful and inescapably identifiable consequences of teenage pregnancy fall on the young female."

his or her body to benefit another.[16] The idea, for example, that the state could determine that a supposedly less worthy member of society must donate an organ to save the life of a pillar of the community is unthinkable.

---

[16] See, e.g., Union Pacific Rwy. v. Botsford, 141 U.S. 250, 251 (1891) ("No right is held more sacred, or is more carefully guarded . . . than the right of every individual to the possession and control of his own person, free from all restraint or influence of others, unless by clear and unquestionable authority of law."); see also McFall v. Shrimp, 10 Pa. D. & C.3d 90, 91 (C.P. Ct. 1978), where the court refused a request from a man suffering anemia to force his cousin to donate bone marrow to him, stating:

> For a society, which respects the right of one individual, to sink its teeth into the jugular vein or the neck of one of its members and suck from it sustenance for another member, is revolting to our hard-wrought concepts of jurisprudence. Forceable extraction of living body tissue causes revulsion to the judicial mind. Such would raise the spectre of the swastika and the Inquisition, reminiscent of the horror this portends.

So too, is it far beyond the pale to suggest that a parent be ordered to undergo surgery and months of life-threatening activity in order to benefit a child. Yet that is precisely what women may be forced to do if Roe v. Wade is reconsidered. And the sacrifice would be required, not for a living human being, but for a fetus, which has never been accorded personhood in our jurisprudence.[17] Forcing a woman to undergo an unwanted pregnancy and delivery clearly is not risk-free. In no other case does society dictate to a patient acceptance of a procedure that is considerably more dangerous, lengthy, and expensive than the procedure of the patient's choice.

Indeed, forcing a woman to sacrifice her body and put her life at risk by carrying an unwanted pregnancy to term is akin to the involuntary servitude that is barred by the Thirteenth Amendment. This Court has held that the Thirteenth Amendment was enacted:

> to abolish slavery of whatever name and form and all its badges and incidents; to render impossible any state of bondage; to make labor free by prohibiting that control by which the personal service of one . . . is disposed or coerced for other's benefit which is the essence of involuntary servitude.

Bailey v. Alabama, 219 U.S. 219 (1911).[18] The Thirteenth Amendment "is not confined to African slavery alone. It is general and universal in its application. Slavery of white men as well as of black men is prohibited, and not merely slavery in the strict sense of the [17] See Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 779 (Stevens, J., concurring); Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 156-59.

---

[18] See also Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 538, 555 (1896) ("The Thirteenth Amendment does not permit the withholding or the deprivation of any right necessarily inhering in freedom. It not only struck down the institution of slavery as previously existing in the United States, but it prevents the imposition of any burdens or disabilities that constitute badges of slavery or servitude.") (Harlan, J., dissenting); see Slaughter-House Cases, 83 U.S. 36, 72 (1873).

term, but involuntary servitude in every form." Slaughter-House Cases, 83 U.S. at 90 (Field, J., dissenting). Requiring women to surrender control of their bodies to the state during pregnancy is in a very real sense a form of involuntary servitude and thus is inconsistent with the letter and spirit of the Thirteenth Amendment.[19]

B. Reversing or Limiting Roe v. Wade Would Have Negative Results

Reversing or limiting Roe v. Wade would create a fundamental upheaval in American society. Women accustomed to the free exercise of their constitutional rights would be faced with a bewildering, inconsistent patchwork of state regulation. The consequences on women's health, society's respect for the law, and on the law itself would be devastating.

1. Anti-Abortion Laws Do Not Prevent Abortions.

Before Roe v. Wade, as many as 1.2 million American women obtained illegal abortions every year.[20] There is no reason to believe that the situation would be different if Roe v. Wade were overturned. Reversing or limiting Roe v. Wade, then, would restore massive disrespect for and disobedience of laws that cannot be enforced.

---

[19] See Tribe, The Supreme Court, 1972 Term—Foreword: Toward a Model of Roles in the Due Process of Life and Law, 87 Harv L. Rev. 1, 40 (1973):

> A woman in contemporary America who is coerced into submitting herself, at the insistence of a man empowered by law to control her choice, to the pains and anxieties of carrying, delivering, and nurturing a child she did not wish to conceive or does not want to bear and raise, is entitled to believe that more than a play on words has come to link her forced labor with the concept of involuntary servitude.

[20] Hearing on the Medical and Psychological Impact of Abortion Before the Human Resources and Intergovernmental Relations Subcomm. of the House Comm. on Governmental Operations, 101st

Global abortion statistics show that making abortion illegal does not reduce the abortion rate. The abortion rate in the United States now is little different from what it was when abortion was generally unlawful.[21] Abortion rates in countries where abortion is severely restricted, including Brazil, Argentina, and Mexico, are equal to the rate in the United States.[22] In Latin America, where abortions generally are illegal, some 10 to 12 million women nonetheless procure abortions each year.[23] In Ireland, where abortion is illegal, the overall abortion rate (including abortions obtained in foreign countries) is the same as in the Netherlands, where abortions are freely available.[24]

It thus appears clear that the legal status of abortion does not serve as a deterrent. Women will seek and obtain abortions whether or not they are legal. To reconsider Roe v. Wade would be to ignore this reality and condemn women to the danger of illegal and often unsafe abortions.

Cong., 1st Sess. 26 (1989) (Final Draft Report of the Honorable C. Everett Koop, M.D., Surgeon General of the United States, at 12) [hereinafter Surgeon General's Report]; see Fox, Abortion Deaths in California, 98 Am. J. of Obst. and Gynec. 645 (1967).

[21] Hearing on the Medical and Psychological Impact of Abortion Before the Human Resources and Intergovernmental Relations Subcomm. of the House Comm. on Governmental Operations, 101st Cong., 1st Sess. 26 (1989) (Statement of Dr. Jaroslav Fabian Hulka, Professor of Obst. and Gynec., School of Medicine, University of North Carolina) [hereinafter Hulka Testimony] at 3 ("One out of four pregnancies ended in induced abortion before legalization, the same rate as now. Regardless of what Congress or the Supreme Court decide this year, it will be true next year").

[22] World Abortion Trends, 9 Population 1 (Sept. 1982) (Population Crisis Comm.).

[23] N.Y. Times, November 26, 1988, at 1, col. 4.

[24] Tietze, Induced Abortion, A World Review 1986 (Guttmacher Institute 1986) at 3.

2. Banning Abortion Threatens Women's Lives.

As noted, before Roe v. Wade, some 1.2 million illegal abortions were performed each year. And women were dying from illegal abortions. Between 1958 and 1972, an annual average of over 260 women died as a result of abortions, a rate of approximately one in every 4,600 abortions.[25] In addition, thousands of women were severly injured as a result of botched, illegal abortions.[26] Often, death resulted when women attempted their own abortions, utilizing such crude techniques as inserting foreign objects into their vaginas and uteruses, including metal rods, curtain rods, copper wire, telephone wire, chopsticks, coat hangers and knitting needles; drinking caustic solutions such as pine oil, Lysol, soap, alcohol, and hydrogen peroxide; and inserting air by syringe, football pump, and bicycle pump.[27]

The World Health Organization has established that as many as 200,000 women die every year in developing countries as a result of unsafe abortions.[28] Illegal abortion now is Latin America's leading cause of pregnancy-related mortality.[29] Romania has twice imposed restrictions on abortion in the last three decades. Despite these [25] Derived from Tietze, supra note 24 at 131 (Table 22). If the number of abortions was less than 1.2 million, the mortality rate becomes even greater.

---

[26] Treatment of women suffering from the complications of illegal abortions was a common subject of discussion in medical literature during the 1960s. See e.g., Reid, Assessment and Management of the Seriously Ill Patient Following Abortion, 199 J. of Am. Med. Ass'n 141 (1967); Fox, supra note 20; Stevenson and Yang, Septic Abortion with Shock, 83 Am. J. of Obst. and Gynec. 1229 (1962); Levin, Rizzi, and Veprovsky, Management of Incomplete Abortion, 83 Am. J. Obst. and Gynec. 9 (1962).

[27] Fox, supra note 20, at 648-49.

[28] N.Y. Times, November 26, 1988, at 1, col. 4.

[29] Id.

barriers, the abortion rate has risen constantly, while abortion-related deaths have increased by 500 percent.[30]

After abortion was legalized in the United States as a result of Roe v. Wade, illegal abortions and resultant deaths dropped dramatically. Abortion is now considered an extremely safe procedure, since it is now performed under sanitary conditions by trained medical personnel.[31] The United States Center for Disease Control reported that in 1985 there were only six deaths from legal abortion in the United States, or one for every 200,000 abortions.[32] For abortions performed during the first trimester of pregnancy the rate is even lower, one in 400,000.[33] Full-term pregnancy and childbirth pose a seven to ten times greater risk of death to a woman than an early abortion.[34] Moreover, medical studies have shown that legal abortion does not lead to any difficulty in subsequent conception or pregnancy.[35]

---

[30] See Huber, Restricting or Prohibiting Abortion by Constitutional Amendment: Some Health Implications, 27 J. of Repro. Med. 729 (1982).

[31] Surgeon General's Report, supra note 20, at 12-13. ("Major medical and public health associations thus consider abortion a safe surgical procedure when performed by a licensed physician in a good clinical setting").

[32] Hearing on the Medical and Psychological Impact of Abortion Before the Human Resources and Intergovernmental Relations Subcomm. of the House Comm. on Governmental Operations, 101st Cong., 1st Sess. 26 (1989) (Statement of Ralph R. Reed, M.D., Acting Assistant Secretary for Health, United States Public Health Service, Department of Health and Human Services, at 4).

[33] Cates, Putting the Risk in Perspective, Contraceptive Technology Update (November, 1980). Ninety percent of all abortions are performed in the first trimester, forty-seven percent in the first eight weeks. Surgeon General's Report at 11.

[34] Hulka Testimony, supra note 21, at 2.

[35] Surgeon General's Report, supra note 20, at 12-13; Hulka Testimony, supra note 21, at 2; Frejka, Induced Abortion and

The choice presented here is stark. Legal abortions are safe and simple; illegal abortions are life-threatening. Yet, if this Court were to reverse or limit Roe v. Wade, state bans on abortion and contraception could resurrect the health care crisis posed by illegal abortions.

3. Allowing the States to Regulate Abortions Will Reduce the Availability of Abortions in All States.

An indirect impact of a decision to permit the states to ban abortion will be increased difficulty in obtaining abortion even in those states that continue to permit them. Even now, abortion is not readily available to all women. Ninety-one percent of all counties in the United States have no abortion providers at all.[36] If abortion can be made illegal on a state-by-state basis, this situation will be exacerbated. Many states and regions will have no abortion providers. This will result in women having to travel, perhaps long distances, to find an abortion provider.[37] Those who cannot afford to do so will be forced to turn to illegal abortion.

In addition, a signal from this Court that the right to abortion is not subject to judicial protection will give increased impetus to those seeking to chill the exercise of that right where it remains legal. In 1985, almost half of all abortion providers experienced at least one form of harassment by anti-abortion activists.[38] Eighty-

---

Fertility in Abortion Services In The United States, Each State & Metropolitan Area, 1984-1985 at 63-67 (Guttmacher Institute 1988).

[36] Id.

[37] See Tietze, supra note 24, at 131 ("restrictions appear to have little effect on the abortion rate, although they may result in delay, inconvenience, increased travel distance, increased cost and international migration of women seeking abortions") (citation omitted); see also Akron, 462 U.S. at 434-35.

[38] Forrest and Henshaw, The Harassment of U.S. Abortion Providers in Abortion Services in the United States, Each State & Metropolitan Area, 1984-1985 at 32 (Guttmacher Institute 1988).

three percent of large, non-hospital abortion facilities were subjected to harassment, including picketing, bomb threats, physical contact with patients, invasion of the facility, vandalism, death threats and tracing of patient's license plate numbers.[39] If the number of states permitting abortion shrinks, the pressure on remaining abortion providers will grow, making it even harder for women to obtain abortions.

4. Reconsidering Roe v. Wade Would Create Legal Confusion.

If the Court were to reverse or limit Roe v. Wade, the states might conclude that the entire right-to-privacy line of cases is open to question. For example, some widely used contraceptives, including certain oral contraceptives and the intrauterine device, are abortifacients that do not prevent ovulation or fertilization, but rather interfere with the implantation of the ferilized egg in the uterine wall.[40] This Court has held repeatedly that the Constitution protects the right to obtain contraceptives. Carey, 431 U.S. 678; Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S. 438 (1972); Griswold, 381 U.S. 479. Yet, if the states are allowed to restrict access to abortion, they may well assert the right to ban all contraceptives that operate as abortifacients. Ironically, such actions could well result in an increased abortion rate. Since abortifacients are the most effective contraceptives, a ban on their use would lead directly to a radically increased number of unwanted pregnancies and a correspondingly higher abortion rate, whether legal or illegal.[41] In addition, a ban on abortion could deprive women of access to the

[39] Id.

[40] See Huber, supra note 30, at 730-732.

[41] See Tietze, supra note 24, at 132 ("Part of the decline in the number of illegal abortions in the United States was undoubtedly due to more widespread use of more effective contraceptives, notably the Pill and the IUD. . . .").

most modern, safe technology, such as the new abortion-inducing drug RU 486.[42] Women will be precluded from safe alternatives and forced to take unnecessary risks to obtain what should be safe, simple medical care.

Reversing or limiting Roe v. Wade also would encourage rulings restricting or punishing pregnant women on the basis of conduct allegedly harmful to the fetus. Cases already before the courts include: a doctor seeking a court order requiring a woman to abstain from non-prescription drugs; a father suing a mother on behalf of a child because a drug the woman took during pregnancy allegedly discolored the child's teeth; criminal charges being brought against a woman who allegedly failed to follow her doctor's advice to avoid sexual intercourse and drugs; and a pregnant women charged with forging $700 worth of checks being jailed to protect her fetus from her alleged cocaine use.[43] This assault on women's civil liberties must not be encouraged.[44]

Reversing or limiting Roe v. Wade would pose far more questions than it would answer. There is no reason [42] See N.Y. Times, October 30, 1988, at 1, col. 1.

[43] Sherman, Fetal Rights, 11 Nat'l L.J. 25, at col. 1 (1988).

[44] See Gallagher, Prenatal Invasions & Interventions: What's Wrong with Fetal Rights, 10 Harv. Women L.J. 9 (1987); see also Westfall, Beyond Abortion: the Potential Reach of a Human Life Amendment, 8 Am. J. of L. & Med. 97, 111 (1982) ("[Women] might be required to lead less active life-styles in order to preserve the life of a conceptus (or possible conceptus). The interests of the conceptus will often diverge from those of the woman in such matters. From the standpoint of the conceptus, a passive carrier who exposes it to the minimum risk of miscarriage or prenatal injury is preferred. She should not smoke, drink, or use any drugs with possible adverse effects on the conceptus. Skiing, working in hazardous environments, flying, and riding in automobiles might be prohibited for such women in order to minimize possible adverse effects on the conceptus. Indeed, the Victorian regime for upper-class pregnant women that minimizes activities either inside or outside the home might be ideal").

for this Court to plunge the country into the fear, confusion and uncertainty that would follow such an action. Accordingly, Roe v. Wade should be reaffirmed.

II. STARE DECISIS PRECLUDES OVERRULING ROE v. WADE

A. Stare Decisis Should Be Given Strict Adherence Where Individual Rights Are at Stake

Stare decisis, the rule of following existing precedent, is a crucial underpinning of our legal system because it "promotes the even-handed, predictable, and consistent development of legal principles; it fosters reliance on judicial rules; and it contributes to the fact and appearance of integrity in our judicial system." [45] The principle of stare decisis requires "that every successful proponent of overruling precedent has borne the heavy burden of persuading the Court that changes in society or in the law dictate that the values served by stare decisis yield in favor of a greater objective." Vasquez v. Hillery, 474 U.S. 254, 266 (1986). Former Justice Goldberg has articulated a sensible formulation for the application of the rule, explaining that:

> stare decisis applies with an uneven force—that when the Supreme Court seeks to overrule in order to cut back the individual's fundamental, constitutional protections against governmental interference, the commands of stare decisis are all but absolute; yet when a court overrules to extend personal liberties, the doctrine imposes a markedly less restrictive caution.[46]

There have been no changes in society or in the law that justify reconsidering Roe v. Wade. Indeed, the Court

---

[45] Solicitor General at 9.

[46] Goldberg, Equal Justice: The Warren Era and the Supreme Court at 74 (1972).

should be exceptionally wary of overturning precedent where, as here, it is being asked to restrict a hitherto accepted right, in this case, that of a woman to determine whether to continue a pregnancy. In addition, where, as here, the matters in question are the subject of public debate, adherence to precedent can reassure society that constitutional questions are answered with reference to settled principles, rather than in response to political considerations.[47]

The Solicitor General cites several cases for the proposition that stare decisis has less force in constitutional litigation and that the Court should reexamine precedent where its reasoning is called into question.[48] None of these cases is on point here. In most of the cases cited, the Court found the overruled decision to have been inconsistent with earlier precedents.[49] No party has shown that Roe v. Wade is in any way inconsistent with this Court's prior rulings. In fact, as will be discussed below, Roe v. Wade rests securely on a long line of cases recognizing the right of the individual to privacy and to be protected from undue interference by the state. Also, [47] See Monaghan, Stare Decisis and Constitutional Adjudication, 88 Columbia L. Rev. 723, 751 (1988) ("even when expectations or practices are not deeply entrenched, if serious public debate still surrounds an issue, departure from precedent may sometimes threaten the stability and continuity of the political order and should therefore be avoided: Roe provides a ready example") (footnote omitted).

---

[48] Solicitor General at 9.

[49] E.g., Solorio v. United States, 55 U.S.L.W. 5038, 5039-42 (1987); Thomas v. Washington Gas Light Co., 448 U.S. 261, 273-75 (1980); Monell v. Dept. of Social Services of the City of New York, 436 U.S. 658, 695-96 (1978); Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 47 (1977); Mitchell v. W.T. Grant Co., 416 U.S. 600, 628 (1974) (Powell, J., concurring); Helvering v. Hallock, 309 U.S. 106, 119 (1940).

many of the cited cases represent expansions of individual rights;[50] none involves a dilution of these rights.[51]

Were the Court to reverse or limit Roe v. Wade, it would undermine the very purpose of stare decisis, "the public belief that . . . rights labelled fundamental in the past still retain their status."[52] As explained by Justice Edward White:

> The fundamental conception of a judicial body is that of one hedged about by precedents which are binding on the court without regard to the personality of its members. Break down this belief in judicial continuity, and let it be felt that on great constitutional questions this court is to depart from the settled conclusions of its predecessors, and to determine them all according to the mere opinion of those who temporarily fill its bench, and our Constitution will, in my judgment, be bereft of value and become a most dangerous instrument to the rights and liberties of the people.

Pollock v. Farmer's Loan & Trust Co., 157 U.S. 429, 652 (1895) (White, J., dissenting), vacated on rehearing, 158 U.S. 601 (1895). A retreat from Roe v. Wade would lead the public to believe that political considerations, rather than adherence to constitutional principles, moti-

---

[50] E.g., Vasquez, 474 U.S. 254 (vindicating protection against discrimination in jury selection); Thomas, 448 U.S. 261 (expanding the ability to receive worker's compensation); Monell, 436 U.S. 658 (expanding right of individual to sue municipalities); Erie R.R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64 (1938) (expanding protection of foreign individuals against discrimination in state courts).

[51] A number of the cited cases do not directly implicate individual rights. E.g., Continental T.V., 433 U.S. 36 (whether per se rule or rule of reason applied in antitrust action); Glidden Co. v. Zdanok, 370 U.S. 530 (1962) (question involved whether certain courts were Article III courts); Helvering, 309 U.S. 106 (question regarding tax treatment of an estate).

[52] Goldberg, supra note 46, at 94.

vated the Court's rulings. Such an unfortunate perception must be avoided.

B. Roe v. Wade Is Consistent with Prior Precedent

It is impossible to look at Roe v. Wade in isolation. Roe v. Wade is part of an unbroken chain of cases in which this Court "has recognized that a right of personal privacy, or a guarantee of certain areas or zones of privacy, does exist under the Constitution." Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 152. The diversity of these decisions demonstrates that the right to privacy is not to be construed narrowly.[53] This Court has recognized "the right to be free, except in very limited circumstances, from unwarranted governmental intrusion into one's privacy." Stanley v. Georgia, 394 U.S. 557 (1969). Thus, those who seek to undermine Roe v. Wade attack not only the holding of that case, but also the basic principle that "the Constitution embodies a promise that a certain private sphere of individual liberty will be kept largely beyond the reach of government." Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 772.

Moreover, Roe v. Wade hardly stands alone. Since 1973, the Court has had repeated occasion to revisit the issue of the right to abortion and consistently has confirmed that right.[54] Even when upholding laws that argu-

---

[53] See, e.g., Eisenstadt, 405 U.S. 438 (right of both married and unmarried couples to have access to contraception); Loving v. Virginia, 388 U.S. 1 (1967) (right to marriage); Griswold, 381 U.S. 479 (right of married couples to obtain contraceptives); Skinner v. Oklahoma, 316 U.S. 535 (1942) (right to ability to procreate); Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510 (1925) (right to attend private school); Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390 (1923) (right to learn a foreign language).

[54] See Thornburgh, 476 U.S. 747; Akron, 462 U.S. 416; Planned Parenthood Ass'n of Kansas City, Missouri v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476 (1983); Simopoulous v. Virginia, 462 U.S. 506 (1983); H.L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398 (1981); Harris v. McCrae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980); Williams v. Zbarez, 448 U.S. 358 (1980); Colautti, 439 U.S. 379; Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977); Carey, 431 U.S. 678 (1977); Bellotti v. Baird, 428 U.S. 132 (1976); Planned Parent- ably restrict women's access to abortion—such as statutes barring the provision of state funds for poor women seeking abortions—the Court has emphasized that its holding "signals no retreat from Roe or the cases applying it." Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977).[55] Indeed, in one of the most recent abortion cases, this Court explained in detail why stare decisis, as well as reasoned decision-making, bound the Court to uphold Roe v. Wade. See Akron, 462 U.S. at 420-21 and n.1.[56]

This review of case law demonstrates not only that is Roe v. Wade in accord with prior precedent, but also that its holding has been affirmed by this Court more than a dozen times over the last sixteen years. As a result, overturning or limiting Roe v. Wade would be a revolutionary act. Unlike other cases cited to this Court as examples of cases that have been reversed, Roe v. Wade is not inconsistent with earlier cases, is not stale, and has not been overtaken by subsequent developments. There is nothing in the record to demonstrate that either society or law has changed in such a way as to require reversal.[57] hood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976); Sendak v. Arnold, 429 U.S. 968 (1976); Singleton v. Wulff, 428 U.S. 106 (1976); Connecticut v. Menillo, 423 U.S. 9 (1975); Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973).

---

[55] See also Harris, 448 U.S. at 312 ("The constitutional underpinning of Roe v. Wade was a recognition that the 'liberty' protected by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment includes not only the freedoms explicitly mentioned in the Bill of Rights, but also a freedom of personal choice in certain matters of marriage and family life") (footnote omitted).

[56] Those asking this Court to reverse Roe v. Wade, then, are asking the Court not only to reverse that case, but also to reverse its own holding that stare decisis precludes such a reversal.

[57] As demonstrated above, the abortion rate remains essentially unchanged, showing that women have a consistent need to exercise their right to abortion. The fact that anti-abortion forces have increased their attempts to chill the exercise of this right hardly constitutes a change cognizable by this Court as a basis for reversal.

In fact, as demonstrated above, the impact of Roe v. Wade has been entirely positive, essentially eliminating illegal abortion and its devastating impact upon women. Stare decisis, then, counsels strongly against reversing or limiting Roe v. Wade.

III. THE MISSOURI STATUTE AT ISSUE HERE IS UNCONSTITUTIONAL

The Missouri statute at issue here represents the state's third attempt to pass a law "designed to prevent a woman, with the advice of her physician, from exercising her freedom of choice." Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 759; Planned Parenthood v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. at 476, see Planned Parenthood v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52. Like the earlier attempts, the current statute is unconstitutional.[58]

The statute begins with a preamble that asserts, inter alia, that life begins at conception. See Mo. Rev. Stat. § 1.205.1(1) (1986). This legislative finding is barred by the Court's rejection of a similar statute, based upon its holding in Roe v. Wade that "a State may not adopt one theory of when life begins to justify its regulation of abortions." Akron, 462 U.S. at 444 (citing Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 159-162).

The statute goes on to require a psysician, before performing an abortion, to perform various tests apparently designed to determine the viability of the fetus. See Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.029 (1986). In Colautti, the Court affirmed its prior holdings that viability may vary from case-to-case and can be determined only in the judgment of the attending physician, stating that "neither the legislature nor the courts may proclaim one of the elements entering into the ascertainment of viability—be it weeks of gestation or fetal weight or any other single factor—as the determinant of when the State has a compelling interest in the life or health of the fetus." 439 U.S. at 388-89. Here, Missouri is attempting to set twenty weeks as the beginning of viability and to force the physician to satisfy the state by conducting a battery of tests on a possibly unwilling woman, regardless of the physician's judgment as to whether those procedures are necessary or advisable. These requirements clearly invade the woman's fundamental right to have her physician be given "the room he needs to make his best medical judgment." Doe, 410 U.S. at 192; see Akron, 462 U.S. at 427, 429-30. Consequently, the statute impermissibly invades the woman's right to privacy.

---

[58] Amici believe that the opinion below, Reproductive Health Services, 851 F.2d 1071, convincingly demonstrates the manifest infirmities of the Missouri law, and therefore will only briefly discuss this issue.

Finally, the Missouri statute contains a number of provisions designed to prevent public employees from in any way counseling, encouraging, assisting in, or performing abortions not necessary to save the life of the mother. See Mo. Rev. Stat. §§ 188.205, 188.210, 188.215 (1986). These restrictions also are unconstitutional.

The Missouri statute "places the State between physicians and their patients by forbidding the physicians from relaying certain information, opinions, and advice." Reproductive Health Services, 851 F.2d at 1079.[59] As the Court of Appeals noted, this prohibition could forbid a doctor from advising a patient to have an abortion that the doctor believed was medically advisable although not necessary to save the patient's life. Id.

There is little doubt that both the intent and the effect of the statute is to "place obstacles in the path of a woman's exercise of her freedom of choice." Harris, 448 U.S. at 316. The statute raises the possibility of a woman being unable to obtain advice from the same doctor who helped her obtain contraception and conducted her pregnancy test. To then require the woman to seek an entirely new physician to advise her about abortion is a complete breach of the doctor-patient relationship and would subject women to great hardship in obtaining basic medical care.

[59] The prohibitions also would apply to nurses, counselors, and others upon whom many women rely.

The ban on state employees assisting or performing abortions and on the use of state facilities also represents an improper obstacle to abortion. As the lower court explained, the cost of the facilities and the employee's services used during an abortion are recouped when the patient pays. Thus, the state is blocking the use of public facilities not to save money, but only to discourage abortions. See Reproductive Health Services, 851 F.2d at 1083. These restrictions are not justified by any compelling state interest, but instead are unconstitutional regulations "designed to influence the woman's informed choice between abortion or child birth." Akron, 462 U.S. at 444 (footnote omitted). The Missouri statute would place significant new barriers in the path of a woman seeking abortion counseling and serivces, contrary to the Court's holding that state abortion statutes are proper only if they do not add any "restriction on access to abortions that was not already there." Maher, 432 U.S. at 474; see Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S. 589, 605, n.33 (1977).

The statute's sweeping prohibition on the use of state facilities even for the discussion of abortion is so broad as to make it almost impossible for many women to determine freely whether to have an abortion. Even if judged under the less restrictive standard advocated by some members of this Court for review of abortion regulations, the statute is unconstitutional. See Akron, 462 U.S. at 453 (O'Connor, J., dissenting).

CONCLUSION

Women's lives and fundamental rights are at stake in this case. Were this Court to retreat from Roe v. Wade, women would face a return to the days of back-alley abortions, as well as a threat to their freedom from control by the state. This Court over the past sixteen years has consistently affirmed Roe v. Wade's holding that the right to privacy grants to women the right to decide whether or not to continue a pregnancy. The weight of precedent, social policy, and medical science is on the side of freedom of choice. This Court should once again protect that freedom.

Respectfully submitted,

JOHN S.L. KATZ
1440 New York Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 371-7000
Counsel for
The National Organization for Women

March 30, 1989

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
MAR 30 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

---

BRIEF FOR AMICI CURIAE AMERICAN LIBRARY ASSOCIATION AND FREEDOM TO READ FOUNDATION SUPPORTING APPELLEES

BRUCE J. ENNIS
(Counsel of Record)
MARK D. SCHNEIDER
JENNER & BLOCK
21 Dupont Circle, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20036
(202) 223-4400

MARY HUTCHINGS-REED
SIDLEY & AUSTIN
One First National Plaza
Suite 4800
Chicago, Illinois 60603
(312) 853-7800

March 30, 1989

WILSON - EPES PRINTING CO., INC. - 789-0096 - WASHINGTON, D.C. 20001

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
INTEREST OF AMICI	1
INTRODUCTION	3
SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT	6
ARGUMENT
I. MISSOURI'S PROHIBITION ON THE USE OF STATE FUNDS FOR ENCOURAGING OR COUNSELING A WOMAN TO HAVE AN ABORTION NOT NECESSARY TO SAVE HER LIFE CONSTITUTES VIEWPOINT DISCRIMINATION VIOLATIVE OF THE FIRST AMENDMENT	7
A. The Missouri Statute Is Unconstitutional As Applied To Publicly Supported Libraries, Other Public And Nonpublic Forums, And Government Subsidy Programs	10
B. The Missouri Legislature May Not Impose Viewpoint-Based Restrictions On State Employees Or Facilities Where Such Restrictions Are Inconsistent With The Purposes Of The Programs At Issue	18
II. THE VAGUENESS OF THE STATUTORY RESTRICTION ON "COUNSELING" WILL UNCONSTITUTIONALLY CHILL A RANGE OF SPEECH FAR BROADER THAN "ADVOCACY" OF ABORTION	22
CONCLUSION	23

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES — Page

American Booksellers Ass'n v. Hudnut, 771 F.2d 323 (7th Cir. 1985) 8
American Council of the Blind v. Boorstin, 644 F. Supp. 811 (D.D.C. 1986) 9, 12, 17
Antonelli v. Hammond, 308 F. Supp. 1329 (D. Mass. 1970) 17
Arkansas Writers' Project, Inc. v. Ragland, 107 S.Ct. 1722 (1987) 16
Bazaar v. Fortune, 476 F.2d 570 (5th Cir. 1973) 13
Bell v. U-32 Bd. of Educ., 630 F. Supp. 939 (D. Vt. 1986) 11
Bethel School Dist. v. Fraser, 478 U.S. 675 (1986) 10
Big Mama Rag, Inc. v. United States, 631 F.2d 1030 (D.C. Cir. 1980) 17
Board of Educ. v. Pico, 457 U.S. 853 (1982) 4, 10, 12, 20
Bolger v. Youngs Drug Prods. Co., 463 U.S. 60 (1983) 13, 16
Bowman v. Bethel-Tate Bd. of Educ., 610 F. Supp. 577 (S.D. Ohio 1985) 11
Brooks v. Auburn Univ., 296 F. Supp. 188 (M.D. Ala. 1969) 17
Brown v. Board of Regents, 640 F. Supp. 674 (D. Neb. 1986) 11, 17
Cammarano v. United States, 358 U.S. 498 (1959) 16
Carey v. Brown, 447 U.S. 455 (1980) 9
City of Madison, Joint School Dist. v. Wisconsin Employment Relations Comm'n, 429 U.S. 167 (1976) 9
City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 106 S.Ct. 925 (1986) 9
Connick v. Myers, 461 U.S. 138 (1983) 18
Consolidated Edison Co. v. Public Service Comm'n, 447 U.S. 530 (1980) 9
Cornelius v. NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc., 473 U.S. 788 (1985) 8, 13, 15, 19
Esquire, Inc. v. Walker, 151 F.2d 49 (D.C. Cir. 1946) 17

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

FCC v. League of Women Voters, 468 U.S. 364 (1984) 9, 16, 17, 19
Greenberg v. Bolger, 497 F. Supp. 756 (E.D.N.Y. 1980) 17
Hannegan v. Esquire, Inc., 327 U.S. 146 (1946) 14, 17
Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980) 16, 18
Hazelwood School Dist. v. Kuhlmeier, 108 S.Ct. 562 (1988) 10, 11
Healy v. James, 408 U.S. 169 (1972) 9
Joyner v. Whiting, 477 F.2d 456 (4th Cir. 1973) 17
Keyishian v. Board of Regents of New York, 385 U.S. 589 (1967) 20
Kingsley Int'l Pictures Corp. v. Regents, 360 U.S. 684 (1959) 8, 9
Lamont v. Postmaster General, 381 U.S. 301 (1965) 12
Lee v. Board of Regents, 441 F.2d 1257 (7th Cir. 1971) 13
Lyng v. International Union, 108 S.Ct. 1184 (1988) 16
Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977) 16, 18
Martin v. Struthers, 319 U.S. 141 (1943) 12
Massachusetts v. Bowen, 679 F. Supp. 137 (D. Mass. 1988) 3, 17, 18
Members of the Council of the City of Los Angeles v. Taxpayers for Vincent, 466 U.S. 789 (1984) 9
Minarcini v. Strongsville City School Dist., 541 F.2d 577 (6th Cir. 1976) 11
NAACP Legal Defense and Educ. Fund, Inc. v. Devine, 727 F.2d 1247 (D.C. Cir. 1984) 13
New York v. Bowen, 690 F. Supp. 1261 (S.D.N.Y. 1988) 3
Niemotko v. Maryland, 340 U.S. 268 (1951) 9
Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. Public Utilities Comm'n, 106 S.Ct. 903 (1986) 9, 15
Perry Education Ass'n v. Perry Local Educators' Ass'n, 460 U S. 37 (1983) 13
Perry v. Sindermann, 408 U.S. 593 (1972) 18
Pickering v. Board of Educ., 391 U.S. 563 (1968) 22

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

	Page
Planned Parenthood Ass'n Chicago Area v. Kempiners, 568 F. Supp. 1490 (N.D. Ill. 1983)	17
Planned Parenthood Fed. of America v. Bowen, 680 F. Supp. 1465 (D. Colo. 1988)	3, 17
Police Dep't of Chicago v. Mosley, 408 U.S. 92 (1972)	8
Pratt v. Independent School Dist., 670 F.2d 771 (8th Cir. 1982)	11
Rankin v. McPherson, 107 S.Ct. 2891 (1987)	19, 23
Regan v. Taxation With Representation, 461 U.S. 540 (1983)	10, 14, 17, 18, 19
Reproductive Health Services v. Webster, 851 F.2d 1071 (8th Cir. 1988)	8
Right to Read Defense Comm. v. School Comm., 454 F. Supp. 703 (D. Mass. 1978)	11, 13
Salvail v. Nashua Bd. of Educ., 469 F. Supp. 1269 (D.N.H. 1979)	11, 17
Sheck v. Baileyville School Comm'n, 530 F. Supp. 679 (D. Me. 1982)	11
Shelton v. Tucker, 364 U.S. 479 (1960)	20
Smith v. Tennessee, 300 F. Supp. 777 (E.D. Tenn. 1969)	17
Southeastern Promotions Ltd. v. Conrad, 420 U.S. 546 (1975)	13
Spencer v. Herdesty, 571 F. Supp. 756 (E.D.N.Y. 1980)	17
Tinker v. Des Moines Ind. Community School Dist., 393 U.S. 503 (1969)	9
Toward a Gayer Bicentennial Comm. v. Rhode Island Bicentennial Found., 417 F. Supp. 1329 (D. Mass. 1976)	17
United States ex rel. Milwaukee S.D. Pub. Co. v. Burleson, 255 U.S. 407 (1921)	14
Village of Hoffman Estates v. The Flipside, Hoffman Estates, Inc., 455 U.S. 489 (1982)	23
Virginia Pharmacy Board v. Virginia Citizens Consumer Council, 425 U.S. 748 (1976)	12
Wieman v. Updegraff, 344 U.S. 183 (1952)	20
Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50 (1976)	8, 9

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

No. 88-605

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,
v.
REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

---

BRIEF FOR AMICI CURIAE AMERICAN LIBRARY ASSOCIATION AND FREEDOM TO READ FOUNDATION SUPPORTING APPELLEES

INTEREST OF AMICI

The American Library Association ("ALA"), founded in 1876, is a nonprofit, educational organization committed to preservation of the library as a resource indispensable to the intellectual, cultural, and educational welfare of the Nation. ALA is the oldest and largest library association in the world and the chief voice of the modern library movement in North America. ALA's membership includes more than 3,000 libraries and more than 44,000 individuals, primarily librarians. Many of ALA's member libraries are, and many of its member libraries serve, state or federally subsidized institutions. Still other ALA members are themselves state institutions or state or federal employees. As such, they are potentially subject to viewpoint-based restrictions on the use of public funds such as the one imposed by Missouri in the present case.

The Freedom to Read Foundation ("Foundation") was established in 1969 by ALA to promote and defend First Amendment rights; to foster libraries as institutions fulfilling the promise of the First Amendment for every citizen; to support the right of libraries to include in their collections and make available to the public any work that they may legally acquire; and to set legal precedent for the freedom to read of all citizens.

The second principle of the Library Bill of Rights, adopted by the ALA Council and subscribed to by both amici, is pertinent to the statute at issue:

> "Libraries should provide materials and information presenting all points of view on current and historical issues. Materials should not be proscribed or removed because of partisan or doctrinal disapproval."

This principle is directly transgressed by Missouri's ban on encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion, insofar as it applies to libraries receiving or expending public funds. The ban will remove from circulation many materials concerning abortion solely because a majority of the state legislature wishes to deny access to ideas based upon viewpoint. Application of the statutory ban beyond the library to other state employees or recipients of state funds—such as doctors or psychologists—is of substantial concern to amici as well; such restrictions pose a similar threat to the marketplace of ideas guaranteed by the First Amendment.

The parties have consented to the filing of this amicus brief. Their letters of consent are on file with the Clerk of this Court.

INTRODUCTION

The Court of Appeals has struck down the provision of the Missouri code prohibiting the expenditure of public funds "for the purpose of encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life." Mo. Stat. Ann. § 188.205 (Vernon 1983 & 1988 Supp.) ("the statute"). Amici contend that the Court of Appeals was correct in ruling that this statute violates the First Amendment.[1]

Libraries are essential to the intellectual, cultural, and educational welfare of the Nation precisely because they make available to the public the full spectrum of information and opinion without censorship based upon authors' views. Libraries per se do not express opinions, but they do, without favoritism, make available books, magazines, and other materials that express opinions, often in very strong terms. Thus, even absent a statute such as section 188.205, a library would not "counsel" a woman to have an abortion or to take any other course of action. But if asked by a pregnant woman wanting information about abortion, the options available to her, or

---

[1] The Court of Appeals also struck down provisions barring the use of public facilities for the purpose of encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion, and barring certain state employees within the scope of their employment from encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life. Mo. Stat. Ann. §§ 188.210, 188.215 (Vernon 1983 & 1988 Supp.). The State has not appealed these rulings.

As appellees and Amici American Civil Liberties Union et al., contend in their briefs filed today, serious questions as to the justiciability of the challenge to § 188.205 are raised by the State's failure to appeal these rulings and its belated attempt to redefine the scope of the funding limitation. Amici ALA and Foundation agree that the issues addressed herein might more profitably be addressed on review of the Title X funding cases. See, e.g., New York v. Bowen, 690 F. Supp. 1261 (S.D.N.Y. 1988); Massachusetts v. Bowen, 679 F. Supp. 137 (D. Mass. 1988); Planned Parenthood Federation v. Bowen, 680 F. Supp. 1465 (D. Colo. 1988).

places where she might obtain an abortion, a library would provide her the materials she seeks. Such materials might well "counsel" or even "encourage" a woman to have an abortion in particular circumstances (or counsel against or discourage abortion). In this respect, the role of the library is directly comparable to that of a physician or other health care provider, among whose responsibilities is providing information about all medical choices.

Fulfillment of this function by libraries is crucial to the flourishing "marketplace of ideas" celebrated in this Court's fundamental First Amendment jurisprudence. But despite the tradition of "freewheeling inquiry" in America's libraries, Board of Educ. v. Pico, 457 U.S. 853, 915 (1982) (Rehnquist, J., dissenting), libraries occupy a perilous niche in our society: most of our libraries are publicly funded institutions subject to state control not only through the police power but also through the power of the purse. If not insulated by the First Amendment from viewpoint-biased manipulation of public funds, as well as from viewpoint-censorship administered in the more traditional form of regulations and criminal laws, the precious tradition of free inquiry and discovery safeguarded and promoted by America's libraries will become a thing of the past.

To be sure, the State seeks to assure this Court that the statute at issue "does not prohibit the use of public funds to provide information regarding abortions or to inform a woman of the options she may have to cope with an unwanted pregnancy." Appellant's Brief at 42. But this is cold comfort indeed. First, as discussed infra, if, as Appellant contends, the State can prohibit doctors and mental health counselors in public health programs from expressing a point of view favoring abortion—despite the tradition in these professions and such programs of unfettered expression of professional judgment in the patient's best interest—there is no reason to believe the State could not prohibit libraries dependent on public funding from making those same views available in literature maintained on library shelves.

Second, even if no viewpoint-restrictive statute directly applies to the role of information-provider fulfilled by libraries, the very presence of a state policy actively hostile to one set of views on this controversial subject will silently deter libraries from making such views available. Libraries have no stake in the abortion controversy and have no position as to how it should be resolved. But in the presence of a high-profile state policy barring public employees from expressing pro-abortion views, libraries may well err on the side of caution and be forced to act as self-censors of their acquisitions and collections.

Third, as the Court of Appeals correctly observed, the statute, even as read by attorneys and judges, is vague in the extreme. As construed by libraries (and no doubt by other publicly funded institutions) its proscription will inevitably be applied to prohibit the use of public funds to provide information about abortion as well as information advocating abortion. Indeed, such a construction would not be unreasonable. Given the vague language of the statute and the variety of interpretations to which it may be subjected (as well as the difficulty of distinguishing information from advocacy in many cases), it is safe to predict that if left unchecked, the statute will engender widespread censorship of information and opinion. It is also certain that this censorship would compromise the traditional functions of libraries as well as other public institutions, and significantly diminish the quality of information available on the subject of abortion, not only to a pregnant woman struggling to decide whether to terminate her pregnancy, but to all Americans.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Above all else, the First Amendment forbids government from discriminating against persons exercising First Amendment rights because it disagrees with their point of view. "Viewpoint discrimination" is prohibited even in areas where government otherwise enjoys significant latitude to regulate speech, such as the use by private speakers of public property or public funds. The Missouri statute at issue discriminates based upon viewpoint against speech favoring abortion in both contexts, and therefore violates the First Amendment. Point IA.

The statute also imposes a viewpoint-based restriction on expenditure of public funds by public institutions and employees. Government has an interest, in certain circumstances, in communicating values or ideas to which it subscribes, and there are no doubt circumstances in which government may impose viewpoint restrictions on the speech of its employees or programs—such as, for example, where the purpose of the program is to communicate the views of government on particular subjects. But a viewpoint restriction is particularly dangerous and clearly unjustifiable when it is not reasonable in light of the purpose of the government program. Viewpoint restrictions on publicly supported libraries or universities are not reasonable in light of the purposes of these institutions—which have long been bastions of free thought and exploration—and they therefore violate the First Amendment. Similarly, viewpoint restrictions on doctors, nurses, and psychologists employed by the State in public health programs are inconsistent with the purpose of those programs, which is to enable persons of limited means to obtain the benefit of the training and judgment of health care professionals. To restrict the ability of such professionals to communicate their views as to the appropriate course of treatment violates the First Amendment rights of those professionals and their patients. A contrary holding would undermine the independence of all public institutions that historically provide opinion and information free from official orthodoxy. Point IB.

The vaguenes of the statutory ban on "counseling" will chill an undue amount of constitutionally protected speech in libraries and other institutions that receive state funds. As repositories of a wide variety of diverse information from different points of view, libraries do not discriminate in their acquisition or dissemination of information based on the author's viewpoint. Under the statute, the mere provision of information on abortion may reasonably be construed to be within the vague, broad term "counseling" and thus may be prohibited. As a result, information about abortion, whether neutral, pro, con, physiological, medical, historical, etc., may be suppressed as a defensive reaction to the statute's threat of de-funding. A statute creating such a profound chilling effect transgresses the bounds of the First Amendment. Point II.

ARGUMENT

I. MISSOURI'S PROHIBITION ON THE USE OF STATE FUNDS FOR ENCOURAGING OR COUNSELING A WOMAN TO HAVE AN ABORTION NOT NECESSARY TO SAVE HER LIFE CONSTITUTES VIEWPOINT DISCRIMINATION VIOLATIVE OF THE FIRST AMENDMENT.

The State candidly concedes that its prohibition on the use of public funds to encourage or counsel a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life constitutes viewpoint-based discrimination. Appellants' Brief at 42 ("this restriction is clearly designed to prohibit the expenditure of public funds for the identified purpose of affirmatively advocating to a particular woman that she undertake an abortion procedure not necessary to save her life"). Indeed, the sole justification offered for the law is the state legislature's desire to establish an official orthodoxy: to prevent dissemination of pro-abortion views and to promote dissemination of anti-abortion views.[2]

---

[2] Amici recognize that the Court of Appeals held that the scope of the ban is broader than speech advocating abortion, reaching

In almost all circumstances, the First Amendment and the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment forbid government from considering or acting on the basis of the content of constitutionally protected expression. Police Dep't of Chicago v. Mosley, 408 U.S. 92, 95-96 (1972). Even in the few narrowly defined circumstances in which this general principle does not apply with full force,[3] this Court has preserved what it has termed the "essence" of the content-neutrality rule: "the need for absolute neutrality by the government" with respect to "the point of view being expressed." Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. at 67 (emphasis added). Above all else, the First Amendment commands that government not discriminate on the basis of viewpoint.[4] materials that merely provide information about the subject. Reproductive Health Services v. Webster, 851 F.2d 1071, 1078 (8th Cir. 1988). As discussed in Point II, infra, amici agree with the Court of Appeals that "the word 'counsel' is frought with ambiguity," and that its vagueness is likely to chill the dissemination of information about abortion as well as encouragement of abortion. Id. The crucial point for present purposes, however, is that the admitted purpose and primary effect of the statute is to suppress speech favorable to abortion, and to permit speech critical of abortion, by persons or institutions expending state funds. As such, the statute clearly discriminates on the basis of viewpoint.

---

[3] See, e.g., Cornelius v. NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc., 473 U.S. 788 (1985) ("nonpublic forum" for communicative activities); Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50 (1976) (zoning for adult theaters).

[4] See, e.g., id.; Cornelius, 473 U.S. at 806; Kingsley Int'l Pictures Corp. v. Regents, 360 U.S 684, 688 (1959) ("the First Amendment's basic guarantee is freedom to advocate ideas"; viewpoint discrimination therefore strikes "at the very heart of constitutionally protected liberty"); American Booksellers Ass'n v. Hudnut, 771 F.2d 323, 325, 327-28 (7th Cir. 1985) (Easterbrook, J.) ("The state may not ordain preferred viewpoints. . . . The Constitution forbids the state to declare one perspective right and silence opponents."), aff'd, 475 U.S. 1001 (1986).

Because viewpoint discrimination strikes at the "very heart" of the First Amendment, Kingsley Int'l Pictures Corp. v. Regents, 360 U.S. at 688, it has been found unconstitutional wherever it has appeared,[5] including areas in which broader constraints of the First Amendment arguably do not apply. Thus, viewpoint-based discrimination is forbidden when government bestows certain seals of approval, e.g., Healy v. James, 408 U.S. 169, 187 (1972) (official recognition as campus organization); in government-created forums for communication, even "nonpublic" forums in which government is otherwise entitled to pick and choose among speakers and content, Cornelius, 473 U.S. at 800 (see infra pp. 12-13); in government subsidy programs, Regan v. Taxation With Representation, 461 U.S. 540, 548, 550 (1983) (see infra pp. 13-17); and even in the collections maintained by public school libraries, Board of Educ. v. Pico, 457 U.S. 853 (1982).

---

[5] See, e.g., Niemotko v. Maryland, 340 U.S. 268, 272 (1951); id. at 284 (Frankfurter, J., concurring) (access to public parks); Tinker v. Des Moines Ind. Community School Dist., 393 U.S. 503, 511 (1969) (expression by students in public school); see Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. at 64, 67, 70 (zoning restrictions on adult motion picture theaters); City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 106 S.Ct. 925, 929 (1986) (same); Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. Public Utilities Comm'n, 106 S.Ct. 903, 910-11 (1986) (striking down requirement that public utility permit use of "extra space" in utility's billing statements by groups advocating prescribed points of view); Members of the Council of the City of Los Angeles v. Taxpayers for Vincent, 466 U.S. 789 (1984) (upholding an ordinance prohibiting the posting of signs on public property because the ordinance was viewpoint-neutral); Consolidated Edison Co. v. Public Service Comm'n, 447 U.S. 530, 546 (1980) (Stevens, J., concurring) (a law "motivated by nothing more than a desire to curtail expression of a particular point of view on controversial issues of general interest is the purest example of a 'law . . . abridging the freedom of speech' "), quoted with approval, FCC v. League of Women Voters, 468 U.S. 364, 383-84 (1984); Carey v. Brown, 447 U.S. 455 (1980) (residential picketing); City of Madison, Joint School Dist. v. Wisconsin Employment Relations Comm'n, 429 U.S. 167, 176-76 (1976) ("To permit one side of a debatable public question to have a monopoly in expressing its views . . . is the antithesis of constitutional guarantees."); American Council of the Blind v. Boorstin, 644 F. Supp. 811 (D.D.C. 1986) (books for the blind program of Library of Congress).

The statute at issue prohibits dissemination of views favoring abortion in a variety of contexts. It applies to public and nonpublic forums maintained by the State; it applies to private speakers funded (in part or whole) by the State; and it applies to public employees and institutions in the course of their duties. Amici will address each of these contexts in turn.

A. The Missouri Statute Is Unconstitutional As Applied To Publicly Supported Libraries, Other Public And Nonpublic Forums, And Government Subsidy Programs.

In Pico, this Court considered the application of the viewpoint-neutrality principle in the context of a public school library. In public schools, perhaps uniquely among governmental institutions in the United States, the inculcation of values is an express and legitimate purpose. See 457 U.S. at 864 (opinion of Brennan, J.); id. at 876 (Blackmun, J., concurring); id. at 896 (Powell, J., dissenting); id. at 909 (Rehnquist, J., dissenting); Bethel School Dist. v. Fraser, 478 U.S. 675, 681 (1986); Hazelwood School Dist. v. Kuhlmeier, 108 S.Ct. 562, 570 (1988). The Justices disagreed about the application of the viewpoint-neutrality principle to the facts of Pico, but at least eight Justices recognized that the First Amendment is infringed if officials remove books from a public high school library based upon the officials' disagreement with the ideas expressed in those books.[6]

[6] See 457 U.S. at 871 (Brennan, J., joined by Marshall, J., Blackmun, J., and Stevens, J.) ("If petitioners intended by their removal decision to deny respondents access to ideas with which petitioners disagreed, and if this intent was the decisive factor in petitioners' decision, then petitioners have exercised their discretion in violation of the Constitution"); id. at 877 (Blackmun, J.) ("the State may not suppress exposure to ideas—for the sole purpose of suppressing exposure to ideas—absent sufficiently compelling reasons"); id. at 883 (White, J., concurring in the judgment) ("the reason or reasons underlying the school board's removal of the books" is "a material issue of fact that precluded summary judgment" in school board's favor); id. at 919 (Rehnquist, J., joined by Burger, C.J., and Powell, J., dissenting) (agreeing Constitution does not permit the official suppression of ideas; in the public school context, " 'the prohibition of expression of one particular opinion, at least without evidence that it is necessary to avoid material and substantial interference with schoolwork or discipline, is not constitutionally permissible' ").

Many lower courts, both before and after Pico, have also held that viewpoint discrimination has no place in public school libraries.[7] This is entirely appropriate; the school library must complete the student's education by supplementing with a variety of viewpoints the more directed curriculum designed by local educators.

Because the viewpoint-neutrality principle governs even in school library cases where, in curriculum choices, government has a legitimate value-inculcative function to perform, the ban on viewpoint-based discrimination applies a fortiori to public libraries or private libraries receiving public funds.[8] Such libraries, in contrast to the school setting, are unambiguously places for "freewheel-

[7] See, e.g., Minarcini v. Strongsville City School Dist., 541 F.2d 577 (6th Cir. 1976); Sheck v. Baileyville School Comm., 530 F. Supp. 679 (D. Me. 1982); Salvail v. Nashua Bd. of Educ., 469 F. Supp. 1269 (D.N.H. 1979); Right to Read Defense Comm. v. School Comm., 454 F. Supp. 703 (D. Mass. 1978); cf. Pratt v. Independent School Dist., 670 F.2d 771 (8th Cir. 1982) (motion picture); Brown v. Board of Regents, 640 F. Supp. 674 (D. Neb. 1986) (same); Bell v. U-32 Bd. of Educ., 630 F. Supp. 939, 944 (D. Vt. 1986) (school play); Bowman v. Bethel-Tate Bd. of Educ., 610 F. Supp. 577 (S.D. Ohio 1985) (class play).

[8] Hazelwood School Dist. v. Kuhlmeier, 108 S.Ct. 562 (1988), is not to the contrary; in that case this Court relied heavily on the value-inculcative role of public schools in controlling the curriculum. E.g., id. at 570.

ing inquiry." Pico, 457 U.S. at 915 (Rehnquist, J., dissenting).[9] The various opinions in Pico therefore foreclose any possible argument that the Missouri statute is constitutional as applied to publicly supported libraries. Governmental viewpoint censorship of library collections or of assistance provided by libraries to library users—whether to suppress pro-abortion literature, anti-abortion literature, or any other literature based upon the views of its authors—is unconstitutional, and is not less so because government accomplishes the result through a funding cut-off rather than a criminal prohibition. See American Council of the Blind v. Boorstin, 644 F. Supp. 811 (D.D.C. 1986).[10]

The law as applied to public and publicly supported libraries is unconstitutional for a second reason as well. They are quintessentially government forums. Through libraries, government funds help certain private citizens —authors—to communicate with others—library users. Libraries, and all other means of communication afforded by government to private speakers, are controlled by a set of rules developed in a long line of cases, rules that (at a minimum)[11] plainly prohibit exclusions that are in

---

[9] Amici have long maintained that libraries are forums for the free communication of ideas, and that viewpoint discrimination of any kind is wholly inappropriate there.

[10] Such censorship violates the rights of both speaker and listener. Library users have a fundamental right of access to information free from governmental viewpoint censorship. Cf. Pico, 457 U.S. at 866-67 (Brennan, J.); Virginia Pharmacy Board v. Virginia Citizens Consumer Council, 425 U.S. 748 (1976); Lamont v. Postmaster General, 381 U.S. 301 (1965); Martin v. Struthers, 319 U.S. 141, 143 (1943). Patients in public health programs have similar interests.

[11] This Court has established a two-tiered system of review of exclusions from government forums. Forums that by tradition or designation are devoted to the free exchange of ideas are called "public forums." A speaker may be excluded from a public forum only when necessary to achieve a compelling government interest. Cornelius, 473 U.S. at 800; Southeastern Promotions Ltd. v. Conrad, 420 U.S. 546 (1975). Access to all other government forums—called "nonpublic forums"—may be restricted only if the restrictions are reasonable in light of the purposes served by the forum, and if they do not constitute "viewpoint-based discrimination." Cornelius, 473 U.S. at 806-13.

reality efforts "to suppress expression merely because public officials oppose the speaker's view." Perry Education Ass'n v. Perry Local Educators' Ass'n, 460 U.S. 37, 46 (1983); see Cornelius, 473 U.S. at 800, 806-13. Thus, Missouri's viewpoint-based restrictions on the use of public funds are unconstitutional as applied to libraries and any other institution through which state funds facilitate communication by private speakers.[12]

The statute is also unconstitutional as applied to government subsidy programs. Subsidizing speech activity, like providing a place and an audience for a speaker, in-[12] It is clear that the viewpoint-neutrality rules apply to government forums whether or not the forums have a physical situs. See Cornelius, 473 U.S. at 800-801 (Court has recognized that public forums are "means of communication"; in Perry Educ. Ass'n, supra, Court held school's internal mail system was a forum "notwithstanding that an internal mail system lacks a physical situs"); Bolger v. Youngs Drug Prods. Co., 463 U.S. 60 (1983) (applying public forum analysis to the United States mails).

---

It is also clear that the viewpoint-neutrality requirement applies equally to government forums involving government subsidization of private speech. For example, the Combined Federal Campaign ("CFC") at issue in Cornelius involved a subsidy, and the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit nevertheless applied forum analysis. NAACP Legal Defense and Educ. Fund, Inc. v. Devine, 727 F.2d 1247, 1253, 1254, 1255-56 (D.C. Cir. 1984), rev'd on other grounds, Cornelius, supra. In Cornelius, this Court did not even mention the fact that the CFC involved a subsidy, while holding that it was a nonpublic forum. Many lower court cases have applied forum analysis despite the presence of a government subsidy. E.g., Bazaar v. Fortune, 476 F.2d 570 (5th Cir.), mod. on other grounds, 489 F.2d 225 (1973) (en banc), cert. denied, 416 U.S. 995 (1974); Lee v. Board of Regents, 441 F.2d 1257 (7th Cir. 1971).

volves granting government property (money or land) to support speech by private parties. For all relevant purposes, a government program subsidizing a speech activity is a program that creates a (non-public) government forum. Identical interests are present in both subsidy and government property cases: the individual's interest in reaching an audience with the assistance of government, and government's interest in ensuring that its property is preserved for its intended use. Identical dangers to First Amendment interests are posed if government uses its property—whether real estate or money —to benefit or single out for harm particular viewpoints or individuals with particular points of view. Yet the Missouri statute purports to allow government funds to promote speech discouraging abortion, while prohibiting use of government funds to promote counseling favorable to abortion. Such a law necessarily creates a gross distortion of the marketplace of ideas and establishes an official orthodoxy.

This Court has repeatedly made clear that although government has no obligation to subsidize speech in the first place, if it chooses to subsidize some speech it may not discriminate invidiously on the basis of the viewpoints expressed. In Hannegan v. Esquire, Inc., 327 U.S. 146 (1946), for example, this Court ruled that the Postmaster General could not deny second-class mailing privileges to publications on the ground that he considered them "morally improper." Such a denial, the Court held, would be "abhorrent to our traditions," and raise "grave constitutional questions." Id. at 151, 155-56. See United States ex rel. Milwaukee S.D. Pub. Co. v. Burleson, 255 U.S. 407, 431 (1921) (Brandeis, J., dissenting) (viewpoint-based denial of a subsidy unconstitutional; claim that such a denial did not infringe constitutional rights termed "technical and insubstantial").

In Regan v. Taxation With Representation, 461 U.S. 540 (1983), this Court considered whether a complex tax scheme violated the First and Fifth Amendments. The Court upheld the scheme, which allowed veterans' groups to use tax-deductible contributions for lobbying activities but denied other tax exempt organizations this privilege. The Constitution had not been violated, the Court explained, because the tax benefit was not granted to veterans' organizations, or denied to other organizations, based upon their views or the content of their speech. But, the Court made clear, "[t]he case would be different if Congress were to discriminate invidiously in its subsidies in such a way as to ' "aim at the suppression of dangerous ideas." ' " Id. at 548 (citations omitted). The Court later repeated this important qualification of its holding, which is completely ignored in the submissions of appellant and its amici. Id. at 550. Thus, the Court stated, "[w]e find no indication that the statute was intended to suppress any ideas or any demonstration that it has had that effect." Id. at 548. Instead, the tax subsidy was part of the Nation's time-honored, viewpoint-neutral policy of "compensating veterans for their past contributions," id. at 551, a policy that had "always been deemed to be legitimate," id. See id. at 551 (Blackmun, J., concurring) (agreeing that tax scheme constitutional because viewpoint-neutral). Regan, therefore, suggests that viewpoint-based discrimination in subsidies is forbidden by the First Amendment. Cf. Cornelius, 473 U.S. at 800, 806-13 (similar standard in government forum cases).

Subsequent opinions of this Court reaffirm this important prohibition of viewpoint discrimination. In Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. Public Utilities Comm'n, 106 S.Ct. 903 (1986), for example, the Court struck down a statute that subsidized only one side of a debate. Stating that "[t]his kind of favoritism goes well beyond the fundamentally content-neutral subsid[y] that we sustained in . . . Regan," id. at 911, the Court distinguished Regan and other cases upholding viewpoint-neutral denials of certain subsidies.

In his dissent in FCC v. League of Women Voters, 468 U.S. 364, 402-08 (1984), Chief Justice (then Justice) Rehnquist, author of Regan, once again focused on the principle that government may not impose viewpoint restrictions on speech subsidies. When government imposes any condition on its largess, he stated, it must not be "'aimed at the suppression of dangerous ideas.'" Id. at 407 (quoting Cammarano v. United States, 358 U.S. 498, 513 (1959)). The subsidy at issue in League of Women Voters was not "aimed at the suppression of dangerous ideas," Justice Rehnquist explained, because:

> "Congress' prohibition is strictly neutral. In no sense can it be said that Congress has prohibited only editorial views of one particular ideological bent. . . . Because Congress' decision . . . is . . . strictly neutral, I would hold that nothing in the First Amendment makes it unconstitutional."

468 U.S. at 407-08. See Arkansas Writers' Project, Inc. v. Ragland, 107 S.Ct. 1722, 1731 (1987) (Scalia, J., dissenting) ("Perhaps a more stringent, prophylactic rule is appropriate, and can be consistently applied, when the subsidy pertains to the expression of a particular viewpoint on a matter of political concern . . . .").[13]

---

[13] Contrary to Appellants' claims, Lyng v. International Union, 108 S.Ct. 1184 (1988), Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977), and Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980), are not in conflict with this principle; none of those cases dealt with a viewpoint-based restriction on First Amendment rights. In Lyng, Congress' denial of food stamp eligibility to strikers was based upon economic conduct, not expressive activity protected by the First Amendment. The restriction was an attempt to remain neutral in the economic dispute between employer and employee. The First Amendment claims rejected in Lyng were not that the denial of the subsidy was based upon viewpoint, but rather that the consequences of denial were altered family relationships and compelled speech. Thus, Lyng is irrelevant to the constitutional vice of the Missouri statute. Maher and Harris dealt with denial of public funds for abortion; no expressive activity was involved.

It is clear, in sum, that government may not single out one viewpoint for disfavor in administering subsidies, any more than it may do so in a "nonpublic forum."[14] Missouri's viewpoint-based restriction on subsidies to private organizations—whether they are libraries, health clinics, or other entities—is plainly unconstitutional.[15]

---

[14] The lower courts have accordingly consistently ruled viewpoint-based discrimination to be unconstitutional in subsidy cases. In Massachusetts v. Bowen, 679 F. Supp. 137 (D. Mass. 1988), for example, the district court struck down federal regulations very similar to the statute at issue here because they were "content-based." Id. at 147 (citing Regan). Accord Planned Parenthood Fed. of America v. Bowen, 680 F. Supp. 1465 (D. Colo. 1988). Similarly, in Planned Parenthood Ass'n Chicago Area v. Kempiners, 568 F. Supp. 1490 (N.D. Ill. 1983), the Court concluded that an Illinois scheme very similar to the Missouri scheme at issue violated the First Amendment because it was an "attempt to manipulate the information available to pregnant women." Id. at 1499. Other lower courts have reached similar conclusions outside the abortion-related-speech context. See, e.g., Big Mama Rag, Inc. v. United States, 631 F.2d 1030, 1034, n.7 (D.C. Cir. 1980); Esquire, Inc. v. Walker, 151 F.2d 49, 50 (D.C. Cir.), aff'd on other grounds sub nom. Hannegan v. Esquire, Inc., supra; Joyner v. Whiting, 477 F.2d 456 (4th Cir. 1973); Brown v. Board of Regents, 640 F. Supp. 674 (D. Neb. 1986); American Council of the Blind v. Boorstin, 644 F. Supp. 811 (D.D.C. 1986); Spencer v. Herdesty, 571 F. Supp. 444 (S.D. Ohio 1983); Greenberg v. Bolger, 497 F. Supp. 756 (E.D.N.Y. 1980); Salvail v. Nashua Bd. of Educ., 469 F. Supp. 1269 (D.N.H. 1979); Toward a Gayer Bicentennial Comm. v. Rhode Island Bicentennial Found., 417 F. Supp. 632 (D.R.I. 1976); Antonelli v. Hammond, 308 F. Supp. 1329 (D. Mass. 1970); Brooks v. Auburn Univ., 296 F. Supp. 188 (M.D. Ala.), aff'd, 412 F.2d 1171 (5th Cir. 1969); Smith v. Tennessee, 300 F. Supp. 777 (E.D. Tenn. 1969).

[15] Several cases establish a parallel but different limitation on government subsidies in the speech context: "government may not deny a benefit to a person because he exercises a constitutional right." Regan v. Taxation With Representation, 461 U.S. 540, 545 (1983) (emphasis added); see FCC v. League of Women Voters, 468 U.S. 364 (1984). In other words, although government may narrowly refuse to subsidize expression (in a viewpoint-neutral fashion), it may not penalize a speaker for engaging in such expression with private funds by denying a subsidy for which the

B. The Missouri Legislature May Not Impose Viewpoint-Based Restrictions On State Employees Or Facilities Where Such Restrictions Are Inconsistent With The Purposes Of The Programs At Issue.

The State, then, has no power to favor one viewpoint over another in administering government forums or subsidizing expressive activity. The State may have a greater interest in regulating speech of its employees, to be sure, than in regulating speech of private citizens using public funds or facilities. See generally Connick v. Myers, 461 U.S. 138 (1983). Conversely, use of the speaker would otherwise be eligible. See id. at 400-01; Speiser v. Randall, 357 U.S. 513, 518-19 (1958); Perry v. Sinderman, 408 U.S. 593, 597 (1972). Cf. Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297, 317 n. 19 (1980) (denial of welfare benefits for abortion is constitutional, but an attempt to withhold all welfare benefits from one who exercises right to an abortion probably would be impermissible); Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464, 474-75, n. 8 (1977) (same). Just such an unconstitutional penalty would be imposed under the statute at issue if the statute were construed as requiring denial of all public funds, for whatever purpose, to any program that provided abortion counseling in addition to several activities eligible for subsidies. Although certain amici suggest that Missouri does not intend so to construe the statute, see Brief of Amicus Curiae of the Catholic Health Association of the United States at 6-7 (suggesting that recipients of public funds might still be permitted to counsel in favor of abortions so long as only private funds are used for this purpose), other amici suggest the contrary, see Brief Amicus Curiae of the American Academy of Medical Ethics at 14 (suggesting that all state funds would be denied to a program counseling in favor of abortion). Significantly, appellant makes no mention of this crucial issue in its brief, despite devoting several pages to attempting to explicate the statute. Appellant's Brief at 36-44. Moreover, neither appellant nor its amici suggest how a grantee could financially segregate its subsidized activities from its privately funded abortion-counseling services without imposing a substantial burden on the opportunities of speaker and listener to exchange information. Cf. Regan v. Taxation With Representation, 461 U.S. at 545, n. 6; id. at 551 (Blackmun, J., concurring). Therefore, the statute is apparently unconstitutional under the cases cited above. See Massachusetts v. Bowen, 679 F. Supp. 137, 144-45, 146 (D. Mass. 1988).

---

public fisc to control the speech of public employees may pose less of a threat to the free exchange of ideas and opinions in society than does its use to bias the debate among private citizens and entities. Nevertheless, public employees do not surrender all First Amendment rights when they accept public employment, see, e.g., Rankin v. McPherson, 107 S.Ct. 2891 (1987), and viewpoint discrimination, when imposed on public employees with little justification, infringes public employees' rights and the rights of the public to a free and balanced flow of information. For this reason, as noted above, restrictions prohibiting state libraries from disseminating literature favoring one side of a political debate would raise grave constitutional concerns, notwithstanding the fact that the libraries are public institutions.

Viewpoint-based restrictions such as the one at issue, when applied to public employees and institutions, must be subjected to a modified "nonpublic forum" test. In Cornelius, this Court pronounced that in a nonpublic forum, governmental speech restrictions are constitutional "so long as the distinctions drawn are reasonable in light of the purpose served by the forum and are viewpoint neutral." 473 U.S. at 806. Thus, viewpoint-based restrictions or restrictions inconsistent with the purpose served by the government program or facility violate the First Amendment in that context.[16] At a minimum, restrictions on public employee speech should be unconstitutional if they are viewpoint-based and inconsistent with the purpose of the type of program at issue and the employees' public function, as measured by the traditions and standards generally applicable to such programs and such employees. Cf. Rankin v. McPherson, 107 S.Ct. at 2896 ("Vigilance is necessary to ensure that public employers do not use authority over employees to silence discourse, not because it hampers public functions but simply because superiors disagree with the content of employees' speech."); Pico, 457 U.S. at 919 (Rehnquist, J., dissenting) (" 'the prohibition of expression of one particular opinion, at least without evidence that it is necessary to avoid material and substantial interference with schoolwork or discipline, is not constitutionally permissible' ").

---

[16] A similar two-pronged test prevails in the subsidized speech area. See Regan, 461 U.S. at 550; League of Women Voters, 468 U.S. at 407 (Rehnquist, J., dissenting).

Thus, a State should be permitted to impose viewpoint-based restrictions on its employees only when those restrictions are consistent with and reasonable in light of the purposes of the type of government program at issue and the employees' normative function. To take an extreme example, a restriction prohibiting state equal employment opportunity officers from advocating racial hatred on the job would certainly be justified as consistent with the purposes of the program at issue and the employees' function. On the other hand, viewpoint restrictions on public libraries would be inconsistent with their traditional function as facilitators of "freewheeling inquiry." Pico, 457 U.S. at 915 (Rehnquist, J., dissenting). And such restrictions on university professors or universities would similarly be inconsistent with the historic role of the university as a place of unfettered discourse and inquiry and its tradition of academic freedom. See Keyishian v. Board of Regents of New York, 385 U.S. 589, 603 (1967); Shelton v. Tucker, 364 U.S. 479, 487 (1960); Wieman v. Updegraff, 344 U.S. 183, 195 (1952) (Frankfurter, J., concurring). For this reason, such restrictions cannot be tolerated.

Considered in light of this standard, the viewpoint restrictions at issue are just as repugnant to the Constitution as applied to health care professionals such as doctors, nurses, or psychologists serving in public health clinics. The basic purpose of such clinics is to provide citizens of limited means with the benefits of the expertise and judgment of these professionals, expertise and judgment otherwise not within their reach. As demonstrated in the briefs amicus curiae of the American Psychological Association and the American Medical Association, each health service profession has a noble tradition and ethical rules of long-standing requiring members to provide advice and counsel in the patient's best interest. These traditions are quintessentially communicative, involving the physician's or counselor's discourse with his or her patient, and are no less central to the professional functions of doctors, psychologists, and nurses than academic freedom is to universities or libraries. Viewpoint restrictions on the professional's expression of his or her professional judgment to a patient, particularly when those restrictions are motivated by moral, theological, or political "policy choices" [17] rather than good faith medical judgments, are completely inconsistent with the primary purpose of public health programs and health care professionals' function within such programs.

Obviously, the State may not be permitted to define the "purpose" of a program or the "function" of an employee in such a way as to pervert the customary functions of the program or employee at issue. The State should not be permitted to define the purpose of a library or university, for example, as disseminating only speech of one particular viewpoint. Nor should a State be permitted to define a public health doctor's role as advocating one particular view to his or her patient, regardless of his or her professional opinion. To permit such ad hoc redefinition would be to validate any restraint, however pernicious to the marketplace of ideas. It is against the tradition of free discourse in library or university, or, in the health care context, the tradition of professional advice in the patient's interest unfettered by external orthodoxy, that any state viewpoint restraint must be measured. Only in this way can institutions essential to the marketplace of ideas remain free from subversion through manipulation of government funds.

---

[17] See Appellant's Brief at 37.

The "abortion question" is one of the most divisive moral and theological issues of our day. But if Missouri chooses to offer its less affluent citizens free or subsidized access to health care professionals, it may not force those professionals to censor their professional opinions to accommodate the non-health-related "policy choices" made by a majority of the state legislature. Because this statute does just that, it unconstitutionally restricts public health professionals' First Amendment rights to express their professional opinion to their patients, and violates those patients' rights to receive medical or other health-care advice free from extraneous state-imposed viewpoint-bias.

If this Court holds otherwise, and indicates that States enjoy carte blanche to use their purse strings to forbid the expression of particular views even if the prohibition is not consistent with the essential purpose of the program or institution at issue, a serious blow will be struck not only at the freedom of public health doctors, psychologists, and their patients, but also at the freedom of all Americans to obtain uncensored opinion and information from their libraries. As noted, libraries, like health care profesionals, must rely upon their mission as an unfettered source of information and opinion as their shield against financially imposed state censorship. For these reasons it is imperative that this Court reject the viewpoint discrimination embodied in section 188.205.

II. THE VAGUENESS OF THE STATUTORY RESTRICTION ON "COUNSELING" WILL UNCONSTITUTIONALLY CHILL A RANGE OF SPEECH FAR BROADER THAN "ADVOCACY" OF ABORTION.

The Court of Appeals correctly observed that the statute's inherent vagueness will chill a quantity of speech far greater than the "advocacy" the State claims it wishes to censor. Many public employees understandably are extremely sensitive to threats to their job security or the security of the funding for their program. See Pickering v. Board of Educ., 391 U.S. 563, 574 (1968);

Rankin v. McPherson, 107 S.Ct. at 2896. The same is true of recipients of state largess. The disjunctive phrase "encouraging or counseling," contained in the statute, thus will suggest to state functionaries the need to self-censor "counseling" that does not encourage abortion, but merely provides information about abortion to women considering whether to have one. As the Court of Appeals observed, such a broad construction is necessary in order to prevent the words "or counseling" from becoming surplussage. Thus, if the statute is upheld, it would not be unreasonable for libraries to construe it as affecting the kind of information about abortion they may acquire and disseminate. The vagueness of the statute and its potential chilling effect therefore independently render the statute unconstitutional. See Village of Hoffman Estates v. The Flipside, Hoffman Estates, Inc., 455 U.S. 489, 494-95 (1982).

CONCLUSION

For all of the foregoing reasons and the reasons set forth in appellees' brief, amici respectfully urge this Court to affirm the judgment of the Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit that Mo. Stat. Ann. section 188.205 violates the First Amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

BRUCE J. ENNIS
(Counsel of Record)
MARK D. SCHNEIDER
JENNER & BLOCK
21 Dupont Circle, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20036
(202) 223-4400

MARY HUTCHINGS-REED
SIDLEY & AUSTIN
One First National Plaza
Suite 4800
Chicago, Illinois 60603
(312) 853-7800

March 30, 1989

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

---

BRIEF FOR AMICUS CURIAE AMERICAN PSYCHOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION IN SUPPORT OF APPELLEES

DONALD N. BERSOFF
(Counsel of Record)
JENNER & BLOCK
21 Dupont Circle, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20036
(202) 223-4400
Attorney for Amicus Curiae
American Psychological Association

March 30, 1989

WILSON - EPES PRINTING CO., INC. - 789-0096 - WASHINGTON, D.C. 20001

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES	iii
INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE	1
INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT	1
ARGUMENT	2
I. AVAILABLE SCIENTIFIC LITERATURE DOES NOT SUSTAIN APPELLANTS' ARGUMENT THAT ROE v. WADE SHOULD BE OVERRULED BECAUSE OF ABORTION'S ALLEGED ADVERSE PSYCHOLOGICAL EFFECTS	2
A. The Court Relied in 1981 on Tentative, Fragmentary, and Irrelevant Findings When it Concluded Abortion Produces Negative Psychological Effects in Women	5
B. Empirical Research on the Psychological Effects of Abortion Generally Lacks the Methodological Rigor Necessary to Justify Overruling Roe	7
1. Rigor of the research design	8
2. Abortion as an independent variable	10
3. Psychological effects as a dependent variable	13
4. Psychometric soundness of research measures	14
5. The characteristics of the groups studied	17
C. The Existing Evidence Does Not Support the View that there are Substantial Adverse Emotional and Psychological Consequences of the Decision to Have an Abortion	19

TABLE OF CONTENTS—Continued

Page

II. APPELLANTS' BAN ON THE USE OF PUBLIC FUNDS TO ENCOURAGE OR COUNSEL A WOMAN TO HAVE AN ABORTION IS ANTAGONISTIC TO THE STATE'S INTEREST IN PROMOTING INFORMED CONSENT AND PROTECTING THE HEALTH AND WELFARE OF ITS CITIZENS AND UNDULY INTERFERES WITH PROFESSIONAL DISCRETION 23

A. Appellant's Provision Undermines the Health of Its Citizens And May Be Antagonistic To Its Goal of Preventing Future Unwanted Pregnancies 24

B. Appellants' Provision Interferes With Professional Judgment and Requires Psychologists to Violate Basic Ethical Precepts 27

CONCLUSION 30

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES:

Page

Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520 (1979) 27
Blue Shield v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465 (982) 22
City of Akron v. Akron Ctr. for Reproductive Health, Inc., 462 U.S. 416 (1983) 1, 2, 3, 26, 27, 28
Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979) 3, 27
Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973) 3, 27
Frye v. United States, 293 F 1013 (D.C. Cir. 1923) 4
H.L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398 (1981) 5
Hartigan v. Zbaraz, 484 U.S. 171 (1987) 1
Lockhart v. McCree, 476 U.S. 162 (1986) 18
Parham v. J.R., 442 U.S. 584 (1979) 27
Planned Parenthood of Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976) 3, 23, 26, 27
Reproductive Health Service v. Webster, 851 F.2d 1071 (8th Cir. 1988) 23
Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) ..... passim
Smith v. Allright, 321 U.S. 649 (1944) 2
Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians & Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986) 1, 2, 3, 23
United States v. Vuitch, 402 U.S. 62 (1971) 3
Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S. 589 (1977) 27, 29
Youngberg v. Romeo, 457 U.S. 307 (1982) 27

STATUTES:

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 337 22
Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.205 22
Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.210 22
Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.215 22

MISCELLANEOUS:

Adler, Abortion: A Social-Psychological Perspective, 35 J. Soc. Issues 100 (1979) 21, 26
Adler, Emotional Responses of Women Following Therapeutic Abortion, 45 Am. J. Orthopsychiatry 446 (1975) 10, 19, 21
Adler, Psychological Responses of Women Following Abortion (1989) 19
Adler, Sample Attrition in Studies of Psychological Sequelae of Abortion: How Great a Problem?, 6 J. Applied Soc. Psychology 240 (1976) 17

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Adler & Dolcini, Psychological Issues in Abortions for Adolescents in Adolescent Abortion (G. Melton ed. 1986) 19, 20, 21

AERA, APA, NCME, Standards for Educational and Psychological Testing (1985) 7

A. Anastasi, Psychological Testing (5th ed. 1982) .. 7, 15

APA, Ethical Principles of Psychologists, 36 Am. Psychologist 633 (1981) 29

APA, General Guidelines for Providers of Psychological Services, 42 Am. Psychologist 1 (1987) .. 29

APA, Specialty Guidelines for the Delivery of Services by Counseling Psychologists, 36 Am. Psychologist 652 (1981) 28

Ashton, The Psychosocial Outcome of Induced Abortion, 87 Brit. J. Obstetrics & Gynecology 1115 (1980) 13, 15, 21, 22

Athanasiou, Oppel, Michelson, Unger & Yager, Psychiatric Sequelae to Term Birth and Induced Early and Late Abortions, 5 Fam. Plan. Persp. 227 (1973) 9, 13, 16

Babikian & Goldman, A Study of Teen-Age Pregnancy, 128 Am. J. Psychiatry 755 (1971) 6

Belsey, Greer, Lal, Lewis & Beard, Predictive Factors in Emotional Response to Abortion, 11 Soc. Sci. & Med. 71 (1977) 8, 11, 15

Bersoff, Psychologists and the Judicial System, 10 L. & Hum. Behav. 151 (1986) 3

Bersoff, Social Science Data and the Supreme Court, 42 Am. Psychologist 52 (1987) 4

Blumberg & Golbus, Psychological Sequelae of Elective Abortion, 123 Western J. Med. 188 (1975) .. 16, 19, 21, 22

Blumberg, Golbus & Hanson, The Psychological Sequelae of Abortion Performed for a Genetic Indication, 122 Am. J. Obstetrics & Gynecology 799 (1975) 8, 10, 23

Bolter, The Psychiatrist's Role in Therapeutic Abortion: The Unwitting Accomplice, 119 Am. J. Psychiatry 312 (1962) 10

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Bracken, A Causal Model of Psychosomatic Reactions to Vacuum Aspiration Abortion, 13 Soc. Psychiatry 135 (1978) 16, 21

Bracken, Hachamovitch & Grossman, The Decision to Abort and Psychological Sequelae, 158 J. Nervous & Ment. Disorder 154 (1974) 10, 13, 19

Bracken, Klerman & Bracken, Abortion, Adoption or Motherhood: An Empirical Study of Decision-making During Pregnancy, 130 Am. J. Obstetrics & Gynecology 251 (1978) 19

Bradley, Abortion and Subsequent Pregnancy, 29 Can. J. Psychiatry 494 (1984) 12

Brewer, Induced Abortion After Feeling Fetal Movements: Its Causes and Emotional Consequences, 10 J. Biosoc. Sci. 203 (1978) 8, 12, 15, 19

Brief for Amicus Curiae American Psychological Association in Blue Shield v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465 (1982) 22

Brief for Focus on the Family and Family Research Council of America 3, 6, 14

Brody, Meikle & Gerritse, Therapeutic Abortion: A Prospective Study, 109 Am. J. Obstetrics & Gynecology 347 (1971) 9

Cates, Adolescent Abortions in the United States, 1 J. Adolescent Health Care 18 (1980) 20, 21

Cavenar, Maltbie, Sullivan, Aftermath of Abortion, 42 Bull. Menniger Clin. 433 (1978) 14

Cohen & Roth, Coping with Abortion, 10 J. Hum. Stress 140 (1984) 16, 18, 19

Colquitt, Judicial Use of Social Science Evidence at Trial, 30 Ariz. L. Rev. 51 (1988) .....

Croghan, Areas of Potential Psychological Vulnerability in the New Era of Liberalized Abortion, 11 Psychology 35 (Aug. 1974) 7

Cvejic, Lipper, Kinch & Benjamin, Follow-up of 50 Adolescent Girls 2 Years After Abortion, 116 Can. Med. Ass'n. J. 44 (1977) 13, 15

Dauber, Zalar & Goldstein, Abortion Counseling and Behavior Change, 4 Fam. Plan. Persp. 23 (1972) 25

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

David, Rasmussen & Holst, Postpartum and Post-abortion Psychotic Reactions, 13 Fam. Plan. Persp. 88 (1981) 9, 12

Ewing & Rouse, Therapeutic Abortion and a Prior Psychiatric History, 130 Am. J. Psychiatry 37 (1973) 8, 10, 15

Ford, Castelnuovo-Tedesco & Long, Abortion: Is it a Therapeutic Procedure in Psychiatry? 218 J. Am. Med. Ass'n. 1173 (1971) 8, 13, 16

Freeman, Influence of Personality Attributes on Abortion Experiences, 47 Am. J. Orthopsychiatry 503 (1977) 15, 17, 20

Freeman, Rickels, Huggins, Garcia & Polin, Emotional Distress Patterns Among Women Having First or Repeat Abortions, 55 Obstretics & Gynecology 630 (1980) 12, 16, 17

Friedman, Greenspan & Mittleman, The Decision-Making Process and the Outcome of Therapeutic Abortion, 131 Am. J. Psychiatry 1332 (1974) .. 8, 10, 19, 21, 22

George, An Empirical Study of Medical Termination of Pregnancy, 25 Psychological Studies 118 (1980) 16

Giannelli, The Admissibility of Novel Scientific Evidence: Frey v. United States, a Half-Century Later, 80 Colum. L. Rev. 1197 (1980) 4

Handy, Psychological and Social Aspects of Induced Abortion, 21 Brit. J. Clinical Psychology 29 (1982) 10, 12, 24

Hittner, Feelings of Well-Being Before and After an Abortion, 9 Am. Ment. Health Counselors Ass'n J. 98 (1987) 13, 15

Illsley & Hall, Psychosocial Aspects of Abortion: A Review of Issues and Needed Research, 53 Bull. World Health Organ. 83 (1976) 6, 12, 18

S. Isaac & W. Michael, Handbook in Research and Evaluation (1971) 14

Jacques, Abortion and Psychological Trauma, 27 Med. Arts & Sci. 52 (1973) 19, 22, 24

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Kaltreider, Psychological Factors in Mid-Trimester Abortion, 4 Psychiatry in Med. 129 (1973) 10, 25

Kaltreider, Goldsmith & Margolies, The Impact of Midtrimester Abortion Techniques on Patients and Staff, 135 Am. J. Obstetrics & Gynecology 235 (1979) 11, 17

C. Everett Koop to President Reagan, Letter, January 9, 1989 18

Kumar & Robson, Previous Induced Abortion and Ante-natal Depression in Primaparae: Preliminary Report of a Survey of Mental Health in Pregnancy, 8 Psychological Med. 711 (1978) 9, 15

Lazarus, Psychiatric Sequelae of Legalized Elective First Trimester Abortion, 4 J. Psychosomatic Obstetrics and Gynecology 141 (1985) 12, 15, 19, 20, 21, 22, 24

Lidz, Reflections of a Psychiatrist in 22 Therapeutic Abortions 276 (H. Rosen ed. 1954) 14

E. Lind, J. Shepard & J. Cecil, Experimentation in the Law: Report of the Federal Judicial Center Advisory Committee on Experimentation in the Law (1981) 4

Lipper, Cvejic, Benjamin & Kinch, Abortion and the Pregnant Teenager, 109 Can. Med. Ass'n. J. 852 (1973) 11, 12, 15, 16

Lipper & Feigenbaum, Obsessive-Compulsive Neurosis after Viewing the Fetus during Therapeutic Abortion, 30 Am. J. Psychotherapy 666 (1976) 14

W. Loh, Social Research in the Judical Process (1984) 3, 4

Lyons, Larson, Huckeba, Rogers & Mueller, Research on the Psychosocial Impact of Abortion: A Systematic Review of the Literature 1966 to 1985 in Values and Public Policy 77 (G. Regier ed. 1988) 6

Major, Mueller & Hildebrandt, Attributions, Expectations, and Coping with Abortion, 47 J. Personality & Soc. Psychology 585 (1985) 13, 21

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Marecek, Consequences of Adolescent Childbearing and Abortion in Adolescent Abortion 96 (G. Melton ed. 1986) 19, 20
Marder, Psychiatric Experiences with a Liberalized Therapeutic Abortion Law, 126 Am. J. Psychiatry 1230 (1970) 26
Melton, Bringing Psychology to the Legal System, 42 Am. Psychologist 488 (1987) 3
Melton & Pliner, Adolescent Abortion: A Psycholegal Analysis in Adolescent Abortion: Psychological and Legal Issues 11 (G. Melton ed. 1986) 6
Mester, Induced Abortion and Psychotherapy, 30 Psychotherapy & Psychosomatics 98 (1978) 15
Monahan & Walker, Social Authority: Obtaining, Evaluating, and Establishing Social Science in Law, 134 U. Pa. L. Rev. 477 (1986) 4
J. Monahan & L. Walker, Social Science in Law (1985) 3, 4
Monahan & Walker, Social Science in Law: A New Paradigm, 43 Am. Psychologist 465 (1988) 4
Moseley, Follingstad & Harley, Psychological Factors that Predict Reaction to Abortion, 37 J. Clin. Psychology 276 (1981) 12, 13, 16, 20, 21
Mueller, Causal Attributions, Perceived Self-Efficacy, and Copying with a Negative Life Event (1986) 25
Mueller & Major, Self-Blame, Self-Efficacy, and Adjustment to Abortion, J. Personality & Soc. Psychology (in press) 25
National Academy of Sciences, Risking the Future: Adolescent Sexuality, Pregnancy, and Childbearing (1987) 20
National Academy of Sciences/Institute of Medicine, Legalized Abortion and the Public Health 9 (1975) 3, 5, 11, 20
Niswander, Singer & Singer, Psychological Reaction to Therapeutic Abortion, 114 Am. J. Obstetrics & Gynecology 29 (1972) 9, 10, 16

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Notman & Nadelson, Reproductive Crises in Women in Psychotherapy (A. Brodsky & R. Hare-Mustin eds. 1980) 26
Oliver & Simmons, Depression as Measured by the DSM-III and the Beck Depression Inventory in an Unselected Adult Population, 52 J. Consulting & Clin. Psychology 892 (1984) 16
Olson, Social and Psychological Correlates of Pregnancy Resolution Among Adolescent Women, 50 Am. J. Orthopsychiatry 432 (1980) 19
Osofsky & Osofsky, The Psychological Reaction of Patients to Legalized Abortion, 42 Am. J. Orthopsychiatry 48 (1972) 19, 20, 21
Osofsky, Osofsky, Rajan & Spitz, Psychosocial Aspects of Abortion in the United States, 42 Mt. Sinai J. Med. 456 (1975) 11, 13, 19, 20
Patt, Rappaport & Barglow, Follow-up of Therapeutic Abortion, 20 Arch. Gen. Psychiatry 408 (1969) 9
Payne, Kravitz, Notman & Anderson, Outcome Following Therapeutic Abortion, 33 Arch. Gen. Psychiatry 725 (1976) 8, 13, 15, 16, 19, 21
Peck & Marcus, Psychiatric Sequelae of Therapeutic Interruption of Pregnancy, 143 J. Nervous & Ment. Disease 417 (1966) 10, 11, 20
Peres-Reyes & Falk, Follow-Up After Therapeutic Abortion in Early Adolescence, 28 Arch. Gen. Psychiatry 120 (1973) 13, 16, 21
Robbins, Out-of-Wedlock Abortion and Delivery: The Importance of the Male Partner, 21 Soc. Probs. 334 (1984) 16, 17, 18
Robbins & DeLamater, Support from Significant Others and Loneliness Following Inducted Abortion, 20 Soc. Psychiatry 92 (1978) 21
Rosen, State Anxiety and Abortion, 1 Anxiety Research 115 (1988) 11, 20
Schmidt & Priest, The Effects of Termination of Pregnancy, 54 Brit. J. Med. Psychology 267 (1981) 18

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Scott, Legal and Ethical Issues in Counseling Pregnant Adolescents in Adolescent Abortion 24
Shusterman, Predicting the Psychological Consequences of Abortion, 13 Soc. Sci. & Med. 683 (1979) 10, 20, 21
Shusterman, The Psychosocial Factors of the Abortion Experience: A Critical Review, 1 Psychology of Women Q. 79 (1976) 11, 15, 19, 21
Simon & Senturia, Psychiatric Sequelae of Abortion: Review of the Literature, 1935-1964, 15 Arch. Gen. Psychiatry 378 (1966) 6
Simon, Senturia & Rothman, Psychiatric Illness Following Therapeutic Abortion, 124 Am. J. Psychiatry 59 (1967) 8, 10, 16, 17
Smith, A Follow-Up Study of Women Who Request Abortion, 43 Am. J. Orthopsychiatry 574 (1973) 13, 19, 21, 24
Spaulding & Cavenar, Psychoses Following Therapeutic Abortion, 135 Am. J. Psychiatry 364 (1978) 15
A. Speckard, The Psycho-Social Aspects of Stress Following Abortion (1987) 8, 15, 17
Tishler, Adolescent Suicide Attempts Following Elective Abortion, 68 Pediatrics 670 (1981) 13, 15
Wallerstein, Kurtz & Bar-Din, Psychosocial Sequelae of Therapeutic Abortion in Young Unmarried Women, 27 Arch. Gen. Psychiatry 828 (1972) 5, 17

BRIEF FOR AMICUS CURIAE AMERICAN PSYCHOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION IN SUPPORT OF APPELLEES

INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE

The American Psychological Association (APA) is a nonprofit scientific and professional organization founded in 1892, with more than 70,000 members. APA believes that the expertise of its scientific and professional members can help inform the Court's decision in this singularly important case. APA intends to provide relevant information not offered by the parties or their supporting amici. APA has participated frequently as an amicus in this Court, including three cases involving the right to an abortion—Hartigan v. Zbaraz, 484 U.S. 171 (1987); Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians & Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986); and City of Akron v. Akron Ctr. for Reproductive Health, Inc., 462 U.S. 416 (1983).

The parties have consented to the filing of this brief. Their letters of consent have been filed with the Clerk of the Court.

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

This amicus brief will address only the issues raised by Question (7)—whether Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), should be overruled—and Question (4)—whether the Constitution prohibits appellants from declaring that public funds may not be used to encourage or counsel a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life.

Appellants' argument that this Court should overrule Roe rests in part on their claim that the Roe Court did not fully comprehend the alleged psychological threats to a woman's health brought about by seeking and obtaining an abortion. On this question, APA has relevant information. Many of APA's members have studied the psychological effects of abortion or have published comprehensive reviews of the substantial body of research literature on this topic. Their work reveals that appellants' claims cannot be supported. Point I.

A large number of APA members are licensed practitioners who provide mental health services to individual clients. Those services include counseling pregnant women who raise the question of abortion during ongoing treatment or during counseling specifically related to abortion. Research shows that such counseling promotes informed consent and protects the psychological health of women seeking abortions. Depriving women of such services in publicly-financed facilities is antagonistic to the very goals appellants say they seek to achieve and unduly interferes with professional discretion. Point II.

ARGUMENT

I. AVAILABLE SCIENTIFIC LITERATURE DOES NOT SUSTAIN APPELLANTS' ARGUMENT THAT ROE v. WADE SHOULD BE OVERRULED BECAUSE OF ABORTION'S ALLEGED ADVERSE PSYCHOLOGICAL EFFECTS.

"Since Roe was decided in [January] 1973, the Court repeatedly and consistently has accepted and applied the basic principle that a woman has a fundamental right to make the personal choice whether or not to terminate her pregnancy." City of Akron v. Akron Ctr. for Reproductive Health, Inc., 462 U.S. 416, at 420 n.1 (1983). "[T]he constitutional principles that led this Court to its decisions in 1973 still provide the compelling reason for recognizing the constitutional dimensions of a woman's right to decide whether to end her pregnancy." Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians & Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747, 759 (1986).

Despite the continuing vitality of those decisions and their recent reaffirmation, appellants ask the Court to use the instant case as a vehicle for reconsidering and overruling Roe. So modern a precedent as Roe should not be overruled unless there is a compelling reason to do so.[1]

[1] The Court should overrule precedent only "when convinced of former error." City of Akron, 462 U.S. at 458 (O'Connor, J., dissenting) quoting Smith v. Allwright, 321 U.S.–649, 665 (1944) (emphasis added).

Justice White has asserted that it is permissible "to overrule decisions . . . where experience, scholarship, and reflection demonstrated that their fundamental premises were not to be found in the Constitution." Id. at 787 (White, J., dissenting). Unquestionably, methodologically rigorous scholarship should help inform legal decisionmaking, especially when the issue is fundamentally an empirical one.[2] Some of those who want the Court to overrule Roe claim there is now a substantial body of scientific evidence proving there are significant, negative, and often permanent psychological effects on women who obtain elective abortions. Thus, they say, in keeping with the government's interest in protecting maternal health, States should be permitted to enact laws that more closely regulate abortions than is presently the case, and such laws should no longer be subjected to strict scrutiny.[3]

Amicus agrees that health comprises more than physical health. "[P]hysical, emotional, psychological, [and] familial . . . factors [all] may relate to health." Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, 192 (1973).[4] Thus, research on [2] See, e.g., W. Loh, Social Research in the Judicial Process (1984) [hereinafter Loh]; J. Monahan & L. Walker, Social Science in Law (1985) [hereinafter Monahan & Walker]; Bersoff, Psychologists and the Judicial System, 10 L. & Hum. Behav. 151 (1986); Melton, Bringing Psychology to the Legal System, 42 Am. Psychologist 488 (1987).

[3] See, e.g., Brief for Appellants at 12-18; Brief for the United States at 8-24; Brief for Focus on the Family and Family Research Council of America at 13-28.

[4] See City of Akron, 462 U.S. at 467 (O'Connor, J., dissenting) ("Health-related factors . . . go well beyond . . . the physical safety of a particular procedure"); Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379, 394 (1979) ("Attendant circumstances" include "psychological and emotional as well as physical"); Planned Parenthood of Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 70 (1976) (effects of abortion include those "that are both physical and mental"); United States v. Vuitch, 402 U.S. 62, 73 (1971) ("[T]his construction accords with the general usage and modern understanding of the word 'health,' which includes psychological as well as physical well-being"). See generally National Academy of Sciences/Institute of Medicine, Legalized Abortion and the Public Health 9 (1975) [hereinafter the psychological effects of a woman's decision to abort is highly relevant to any decision by this Court on the continued validity of Roe.

The extent to which a body of social science evidence has gained general acceptance within the scientific community is critical to its acceptance by the judicial system.[5] There is no uniform standard by which general acceptance is determined but it can be ascertained by the application of several evaluative criteria.[6] The quality of empirical research is established by the use of valid methods, its support by a body of other research, scrutiny through critical peer review in the scientific community, and subsequent publication in respected journals.

The most important criterion is validity. Social scientists distinguish between two kinds of research validity—internal and external.[7] Internal validity "refers to the trustworthiness of a piece of research on its own terms. . . . To have high validity, a study must rule out, or control for, competing hypotheses that may account for an observed state of affairs." Social Authority, supra note 5, at 502 (1986). External validity refers to the NAS/IOM] ("The health effects of abortion include physical, mental, emotional, and social outcomes of the procedure").

---

[5] See Frye v. United States, 293 F. 1013 (D.C. Cir. 1923); Giannelli, The Admissibility of Novel Scientific Evidence: Frye v. United States, a Half-Century Later, 80 Colum. L. Rev. 1197 (1980); Monahan & Walker, Social Authority: Obtaining, Evaluating, and Establishing Social Science in Law, 134 U. Pa. L. Rev. 477 (1986) [hereinafter Social Authority].

[6] These criteria have been proposed by legal scholars trained in social science methodology and familiar with the uses of social science research by the courts. See, e.g., Loh, supra note 2; Monahan & Walker, supra note 2; Bersoff, Social Science Data and the Supreme Court, 42 Am. Psychologist 52 (1987); Monahan & Walker, Social Science in Law: A New Paradigm, 43 Am. Psychologist 465 (1988).

[7] See E. Lind, J. Shepard & J. Cecil, Experimentation in the Law: Report of the Federal Judicial Center Advisory Committee on Experimentation in the Law (1981).

extent to which research can be generalized across different people, different settings, and over time.

In this context, amicus will evaluate the research on the psychological effects of abortion. APA will first show that the studies relied upon by the Court when it first asserted that abortion has negative psychological effects were too few and not germane to elective abortions. Second, APA will show that the studies relied on by appellants' supporting amici are lacking in basic requirements of scientific acceptability. Finally, APA will demonstrate that the scientifically acceptable studies that have been performed contradict any claim that elective abortion has substantial negative psychological effects.

A. The Court Relied in 1981 on Tentative, Fragmentary, and Irrelevant Findings When it Concluded Abortion Produces Negative Psychological Effects in Women.

The Court has stated that the "emotional[] and psychological consequences of an abortion are serious and can be lasting." H. L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398, 411 (1981). This is not a judgment of law but an empirical claim. Its scientific credibility depends on the validity of the research that supports it. The studies on which the Court relied in 1981 fail to meet minimal scientific validity criteria and are irrelevant to the questions before the Court in this case.[8] Sound decisionmaking demands that the Court base its reconsideration of

---

[8] The Court cited two articles to support its conclusion, see, id., at 411 n.20, published prior to the Court's decision in Roe when elective abortions were difficult to obtain and most abortions were either illegal or performed only for therapeutic reasons. The first article, Wallerstein, Kurtz, & Bar-Din, Psychosocial Sequelae of Therapeutic Abortion in Young Unmarried Women, 27 Arch. Gen. Psychiatry 828 (1972) [hereinafter Wallerstein et al.] limited its study to women receiving therapeutic abortions, i.e., abortions where there is a substantial risk that continuation of pregnancy would gravely impair the health of the woman or that the child would be born with a grave physical or mental defect, or where the pregnancy resulted from felonious intercourse. See NAS/IOM, supra note 4, at 133. Wallerstein et al. candidly

Roe on valid research, insofar as its decision is grounded on empirically-based judgments.[9]

Even after Roe, researchers concluded that an objective review of findings:

> fully corroborates the already widespread opinion that past research in this field has been inadequate in scope, faulty in methodology, unsystematically organized, and in general motivated and directed towards problems posed by ideological rather than scientific considerations.[10] admitted "that this study is sociologically skewed (since it draws in its entirety upon young unmarried women) as well as methodologically skewed because of the high follow-up refusal rate (which may have resulted in a heavier weighing toward those experiencing difficulties)." Id. at 831. The second article, Babikian & Goldman, A Study of Teen-Age Pregnancy, 128 Am. J. Psychiatry 755 (1971), "was in fact an account of rather unsystematic psychoanalytic impressions of a sample of adolescents who carried their pregnancies to term." Melton & Pliner, Adolescent Abortion: A Psycholegal Analysis in Adolescent Abortion 11 (G. Melton ed. 1986).

---

[9] Appellants' supporting amici do not fulfill the obligation to rely on valid research. The most egregious use of unacceptable "scholarship" is found in the Brief for Focus on the Family and Family Research Council of America. They purport to support the argument that abortions produce serious adverse psychological effects by numerous references to published reports. However, a "systematic review on the psychosocial sequelae of abortion" performed by the Family Research Council itself concludes that these very studies are "without sufficient methodological standards to assure the reader of the conclusions [they draw]." Lyons, Larson, Huckeba, Rogers & Mueller, Research on the Psychosocial Impact of Abortion: A Systematic Review of the Literature 1966 to 1985 in Values and Public Policy 77, 82 (G. Regier ed. 1988).

[10] Illsley & Hall, Psychosocial Aspects of Abortion: A Review of Issues and Needed Research, 53 Bull. World Health Organ. 83, 99 (1976) [hereinafter Illsley & Hall]. Similarly, in a review of thirty years of pre-Roe research, the authors noted that "[d]eeply held personal convictions frequently seem to outweigh the importance of data, especially when conclusions are drawn." Simon & Senturia, Psychiatric Sequelae of Abortion: Review of the Literature, 1935-1964, 15 Arch. Gen. Psychiatry 378, 387 (1966) [hereinafter Simon & Senturia]. "The literature on the psycho-

B. Empirical Research on the Psychological Effects of Abortion Generally Lacks the Methodological Rigor Necessary to Justify Overruling Roe.

The persuasiveness of any empirical research will depend on five major factors: (1) Rigor of its research design; (2) accurate definition of the independent variable, i.e., the variable from which an outcome will be predicted—in this case the abortion itself; (3) accurate definition of the dependent variable, i.e., the outcome one is studying—in this case the psychological effects of abortion; (4) reliability and validity of measures used to study the dependent variable;[11] and (5) representativeness of the sample of human participants used from which generalizations are drawn. The published studies upon which appellants' supporting amici most heavily rely are flawed in one or more of these respects.

1. Rigor of the research design.

Drawing valid inferences about the psychological effects of abortion on women depends on a sound research design. The best way to ascertain whether there are such effects on women who obtain abortions is to contrast these women to relevant comparison groups.[12] Yet, the logical sequelae for women who have obtained an abortion is a classic illustration of the danger of biased and polemical reporting." Croghan, Areas of Potential Psychological Vulnerability in the New Era of Liberalized Abortion, 11 Psychology, Aug. 1974, at 35, 36.

---

[11] "Reliability refers to the degree to which test scores are free from errors in measurement." AERA, APA, NCME, Standards for Educational and Psychological Testing 19 (1985). The more reliable a measurement instrument is, the more consistent or repeatable its measurements will be. Validity "concerns what the test measures and how well it does so." A. Anastasi, Psychological Testing 27 (5th ed. 1982) [hereinafter Anastasi].

[12] Choosing a comparison group is partly a function of the question the researcher frames. If the question is whether abortion produces more psychological injury than other kinds of surgery on the genital tract, then this suggests one kind of comparison group. If the question is whether abortion produces more psychological injury than unwanted pregnancy, this suggests another kind of comparison group.

use of such groups in abortion research has been inconsistent and many studies use no comparison sample at all.[13]

When a single group of subjects is examined without comparison to a group that differs only on the independent variable nothing can be concluded about the dependent variable, i.e., the effect of the procedure, because confounding variables could contribute to or be causing any observed effects.[14] These confounding variables can be accounted for only by studying comparison groups that share these variables. At a minimum, the groups being studied should be matched on significant variables to rule out alternative explanations for differences between abortion and comparison groups. But such matching is rarely done.[15]

---

[13] Studies not using a comparison group include A. Speckhard, The Psycho-Social Aspects of Stress Following Abortion (1987) [hereinafter Speckhard]; Belsey, Greer, Lal, Lewis & Beard, Predictive Factors in Emotional Response to Abortion, 11 Soc. Sci. & Med. 71 (1977) [hereinafter Belsey et al.]; Blumberg, Golbus & Hanson, The Psychological Sequelae of Abortion Performed for a Genetic Indication, 122 Am. J. Obstetrics & Gynecology 799 (1975) [hereinafter Blumberg et al.]; Brewer, Induced Abortion After Feeling Fetal Movements: Its Causes and Emotional Consequences, 10 J. Biosoc. Sci. 203 (1978) [hereinafter Brewer, Induced Abortion]; Ewing & Rouse, Therapeutic Abortion and a Prior Psychiatric History, 130 Am. J. Psychiatry 37 (1973) [hereinafter Ewing & Rouse]; Ford, Castelnuovo-Tedesco & Long, Abortion: Is it a Therapeutic Procedure in Psychiatry? 218 J. Am. Med. Ass'n. 1173 (1971) [hereinafter Ford et al.]; Friedman, Greenspan & Mittleman, The Decision-Making Process and the Outcome of Therapeutic Abortion, 131 Am. J. Psychiatry 1332 (1974) [hereinafter Friedman et al]; Payne, Kravitz, Notman & Anderson, Outcome Following Therapeutic Abortion, 33 Arch. Gen. Psychiatry 725 (1976) [hereinafter Payne et al.]; Simon, Senturia & Rothman, Psychiatric Illness Following Therapeutic Abortion, 124 Am. J. Psychiatry 59 (1967) [hereinafter Simon et al.].

[14] In abortion research these confounding variables include, e.g., previous mental illness, relationship with the potential father, marital status, other stressful events in the woman's life.

[15] Even careful researchers who have matched comparison and experimental groups on relevant variables have neglected to consider fully other extraneous influences that may contaminate results. See, e.g., Athanasiou, Oppel, Michelson, Unger & Yager, Psychiatric Sequelae to Term Birth and Induced Early and Late Abortions, 5 Fam. Plan. Persp. 227 (1973) [hereinafter Athanasiou et al.]; David, Rasmussen & Holst, Postpartum and Postabortion Psychotic Reactions, 13 Fam. Plan. Persp. 88 (1981) [hereinafter David et al.]. Both researchers controlled for age, race, prior history of pregnancy, marital status, and socioeconomic level, but did not control for whether pregnancy had been desired. Niswander, Singer & Singer, Psychological Reaction to Therapeutic Abortion, 114 Am. J. Obstetrics & Gynecology 29 (1972) [hereinafter Niswander et al.], compared women who obtained abortions to those who carried to term but did not match the two samples on other relevant variables and did not test to see if the two samples were equivalent. Brody, Meikle & Gerritse, Therapeutic Abortion: A Prospective Study, 109 Am. J. Obstetrics & Gynecology 347 (1971) [hereinafter Brody et al.], also compared women choosing abortions to those carrying to term, but the sample of women who chose an abortion contained significantly more single women than those who gave birth.

Studies of the psychological effects of abortion should evaluate women prior to the abortion to establish a baseline for the existence of any psychological disturbance and then reevaluate them after the abortion. Many studies, relying on "post-test only" designs, fail to control for the possibility of preexisting differences within and between groups on the dependent variable of psychological effects, thus making it difficult to draw any useful inferences from them. In fact, many investigators use retrospective assessment as a substitute for pretesting; they ask women to recall after the abortion how they felt prior to the abortion.[16] Retrospective assessment is likely to distort the data and render the results unreliable.

2. Abortion as an independent variable.

The five decades of research studying the psychological effects of abortion on women do not examine the same event or medical procedure because of changing technology, legal circumstances, and social climate.[17] Research prior to 1960 primarily examined illegal abortion. Studies conducted between 1960 and 1973 primarily examined therapeutic abortion.[18] None of the pre-1973 studies are generalizable to individuals choosing to have abortions in the current sociocultural climate for several reasons: (1) the criteria used by physicians to justify therapeutic abortions varied widely across practitioners and the jurisdictions in which they practiced;[19] (2) illegal and therapeutic abortions were obtained in a generally socially disapproving environment, in contrast to the present era when a woman's right to choose an abortion is legally sanctioned and supported by a very large segment of the public;[20] (3) women granted therapeutic abortions for psychiatric rea-

[16] See, e.g., Kumar & Robson, Previous Induced Abortion and Ante-natal Depression in Primaparae: Preliminary Report of a Survey of Mental Health in Pregnancy, 8 Psychological Med. 711 (1978) [hereinafter Kumar & Robson]; Patt, Rappaport & Barglow, Follow-up of Therapeutic Abortion, 20 Arch. Gen. Psychiatry 408 (1969).

[17] "[F]rom a research perspective, the influence of sociological factors on psychological aspects of abortion means that past literature, even when relatively recent, may not be applicable to current problems if the attitudes of women, their families and doctors have changed and/or if legal, economic or welfare provisions regarding pregnancy have changed." Handy, Psychological and Social Aspects of Induced Abortion, 21 Brit. J. Clinical Psychology, 29, 29 (1982) [hereinafter Handy].

[18] For representative studies see, e.g., Adler, Emotional Responses of Women Following Therapeutic Abortion, 45 Am. J. Orthopsychiatry 446 (1975) [hereinafter Adler]; Blumberg et al., supra note 13; Brody et al., supra note 15; Ewing & Rouse, supra note 13; Friedman et al., supra note 13; Kaltreider, Psychological Factors in Mid-Trimester Abortion, 4 Psychiatry in Med. 129 (1973) [hereinafter Kaltreider]; Niswander et al., supra note 15; Peck & Marcus, Psychiatric Sequelae of Therapeutic Interruption of Pregnancy, 143 J. Nervous & Ment. Disease 417 (1966) [hereinafter Peck & Marcus]; Simon et al., supra note 13.

[19] See, e.g., Bolter, The Psychiatrist's Role in Therapeutic Abortion: The Unwitting Accomplice, 119 Am. J. Psychiatry 312 (1962).

[20] See, e.g., Bracken, Hachamovitch & Grossman, The Decision to Abort and Psychological Sequelae, 158 J. Nervous & Ment. Disorders, 154 (1974) [hereinafter Bracken et al.]; Shusterman, Predicting the Psychological Consequences of Abortion, 13 Soc. Sci. & Med. 683 (1979).

sons are more likely to have a history of emotional disturbance making it more likely that such women would experience post-abortion psychological problems, whether or not related to the abortion itself; and, (4) women granted therapeutic abortions for physical reasons frequently planned to carry to term and would, therefore, have been more likely than women who chose abortion voluntarily to mourn the loss of the fetus.[21]

But even studies of the outcomes of legal elective abortions do not invariably investigate the same medical procedure.[22] There are at least four medical procedures in current use [23] and each of these procedures may have a differential impact on the patient.[24]

Finally, some studies relied upon by appellants' supporting amici were conducted in foreign countries.[25] Because of differing cultural, religious, political, and legal [21] See, e.g., Peck & Marcus, supra note 18.

[22] "Investigations of the psychological sequelae must be examined separately for the therapeutic abortion population, the illegal abortion population, and the abortion on request population." Shusterman, The Psychosocial Factors of the Abortion Experience: A Critical Review, 1 Psychology of Women Q. 79, 90 (1976) [hereinafter Shusterman].

[23] These procedures include saline injection, dilation and curretage, vacuum aspiration, and prostaglandin instillation. See NAS/IOM, supra note 4, at 20-22.

[24] The procedure used may also depend on whether the abortion was performed in the first or second trimester, which may have an effect on the woman as well. See, e.g., Kaltreider, Goldsmith & Margolies, The Impact of Midtrimester Abortion Techniques on Patients and Staff, 135 Am. J. Obstetrics & Gynecology 235 (1979); Osofsky, Osofsky, Rajan & Spitz, Psychosocial Aspects of Abortion in the United States, 42 Mt. Sinai J. Med. 456, 464 (1975) [hereinafter Osofsky et al.].

[25] See, e.g., Belsey et al., supra note 13 (England); David et al., supra note 15 (Denmark); Lipper, Cvejic, Benjamin & Kinch, Abortion and the Pregnant Teenager, 109 Can. Med. Ass'n. J., 852 (1973) [hereinafter Lipper et al.] (Canada); Rosen, State Anxiety and Abortion, 1 Anxiety Research 115 (1988) [hereinafter Rosen] (Sweden).

rules, abortion may have "a different meaning from country to country and from one period to another. Research studies that are all formally concerned with an event called abortion may, in fact, be measuring different phenomena." [26]

Consequently, to be useful, research on the psychological effects of abortion must describe the type of abortion procedure used and the sociocultural and political climate in which it was performed.[27]

3. Psychological effects as a dependent variable.

Another limitation on the abortion literature is disagreement concerning which psychological conditions to measure as dependent variables. Diverse conditions have been chosen, including doubt, embarrassment, fear of disapproval, regret, dissatisfaction, anxiety, guilt, anger, hostility, sense of loss, depression, neurosis, and psychosis.[28] Other investigators have sought to identify be-

---

[26] Illsley & Hall, supra note 10, at 84-85. "The results of studies performed in one country may not be comparable with the results of studies carried out in another country, and may possibly be contradictory as a direct result of the social and legal context in which they occur." Handy, supra note 17, at 29.

[27] In addition, the study should describe how long the procedure has been in use, how experienced the physician is in performing the procedure, the gestational stage of the pregnancy, and the reason for the abortion.

[28] See, e.g., Bradley, Abortion and Subsequent Pregnancy, 29 Can. J. Psychiatry 494 (1984) (depression, social adjustment, self-esteem); Brewer, Induced Abortion, supra note 13 (depression); Brewer, Incidence of Post-Abortion Psychosis, 1 Brit. Med. J. 476 (1977); David et al., supra note 15 (admission to psychiatric hospital); Freeman, Rickels, Huggins, Garcia & Polin, Emotional Distress Patterns Among Women Having First or Repeat Abortions, 55 Obstetrics & Gynecology 630 (1980) [hereinafter Freeman et al.] (anxiety, depression, phobias, somatization, neurosis and psychosis); Lazarus, Psychiatric Sequelae of Legalized Elective First Trimester Abortion, 4 J. Psychosomatic Obstetrics & Gynecology 141 (1985) [hereinafter Lazarus]; guilt, sense of loss, depression, worry); Lipper et al., supra note 25 (emotional instability, regret); Moseley, Follingstad & Harley, Psychological havioral manifestations such as suicide attempts or sexual dysfunction.[29]

This wide array of dependent variables reflects a lack of consensus regarding symptoms, severity, and duration of psychological effects of abortion. Reported outcomes such as regret or guilt are not necessarily indicative of personality problems or mental illness and may be regarded as rational or pathological depending on the predilections of the researcher.[30] Furthermore, researchers have used inconsistent and widely variable time periods to measure psychological effects. Effects have been measured while the patient is still in the recovery room [31] and others from three days to ten years post-abortion.[32]

Factors that Predict Reaction to Abortion, 37 J. Clin. Psychology 276 (1981) (depression) [hereinafter Moseley et al.]; Payne et al., supra note 13 (anxiety, anger, depression, guilt, shame).

[29] See, e.g., Ashton, The Psychosocial Outcome of Induced Abortion, 87 Brit. J. Obstetrics & Gynecology 1115 (1980) (sexual dysfunction) [hereinafter Ashton]; Tishler, Adolescent Suicide Attempts Following Elective Abortion, 68 Pediatrics 670 (1981) (case study of two adolescents) [hereinafter Tishler].

[30] These symptoms may be more the result of unwanted pregnancy than abortion; abortion may, in fact, lessen these symptoms, not exacerbate them, in many people. See Part I(C), infra.

[31] See, e.g., Bracken et al., supra note 20; Hittner, Feelings of Well-Being Before and After an Abortion, 9 Am. Ment. Health Counselors Ass'n. J. 98 (1987) [hereinafter Hittner]; Major, Mueller & Hildebrandt, Attributions, Expectations, and Coping with Abortion, 47 J. Personality & Soc. Psychology 585 (1985) [hereinafter Major et al.]; Moseley et al., supra note 28.

[32] See, e.g., Athanasiou et al., supra note 15 (16 months); Cvejic, Lipper, Kinch & Benjamin, Follow-up of 50 Adolescent Girls 2 Years After Abortion, 116 Can. Med. Ass'n. J. 44 (1977) [hereinafter Cvejic et al.] (2 years); Ford et al., supra note 13 (6 months); Lipper et al., supra note 25 (over course of 1 year); Osofsky et al., supra note 24 (1 month, 6-12 months); Payne et al., supra note 13 (1 day, 6 weeks, 6 months); Perez-Reyes & Falk, Follow-Up After Therapeutic Abortion in Early Adolescence, 28 Arch. Gen. Psychiatry 120 (1973) [hereinafter Perez-Reyes & Falk] (6 months); Smith, A Follow-Up Study of Women Who Request Abortion, 43 Am. J. Orthopsychiatry 574 (1973) [hereinafter Smith] (1-2 years).

There is little agreement how soon any claimed negative effects of abortion may become manifest or how enduring they are.

Without adequate definition, it is difficult to make a clear distinction between any putative diagnostic rubric such as "post-abortion stress syndrome" [33] and a normal psychological process in response to a life stress that is limited in duration and intensity and does not require psychological intervention. In general, ambiguity in the definition of the dependent variable limits the usefulness of the data.

4. Psychometric soundness of research measures.

A variety of techniques have been used to study the psychological effects of abortion. These techniques include case studies, interviews, questionnaires, and tests.

Several published reports, including many in the post-Roe era, rely solely or heavily on case studies, i.e., in-depth investigations of an individual. Such studies have very limited scientific utility not only because of the problems created by a totally inadequate research design, but because they preclude evaluation of the reliability and validity of the observer's judgment.[34]

---

[33] The existence of a "post-abortion stress syndrome" has been suggested in Brief for Focus on the Family and Family Research Council of America at 22-24. Neither the American Psychiatric Association in its Diagnostic and Statistical Manual nor amicus APA recognize such a syndrome.

[34] See S. Isaac & W. Michael, Handbook of Research and Evaluation 20 (1971) ("cases studies are limited in their representativeness [and] do not allow valid generalizaitons to the population from which their units came;" "[c]ase studies are particularly vulnerable to subjective biases . . . because [they] neatly fit[] the researchers' preconceptions."). For representative case studies see, e.g., Cavenar, Maltbie & Sullivan, Aftermath of Abortions, 42 Bull. Menninger Clin. 433 (1978) (2 cases of therapeutic abortion); Lidz, Reflections of a Psychiatrist in 22 Therapeutic Abortions 276 (H. Rosen ed. 1954) (2 cases); Lipper & Feigenbaum, Obsessive-Compulsive Neurosis after Viewing the Fetus during Therapeutic Abortion, 30 Am. J. Psychotherapy 666 (1976) (1 case); Mester, Induced Abortion and Psychotherapy, 30 Psychotherapy & Psychosomatics 98 (1978) (2 cases); Spaulding & Cavenar, Psychoses Following Therapeutic Abortion, 135 Am. J. Psychiatry 364 (1978) (2 cases); Tishler, supra note 29 (2 cases).

Many researchers have measured women's responses to abortion through questionnaires, sometimes in combination with interviews.[35] Those measures typically are neither standardized nor subjected to reliability and validity studies. Standardization refers to measuring responses under uniform conditions across large numbers of people so that an individual's response can be compared to average responses in a normative population. Nonstandardized measures, however, are common in abortion studies. None of the studies assess the reliability of measures, i.e., whether two independent raters score the interviews or questionnaires in the same way. Neither have questionnaires been validated, i.e., proven to actually measure the psychological outcome the researcher claims to measure. Without standardization and without studies of reliability and validity, it is difficult to assess whether the reported research findings are accurate or predictive of future behavior.[36]

Some studies have used tests to supplement information gained in interviews or questionnaires. For example, many researchers have used the Minnesota Multiphasic Personality Inventory, a standardized test used

---

[35] See, e.g., Speckhard, supra note 13; Ashton, supra note 29; Belsey et al. supra note 13; Bracken et al., supra note 20; Brewer, Induced Abortion, supra note 13; Cvejic et al., supra note 32; Ewing & Rouse, supra note 13; Freeman, Influence of Personality Attributes on Abortion Experiences, 47 Am. J. Orthopsychiatry 503 (1977) [hereinafter Freeman]; Hittner, supra note 31; Kumar & Robson, supra note 16; Lazarus, supra note 28; Lipper et al., supra note 25; Payne et al., supra note 13.

[36] See Anastasi, supra note 11. "The literature has included anecdotes, which are not solid scientific material; surveys, which often have lacked depth, particularity and precision; and interviews, which often have been uncontrolled and retrospective." Shusterman, supra note 22, at 102.

to construct personality profiles,[37] or checklists of possible psychological problems.[38] Although such instruments may have more psychometric integrity than subjective measures like interviews, they identify many emotional responses that are not pathological. There is considerable disagreement among investigators, for example, as to which cutoff scores are appropriate for distinguishing a true psychological disorder from a normal life stress.[39] Even a statistically significant increase in post-abortion scores might remain in the nonpathological range, but many authors report scores without specifying whether the scores are indicative of genuine psychological disorder.[40] These data analyses yield few, if any, legitimate conclusions about the real-world significance of the results and thus are of no assistance to the Court in resolving Question 7.[41]

5. The characteristics of the groups studied.

Most studies of the psychological effects of abortion fail to discern whether the samples of human participants

---

[37] See, e.g., Athanasiou et al., supra note 15; Blumberg & Golbus, Psychological Sequelae of Elective Abortion, 123 Western J. Med. 188 (1975) [hereinafter Blumberg & Golbus]; Ford et al., supra note 13; Payne et al., supra note 13; Perez-Reyes & Falk, supra note 32; Robbins, Out-of-Wedlock Abortion and Delivery: The Importance of the Male Partner, 21 Soc. Probs. 334 (1984) [hereinafter Robbins]; Simon et al., supra note 13.

[38] Athanasiou et al., supra note 15; Cohen & Roth, Coping with Abortion, 10 J. Hum. Stress 140 (1984) [hereinafter Cohen & Roth]; Freeman et al., supra note 28; Moseley et al., supra note 28.

[39] See, e.g., Oliver & Simmons, Depression as Measured by the DSM-III and the Beck Depression Inventory in an Unselected Adult Population, 52 J. Consulting & Clin. Psychology 892 (1984).

[40] See, e.g., Bracken, A Causal Model of Psychosomatic Reactions to Vacuum Aspiration Abortion, 13 Soc. Psychiatry 135 (1978) [hereinafter Bracken]; George, An Empirical Study of Medical Termination of Pregnancy, 25 Psychological Studies 118 (1980); Niswander et al., supra note 15; Payne et al., supra note 13.

[41] Moreover, no standardized scales of positive functioning or well-being have been used in measuring the effects of abortion on women. Thus, the total picture remains incomplete.

studied are representative or typical of the population from which they are gleaned. Many other studies are comprised only, or predominantly of women of one race, single women, or women of one social class.[42] Furthermore, almost all research on psychological effects use volunteers who essentially select themselves as participants. It is highly likely that these "self-selecters" have characteristics that distinguish them from women who abort but who do not volunteer for such studies or from women who do not choose abortion but who do volunteer.[43] These methodological factors severely lessen generalizability of the results because they may give a false impression that emotional responses to abortion are higher for the population as a whole than the baseline for such difficulties in women experiencing other stressful events.

Many abortion studies are of limited value because they investigate small groups of participants making it difficult to control for the effect of extraneous variables or to generalize from the small sample to the larger population. A great number of researchers have been forced to use small samples because of the lack of volunteers or attrition in the volunteers with which they started. One survey of 17 studies of the psychological effects of abortion found that the range of initial sample lost to attrition was 13% to 86%,[44] and that those participants who complete such studies differ from those who do not complete them on important variables. Id.[45]

---

[42] See, e.g., Freeman et al., supra note 28; Kaltreider, supra note 18; Robbins, supra note 37; Wallerstein et al., supra note 8 (using all or almost all women of the same race); Simon et al., supra note 13 (same for social class).

[43] See, e.g., Speckhard, supra note 13, where the sample of women consisted of those answering an advertisement for patients who had serious problems after an abortion.

[44] Adler, Sample Attrition in Studies of Psychological Sequelae of Abortion: How Great a Problem? 6 J. Applied Soc. Psychology 240 (1976).

[45] See Freeman, supra note 35 (those who refused participation in the study were younger, more likely to be single, more

In sum, the abortion decision involves "a constant interaction between individual psychology, social pressures and constraints, and individual actions that precipitate societal responses, which, in turn, have an impact on the social and psychological state of the woman . . . . Research on abortion should always be formulated in full cognizance of this context." Illsley & Hall, supra note 10, at 86. Unfortunately, most research on the effects of abortion has not done so. A great deal more rigorous research in a variety of situations with a more diverse and clearly defined group of human participants is needed to describe and measure meaningfully the psychological effects of abortion. The most theoretically and methodologically sound research is yet to be done; indeed, the Surgeon-General has recently concluded that most extant studies of mental health effects of abortion are "flawed methodologically." [46] At this time, "convincing" scientific findings that abortion is psychologically harmful to women do not exist.[47]

C. The Existing Evidence Does Not Support the View that there are Substantial Adverse Emotional and Psychological Consequences of the Decision to Have an Abortion.

Given these methodological problems, any conclusions about the cause of psychological effects of abortion on women are, at best, tentative. However, competent studies exist that describe women's normative psychological response to abortions and the results of more recent and ambivalent about abortion, and more likely to have been forced by others to obtain an abortion than volunteers completing the study). See also Cohen & Roth, supra note 38; Robbins, supra note 37; Schmidt & Priest, The Effects of Termination of Pregnancy, 54 Brit. J. Med. Psychology 267 (1981), all noting heavy attrition rates.

---

[46] Letter from C. Everett Koop to President Reagan at 2 (Jan. 9, 1989).

[47] "[F]ar-reaching" constitutional rules "should not be based on the results" of studies that suffer from serious methodological flaws. Lockhart v. McCree, 476 U.S. 162, 172-173 (1986).

more sophisticated studies reveal the risk factors that may evoke adverse response in the few women in which they occur.

With regard to competently designed and conducted descriptive studies, there are significant convergent findings. Five major reviews of the psychological and psychiatric literature published between 1975 and 1989 all confirm that for the overwhelming majority of women who undergo abortion, there are no long-term negative emotional effects.[48]

There is consensus among researchers that abortion—like any significant life event—has psychological implications.[49] When women experience regret, depression, or guilt, however, such feelings are mild and diminish rapidly without adversely affecting general functioning. Severe emotional responses are rare,[50] even in young

---

[48] Marecek, Consequences of Adolescent Childbearing and Abortion in Adolescent Abortion 96 (G. Melton ed. 1986) [hereinafter Marecek]; NAS/IOM, supra note 4; Adler, Psychological Responses of Women Following Abortion (1989) (testimony on behalf of APA to Subcommittee on Human Resources and Intergovernmental Relations of the House of Representatives Committee on Government Operation); Adler & Dolcini, Psychological Issues in Abortions for Adolescents in Adolescent Abortion, supra, at 74 [hereinafter Adler & Dolcini]; Shusterman, supra note 22.

[49] Adler & Dolcini, supra note 48; Cohen & Roth, supra note 38; Olson, Social and Psychological Correlates of Pregnancy Resolution Among Adolescent Women, 50 Am. J. Orthopsychiatry 432 (1980) [hereinafter Olson].

[50] See, e.g., Adler, supra note 18; Adler & Dolcini; supra note 49; Blumberg & Golbus, supra note 37; Bracken, Klerman & Bracken, Abortion, Adoption or Motherhood: An Empirical Study of Decision-making During Pregnancy, 130 Am. J. Obstetrics & Gynecology 251 (1978); Bracken et al., supra note 20; Brewer, Induced Abortion, supra note 13 (1978); Friedman et al., supra note 13; Jacques, Abortion and Psychological Trauma, 27 Med. Arts & Sci. 52 (1973) [hereinafter Jacques]; Lazarus, supra note 28; Marecek, supra note 48; Olson, supra note 49; Osofsky & Osofsky, The Psychological Reaction of Patients to Legalized Abortion, 42 Am. J. Orthopsychiatry 48 (1972) [hereinafter Osofksy & Osofsky]; Osofsky et al., supra note 24; Payne et al., supra note 13; Shusterman, supra note 22; Smith, supra note 32.

women.[51] To the contrary, the great majority of women who have had an abortion express feelings of relief.[52]

Moreover, there is evidence that positive psychological changes occur as a result of abortions. Studies of the mental health status of pregnant women before and after abortion show significant reductions in the symptoms of stress, as measured by standardized psychological tests.[53] Other researchers have noted improved contraceptive use after abortions, with women reporting feelings of increased self-directedness, autonomy, and efficiency.[54]

The focus of current research is on the variables that predict diverse emotional responses to abortion. Abortion does not take place independently of a woman's intrapersonal and interpersonal context. Thus much research has moved away from testing causal hypotheses (does abortion cause adverse effects) to testing conditional hypotheses (under what conditions will abortions be related to adverse responses). These more finely-grained studies have proved illuminating.

For those few women who do experience negative psychological responses there appear to be four categories of women who are at risk. In the first category are women who desire to carry to term but cannot because of medical [51] With respect to adolescents, abortion "is neither psychologically harmful nor in other ways damaging to the patient." Olson, supra note 49, at 440. "Very few teenagers have severe psychiatric complications after induced abortion." Cates, Adolescent Abortions in the United States, 1 J. Adolescent Health Care 18, 22 (1980) [hereinafter Cates]. See generally National Academy of Sciences, Risking the Future: Adolescent Sexuality, Pregnancy, and Childbearing (1987).

---

[52] See, e.g., Adler & Dolcini, supra note 48; Cates, supra note 51; Lazarus, supra note 28; Marecek, supra note 48; Osofsky & Osofsky, supra note 50; Osofsky et al., supra note 24.

[53] See Moseley et al., supra note 28; Peck & Marcus, supra note 18; Rosen, supra note 25; Shusterman, supra note 22.

[54] See Freeman, supra note 35.

or genetic indications.[55] Conversely, those who elect abortion for other reasons are relatively free from adverse responses. In the second category are women who have difficulty deciding to abort, or are pressured into it. Conversely those women who are satisfied with their decision prior to an abortion have fewer, if any, negative responses.[56] In the third category are women who do not perceive that their decision to abort is supported by others influential in their lives. Conversely, those who perceive support from those they are close to appear to have positive outcomes after an abortion.[57] Finally,[58] those with a previous history of serious emotional problems

---

[55] See, e.g., Ashton, supra note 29; Blumberg & Golbus, supra note 37; Freeman, supra note 35; Friedman et al., supra note 13; Lazarus, supra note 28; Major et al., supra note 31.

[56] See, e.g. Adler, supra note 18; Adler & Dolcini, supra note 48; Friedman et al., supra note 13; Payne et al., supra note 13; Perez-Reyes & Falk, supra note 32; Shusterman, supra note 22; Smith, supra note 32. Married women report their decision as being more difficult, Bracken, supra note 40, as do Catholic women and women who seek an abortion in the second trimester. Osofsky & Osofsky, supra note 50.

[57] See, e.g., Adler & Dolcini, supra note 48; Cates, supra note 51; Moseley et al., supra note 28; Robbins & DeLamater, Support from Significant Others and Loneliness Following Induced Abortion, 20 Soc. Psychiatry 92 (1978) [hereinafter Robbins & DeLamater]; Shusterman, Predicting the Psychological Consequences of Abortion, 13 Soc. Sci. & Med. 683 (1979); Smith, supra note 32.

[58] Other factors that relate to the psychological outcome of abortions have been identified as well, e.g., the woman's defensive and coping style, her age, religion, education, prior history of pregnancy, the type of abortion used, and pain during the procedure. See Adler, supra note 18; Adler, Abortion: A Social-Psychological Perspective, 35 J. Soc. Issues 100 (1979) [hereinafter Social-Psychological Perspective]; Adler & Dolcini, supra note 48; Bracken, supra note 40; Bracken et al., supra note 20; Cates, supra note 51; Friedman et al., supra note 13; Major et al., supra note 31; Moseley et al., supra note 28; Payne et al., supra note 13; Perez-Reyes & Falk, supra note 32; Robbins & DeLamater, supra note 57; Smith, supra note 32; see generally Shusterman, supra note 22.

appear to have the greatest chance of responding negatively after abortion.[59]

In sum, the most definitive research is yet to be done. Recent and better designed studies have begun the necessary process of examining a wide variety of variables associated with negative outcomes of abortion. Nevertheless, although more research is needed, recent and objective descriptive or normative studies suggest that abortion does not evoke or cause serious psychological disorders in the vast majority of women.

II. APPELLANTS' BAN ON THE USE OF PUBLIC FUNDS TO ENCOURAGE OR COUNSEL A WOMAN TO HAVE AN ABORTION IS ANTAGONISTIC TO THE STATE'S INTEREST IN PROMOTING INFORMED CONSENT AND PROTECTING THE HEALTH AND WELFARE OF ITS CITIZENS AND UNDULY INTERFERES WITH PROFESSIONAL DISCRETION.

Appellant makes it "unlawful for a doctor, nurse or other health care personnel,[60] a social worker, a counselor or person of similar occupation who is a public employee within the scope of his public employment to encourage or counsel a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life." Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.210 (1986). The State also prohibits the use of public facilities, Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.215 (1986), or public funds for such purposes. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.205 (1986). All three restrictions were declared unconstitutional by the courts below but only the public funds provision is currently at issue. Nevertheless, any ban on the use of public funds for abortion-related counseling would necessarily preclude such counseling by public employees in public institutions, or in private programs or institutions supported by State funds.

[59] See, e.g., Ashton, supra note 29; Blumberg & Golbus, supra note 37; Friedman et al., supra note 13; Jacques, supra note 50; Lazarus, supra note 28; Payne et al., supra note 13.

[60] Psychologists are recognized as health care providers under federal and state law. See Blue Shield v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465 (1982) and Brief for Amicus Curiae American Psychological Association submitted in that case; Mo. Rev. Stat. § 337 et seq. (1981).

The prohibition on the use of public funds for abortion-related counseling significantly undermines important interests that the State claims it wishes to advance. The prohibition essentially denies a significant proportion of women seeking abortions or coping with an unwanted or problem pregnancy the benefit of gathering and receiving crucial information uncensored by the State and unduly restricts health care providers' ability to communicate their professional judgment and requires them to violate ethical requirements to provide such information.[61]

A. Appellant's Provision Undermines the Health of its Citizens and May be Antagonistic to its Goal of Preventing Future Unwanted Pregnancies.

The Court has recognized that the "decision to abort . . . is an important, and often a stressful one, and it is desirable and imperative that it be made with full knowledge of its nature and consequences." Planned Parenthood of Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 67 (1976). "A requirement that the woman give what is truly a voluntary and informed consent, as a general proposition, is, of course, proper and is surely not unconstitutional." Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians & Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747, 760 (1986).[62] Amicus strongly endorses pre-abortion counseling to ensure that consent is informed and that a trained professional will be available to discuss any psychological or related problems the woman might have.[63]

[61] Appellants seek to persuade the Court that the words "encourage" and "counsel" refer only to affirmative advocacy of abortions. Brief for Appellants at 42-44. The Eighth Circuit disagreed, holding that the scope of those phrases, particularly the word "counsel," was "much broader than the interpretation offered by the state." Reproductive Health Service v. Webster, 851 F.2d 1071, 1078 (8th Cir. 1988). Amicus will adopt the meaning of the terms used by the court of appeals.

[62] "An intelligent decision requires the input of all available data, and the ignorance of the psychological aspects of selective abortion precludes a fully informed decision." Blumberg et al., supra note 13, at 808.

Research demonstrates that pre-abortion counseling is beneficial.[64] One study, for example, of all women who contacted the Pregnancy Consultation Service in St. Louis during an entire year, found that "[e]ighty-six percent of the women felt that counseling was helpful to them. Most frequently mentioned were the emotional support provided by the counselor and the information given regarding the abortion procedure." [65] Whatever psychological difficulties a woman may experience as a result of abortion may be substantially ameliorated through pre-abortion counseling.[66]

---

[63] "The clinician, whether abortion counselor or therapist, typically has two roles. . . . The first is to assist [the woman] in examining all alternatives, thus increasing the likelihood that her ultimate decision is mature, independent, and carefully deliberated. The second role is to provide support through the decision-making process and through the abortion or pregnancy itself." Scott, Legal and Ethical Issues in Counseling Pregnant Adolescents in Adolescent Abortion 120-121 (citations omitted).

[64] "[F]ew would disagree that competent and compassionate treatment, a description of the procedure, and contraceptive advice are basic requisites. More than that, however, the clinician must be aware of those factors and special circumstances which may predispose women to undesirable sequelae. This information can best be used preventively and postoperatively to provide additional support or brief psychotherapy for those who really need it." Lazarus, supra note 28, at 148. "It seems there is a need for pre-abortion counselling concerning both medical and psychological aspects of abortion and that a combination of medical and non-medical counsellors may be beneficial. Abortion counseling may be an area in which psychologists and gynaecologists could usefully work together as a team, with the gynaecologists providing medical advice and the psychologist helping the woman clarify the various psychosocial problems surrounding her pregnancy." Handy, supra note 17, at 36.

[65] Smith, supra note 32, at 583. "Only seven percent of the women did not feel that counseling was helpful to them." Id.

[66] "[T]hrough adequate counseling and evaluation, psychological injury [associated with abortion] can be minimized. Jacques, supra note 50, at 58 (1973). The major role of the abortion counselor "is to provide the support which will, hopefully, bring the woman through this crisis in her life with a minimum of trauma and will help her gain an understanding of the circumstances which led to the unwanted conception and to action which will prevent the need for repeat abortion." Dauber, Zalar, & Goldstein, Abortion Counseling and Behavior Change, 4 Fam. Plan. Persp. 23, 23 (1972).

In one of the more recent, better controlled studies, 283 women who underwent first trimester vacuum aspiration abortions were randomly divided into experimental groups and a control group. The women in the experimental groups received one of two kinds of pre-abortion counseling designed either to minimize self-blame or to enhance self-efficacy. The control group received a presentation on a therapeutically-neutral subject. "Women exposed to the experimental treatments coped significantly better than women exposed to the no treatment control group . . . . They had significantly better moods and a tendency toward fewer physical complaints immediately post-abortion than women who were exposed to the no treatment control condition." [67]

Pre-abortion counseling may be especially important to women seeking abortions in the second trimester. "A pilot descriptive study . . . suggests that the women who presented in the second trimester were initially different psychologically and underwent a more stressful experience." Kaltreider, supra note 18, at 133. As a result, professionals "who deal with the mid-trimester abortion applicant" may be particularly helpful in approaching "the issue of ambivalence in the patient," permitting "the patient to recognize her emotional turmoil and then to make a reasoned decision." Id.[68]

---

[67] Mueller, Causal Attritions, Perceived Self-Efficacy, and Coping with a Negative Life Event 99 (unpublished doctorial dissertation available from APA); see Mueller & Major, Self-Blame, Self-Efficacy, and Adjustment to Abortion, J. Personality & Soc. Psychology (in press).

[68] "The descriptive data suggests that mental health specialists are appropriate partners to the gynecologist for this potentially high-risk group." Id.; see note 64, supra.

Counseling may also be effective in encouraging women to return for post-abortion checkup: "94 of 99 women who received counseling returned to the hospital for a check-up while only 60 of 99 uncounseled women did so. Return for follow-up could . . . provide further information about and encouragement for contraceptive use." Social-Psychological Perspective, supra note 58, at 108-109. In contrast, communication of negative attitudes by hospital personnel can contribute directly to the incidence of post-abortion guilt, remorse, and depression.[69]

In sum, counseling can produce positive psychological results while serving important state interests. In the exercise of its governmental functions, the State should be protecting women from unnecessary mental health risks, promoting informed, intelligent, and self-determinative decisionmaking, and providing information that will help reduce the need for future abortions.[70] Forbidding the use of public funds for abortion counseling, and thereby forbidding the use of publicly-supported health care professionals and facilities for such counseling, undermines the very goals appellants assert in support of the statutory provision at issue in this case.

B. Appellant's Provision Interferes with Professional Judgment and Requires Psychologists to Violate Basic Ethical Precepts.

In many different settings, this Court has stressed the deference that should be shown to judgments made by

---

[69] See Marder, Psychiatric Experiences with a Liberalized Therapeutic Abortion Law, 126 Am. J. Psychiatry 1230 (1970); Notman & Nadelson, Reproductive Crises in Women in Psychotherapy (A. Brodsky & R. Hare-Mustin eds. 1980).

[70] The State has an interest in ensuring that a woman's decision is "informed and freely given and is not the result of coercion." Planned Parenthood of Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 65 (1976). "The validity of an informed consent requirement thus rests on the State's interest in protecting the health of the pregnant woman." City of Akron v. Akron Ctr. for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416, 443 (1983).

qualified professionals.[71] It is particularly important that professional judgment be exercised freely because in discussing reproductive options the woman necessarily relies on professional guidance in making, and coming to terms with, decisions she has a constitutional right to make. Since, in the abortion context, professional judgment is inextricably related to exercise of a constitutional right, legislation that burdens exercise of professional judgment burdens the exercise of that right. These principles require deference to the judgment of health care professionals involved in counseling women about reproductive options, and respect for women's constitutional right to exercise their choice unburdened by the State's attempt to inject its policy preferences into their decisionmaking process.

It is not surprising, therefore, that the Court has stressed the important role of professional judgment in the abortion decision.[72] Health care professionals, such as psychologists, exercise professional judgment

---

[71] See Youngberg v. Romeo, 457 U.S. 307 (1982); Parham v. J.R., 442 U.S. 584 (1979); Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520 (1979).

[72] In Roe, 410 U.S. at 165, the Court noted that its decision "vindicates the right of the physician to administer medical treatment according to his professional judgment." In Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, 192 (1973), the Court again emphasized the importance of giving the physician the "room he needs" to exercise professional "judgment." In Planned Parenthood of Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. at 80, the Court warned against "restrictions or regulations governing the medical judgment of the pregnant woman's attending physician with respect to the termination of her pregnancy." In Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S. 589, 604 n.33 (1977), the Court cautioned against "placing obstacles in the path of the doctor upon whom she was entitled to rely for advice in connection with her decision." In Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379, 387 (1979), the Court reiterated the "importance of affording the physician adequate discretion in the exercise of his medical judgment." Finally, in City of Akron, 462 U.S. at 427, the Court recognized that "the full vindication of the woman's fundamental right" to an abortion requires that the exercise of professional judgment encompass "both assisting the woman in the decisionmaking process and implementing her decision should she choose an abortion."

in the pregnancy counseling context. In refusing to sustain a local ordinance's requirement that only physicians could counsel patients seeking abortions, the Court noted that, "[t]he State's interest is in ensuring that the woman's consent is informed and unpressured; the critical factor is whether she obtains the necessary information and counseling from a qualified person, not the identity of the person from whom she obtains it." City of Akron, 462 U.S. at 448.

The Court has also recognized that a health care professional engaged in counseling pregnant women who seek an abortion cannot be confined to a simple "recital of pertinent medical facts. On the contrary, it is clear that the needs of patients for information and an opportunity to discuss the abortion decision will vary considerably." Id. at 448 n.38. It is the performance of these functions for which counseling services are directly relevant and for which psychologists are specially trained. Such services "are intended to help . . . persons develop a variety of problem-solving and decision-making capabilities." [73]

The Court has clearly stated that "individual counseling should be available for those persons who desire or need it." City of Akron, 462 U.S. at 448 n.38. But, appellants' provision effectively precludes the vast majority of those persons who depend on free or low cost public services from the opportunity to obtain appropriate counseling in reproductive decisionmaking. This kind of absolute bar runs afoul of the Court's admonition that the State may not place "obstacles in the path of the [professional] upon whom she was entitled to rely for advice in connection with her decision." Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S. 589, 604 n.33 (1977).

[73] APA, Specialty Guidelines for the Delivery of Services by Counseling Psychologists, 36 Am. Psychologist 652, 654 (1981). "Counseling psychological services refers to services . . . intended to help persons acquire or alter personal-social skills, improve adaptability to changing life demands, enhance environmental coping skills, and develop a variety of problem-solving and decision-making capabilities. Counseling psychological services are used by individuals, couples, and families of all age groups to cope with problems connected with sex, marriage, family, [and] other social relations.

Furthermore, appellants' statute forbids therapists from addressing abortion in any treatment context carried out by public employees in public facilities. Reproductive issues, including abortion, arise frequently in treatment in such public settings as community mental health clinics or public university counseling centers. A therapist in these situations will not know when therapy begins what topics the patient will eventually raise or will need to be raised. Once the therapeutic relationship is created and developed, it would damage the patient, place the therapist in an ethical dilemma, and unduly interfere with professional discretion, if the therapist were barred from discussing the full range of appropriate reproductive issues and alternatives.

The primary responsibility of professional psychologists is "to protect the welfare of those who seek their services," APA Ethical Principles of Psychologists, 36 Am. Psychologist 633, 633 (1981)[74] and they are urged to "facilitate[] optimal human functioning." General Guidelines, supra note 74, at 7 (Guidelines 2.4.1). A therapist's role is to interact with the patient to maximize her achievement of those objectives, and it is imperative that professional judgment, not state-imposed moral absolutes, guide the therapeutic process. Achievement of those goals is undermined by appellants' statute, which forces the therapist to refrain from discussing abortion even if the patient directly requests it and interferes with the clinician's duty to act in conformity with his/her best judgment as to the most appropriate treatment the patient requires. These restrictions are antagonistic to proper counseling, forces the therapist to abandon the patient and forego his/her professional responsibility, and places the patient between her therapist and the State.

[74] "The promotion of human welfare is the primary principle guiding the professional activities of all members of the psychological service unit." APA, General Guidelines for Providers of Psychological Services, 42 American Psychologist 1, 7 (1987) (Guideline 3.1) [hereinafter General Guidelines].

In sum, appellants' prohibition is counter to the State's interest in ensuring that its most needy citizens receive objective, vital information and effective counseling to ameliorate the mental health and physical problems that may arise prior to, during, and after the decision to abort. The prohibition shows a degree of insensitivity and lack of concern toward some of its most vulnerable citizens inappropriate to a governmental entity.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the decision of the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals should be affirmed and the decision in Roe v. Wade should be reaffirmed.

Respectfully submitted,

DONALD N. BERSOFF
(Counsel of Record)
JENNER & BLOCK
21 Dupont Circle, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20036
(202) 223-4400
Attorney for Amicus Curiae
American Psychological Association

March 30, 1989

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
MAR 30 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

IN THE
Supreme Court of the United States
OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

---

BRIEF OF THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF PUBLIC HOSPITALS AS AMICUS CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLEES

LARRY S. GAGE
NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF PUBLIC HOSPITALS
1001 Penn. Ave., N.W.
Suite 635
Washington, D.C. 20004
(202) 347-1136

ALAN K. PARVER *
ANNE B. CAMPER
JANIS E. GUERNEY
CLYDE SPILLENGER
PHYLLIS E. BERNARD
POWELL, GOLDSTEIN, FRAZER & MURPHY
1001 Penn. Ave., N.W.
Suite 600
Washington, D.C. 20004
(202) 347-0066
Counsel for Amicus Curiae National Association of Public Hospitals

* Counsel of Record

March 30, 1989

WILSON - EPES PRINTING CO., INC. - 789-0096 - WASHINGTON, D.C. 20001

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES	iii
INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE	1
SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT	3
ARGUMENT	4
I. MISSOURI'S RESTRICTION ON PERFORMING OR ASSISTING AN ABORTION IN PUBLIC FACILITIES HAS THE EFFECT OF PROHIBITING CONSTITUTIONALLY PROTECTED CONDUCT, AND IT IS THEREFORE UNCONSTITUTIONAL	4
A. The "Public Facilities" Provision Unconstitutionally Infringes The Rights Of Physician And Patient To Reach Medical Treatment Decisions Because It Prevents Physicians With Staff Privileges At Public Hospitals From Treating Their Patients There	4
B. The "Public Facilities" Provision Effectively Denies Essential Medical Services To Non-Publicly-Funded Patients Who Cannot Obtain Such Services Elsewhere	6
C. The "Public Facilities" Provision Is Unconstitutional Because It Prohibits The Performance Of Abortions Not Necessary To Save The Life Of The Mother In Certain Private Hospitals	9
D. The "Public Facilities" Provision Will Prevent Public Teaching Hospitals From Providing Complete Medical Training In Obstetric And Gynecological Specialties, And Thus Will Ultimately Limit Access To Hospital Abortion Services	12

TABLE OF CONTENTS—Continued

Page

II. MISSOURI'S RESTRICTION ON THE USE OF "PUBLIC FUNDS" FOR THE PURPOSE OF ENCOURAGING OR COUNSELING A WOMAN TO HAVE AN ABORTION IS UNCONSTITUTIONAL BECAUSE IT IS A VIEWPOINT-DISCRIMINATORY REGULATION OF SPEECH, IT CONFLICTS WITH THE PROFESSIONAL AND ETHICAL OBLIGATIONS OF PHYSICIANS, AND IT INTERFERES WITH THE RIGHTS OF PHYSICIAN AND PATIENT TO REACH TREATMENT DECISIONS ACCORDING TO ACCEPTED MEDICAL PRACTICE 13

CONCLUSION 18

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES: Page

Arkansas Writers' Project, Inc. v. Ragland, 481 U.S. ——, 107 S.Ct. 1722 (1987) 14

Board of Trustees of Memorial Hosp. of Fremont County, Wyo. v. NLRB, 624 F.2d 177 (10th Cir. 1980) 10

City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., 462 U.S. 416 (1983) 10, 12, 14

Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973) 14

East v. United States, 629 F. Supp. 682 (E.D. Mo. 1986) 17

Epperson v. Arkansas, 393 U.S. 97 (1968) 13

FCC v. League of Women Voters of California, 468 U.S. 364 (1984) 14

Harrell v. Witt, 755 S.W.2d 296 (Mo. Ct. App. 1988) 17

Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980) 15

Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977) 6, 7, 9, 11, 15

Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390 (1923)..... 13

Nyberg v. City of Virginia, 667 F.2d 754 (8th Cir. 1982), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 462 U.S. 1125 (1983) 6, 7

Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977) 6, 7, 9, 11

Regan v. Taxation With Representation of Washington, 461 U.S. 540 (1983) 14

Reproductive Health Service v. Webster, 851 F.2d 1071 (8th Cir. 1988) 4, 6, 8, 14

Reproductive Health Services v. Webster, 662 F. Supp. 407 (W.D. Mo. 1987) 8,9, 11, 13

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) 12

Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986) 12, 14

Truman Medical Center, Inc. v. NLRB, 641 F.2d 570 (8th Cir. 1981) 10

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS, STATUTES AND RULES:

U.S. CONST. Amend. I 13, 14

Mo. Ann. Stat. (Vernon 1983 & Supp. 1989):

§ 188.200(2) 4, 8, 9, 11, 13

§ 188.205 13

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

	Page
§ 188.215	4, 5, 6, 9
§ 334.100	17
chs. 197, 335	17
42 C.F.R. § 53.111(b)(6) (1988)	5
OTHER AUTHORITIES:
Current Opinions of the Council on Ethical and Judicial Affairs of the American Medical Association, paragraph 8.07	15
Darney, Landy, MacPherson & Sweet, Abortion Training in U.S. Obstetrics and Gynecology Resident Programs, 19 Family Planning Perspectives 158, 159-60 (Jul./Aug. 1987)	12
Henshaw, Forrest & Van Vort, Abortion Services in the United States, 1984 and 1985, 19 Family Planning Perspectives 63, 67 (Mar./Apr. 1987)	7
Hospital Payments Under the Medicare Program: Hearings Before the Subcomm. on Health of the House Ways and Means Comm., 101st Cong., 1st Sess. (Mar. 1, 1989) (statement of Rep. Byron L. Dorgan)	7
Hospital Payments Under the Medicare Program: Hearings Before the Subcomm. on Health of the House Ways and Means Comm., 101st Cong., 1st Sess. (Mar. 1, 1989) (statement of Rep. Robert H. Michel)	8
Medicaid Infant Mortality: Hearings Before the Subcomm. on Health and the Environment of the House Comm. on Energy and Commerce, 101st Cong., 1st Sess. (Feb. 8, 1989) (statement of Richard H. Schwarz, M.D., FACOG)	16
Medicaid Infant Mortality: Hearings Before the Subcomm. on Health and the Environment of the House Comm. on Energy and Commerce, 101st Cong., 1st Sess. (Feb. 8, 1989) (statement of Sara Rosenbaum, Director of Programs and Policy, Children's Defense Fund)	16

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

No. 88-605

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

v.

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

On Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

BRIEF OF THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF PUBLIC HOSPITALS AS AMICUS CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLEES

INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE *

The National Association of Public Hospitals ("NAPH") is an association of over eighty-five public and nonprofit hospitals throughout the country. Most NAPH hospitals are owned by local governmental entities (cities, counties, or hospital authorities); others are private nonprofit entities that fulfill a public mission shared by all NAPH members—service to all patients regardless of their ability to pay.

One of NAPH's members is Truman Medical Center of Kansas City, Missouri, where two of the plaintiff-appellees are employed. The testimony of physicians who practice at Truman Medical Center, as well as the hospital's Associate Administrator of Finance, was relied on heavily by the District Court. Another NAPH member, the St. Louis Regional Medical Center, is also located in Missouri and, therefore, is directly affected by the Missouri statute at issue.

* Counsel of record to the parties in this case have consented to the filing of this brief and letters of consent have been filed with the Clerk pursuant to Rule 36.

Among the questions presented in this case is whether a state may prohibit the use of a "public facility" for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother, as Missouri has done. In addition, the Court will consider whether Missouri may restrict the expenditure of "public funds" for the purpose of encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life.

Because the majority of NAPH members are public facilities, receive public funds, and have professional relationships with physicians and health care professionals who receive public funds, NAPH has an interest in this case.[1] Many of the NAPH members that are private nonprofit entities also have an interest in this case because they would be considered "public facilities" under statutes like Missouri's.

It is not the intent of NAPH to address in this brief the moral or philosophical questions relating to the status of the fetus or to the moment at which life may be said to begin. Nor will this brief explore every constitutional issue raised by the Missouri statute, which are thoroughly explored in the briefs of the parties and of other amici curiae. Rather, the purpose of this brief is to present a more complete description of how public hospitals operate within the health care system. Because the State of Missouri has argued that certain provisions of its statute do no more than determine the way in which public monies shall be expended, NAPH seeks in this brief to explain the broader effect of these provisions on public and private health care providers, as well as patients.

---

[1] Public hospitals performed approximately 41,000 abortions in 1985. Unpublished data from the Alan Guttmacher Institute, provided in a conversation with Stanley Henshaw, Deputy Director of Research (Mar. 23, 1989).

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Through its restrictions on the use of public facilities for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion and on the use of public funds for the purpose of encouraging or counseling an abortion (except when necessary to save the life of the mother), Missouri has intruded deeply into the physician-patient relationship. Far from being a mere decision by the state as to the allocation of its monies, Missouri's statutory restrictions on the use of public facilities and public funds will reduce, if not eliminate, access to abortion for many whose only access to such services is at public hospitals, and will prevent certain physicians from providing complete medical services and information to their patients.

These effects follow from the role of public hospitals within the health care delivery system. Because private physicians often have staff privileges at public hospitals, the "public facilities" provision severs the relationship between such private physicians and their patients just at the point when the provision of medical services is most necessary. Many of the patients thus denied medical services are "private-pay" patients, for whom the State would not be expending public funds in any case. The Missouri statute thus has the effect of prohibiting non-publicly-funded abortion services.

Moreover, the "public facilities" provision applies to certain private hospitals that lease their land from county or local governments. This restriction on non-governmental entities with respect to abortion services goes well beyond any restrictions on such services that this Court has heretofore approved.

Finally, the restriction on public funds for the purpose of encouraging or counseling a woman to obtain an abortion places intolerable obstacles in the way of a publicly-funded physician's ability to meet his professional and ethical obligations. The "public funds" provision contradicts this Court's teaching that physicians and patients must be accorded the freedom to reach treatment decisions in accordance with accepted medical practice.

ARGUMENT

I. MISSOURI'S RESTRICTION ON PERFORMING OR ASSISTING AN ABORTION IN PUBLIC FACILITIES HAS THE EFFECT OF PROHIBITING CONSTITUTIONALLY PROTECTED CONDUCT, AND IT IS THEREFORE UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

Under Mo. Ann. Stat. § 188.215 (Vernon Supp. 1989), it is "unlawful for any public facility to be used for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother." The statute defines "public facility" to mean "any public institution, public facility, public equipment, or any physical asset owned, leased, or controlled by this state or any agency or political subdivision thereof." § 188.200(2).

This provision severely inhibits the ability of women to obtain an abortion, and is thus repugnant to the federal Constitution, in at least three ways. It prevents private physicians with staff privileges at public hospitals from treating their patients there. It effectively denies essential medical services to private (non-publicly-funded) patients who cannot obtain such services elsewhere than at public hospitals. And it prohibits the performance of abortions not necessary to save the life of the mother in certain private hospitals.

A. The "Public Facilities" Provision Unconstitutionally Infringes the Rights of Physician and Patient to Reach Medical Treatment Decisions Because It Prevents Physicians With Staff Privileges at Public Hospitals from Treating Their Patients There.

The court below held § 188.215 unconstitutional. Reproductive Health Service v. Webster, 851 F.2d 1071, 1082 (8th Cir. 1988). This Court should affirm that judgment, because the inescapable effect of § 188.215 is to interfere with the relationship between a private physician and his patients. Section 188.215 thus impermissibly burdens the privacy rights of patients, which encompass the liberty of a private physician to exercise his best judgment in implementation of the patient's treatment choice.

The complex web of relationships among private physicians, patients, and public hospitals illustrates this point. Public hospitals, like other hospitals, rely on private physicians to provide medical services. Under the most common arrangement, private physicians are granted staff privileges, including the freedom to admit their own private patients to the hospital—which may provide certain essential services that are not widely available elsewhere in the region.[2] In return, the physician provides the hospital with his particular clinical specialties, which may redound to the benefit of the hospital's publicly-funded patients.[3]

A patient and physician may therefore have a long-standing relationship that is disrupted by the physician's inability under the Missouri statute to perform an abortion on the premises of the public hospital where he has staff privileges. If the physician has no staff privileges elsewhere, this may mean that he cannot serve the patient to the best of his ability and medical judgment. This situation is particularly offensive to constitutional guarantees when a hospital abortion is medically

---

[2] Truman Medical Center in Kansas City, Missouri, offers one of three perinatal centers (handling high-risk pregnancies) and one of three Level I trauma centers in the two-state metropolitan area.

[3] Hospitals generally make practical distinctions among "private-pay" patients, who either carry third-party insurance or can pay for medical services from their own private funds; publicly insured patients (those who are covered by the Medicare or Medicaid programs); and "public," "charity," or "self-pay" patients, who do not have such sources of payment and whose care likely will be paid for by the hospital itself.

Federal regulations implementing the Hill-Burton Act recognize the concept of charity patients in their definition of "uncompensated care." 42 C.F.R. § 53.111(b)(6) (1988).

indicated—e.g., when there is a possibility of medical complications. Under such circumstances, the woman is effectively prevented from obtaining complete medical services from the physician who best knows her medical history. As explained infra, this problem is especially acute in rural areas where health care providers are scarce.

The State can find no support for this blanket prohibition in such cases as Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977), and Poelker v. Doe, 432 U.S. 519 (1977). In Maher, this Court held that a state was not constitutionally required to provide funding for nontherapeutic abortions; in Poelker, the Court held that a city is not constitutionally required to provide publicly-financed hospital services for certain abortions. As the court below observed, those cases do not provide constitutional support for Missouri's "public facilities" restriction: "'There is a fundamental difference between providing direct funding to effect the abortion decision and allowing staff physicians to perform abortions at an existing publicly owned hospital.'" 851 F.2d at 1081 (quoting Nyberg v. City of Virginia, 667 F.2d 754, 758 (8th Cir. 1982), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 462 U.S. 1125 (1983)).

B. The "Public Facilities" Provision Effectively Denies Essential Medical Services to Non-Publicly-Funded Patients Who Cannot Obtain Such Services Elsewhere.

As noted above, § 188.215 prohibits the use of public facilities for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion that is not necessary to save the life of the mother. Significantly, this prohibition applies regardless of whether public funds or public employees are used in providing the service. As a result, this prohibition has the effect of denying abortion services in public hospitals to those private-paying patients to whom other hospitals are unavailable. This prohibition therefore has a far greater impact on the availability of hospital abortion services than did the restrictions of public funding upheld in Maher and Poelker.

There are a number of reasons why a woman may be unable to obtain an abortion elsewhere than in a public hospital, even though she carries insurance or has the money to pay for the procedure (i.e., is a private-paying patient). The most obvious reason is geographic: There may be no other hospital in the region where the abortion can be performed. See Nyberg, 667 F.2d at 758 n.2. In fact, there may be no other hospital at all. A public hospital may be the only hospital where an abortion can be obtained.

This problem is particularly acute in certain rural or sparsely populated areas, where a public hospital may be the "sole community provider." It is common in such regions for a county's sole practitioner in the area of obstetrics and gynecology to occupy an office adjacent to the public hospital; the relationship between the two is intimate and essential. Physicians in such communities frequently lack sophisticated medical equipment in their own offices, and they rely on hospital facilities for performance of even rudimentary medical procedures. According to one study:

> In many U.S. counties, a hospital is the only facility where an abortion can be obtained. Physicians in small communities may judge that existing demand does not justify their equipping their offices to provide abortion services, and . . . may, therefore, prefer to use hospital facilities. . . . In addition, hospitals are needed for instillation abortions and for high-risk patients.

Henshaw, Forrest & Van Vort, Abortion Services in the United States, 1984 and 1985, 19 Family Planning Perspectives 63, 67 (Mar./Apr. 1987). See also Hospital Payments Under the Medicare Program: Hearings Before the Subcomm. on Health of the House Ways and Means Comm., 101st Cong., 1st Sess. (Mar. 1, 1989) (statement of Rep. Byron L. Dorgan) ("When a rural hospital closes its doors, patients can find themselves so far away from a physician and health care facility that routine health maintenance becomes extremely difficult. . . . In many rural areas, preservation of the hospital and preservation of access to health care are virtually indistinguishable"); id. (statement of Rep. Robert H. Michel) ("When [rural hospitals] close down, doctors and other health care personnel disappear along with them"). Clinics are few and far between in such rural areas.

Moreover, even if there is a private hospital in the area, there may be obstacles to admission of the private-paying patient to that hospital, as the court below noted. 851 F.2d at 1081. Such obstacles may be a result of the private hospital's admission policies. For example, abortions are most commonly performed in hospitals (rather than in clinics or in the office of a physician) when there is a risk of medical complications for which the patient may need further hospital services. In such cases, even if the patient can afford to pay for the abortion procedure, and therefore requires no public subsidization,[4] she is likely to be denied admission to a private facility if she is uninsured for the possible additional services. The public hospital is more likely to treat an uninsured patient; restrictions on the ability of such public hospitals to treat these patients is therefore likely to deny them access to hospital abortions.[5]

[4] It is perfectly conceivable that a public facility, at least as defined in § 188.200(2), see infra note 6, could perform medical services that are not subsidized by public funds. For example, the Associate Administrator of Finance at Truman Medical Center testified in the District Court that the hospital routinely recovers from the patient the full cost of abortions. Reproductive Health Services v. Webster, 662 F. Supp. 407, 428 n.55 (W.D. Mo. 1987). A physician also testified that his private practice patients at the University of Missouri Medical Center are charged a full fee. Id. The Missouri statute evidently contemplates the reality that medical services can be performed in "public facilities" without the expenditure of public funds, since otherwise the separate provisions covering "public facilities" and "public funds" would be redundant.

Under these circumstances, a prohibition such as Missouri's "public facilities" provision effectively denies the availability of abortion services. For private-paying patients—those for whose treatment no public funds would be expended—validation of the "public facilities" provision in the Missouri statute would far surpass anything approved by this Court in such cases as Maher and Poelker. By placing such a burden on the ability of the private-paying (non-publicly-subsidized) patient to obtain a hospital abortion, Missouri has violated the constitutional rights of patients to choose and obtain appropriate medical treatment, and of their physicians to provide such treatment.

C. The "Public Facilities" Provision Is Unconstitutional Because It Prohibits the Performance of Abortions Not Necessary to Save the Life of the Mother in Certain Private Hospitals.

Section 188.215 is unconstitutional for another reason as well. The statute's definition of "public facility,"[6] which embraces private hospitals that lease governmental facilities, is overbroad; it infringes a woman's constitutional right to terminate her pregnancy in a private, non-governmental hospital facility, a right that encompasses the liberty of her physician to exercise his best

[5] As noted by the District Court, Truman Medical Center provided 97% of all hospital-based abortions at a 16-week or greater gestational age performed in Missouri in 1985. 662 F. Supp. at 428 n.57.

[6] The statute defines "public facility" to include "any public institution, public facility, public equipment, or any physical asset owned, leased, or controlled by this state or any agency or political subdivision thereof." Mo. Ann. Stat. § 188.200(2) (Vernon Supp. 1989).

medical judgment. See City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., 462 U.S. 416, 427 (1983).

Hospitals have varied and complex legal structures. Among the membership of NAPH are former public hospitals that have reorganized to become non-governmental, tax-exempt, nonprofit corporations. By this process of reorganization, a new nonprofit corporation is established under state law for the purpose of operating the hospital.

In most cases, a central goal of the reorganization process is the preservation of the hospital's mission to provide care to indigents and community access to important medical services.[7] To this end, the governmental body typically retains ownership of the hospital real estate. The hospital is then operated by the newly created private nonprofit corporation through a lease, which includes contractual obligations for the ongoing provision of indigent care and access to services. The hospital's legal rights and obligations, as well as its license, are held by this private corporation; it is the corporation, and not the hospital's real and personal property, that constitute the hospital for legal purposes.

The typical new hospital corporation is, legally, a private entity, no longer treated as a public institution for purposes of either state or federal law. For example, the hospital cannot claim the protection of sovereign immunity, nor may it claim the exemption for public employers under the National Labor Relations Act.[8] It is the nature of the reorganized hospital's mission, and not legal status as a "public" entity, that the reorganized hospital shares with its public hospital counterparts.

[7] Public hospitals and their private, nonprofit counterparts often offer essential services—for example, neonatal intensive care units, burn centers, trauma centers, and poison control centers—that are not profitable or that for other reasons are not offered by other hospitals in a given region.

[8] See Truman Medical Center, Inc. v. NLRB, 641 F.2d 570 (8th Cir. 1981) (Truman Medical Center not a political subdivision and thus is subject to NLRB jurisdiction); cf. Board of Trustees of Memorial Hosp. of Fremont County, Wyo. v. NLRB, 624 F.2d 177 (10th Cir. 1980) (lessee of hospital from county was private employer, though stringent contractual restrictions created joint employment status with county, precluding NLRB jurisdiction). The commonality of hospital mission is the reason that the NAPH includes such reorganized nonprofit hospitals as members, in addition to public hospitals more strictly defined.

By its terms, therefore, the Missouri statute prohibits the performance of abortions by physicians in institutions which are in all pertinent respects private institutions, but which lease facilities from state or local governments.

As discussed above, Maher and Poelker do not hold that the performance of abortions in public facilities may be prohibited. It is even clearer that these cases do not support such restrictions in non-governmental facilities. This Court should not extend the holdings in Maher and Poelker so as to enable a State to prohibit a physician from performing an abortion, or a woman from obtaining one, in any facility that the State chooses to characterize as a public facility. Such a holding would not merely protect a State's decision to allocate its funds; it would permit the State to control the affairs of private facilities and to limit the rights of physicians and patients to pursue a medically indicated course of treatment there.

The effect of Missouri's "public facilities" restriction on private facilities is illustrated by the record in this case. Truman Medical Center in Kansas City, Missouri, is a former public hospital which was reorganized as a nonprofit corporation in 1962. Because Jackson County and the city of Kansas City have retained ownership of the hospital's real estate, and lease the facility to the corporation, Truman Medical Center is regarded as a "public facility" under § 188.200(2),[9] notwithstanding the fact that it is otherwise considered a private entity for purposes of both state and federal law.

[9] See 662 F. Supp. at 411.

Therefore, as applied to such hospitals as Truman Medical Center, the Missouri statute's "public facilities" restriction is as constitutionally impermissible as other restrictions that this Court has struck down because they substantially infringe a woman's fundamental right to choose an abortion. See, e.g., Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986); City of Akron, 462 U.S. at 452; Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973).

D. The "Public Facilities" Provision Will Prevent Public Teaching Hospitals from Providing Complete Medical Training in Obstetric and Gynecological Specialties, and Thus Will Ultimately Limit Access to Hospital Abortion Services.

Many public hospitals are teaching hospitals.[10] Such teaching hospitals play integral roles in the training of physicians, either as one station in the student's "rotation" through various departments, or as the hospital at which a physician performs his residency. The joint pedagogic mission of public hospitals and medical schools is thus compromised if the public hospital is unable to serve in this training role.[11]

---

[10] Of the approximately 1524 government-owned hospitals in the country, approximately 209 are teaching hospitals. Data supplied by Linda Fishman, Research Associate, Association of American Medical Colleges (Council of Teaching Hospitals) (Mar. 27, 1989), derived from data contained in the 1988 American Hospital Association Guide to the Health Care Field, 1987 Annual Survey. Over 75% of NAPH members are teaching hospitals.

[11] Nationwide, teaching programs affiliated with public hospitals are currently the most likely to provide their residents with the opportunity to receive training in abortion techniques. Darney, Landy, MacPherson & Sweet, Abortion Training in U.S. Obstetrics and Gynecology Resident Programs, 19 Family Planning Perspectives 158, 159-60 (Jul./Aug. 1987).

Moreover, there was testimony at trial in this case that clinical instruction in abortion procedures is a necessary part of the medical curriculum in state medical schools in Missouri, which are considered "public facilities" under § 188.200(2). 662 F. Supp. at 429 n.63. Although the District Court did not accept this argument, the statute's restriction on the academic freedom of medical schools and their faculties raises grave questions under the First Amendment. Cf. Epperson v. Arkansas, 393 U.S. 97 (1968); Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390 (1923). See brief amicus curiae of American Civil Liberties Union et al. These restrictions on public hospital training and state medical education will have the inevitable effect of restricting access to abortion services, due to the diminished number of physicians capable of competently performing those services.

II. MISSOURI'S RESTRICTION ON THE USE OF "PUBLIC FUNDS" FOR THE PURPOSE OF ENCOURAGING OR COUNSELING A WOMAN TO HAVE AN ABORTION IS UNCONSTITUTIONAL BECAUSE IT IS A VIEWPOINT-DISCRIMINATORY REGULATION OF SPEECH, IT CONFLICTS WITH THE PROFESSIONAL AND ETHICAL OBLIGATIONS OF PHYSICIANS, AND IT INTERFERES WITH THE RIGHTS OF PHYSICIAN AND PATIENT TO REACH TREATMENT DECISIONS ACCORDING TO ACCEPTED MEDICAL PRACTICE.

The Missouri statute makes it "unlawful for any funds to be expended . . . for the purpose of encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life." Mo. Ann. Stat. § 188.205 (Vernon Supp. 1989).[12] This prohibition is no mere restraint on the use of public funds for the performance of specific medical procedures; it intrudes upon the right and responsibility of publicly-paid physicians and health care professionals to discuss medical treatment options openly and completely with their patients. The "public funds" prohibition is therefore unconstitutional under the standards set forth by this Court, which emphasize the need for physicians and patients to reach such medical decisions consensually and free of state regulations that undermine accepted medical practice: "The full vindication of the woman's right necessarily requires that her physician be given 'the room he needs to make his best medical judgment.'" City of Akron, 462 U.S. at 427 (quoting Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, 192 (1973)). See also Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 762.

---

[12] An additional portion of this section, proscribing the use of public funds for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion, is not before the Court.

As is argued by the brief amicus curiae of the American Civil Liberties Union et al., such restrictions on "counseling" cannot be squared with the First Amendment.[13] By permitting funding for medical counseling that promotes treatment alternatives to abortion, while forbidding counseling a woman to have an abortion (except where necessary to save her life), Missouri is engaging in clear "viewpoint discrimination," which is impermissible under the First Amendment. Such discrimination is no less unconstitutional because the State describes it as a mere removal of a subsidy rather than an outright prohibition of the speech. See, e.g., Arkansas Writers' Project, Inc. v. Ragland, 481 U.S. ——, 107 S.Ct. 1722, 1727 (1987) (content-based tax discrimination is "particularly repugnant to First Amendment principles"); id., 107 S.Ct. at 1731 (Scalia, J., dissenting) (viewpoint discrimination may require a more stringent standard under the First Amendment); FCC v. League of Women Voters of California, 468 U.S. 364 (1984); Regan v. Taxation With Representation of Washington, 461 U.S. 540, 548 (1983) (legislature may not "discriminate invidiously in its subsidies in such a way" as to suppress ideas).

[13] As the Court below found, the "encourage and counsel" provision is also void for vagueness. 851 F.2d at 1077-79.

Moreover, because it reaches "counseling," the "public funds" provision is distinguishable from the restrictions at issue in Maher v. Roe, supra, and Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980). In those cases, this Court stressed that the absence of public subsidization for abortions (while childbirth was subsidized) left a woman seeking an abortion in no worse position than she would have been had the government provided no funds for medical assistance at all. Maher, 432 U.S. at 474; McRae, 448 U.S. at 315. Where medical counseling is concerned, however, this reasoning does not apply. When a physician discusses treatment options with a patient, the failure to discuss or even to advocate appropriate or medically indicated courses of action can be extremely injurious to the patient's health. Partial disclosure or advice may be more dangerous than none at all.

The appropriate medical policy in such situations, in fact, is full disclosure. Hospitals, physicians, nurses, and other health care professionals are held to a variety of professional, statutory and regulatory standards with respect to their medical practice. So far as the medical profession itself is concerned, ethical canons and standards of accepted medical practice apply to all licensed physicians and health care professionals, whether their salaries are paid out of "public" or "private" funds.

Thus, for example, paragraph 8.07 of the Current Opinions of the Council on Ethical and Judicial Affairs of the American Medical Association provides:

> The patient's right of self-decision can be effectively exercised only if the patient possesses enough information to enable an intelligent choice. . . . The physician's obligation is to present the medical facts accurately to the patient or to the individual responsible for his care and to make recommendations for management in accordance with good med> ical practice. The physician has an ethical obligation to help the patient make choices from among the therapeutic alternatives consistent with good medical practice.

As is thoroughly illustrated in the brief amicus curiae of the American Medical Association et al., this ethical canon has clear application where a woman's health may be threatened by the continuation of a pregnancy, although the condition may not be life-threatening under the terms of the Missouri statute. Under such circumstances, physicians subject to the statute's prohibitions would be required to contravene not only sound medical practice but also these professional ethical obligations. The only alternative would be for the publicly-paid physician, having explained to the patient the dangers to her health, to refer her to another, private, physician to discuss medical options. Apart from the fact that this scenario would represent a major intrusion into the physician-patient relationship, it raises the conundrum, discussed supra, for patients who may be uninsured or for whom such a private physician may be unavailable.[14]

Physicians and health care professionals are subject to other guidelines, including state licensure laws. For example, the Missouri state licensure law itself provides that proceedings to revoke a physician's medical license may be initiated for "unethical conduct" or "unprofessional conduct" in the performance of his duties, for [14] Even patients who are insured by the Medicaid program have difficulty gaining access to obstetrical services, in part because clinics are overburdened and some private physicians are unwilling to accept Medicaid patients. Medicaid Infant Mortality: Hearings Before the Subcomm. on Health and the Environment of the House Comm. on Energy and Commerce, 101st Cong., 1st Sess. (Feb. 8, 1989) (statement of Richard H. Schwarz, M.D., FACOG, for the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists). Accord id. (statement of Sara Rosenbaum, Director of Programs and Policy, Children's Defense Fund). Obtaining prenatal care from a physician in private practice is even more difficult if one is uninsured.

"[t]erminating the medical care of a patient . . . without making other arrangements for the continued care of a patient," or for "[a]ny conduct or practice which is or might be harmful or dangerous to the mental or physical health of a patient." Mo. Ann. Stat. §§ 334.100(2)(4), 334.100(2)(4)(j), 334.100(2)(5) (Vernon Supp. 1989). Hospitals and nurses are also subject to licensure laws in Missouri. See Mo. Ann. Stat. chs. 197, 335. Finally, doctors and hospitals are civilly liable in tort for failure to apprise patients of treatment options that could have prevented injury to the patient. See East v. United States, 629 F. Supp. 682, 685-86 (E.D. Mo. 1986); Harrell v. Witt, 755 S.W.2d 296, 299 (Mo. Ct. App. 1988).

These statutory and common-law principles do more than conflict with the restrictions of the Missouri statute at issue in this case. They also illustrate how deeply the Missouri statute intrudes into the professional and ethical imperatives of physicians. The statute essentially prohibits certain physicians from doing what they may consider to be the most urgent of their professional obligations: to counsel patients as to their treatment options. It is antithetical to the professional mission of physicians, indeed to that of all licensed health care professionals,[15] for the State to place limits on the treatment options that they may discuss with their patients, simply because they may be paid by the State.

[15] To the extent that the "public funds" provision applies to non-physician personnel or to medical students who are paid with public funds, the statute's prohibition on their performance or assistance of abortions impedes the ability of a private physician to perform abortions at the hospital where he has staff privileges. It would become necessary for the physician to provide his own assistant, whom the hospital would have to "credential." The introduction of additional private personnel would add significantly to the cost of the medical services.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the Court of Appeals should be affirmed.

Respectfully submitted,

LARRY S. GAGE
NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF PUBLIC HOSPITALS
1001 Penn. Ave., N.W.
Suite 635
Washington, D.C. 20004
(202) 347-1136

ALAN K. PARVER *
ANNE B. CAMPER
JANIS E. GUERNEY
CLYDE SPILLENGER
PHYLLIS E. BERNARD
POWELL, GOLDSTEIN, FRAZER & MURPHY
1001 Penn. Ave., N.W.
Suite 600
Washington, D.C. 20004
(202) 347-0066
Counsel for Amicus Curiae National Association of Public Hospitals
* Counsel of Record

March 30, 1989

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
MAR 30 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,

Appellants,

—v.—

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,

Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES
COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF OF AMICI CURIAE AMERICAN PUBLIC HEALTH ASSOCIATION, et al. IN SUPPORT OF APPELLEES

(List of AMICI continued on next page)

JOHN H. HALL
Counsel of Record
WALTER J. WALSH
DONNA I. DENNIS
Debevoise & Plimpton
875 Third Avenue
New York, New York 10022
(212) 909-6000

NADINE TAUB
Rutgers University School of Law
15 Washington Street
Newark, New Jersey 07102
(201) 648-5637

Attorneys for Amici Curiae

March 30, 1989

LIST OF AMICI (cont'd)

The Alan Guttmacher Institute
The American College of Preventive Medicine
California Physicians for Choice
California Republicans for Choice
City of New York
Commonwealth of Massachusetts, Department of Public Health
Joyce C. Lashof, Dean of the University of California, Berkeley School of Public Health
National Abortion Federation
New York State Republican Family Committee
Gilbert S. Omenn, Dean, and Patricia Wahl, Associate Dean of the University of Washington School of Public Health and Community Medicine
Allan Rosenfield, Dean of the Columbia University School of Public Health
Jan A. J. Stolwijk, Chairman, Yale University Department of Epidemiology and Public Health

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PAGE

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES iii

STATEMENT OF INTEREST 1

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT 1

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT 2

ARGUMENT 3

I. THE RIGHT NOT TO HAVE GOVERNMENT COMPEL HARM TO HEALTH IS FUNDAMENTAL TO OUR JURISPRUDENCE 3

II. ROE V. WADE AND SUCCEEDING CASES REFLECT THE FUNDAMENTAL PREMISE THAT GOVERNMENT MAY NOT, IN DISREGARD OF INDIVIDUAL AUTONOMY, COERCE INDIVIDUALS TO ASSUME INCREASED HEALTH RISKS 7

III. RESTRICTING ACCESS TO LEGAL ABORTION VIOLATES THE FUNDAMENTAL RIGHT OF INDIVIDUALS TO BE FREE FROM GOVERNMENT-MANDATED HARM TO THEIR HEALTH 10

A. Restricting Access to Legal Abortion Would Subject Women to Risks of Mortality and Morbidity 11

B. Denial of Access to Legal Abortion Would Relegate Women to the Dangers of Self-Induced and Back-Alley Abortions, Which Include Death ... 16

PAGE

C. The State Imposes Risks on Women's Health by Delaying Access to Legal Abortion 22

IV. THE MISSOURI STATUTE UNCONSTITUTIONALLY JEOPARDIZES WOMEN'S HEALTH..... 24

A. The Fundamental Right to be Free from Government-Mandated Harm to Health Can be Protected Only by Respecting Individual Autonomy in Making Health Care Decisions 24

B. By Distorting the Information Available to Women, Depriving Them of Their Physicians' Best Judgment, and Forcing Them to Submit to Medically Unwarranted Tests, the Missouri Statute Unconstitutionally Subjects Women to Harm to their Health 25

1. The Ban on Counseling or Encouraging Abortion Harms the Health of Women.... 26

2. The Ban on the Use of Public Facilities or Public Employees to Perform Abortions Harms the Health of Women 28

3. The Blanket Requirement that Physicians Make Findings of Gestational Age, Fetal Weight and Lung Maturity Harms the Health of Women 28

CONCLUSION 30

APPENDIX A Individual Descriptions of Amici Curiae 1a

APPENDIX B Sources to Figures 1, 2 and 3 ..... 1b

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases: PAGE

Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416 (1982)..... 9

Canterbury v. Spence, 464 F.2d 772 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 1064 (1972)..... 24

Carey v. Population Services International, 431 U.S. 678 (1977)..... 6

Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979)..... 8, 26

Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973)..... 8, 9

Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965)..... 4

Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980)..... 27

Ingraham v. Wright, 430 U.S. 651 (1977)..... 5

Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U.S. 11 (1905)..... 4, 5

Lojuk v. Quandt, 706 F.2d 1456 (7th Cir. 1983)..... 6

Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977) 27

Moore v. City of East Cleveland, 431 U.S. 495 (1977).. 4

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) .....passim

Schloendorff v. New York Hospital, 211 N.Y. 125, 105 N.E. 92 (1914) 24

Schmerber v. California, 384 U.S. 757 (1965) 5

Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986) 3, 8, 26

Union Pacific Railway Co. v. Botsford, 141 U.S. 250 (1891)..... 5

PAGE

United States v. Vuitch, 402 U.S. 62 (1971) 9

Winston v. Lee, 470 U.S. 753 (1985) 5

Statute:

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 1.205.1(1) & (2) (1986) 1
Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.029 (1986) 2, 29
Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.205 (1986) 2, 26
Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.210 (1986) 2, 28
Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.215 (1986) 2, 28

Other Authorities:

American Academy of Pediatrics, Pregnancy and Abortion Counseling, 63 Pediatrics 920 (1979) 27

American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, Standards for Obstetric-Gynecologic Services (1985) . 27

American Medical Association, Current Opinions of the Council on Ethical and Judicial Affairs of the American Medical Association (1986) 24, 27

American Psychiatric Association, Principles of Medical Ethics with Annotations Especially Applicable to Psychiatry (1981) 27

American Psychological Association, Ethical Principles of Psychologists, 36 Am. Psychologist 580 (1981).... 27

American Public Health Association Recommended Program Guide for Abortion Services (Revised 1979), 70 Am. J. Pub. Health 652 (1980) 23, 27

F. Arias, High Risk Pregnancy and Delivery (1984) 15, 26, 27

Atrash, MacKay, Binkin & Hogue, Legal Abortion Mortality in the United States: 1972 to 1982, 156 Am. J. Obstetrics & Gynecology 605 (1987) 16

PAGE

Baldwin & Cane, The Children of Teenage Parents, 12 Fam. Plan. Persp. 34 (1980) 15

Birdsall & Chester, Contraception and the Status of Women: What is the Link?, 19 Fam. Plan. Persp. 14 (1987) 14

W. Blackstone, Commentaries (1765) 4

R. Blatt, Prenatal Testing (1988) 29, 30

S. Burrow & T. Ferris, Medical Complications During Pregnancy (1982) 15, 26

M. Calderone, Abortion in the United States (1958).... 17

Cates, Legal Abortion: The Public Health Record, 215 Sci. 1586 (1982) 14, 16, 17, 18

Cates & Rochat, Illegal Abortions in the United States: 1972-1974, 8 Fam. Plan. Persp. 86 (1976)..... 18

Cates, Smith, Rochat & Grimes, Mortality from Abortion and Childbirth: Are the Statistics Biased?, 248 J. Am. Med. Assoc. 192 (1982) 11

Centers for Disease Control, Maternal Mortality: Pilot Surveillance in Seven States, 34 Morbidity & Mortality Weekly Rep. 709-11 (1985)..... 13

Children's Defense Fund, The Health of America's Children (1987) 22

C. Chung, P. Steinhoff & R. Smith, Effects of Induced Abortion on Subsequent Reproductive Function and Pregnancy Outcome (1981) 16

Corman, Joyce & Grossman, Birth Outcome Production Function in the United States, 22 J. Hum. Resources 339 (1987) 16

PAGE

H. David, Z. Dytrych, Z. Matejcek & V. Schuller, Born Unwanted: Developmental Effects of Denied Abortion (1988) 15

David & Matejcek, Children Born to Women Denied Abortion, 13 Fam. Plan. Persp. 32 (1981) 15

Ellerbrock, Atrash, Rhodenhiser, Hogue & Smith, Abortion Surveillance, 1982-1983, 36 Morbidity & Mortality Weekly Rep. 11SS, 41SS (Feb. 1987).....21, App. 1b

R. Gold, A. Kenney & S. Singh, Blessed Events and the Bottom Line: Financing Maternity Care in the United States (1987) 12, 29

Haynes, Cerebral Hypoxia from Air Embolus Following Attempted Abortion, 71 Am. J. Obstetrics & Gynecology 1111 (1956) 19

Henshaw, Characteristics of U.S. Women Having Abortions, 19 Fam. Plan. Persp. 5 (1987) 14, 1b

Henshaw, Reducing Teenage Childbearing, 78 Am. J. Pub. Health 619 (1988)..... 23

Henshaw, Forrest & Van Vort, Abortion Services in the United States 1984 and 1985, 19 Fam. Plan. Persp. 63 (1987).....22, App. 1b

Hogue, Cates & Tietze, The Effects of Induced Abortion on Subsequent Reproduction, 4 Epidemiological Reviews 66 (1982)..... 16

Joyce, The Social and Economic Correlates of Pregnancy Resolution Among Adolescents in New York City, by Race and Ethnicity: A Multivariate Analysis, 78 Am. J. Pub. Health 626 (1988) 23

Koenig & Zelnik, Repeat Pregnancies Among Metropolitan Area Teenagers: 1971-1979, 14 Fam. Plan. Persp. 341 (1982) 14

PAGE

LeBolt, Grimes & Cates, Mortality from Abortion and Childbirth: Are the Populations Comparable?, 248 J. Am. Med. Assoc. 1988 (1982)..... 11

J. Legge, The Unintended Consequences of Policy Change: The Effect of a Restrictive Abortion Policy, 15 Admin. & Soc'y 243 (1983)..... 20

Lettermaier, Liskin, Church & Harris, Mothers' Lives Matter: Maternal Health in the Community, s.L (7) Population Reports 4 (1988) 20

J. Locke, A Letter Concerning Toleration (1955) 4

J. Locke, Two Treatises of Government (P. Laslett rev. ed. 1963) 4

F. Maitland, The Forms of Action at Common Law (1909) 4

Marieskind, Caesarean Sections, 7 Women & Health 179 (1982) 13

Adolescent Abortion: Psychological and Legal Issues (G. Melton ed. 1986) 14

J. Mill, On Liberty (1988) 4

Miller, Stokes & Warland, The Effect of Legalization and Public Funding of Abortion on Neonatal Mortality: An Intervention Analysis (1985) 16

E. More-Cavar, International Inventory of Information on Induced Abortion (1974)..... 18

National Center for Health Statistics, Advance Report of Final Natality Statistics, 1985, 36 Monthly Vital Statistics Rep. 13 (Supp. Jul. 17, 1987).....App. 1b

National Center for Health Statistics, Vital Statistics of the United States, 1965 (1967).....App. 1b

PAGE

National Institute of Child Health, Caesarean Childbirth: Report of a Consensus Development Conference (1981) 12

New York City Department of Health, Bureau of Health Statistics and Analysis, Summary of Vital Statistics 1980-1987 (1987)..... 21

Pakter, O'Hare, Helpern & Nelson, Impact of the Liberalized Abortion Law in New York City on Deaths Associated with Pregnancy: A Two-Year Experience, 49 Bull. N.Y. Acad. Med. 804 (1973) 21

Pakter, O'Hare, Nelson & Svigir, Two Years Experience in New York City with the Liberalized Abortion Law: Progress and Problems, 63 Am. J. Pub. Health 524 (1973) 21

President's Commission for the Study of Ethical Problems in Medicine and Biomedical and Behavioral Research, Making Health Care Decisions: A Report on The Ethical and Legal Implications of Informed Consent in the Patient-Practitioner Relationship (1982) .. 25

J. Pritchard & P. MacDonald, Williams Obstetrics (1980) 15

Rhoads et al., The Safety and Efficacy of Chorionic Villus Sampling for Early Prenatal Diagnosis of Cytogenic Abnormalities, 320 New Eng. J. Med. 609 (1989) 29

Rochat, Koonin, Atrash & Jewett, Maternal Mortality in the United States: Report from the Maternal Mortality Collaborative, 72 Obstetrics & Gynecology 91 (1988). 11

Rosenfield, Roe v. Wade and the Public's Health, Nation's Health 10 (Mar. 1989) 19

E. Royston & S. Armstrong, Preventing Maternal Deaths (forthcoming 1989) 20

PAGE

Simons, Abortions Across Latin America Rising Despite Illegality and Risks, N. Y. Times, Nov. 26, 1988, at 1, col. 4 20

C. Tietze & S. Henshaw, Induced Abortion: A World Review 1986 (1986) 11, 14, 16

Tietze, The Public Health Effects of Legal Abortion in the United States, 16 Fam. Plan. Persp. 26 (1984).....15, 16, 18

Tietze, The Effect of Legalization of Abortion on Population Growth and Public Health, in C. Tietze, F. Jaffe, E. Weinstock & J. Dryfoss, Abortion 1974-1975; Need and Services in the United States, Each State & Metropolitan Area 110 (1976) .....App. 1b

B. van den Berg & C. Chieng, Maternal Mortality and Differentiation by Cause of Death in New Developments in Analysis of Mortality and Causes of Death 239 (1986) 18, 20

Veprovsky & Ostreich, Traumatic Perforation of the Uterus Following Attempted Self-Induced Abortion with a Rubber Catheter, 68 Am. J. Obstetrics & Gynecology 1615 (1954) 19

Wilkerson, Infant Mortality: Frightful Odds in Inner City, N. Y. Times, June 26, 1987, at 1, col. 2..... 22

Zakin, Godsick & Segal, Foreign Bodies Lost in the Pelvis during Attempted Abortion with Special Reference to Urethral Catheters, 70 Am. J. Obstetrics & Gynecology 233 (1955) 19

INTEREST OF AMICI CURIAE

This brief is submitted on behalf of thirteen amici curiae committed to the protection of personal health and the prevention of disease. They represent a broad range of professional, academic, state, municipal, consumer and political interests in the promotion of public health.

Amici have a particular interest in the Court's resolution of this case because they believe that the continued availability of abortion services for all women is an essential component of basic public health care. The Missouri statute at issue intrudes into the physician-patient relationship and threatens women with higher rates of mortality and morbidity. This case raises important issues concerning the government's power to impose these increased health risks upon pregnant women.

This brief is filed pursuant to Rule 36.2 of the Rules of the Court. The parties have consented to its submission in letters on file with the Clerk of the Court. Descriptions of the individual amici are set forth in Appendix A of this brief.

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

Amici urge affirmance of the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit striking down certain provisions of Missouri's 1986 abortion regulation statute (the "Missouri statute"). Amici also urge that state regulation of abortion should continue to be subject to the strict scrutiny standard of review, because such regulation threatens the lives and health of pregnant women.

The Missouri statute declares in its challenged preamble that "[t]he life of each human being begins at conception" and that "[u]nborn children have protectable interests in life, health, and well-being." Mo. Rev. Stat. § 1.205.1 (1) & (2) (1986).[1] Also under review are prohibitions (with exceptions only where necessary to save the life of the mother) on the expenditure of public funds for the purpose of counseling or encouraging abortion, on the performance or assistance of abortions by public employees, and on the performance or assistance of abortions in public or publicly funded facilities. Id. §§ 188.205, 188.210 & 188.215. Without exception, the Missouri statute requires that all doctors in the State of Missouri perform tests to make specific findings of fetal viability before performing any abortion on a woman whom the physician has reason to believe is twenty or more weeks pregnant. Id. § 188.029.

---

1 Although amici American Public Health Association (APHA) et al. do not address this provision, they join in the views expressed thereon by appellee Reproductive Health Services.

Five publicly employed doctors and nurses and two nonprofit corporations filed this action to invalidate these and other provisions of the Missouri statute. The district court declared several provisions unconstitutional, including those cited above, and Missouri appealed. With the exception of overturning the district court's invalidation of the ban, contained in § 188.205, on the expenditure of public funds for the performance of abortions, the court of appeals affirmed in full. The State of Missouri now appeals that decision. One of the issues certified by this Court was "[w]hether the Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), trimester approach for selecting the test by which state regulation of abortion services is reviewed should be reconsidered and discarded in favor of a rational basis test." Jurisdictional Statement at II.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

All individuals have a fundamental right to be free from government-mandated harm to health. Absent extraordinary circumstances, this right restrains the state from inflicting health risks on citizens and from dictating the degree of risk an individual should bear.

State laws impeding a woman's right to an abortion interfere with the individual's freedom from governmental imposition of health risks. Such laws have disastrous effects on the health of women, subjecting them to the risks associated with pregnancy and childbirth, delayed abortions, illegal abortions and self-induced abortions. The fundamental principle that the state cannot constitutionally compel a woman to risk her health requires strict scrutiny of any state action that limits access to abortion.

The Missouri statute challenged here directly impinges on the individual's right to be free from government-mandated harm. Central to this right is respect for individual autonomy in deciding matters affecting one's own health. The ban on abortion counseling harms women's health by undermining the physician-patient relationship and preventing physicians from conveying medically necessary information to their patients. The ban on the performance of abortions by public employees or in public facilities prevents women from obtaining abortions to preserve their health. The blanket requirement that physicians conduct a series of tests on pregnant women to determine fetal viability compels women to submit to potentially dangerous procedures and overrides the judgment of treating physicians as to what procedures are medically necessary or advisable for their patients. Each of these provisions violates the constitutional principle that the state may not harm citizens by thrusting health risks upon them, and therefore each must be struck down.

ARGUMENT

1. THE RIGHT NOT TO HAVE GOVERNMENT COMPEL HARM TO HEALTH IS FUNDAMENTAL TO OUR JURISPRUDENCE.

Missouri contends that the right to choose an abortion "has no basis in liberty interests that are either 'implicit in the concept of ordered liberty,' Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 792, or otherwise deeply rooted in this 'Nation's history and tradition.' Id." Brief for Missouri at 15. Missouri is wrong. Nothing is more fundamental or central to ordered liberty and to this Court's jurisprudence than the right to be protected from government actions that threaten individual life or health.

At the core of any democratic society lies the common understanding that the state is formed to further the welfare of its citizens, not to harm them. Three centuries ago, John Locke described the commonwealth as "a society of men constituted only for the procuring, preserving, and advancing their own civil interests," at the forefront of which he identified health. J. Locke, A Letter Concerning Toleration 17 (1955). Thus, "[government's] Power in the utmost Bounds of it, is limited to the publick good of the Society. It is a Power, that hath no other end but preservation, and therefore can never have a right to destroy, enslave or designedly to impoverish the Subjects." J. Locke, Two Treatises of Government 403 (P. Laslett rev. ed. 1963); see also J. Mill, On Liberty 69, 72 (1988) ("Over himself, over his own body and mind, the individual is sovereign . . . . Each is the proper guardian of his own health, whether bodily or mental and spiritual.") In short, in the absence of compelling communal interests, the structure of our constitutional system forbids the state from imposing health risks upon its citizens.[2]

This restraint on governmental power is undoubtedly fundamental, being required by "the teachings of history [and] solid recognition of the basic values that underlie our society." Moore v. City of East Cleveland, 431 U.S. 494, 503 (1977) (quoting Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 501 (1965) (Harlan, J., concurring)). Long before the United States Constitution was enacted, the right to be free from unwanted physical harm was already embedded in thirteenth-century English common law. F. Maitland, The Forms of Action at Common Law (1909). In its earliest manifestation, the tort of battery, the right to be free from physical harm continues to protect the individual against even the slightest unwanted touching. A few years before the American revolution, Sir William Blackstone wrote that "the preservation of a man's health from such practices as may annoy it . . . are rights to which every man is entitled . . . ." 1 W. Blackstone, Commentaries *130 (1765). Almost a hundred years ago, this Court aptly observed that "[n]o right is held more sacred, or is more carefully guarded, by the common law, than the right of every individual to the possession and control of his own person, free from all restraint or interference of others, unless by clear and unquestionable authority of law." Union Pacific R. Co. v. Botsford, 141 U.S. 250, 251 (1891).

2 Such communal interests would include the nation's compelling need to draft an army to insure its preservation. See Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U.S. 11, 28-29 (1905).

The health interests protected by the Constitution and our nation's traditions prohibit the accomplishment of even legitimate government goals by means which expose individuals to danger. Even where the state is entitled to act, it must do so in a manner that respects the health of each individual citizen. This obligation was evident in Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U.S. 11 (1905), a case which implicated both the individual's right to health preservation and the need for society to protect itself against an epidemic threatening the health of the whole community. The Court upheld a mandatory smallpox vaccination law on the ground that the state's compelling interest in protecting communal health was sufficiently strong to override a general reluctance to submit to vaccination. Nevertheless, the Court felt bound to exclude a statutory interpretation that would constitute a legislative decision to vaccinate an individual "[i]f it be apparent or can be shown with reasonable certainty that he is not at the time a fit subject of vaccination, or that vaccination by reason of his then condition, would seriously impair his health, or probably cause his death." Id. at 39.

The freedom of individuals to exercise their autonomy in determining for themselves the extent to which they will assume health risks has deep roots in the United States Constitution. Thus, the Court has permitted compelled blood samples, but only after assuring itself that "for most people the procedure involves virtually no risk, trauma or pain." Schmerber v. California, 384 U.S. 757, 771 (1966). In forbidding forced surgery to remove a bullet for use as evidence, the Court held that > [a] crucial factor in analyzing the magnitude of the intrusion in Schmerber is the extent to which the procedure may threaten the safety or health of the individual. . . . Notwithstanding the existence of probable cause, a search for evidence of a crime may be unjustifiable if it endangers the life or health of the suspect.

Winston v. Lee, 470 U.S. 753, 761 (1985). Similarly, the existence of potential health risks, in addition to the concern for personal autonomy, precludes government officials from constitutionally forcing dangerous electroconvulsive treatment or psychotropic drugs upon unwilling individuals. E.g., Lojuk v. Quandt, 706 F.2d 1456, 1465 (7th Cir. 1983). As the Court has observed, "[a]mong the historic liberties . . . was a right to be free from and to obtain judicial relief for, unjustified intrusions on personal security." Ingraham v. Wright, 430 U.S. 651, 673 (1977).

Justice Stevens' concurring opinion in Carey v. Population Services International, 431 U.S. 678 (1977), illustrates the nature of this limitation on permissible government action. Even though the objective of deterring sexual conduct among teenagers is a legitimate one, the state cannot seek to accomplish its goal by proscribing contraceptives, because that action increases the risk of unwanted pregnancies and venereal disease. While acknowledging that the state may properly perform a teaching function, Justice Stevens insisted that "an attempt to persuade by inflicting harm on the listener is an unacceptable means of conveying a message that is otherwise legitimate." Id. at 715. And, apart from its teaching role, the state is constitutionally precluded from injuring individuals as a means of regulating the behavior of those who engage in officially disfavored conduct. "This kind of government-mandated harm is . . . appropriately characterized as a deprivation of liberty without due process of law." Id. at 716.

As Justice Stevens has made clear, the government can promote its interests in ways, such as educational campaigns, that respect individual autonomy and do not threaten the lives or health of its citizens. The existence of a legitimate government interest does not justify government-mandated harm to the health of women.

II. ROE V. WADE AND SUCCEEDING CASES REFLECT THE FUNDAMENTAL PREMISE THAT GOVERNMENT MAY NOT, IN DISREGARD OF INDIVIDUAL AUTONOMY, COERCE INDIVIDUALS TO ASSUME INCREASED HEALTH RISKS.

The historic liberty to be free from governmental actions that adversely affect individual health was exemplified in Roe v. Wade. In holding that the right to privacy is "broad enough to encompass a woman's decision whether or not to terminate her pregnancy," 410 U.S. at 153, the Court repeatedly displayed its concern for the effects of state regulation of abortion upon the health of pregnant women.[3] Crucial to its holding was the recognition that:

> The detriment that the State would impose upon the woman by denying this choice altogether is apparent. Specific and direct harm medically diagnosable even in early pregnancy may be involved. Maternity, or additional offspring, may force upon the woman a distressful life and future. Psychological harm may be imminent. Mental and physical health may be taxed by child care.

Id.

The Court initially acknowledged the constitutional significance of public health concerns by setting forth in detail the respective positions on abortion of the present amicus, the American Public Health Association (APHA), and the American Medical Association. Id. at 142-46. The Court then reasoned that restrictions on abortion could not be imposed in the first trimester because abortion was safer than childbirth during that period. Id. at 149, 163.[4] It also concluded that regulation was permissible after the first trimester to promote the state's "important and legitimate interest in preserving and protecting

---

3 By locating a woman's right to choose whether or not to bear a child within the constitutional right to be free from government-mandated harm to health, amici APHA et al. do not mean to suggest that her decision is not also encompassed within the right to privacy. On the contrary, amici firmly endorse the commitment to privacy embodied in Roe v. Wade.

4 Today, legal abortion is substantially safer than childbirth throughout pregnancy. See infra at 15-16.

the health of the pregnant woman." Id. at 162; see also id. at 148-50. For the same reason, while it acknowledged the state's interest in protecting a viable fetus, the Court made crystal clear that at no point in pregnancy—even after the fetus becomes viable—may the state regulate or proscribe abortions that are "necessary, in appropriate medical judgment, for the preservation of the life or health of the mother." Id. at 164-65. Nor did the two dissenters in Roe v. Wade and its companion case, Doe v. Bolton, dispute the health rights of pregnant women. Neither contested the constitutional right of a woman to obtain an abortion when her "life or health" is in jeopardy. 410 U.S. 179, 221 (1973) (White & Rehnquist, JJ., dissenting).

While the Court has acknowledged a state interest in the protection of viable fetal life, it has never recognized the fetus itself as having enforceable constitutional rights. "No member of this Court has ever suggested that a fetus is a 'person' within the meaning of the fourteenth amendment." Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians & Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747, 779 n.8 (1986) (Stevens, J., concurring). In other words, this case, like other challenges to state restrictions on access to legal abortion, does not require this Court to mediate a conflict between the legal rights of a woman and those of her fetus, but rather to define the extent of the state's power to dictate that a woman must undergo health risks greater than those she wishes to bear.

On every occasion it has addressed the issue, this Court has unequivocally held that a pregnant woman's health cannot be sacrificed in order to protect her fetus. Striking down a Pennsylvania statute that limited women to the abortion technique that would best ensure that a fetus be aborted alive, the Court insisted that a woman must be free to choose the method of abortion that furthers her own health, regardless of its effect upon the prospects of fetal survival. "[T]he woman's life and health must always prevail over the fetus' life and health when they conflict." Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379, 400 (1979) (emphasis added). Similarly, in Thornburgh, the Court found an abortion regulation unconstitutional because "it required a trade-off between the woman's health and fetal survival and failed to require that maternal health be the physician's paramount consideration." 476 U.S. at 768-69.

The protected health interest is a broad one. In Doe v. Bolton, the Court defined "health" to include:

> all factors—physical, emotional, psychological, familial, and the woman's age—relevant to the well-being of the patient. All those factors may relate to health. This allows the attending physician the room he needs to make his best medical judgment. And it is room that operates for the benefit, not the disadvantage, of the pregnant woman.

410 U.S. at 192, quoted in Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 462 U.S. 416, 467 (1983) (O'Connor, J., dissenting); see also United States v. Vuitch, 402 U.S. 62, 72 (1971) ("health" must be interpreted according to "general and modern understanding" which includes psychological as well as physical well-being).

Public health data demonstrate that forcing women to carry unwanted fetuses to term subjects them to the risk of grave physical and psychological injury. The dissent in Roe v. Wade and Doe v. Bolton thus rested on the mistaken factual assumption that those cases concerned only "those recurring pregnancies that pose no danger whatsoever to the life or health of the mother but are, nevertheless unwanted for any one or more of a variety of reasons—convenience, family planning, economics, dislike of children, the embarrassment of illegitimacy, etc." 410 U.S. at 179. As this brief will show, there is no such thing as a pregnancy that does not put a woman's life and health at risk. It is precisely because serious health concerns are at stake in all pregnancies, and particularly those that are unwanted, that the Court is constitutionally bound to protect the right to choose abortion.

III. RESTRICTING ACCESS TO LEGAL ABORTION VIOLATES THE FUNDAMENTAL RIGHT OF INDIVIDUALS TO BE FREE FROM GOVERNMENT-MANDATED HARM TO THEIR HEALTH.

Missouri urges this Court to replace Roe v. Wade's strict scrutiny analysis with a rational basis test for reviewing state regulation of abortion services. The criminalization of abortion that would follow promises a devastating impact on women's health. In the alternative, Missouri urges this Court to replace the Roe v. Wade analysis with an untried formulation that would apply strict scrutiny to abortion regulations only when they "unduly burden" the right to choose. If adopted, this standard—which has been renounced by its original proponent, see Amicus Brief for the United States at 22—would lead to a proliferation of state restrictions on access to legal abortion with consequent risks to individual life and health.[5]

Faced with such restrictions, a pregnant woman is left with three alternatives. First, she can unwillingly carry the fetus to term, thus being subjected to the serious health risks set forth below. Second, confronted with insurmountable costs or reduced availability of legal abortion services, women who see no practical alternative may resort to potentially lethal back-alley practitioners or self-induced abortions. Third, some women may eventually succeed in obtaining legal abortions, but at greater risk to their health than if the abortion were obtained promptly after consultation with her physician. Thus all regulations that impede, delay or deny access to legal abortion jeopardize women's lives and health.

5 As previous cases show, such restrictions could include the following requirements: the presence of two doctors during abortions; use of the abortion technique most likely to ensure that the fetus be aborted alive; prior approval of any abortion by a hospital committee; confirmation of the performing doctor's medical judgment by two additional doctors who have independently examined the patient; viability tests; mandatory waiting periods; parental consent; spousal consent; the placement of an infant who survives an attempted abortion as an "abandoned ward of the state" with resulting termination of the rights of the natural parents; disclosure to a woman of so-called "detrimental physical and psychological effects" of abortion; and disclosure of private records to the public.

A. Restricting Access to Legal Abortion Would Subject Pregnant Women to Risks of Mortality and Morbidity.

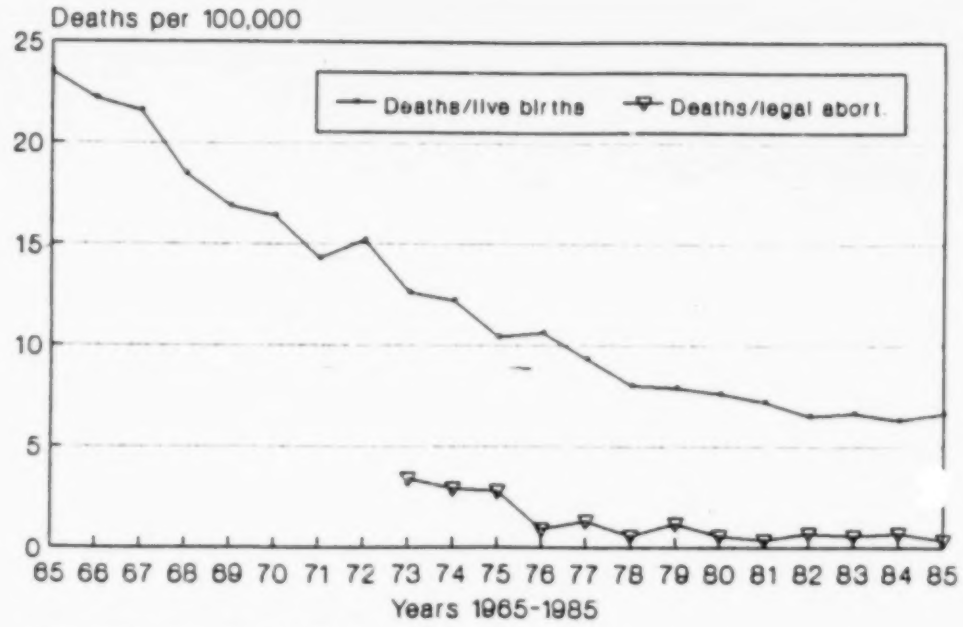
One obvious alternative for a woman who finds her access to legal abortion blocked by the state is to continue her pregnancy despite her desire to terminate it. By preventing the woman who chooses not to bear a child from obtaining a legal abortion, the state forces her to endure a much higher risk of death from pregnancy and childbirth. The state also forces her to undergo similarly elevated risks of serious medical complications. C. Tietze & S. Henshaw, Induced Abortion: A World Review 1986 111 (1986); see also LeBolt, Grimes & Cates, Mortality from Abortion and Childbirth: Are the Populations Comparable?, 248 J. Am. Med. Assoc. 188, 190-91 (1982); Cates, Smith, Rochat & Grimes, Mortality from Abortion and Childbirth: Are the Statistics Biased?, 248 J. Am. Med. Assoc. 192, 195-96 (1982).

As shown in Figure 1, in 1985 the death rate resulting from pregnancy or childbirth was 6.6 per 100,000 live births.[6] In the same year the risk of mortality from legal abortion was more than 16 times lower at 0.4 deaths per 100,000 legal abortions performed. Put in hard numbers, as shown by Figure 2, in 1985 250 women died from their pregnancies and childbirth compared to just 6 women who chose legal abortions. The women who died as a result of continuing their pregnancies were the victims of complications arising from cesarean sections, embolism, hypertensive disease, ectopic pregnancy, hemorrhage, and cerebrovascular accidents. Rochat, Koonin, Atrash & Jewett, Maternal Mortality in the United States: Report from the Maternal Mortality Collaborative, 72 Obstetrics & Gynecology 91, 93 (1988).

Similarly, health damage short of death is much more frequent as a result of pregnancy and childbirth than as a result of legal abortion. Out of every 10 women who go through pregnancy and childbirth, 6 are treated for some medical complication, and 3 out of 10 are treated for major complications.

6 This figure excludes those who ended their pregnancies by legal abortion or who died from ectopic pregnancies or miscarriages.

Figure 1: Number of maternal deaths per 100,000 live births and per 100,000 legal abortions, 1965-1985



Sources: see Appendix B.

The most common health problems occur during labor and delivery. These problems include such complications as severe lacerations of the perineal muscle, cervix or vagina and severe postpartum hemorrhage. Due to complications, roughly 2 out of 10 deliveries are by cesarean section, a major surgical procedure that invariably subjects women to substantial risks to life and health. R. Gold, A. Kenney & S. Singh, Blessed Events and the Bottom Line: Financing Maternity Care in the United States 10 (1987). The medical risks of cesarean section include death, infection, organ trauma, pulmonary embolus, delayed wound healing, hernia, bowel obstruction and hemorrhage, in addition to surgical pain and disfigurement. National Institute of Child Health, Caesarean Childbirth: Report of a Consensus Develop- ment Conference 635 (1981). As many as one-third of cesarean patients suffer from post-operative infections. Marieskind, Cesarean Sections, 7 Women & Health 179, 186 (1982).

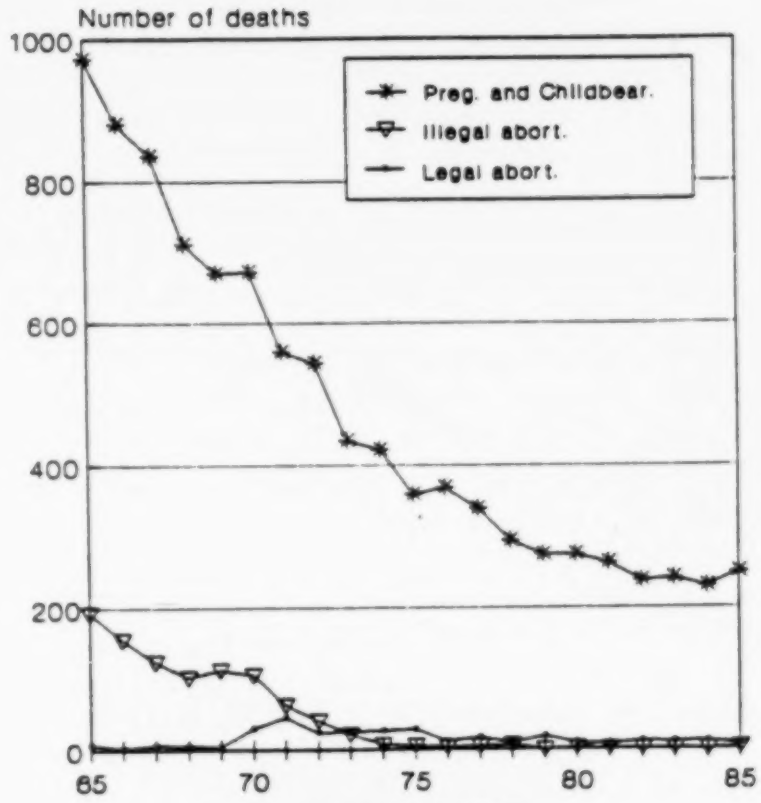
Figure 2: Maternal deaths due to pregnancy and childbearing, illegal abortions, and legal abortions, 1965-1985



Sources: see Appendix B.

Note: Studies have shown that maternal mortality, including that due to pregnancy and childbearing, is undercounted by the vital statistics system. See Centers for Disease Control, Maternal Mortality: Pilot Surveillance in Seven States, 34 Morbidity & Mortality Weekly Rep. 709-11 (1985). Similarly, the numbers of deaths from illegal and legal abortion before 1972 are understated because they are not adjusted for underreporting. The temporary increase in deaths due to legal abortions in the early 1970s is explained by the legalization of abortion in certain states and the consequent dramatic increase in the number of legal abortions performed, combined with the relative novelty of the procedures for most practitioners.

In marked contrast, about 86 percent of legal abortions are performed during the first trimester by a simple procedure called suction curettage. This procedure takes about ten minutes and can be done with local or general anesthesia. Henshaw, Characteristics of U.S. Women Having Abortions, 1982-1983, 19 Fam. Plan. Persp. 5, 6 (1987). Adjusted to take account of other methods of legal abortion used at later stages of gestation, the rate of major complications for women with no preexisting complications or concurrent sterilization was less than 0.5 percent for the period from 1975 to 1978. C. Tietze & S. Henshaw, Induced Abortion, A World Review 1986 104 (1986). Only 0.7 percent of first trimester legal abortions entail intra-abdominal operations and second trimester legal abortion methods lead to major surgery in only 0.1 to 0.2 percent of cases. Thus the risk of having to undergo major surgery resulting from legal abortion is roughly one hundredth that of carrying a pregnancy to term. Cates, Legal Abortion: The Public Health Record, 215 Sci. 1586, 1587 (1982).

There is evidence that the risk to a woman of continuing rather than terminating her pregnancy may be substantially greater when the pregnancy is unwanted. Women with negative attitudes towards their pregnancies have a higher rate of postpartum infection, hemorrhages and postpartum depression than those who want to carry their pregnancies to term. Id. These serious health risks can include lasting psychological damage. One study of Czechoslovakian women revealed that only 27 percent of women denied the right to choose abortion were able to cope fully with the resulting pregnancy and child.[7] Half of the women showed signs of mental disturbance and emotional strain for a considerable length of time after giving 7 On the other hand, women who have a full range of reproductive options open to them are more likely to take charge of their lives and their fertility. See Birdsall & Chester, Contraception and the Status of Women: What is the Link?, 19 Fam. Plan. Persp. 14 (1987). For example, research shows that unmarried teenagers whose first pregnancy ended in abortion were only half as likely to become pregnant a second time as those unmarried teenagers whose first pregnancy resulted in a live birth. Koenig & Zelnik, Repeat Pregnancies Among Metropolitan-Area Teenagers: 1971-1979, 14 Fam. Plan. Persp. 341, 342 (1982); Adolescent Abortion: Psychological and Legal Issues (G. Melton ed. 1986).

birth. H. David, Z. Dytrych, Z. Matejcek & V. Schuller, Born Unwanted: Developmental Effects of Denied Abortion 48 (1988).[8]

For some women, the risks associated with childbirth are especially grave. Pregnancy exacerbates the health conditions of women who suffer from heart disease, diabetes, hypertension, kidney disease, sickle cell anemia, epilepsy and malignant tumors. See generally F. Arias, High Risk Pregnancy and Delivery (1984); G. Burrow & T. Ferris, Medical Complications During Pregnancy (1982). For example, a woman suffering from diabetes may become blind through the worsening during pregnancy of pre-eclampsia. There is also evidence that a series of pregnancies will advance her diabetes at a faster rate. Other risks increased through pregnancy for a woman with an aggravated diabetic condition are an increased likelihood of infection and postpartum hemorrhage and an increased need for a cesarean section. J. Pritchard & P. MacDonald, Williams Obstetrics 680, 743 (1980). Today, an increased proportion of pregnancies in high-risk groups are terminated by abortions, thereby protecting the health of pregnant women. Tietze, The Public Health Effects of Legal Abortion in the United States, 16 Fam. Plan. Persp. 26, 26-27 (1984).

Over the last several decades, all aspects of obstetrical care have improved, but most dramatic of all have been the advances in the safety of legal abortion procedures. Between 1973—the year Roe v. Wade made legal abortion available nationwide—and 1985, as shown in Figure 1, the death rate for legal abortions fell more than eight times from 3.4 to 0.4 deaths per 100,000 procedures. As noted above, Roe v. Wade's prohibition of state regulation in the first trimester was based on the fact that legal abortion during the first trimester was safer than continuing the pregnancy. Today, at no point in pregnancy is 8 Studies of children born to women denied abortions demonstrate that involuntary childbirth harms the psychological health of the children as well as that of the mothers. See generally H. David, Z. Dytrych, Z. Matejcek & V. Schuller, Born Unwanted: Developmental Effects of Denied Abortion 93-101 (1988); David & Matejcek, Children Born to Women Denied Abortion, 13 Fam. Plan. Persp. 32, 33 (1981); Baldwin & Cane, The Children of Teenage Parents, 12 Fam. Plan. Persp. 34, 37 (1980).

the risk of death from legal abortion higher than the risk of death from childbirth. C. Tietze & S. Henshaw, Induced Abortion, A World Review 1986 110-11 (1986); see also Tietze, The Public Health Effects of Legal Abortion in the United States, 16 Fam. Plan. Persp. 26, 26-27 (1984); Atrash, MacKay, Binkin & Hogue, Legal Abortion Mortality in the United States: 1972 to 1982, 156 Am. J. Obstetrics & Gynecology 605 (1987). The increased safety of abortion procedures is due to their availability early in gestation, increased medical expertise and improved medical technology. Cates, Legal Abortion: The Public Health Record, 215 Sci. 1586, 1587 (1982).[9]

B. Denial of Access to Legal Abortion Would Relegate Women to the Dangers of Self-Induced and Back-Alley Abortions, Which Include Death.

Another alternative available to women whose access to legal abortion is blocked by the state is to put their lives and health in the hands of back-alley practitioners or to attempt dangerous self-induced abortions. Tragically, the experience prior to Roe v. Wade showed that when the state prohibited legal abortion, many desperate women did "choose" this option of last resort. Although difficult to quantify, it has been estimated that the 9 Contrary to the assertions appearing in the brief of amicus curiae Focus on the Family and Family Research Council of America, legal abortion does not adversely affect subsequent pregnancy outcomes, nor does it lead to an epidemic rise in miscarriages, premature births or low birthweight babies. Studies have shown no demonstrable increase in the frequency of fetal loss in any one of the trimesters of pregnancy among women who have previously had abortions. Nor is there any significant association between prior induced abortion and low birthweight, ectopic pregnancy, complications of pregnancy or labor, or congenital malformations. C. Chung, P. Steinhoff & R. Smith, Effects of Induced Abortion on Subsequent Reproductive Function and Pregnancy Outcome (1981); Hogue, Cates & Tietze, The Effects of Induced Abortion on Subsequent Reproduction, 4 Epidemiological Reviews 66 (1982). To the contrary, by reducing the incidence of low birthweight babies, the availability of legal abortion has significantly lowered neonatal mortality rates in the United States. Miller, Stokes & Warland, The Effect of Legalization and Public Funding of Abortion on Neonatal Mortality: An Intervention Analysis (1985); see also Corman, Joyce & Grossman, Birth Outcome Production Function in the United States, 22 J. Hum. Resources 339 (1987).

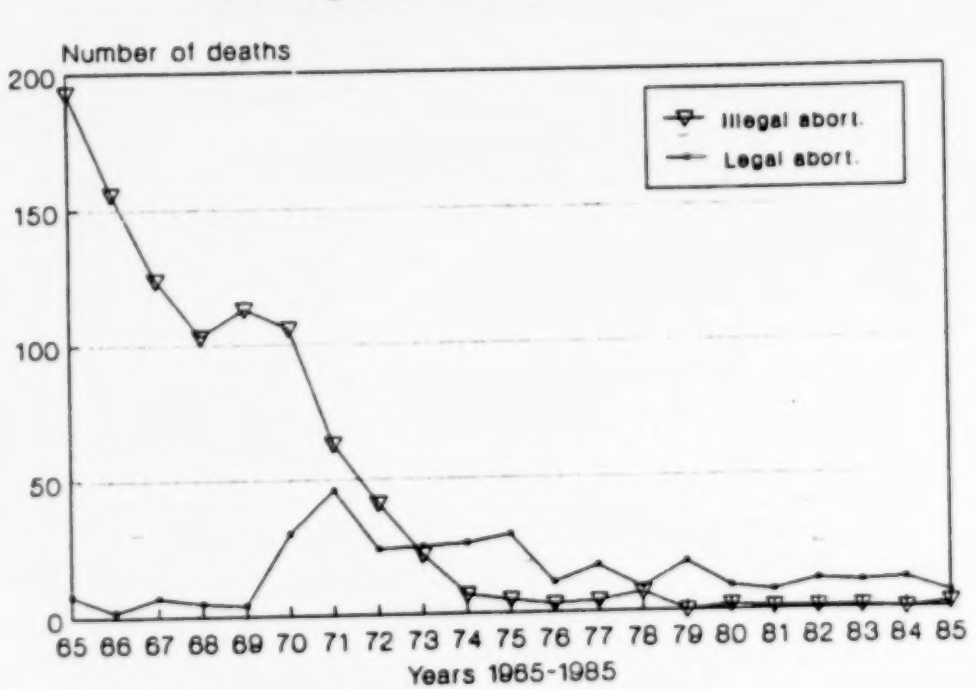
yearly total of illegal abortions in the United States prior to legalization was somewhere between 200,000 and 1,200,000. M. Calderone, Abortion in the United States 180 (1958).

Figure 3 shows that in 1965, while restrictions were still in place, 193 women died as a result of illegal abortions in the United States. Twenty years later, with legal abortion available nationwide, only 2 such deaths occurred (indeed, the previous year not a single death had resulted from illegal abortions). Combining that figure with the low rate of only 6 deaths resulting from legal abortion, less than 10 women died as a result of abortions in 1985 compared to over 200 a couple of decades previously, before abortion was legalized.

Figure 3: Maternal Deaths due to illegal and legal abortions, 1965–1985



Sources: see Appendix B.

Thus, the legalization of abortion has radically reduced the numbers of women killed and injured in attempts to terminate their pregnancies. Cates & Rochat, Illegal Abortions in the United States: 1972-1974, 8 Fam. Plan. Persp. 86, 86-87 (1976). One researcher estimated that a total of 1,500 deaths were averted during the 1970s by the legalization of abortion and that the number of life-threatening, but not fatal, complications that were averted probably reached several tens of thousands. Tietze, The Public Health Effects of Legal Abortion in the United States, 16 Fam. Plan. Persp. 26 (1984); see also Cates, Legal Abortion: The Public Health Record, 215 Sci. 1586 (1982). Only two decades ago, as shown by Figure 2, abortion (almost always illegal) accounted for more than one fifth of all maternal deaths, whereas today, despite the greatly increased numbers of legal abortions, it represents less than one twentieth of the total. Deaths from illegal abortions have been practically eradicated.

Apart from mortality rates, the availability of legal abortion has reduced morbidity—meaning illness—resulting from self-induced and back-alley abortions. In the 1960s, complications resulting from illegal abortions accounted for more than 20 percent of all pregnancy-related admissions to municipal hospitals in New York and California. E. More-Cavar, International Inventory of Information on Induced Abortion (1974). Abortion-related complications requiring hospitalization fell sharply during the 1970s, with the steepest drop coming in 1973 following Roe v. Wade. Since 1973, such hospitalizations have been minimal. Cates, Legal Abortion: The Public Health Record, 215 Sci. 1586 (1982). In contrast, in developing countries where legal abortion is still not generally available, 20 to 40 percent of admissions to maternity wards have been attributed to complications from illegal abortions. B. van den Berg & C. Chieng, Maternal Mortality and Differentiation by Cause of Death in New Developments in Analysis of Mortality and Causes of Death 250 (1986).

The case of just one woman illustrates the personal and societal costs that result from government-denied access to legal abortion. A twenty-two year old mother of a three-year old daughter, this woman was brought unconscious into a Texas emergency room on January 17, 1953. Two weeks after learning of her pregnancy, > she went into the bathroom, inserted a rubber catheter into the vagina, and injected air through it with a bulb syringe. A few minutes later her husband found her lying unconscious on the bathroom floor. He said she appeared blue, and had trouble breathing. He brought her immediately to Parkland Hospital.

Haynes, Cerebral Hypoxia from Air Embolus Following Attempted Abortion, 71 Am. J. Obstetrics & Gynecology 1111, 1111-12 (1956). Upon arrival at the hospital, the patient was starved of oxygen and her breathing labored. Her arms were limp and all reflexes absent. Frothy pink fluid bubbled from her mouth. She displayed the symptoms of neurological damage. A tracheotomy was done to allow her to breathe. After she aborted the fetus, the patient suffered repeated convulsions throughout the night and next morning demonstrated spastic paralysis. Her eyes were unable to focus. This woman was lucky to survive at all. Her condition—cerebral hypoxia following intrauterine administration of air (in those days a common method of self-induced abortion)—is normally fatal. Two weeks later, she was still being sedated to control her "frightful screaming," which was interrupted only by occasional monosyllables. Although her bodily functions gradually returned, the brain damage caused by her self-induced abortion had rendered her "totally irrational" and at the time of discharge she showed the mental status of a small child. Id. The medical literature abounds with similar horror stories of the victims of restricted access to legal abortion. See, e.g., Rosenfield, Roe v. Wade and the Public's Health, Nation's Health 10 (Mar. 1989); Zakin, Godsick & Segal, Foreign Bodies Lost in the Pelvis during Attempted Abortion with Special Reference to Urethral Catheters, 70 Am. J. Obstetrics & Gynecology 233 (1955); Veprovsky & Ostreich, Traumatic Perforation of the Uterus Following Attempted Self-Induced Abortion with a Rubber Catheter, 68 Am. J. Obstetrics & Gynecology 1615 (1954).

Despite the dangers of illegal abortions, the sad truth is that women will continue to obtain them. According to the Pan American Health Organization, an estimated 20 to 25 percent of pregnancies are illegally aborted in Latin America, where legal abortion is generally unavailable. These illegal abortions are the leading pregnancy-related cause of mortality. Simons, Abortions Across Latin America Rising Despite Illegality and Risks, N. Y. Times, Nov. 26, 1988, at 1, col. 4. The World Health Organization estimates that 115,000 to 200,000 women die each year because of illegal abortions. E. Royston & S. Armstrong, Preventing Maternal Deaths (forthcoming 1989); see also Lettenmaier, Liskin, Church & Harris, Mothers' Lives Matter: Maternal Health in the Community, s.L (7) Population Reports 4 (1988). Predictably, in light of these facts, when Romania restricted access to legal abortions in 1966, maternal deaths sharply increased. J. Legge, The Unintended Consequences of Policy Change: The Effect of a Restrictive Abortion Policy, 15 Admin. & Soc'y 243, 251 (1983).

The health consequences of abortion in terms of mortality and morbidity depend largely on the quality of the procedures used and the skill of the provider. "If abortions are illegal according to the laws of the land they are often performed by medically untrained persons utilizing crude methodology, and may have direct consequences on a woman's health." B. van den Berg & C. Chieng, Maternal Mortality and Differentiation by Cause of Death in New Developments in Analysis of Mortality and Causes of Death 239, 247 (1986).

Increased mortality and morbidity would certainly result in the United States if states are permitted to restrict or delay access to abortion. In 1970, by liberalizing its abortion laws before Roe v. Wade was decided, New York was one of the first states to acknowledge that denying or delaying access to abortion had exposed women to often fatal perils. As its health administrators later recalled:

> One of the most compelling reasons for favoring a liberalized abortion law was to reduce or eliminate the disastrous effects following illegal or criminal abortions carried out under clandestine, unsafe circumstances—usually by unskilled, unqualified persons. Before the statute was changed, deaths due to such abortions constituted the leading cause of maternal death. How many criminal abortions took place year after year is conjectural but clearly these accounted for thousands of women being admitted to hospitals because of sepsis, hemorrhage, and shock. The more fortunate victims survived, although often invalidated for long periods and rendered reproductive cripples. To the women the cost in health was great. The burden cast on their families was likewise great since many of the patients were mothers of young children. The community and the hospitals often had to assume the financial burdens since most of these women were poor. The proportion of septic and otherwise complicated abortions with consequent fatalities was highest in poor minority groups. Women who had greater economic security managed to obtain relatively safe abortions under better conditions.

Pakter, O'Hare, Helpern & Nelson, Impact of the Liberalized Abortion Law in New York City on Deaths Associated with Pregnancy: A Two-Year Experience, 49 Bull. N.Y. Acad. Med. 804, 805 (1973).[10]

---

10 Interestingly, the early legalization of abortion in New York did not ameliorate the strains formerly placed on health care facilities by illegal abortions. Rather, the staggering demand for legal abortions from out-of-state residents exacerbated the existing burdens on the obstetrical and gynecological resources of the state.

Immediately after the introduction of legal abortion in 1970, thousands of women thronged to New York City from other states. Fully two thirds of the 334,865 abortions performed during the next two years were to nonresidents. Pakter, O'Hare, Nelson & Svigir, Two Years Experience in New York City with the Liberalized Abortion Law: Progress and Problems, 63 Am. J. Pub. Health 524 (1973). In 1973, after abortions became available nationwide, the numbers of women from out of state seeking abortions in New York City dropped dramatically. In 1986, for example, less than one in twelve of the 89,054 women who obtained abortions in New York City were nonresidents. New York City Department of Health, Bureau of Health Statistics and Analysis, Summary of Vital Statistics 1986 12 (1987). In the post-Roe period, approximately 90 percent of all abortions in the United States have been performed on women in their state of residence. Ellerbrock, Atrash, Rhodenhiser, Hogue & Smith, Abortion Surveillance, 1982-1983, 36 Morbidity & Mortality Weekly Rep. 11SS, 41SS (Feb. 1987).

In short, restricted access to abortion services drives desperate women to inflict potentially lethal injuries upon themselves or to put their lives in the hands of illegal back-alley practitioners. Notwithstanding the existence of safe abortion procedures based on advanced technology, illegal abortions will inflict serious injury and take many lives if states such as Missouri are permitted to impede or deny access to legal abortion.

C. The State Imposes Risks on Women's Health by Delaying Access to Legal Abortion.

State regulations requiring involvement of more than one physician in any legal abortion, compulsory waiting periods, committee approval rules, or specified testing procedures, all create delay and expense. Some women, especially young or poor women, may be sufficiently intimidated by these non-medically based obstacles to forego completely their right to choose an abortion. In that event, as we have demonstrated, the state imposes upon them the significant health risks of continued pregnancy and childbirth.

The inevitable delay resulting from the denial of medically appropriate abortion information and referral or from the imposition of non-medically based requirements may make it impossible for women, particularly if they are poor, to obtain a legal abortion. In many areas of the United States, abortion services are difficult to locate. As many as 21 percent of metropolitan areas and 91 percent of nonmetropolitan areas lack abortion providers. Henshaw, Forrest & Van Vort, Abortion Services in the United States, 1984 and 1985, 19 Fam. Plan. Persp. 63 (1987). Moreover, once a provider is located, transportation may be difficult to arrange or afford. A woman may have difficulty scheduling time away from work without losing her job. Access to a telephone may be limited or nonexistent. Language barriers may prevent her from finding the proper clinic. See Henshaw, Reducing Teenage Childbearing, 78 Am. J. Pub. Health 619 (1988).

In this manner, non-medically based state regulation of abortion can transform a simple and inexpensive out-patient visit into a burdensome and costly ordeal. The women who are most likely to forego their right to choose an abortion as a result are poor women most in need of quality health care. Among these, women of color are disproportionately represented. See Joyce, The Social and Economic Correlates of Pregnancy Resolution Among Adolescents in New York City, by Race and Ethnicity: A Multivariate Analysis, 78 Am. J. Pub. Health 626 (1988).

The greater the delay imposed by the state, the harder it becomes for the pregnant woman to freely make and implement an informed decision as to her best course of action. Of those who routinely perform first trimester abortions, 57 percent do not perform abortions during the second trimester, and second trimester abortions are often more expensive even if a provider is located. Henshaw, Forrest & Van Vort, Abortion Services in the United States, 1984 and 1985, 19 Fam. Plan. Persp. 63, 68-69 (1987). Moreover, although the risk of complications from legal abortion is dramatically less than that from pregnancy and childbirth, it remains true that for each week of delay, the risk of complications increases by 20 percent and the risk of death increases by approximately 50 percent. See American Public Health Association Recommended Program Guide for Abortion Services (Revised 1979), 70 Am. J. Pub. Health 654 (1980).

Thus, by imposing increased cost and delay upon a woman seeking legal abortion, the state forces her into a situation where her ability to obtain a safe abortion is dramatically reduced. In this way, non-health based state regulations, deceptively innocuous on their face, risk the health of pregnant women.

If states are permitted once again to criminalize or restrict access to legal abortion, jurisdictions such as the present amicus New York City would suffer. The obstetrical and gynecological health care systems of many states and major cities are already woefully overburdened and unable to provide care for poor, pregnant women. Children's Defense Fund, The Health of America's Children 10-15 (1987); Wilkerson, Infant Mortality: Frightful Odds in Inner City, N. Y. Times, June 26, 1987, at 1, col. 2. The renewed demand for legal abortion from out-of-state residents would severely strain the obstetrical and gynecological facilities of cities and states that continue to allow legal abortion.

IV. THE MISSOURI STATUTE UNCONSTITUTIONALLY JEOPARDIZES WOMEN'S HEALTH.

A. The Fundamental Right to be Free from Government-Mandated Harm to Health Can Be Protected Only by Respecting Individual Autonomy in Making Health Care Decisions.

Because of the risks associated with pregnancy, childbirth and illegal abortions, the rule expressed in Roe v. Wade and succeeding cases—that a woman's health or life must always prevail over other state interests, including the state interest in potential human life—is essential to protect the individual from government-mandated harm. Critical to the constitutional protection against such harm is respect for the woman's autonomy in making her own decision as to what health risks she chooses to bear.

It is a central principle of sound public health care as well as of our longstanding legal traditions[11] that individuals, with the benefit of complete and objective information, should make their own health care decisions. E.g., American Medical Association, Current Opinions of the Council on Ethical and Judicial Affairs of the American Medical Association ¶ 8.07 (1986) ("The patient should make his own determination on treatment"). Such decisions should not be made by doctors, lawyers or legislators.

This principle does not rest exclusively on the respect for individual autonomy that underlies our constitutional structure. Within the physician-patient relationship, it is understood that fully informed patients who actively make decisions about their own health options are the persons most likely to make the right decisions. As the President's Commission for the Study of Ethical Problems in Medicine and Biomedical and Behavioral Research pointed out, this is because patients who are fully informed by their physicians about their conditions and the available treatment alternatives are more likely to comply with proposed therapies and to experience speedier recovery from surgery. They are also more likely to protect their own well-being by monitoring their medication and by recognizing and reporting any symptoms requiring reevaluation of a particular therapy. President's Commission for the Study of Ethical Problems in Medicine and Biomedical and Behavioral Research, Making Health Care Decisions: The Ethical and Legal Implications of Informed Consent in the Patient-Practitioner Relationship 69-70 (1982).

11 In the words of Judge Cardozo, "[e]very human being of adult years and sound mind has a right to determine what shall be done with his own body." Schloendorff v. New York Hospital, 211 N.Y. 125, 129, 105 N.E. 92, 93 (1914), quoted in Canterbury v. Spence, 464 F.2d 772, 780 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 1064 (1972).

Meaningful exercise of the individual's right to make decisions affecting his or her own health depends upon the integrity of the physician-patient relationship. As reflected in legal and ethical rules of practice, developed from the time of Hippocrates, an open and uninhibited physician-patient relationship is essential for the physician to make a correct diagnosis and to identify the available health options for the patient to consider. Such a relationship cannot exist when the state forbids the physician from presenting information, offering advice and taking actions based solely upon the welfare of the patient. The physician whose conduct is controlled by some conflicting, state-prescribed restraint, regardless of what non-medical ideology it serves, is not truly functioning as a physician at all. When the government imposes such restraints, it deprives patients of the health care they have sought and to which they are entitled.

B. By Distorting the Information Available to Women, Depriving Them of Their Physicians' Best Judgment, and Forcing Them to Submit to Medically Unnecessary Tests, the Missouri Statute Unconstitutionally Subjects Women to Harm to Their Health.

The Missouri statute now under review and the abortion regulations this Court has previously declared unconstitutional all have one thing in common: they compel health care professionals to practice their profession according to a state agenda that dislodges the health of the patient from its historic and proper place as the physician's sole concern. By enacting such legislation, Missouri's lawmakers have usurped the role of the individual as an autonomous decision maker in matters affecting her own health, and in doing so have endangered the lives and health of Missouri women.

1. The Ban on Counseling or Encouraging Abortion Harms the Health of Women.

The Missouri statute forbids the expenditure of public funds "for the purpose of encouraging or counseling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life." Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.205 (1986). The statute thus bans the use of public funds to give information or referrals concerning abortion to a woman whose health is endangered by continuing her pregnancy. This will have an especially cruel impact upon women suffering from serious medical conditions, such as heart disease, kidney disease, severe hypertension, sickle-cell anemia and severe diabetes. As we have seen, it is vital for a woman with any one of these conditions to be informed that if her method of contraception fails, she may face serious health consequences if she does not have an abortion as soon as possible. See generally F. Arias, High Risk Pregnancy and Delivery (1984); G. Burrow & T. Ferris, Medical Complications During Pregnancy (1982). By forbidding health care personnel from advising a woman that an abortion would benefit her health, the Missouri statute does exactly what this Court outlawed in Roe, Thornburgh and Colautti: it sacrifices a woman's health for the sake of a fetus.

Moreover, from a medical point of view, the "necessary to save her life" exception is impossible to apply. When consulted by a patient who seeks advice or treatment, a physician's ethical obligation is to advise and treat that patient to the best of his or her medical abilities. There are many instances in which pregnancy poses serious risks to health, but there is no practicable way to determine whether those instances will necessarily result in death. See generally F. Arias, High Risk Pregnancy and Delivery (1984). Yet the statute permits physicians to fully inform their patients only when they determine that an abortion is necessary to preserve a patient's life.

The ban on abortion counseling also harms women's health by destroying the integrity of the physician-patient relationship.

The ethical and professional guidelines of amicus APHA, as well as those of the American Medical Association, the American Psychological Association and other professional groups, require the accurate and complete communication of treatment alternatives, including medically appropriate information about abortion to pregnant women, and also referrals where necessary.[12] Missouri's ban on abortion counseling will force physicians and other health care professionals to depart from accepted medical standards. In preferring fetal life, Missouri has unconstitutionally chosen to impose health risks upon pregnant women.

The statute at issue here does much more than merely fail to subsidize abortion procedures. Cf. Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977); Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980). By insisting upon the injection of incomplete, censored and misleading information into the sensitive dialogue between a woman and her publicly funded health care provider, Missouri will induce many women to assume increased health risks. The element of trust in a health care provider is particularly important when a woman has just been told that she is pregnant. At that moment, when she may be upset and frightened, uncertain as to what she 12 See American Public Health Association Recommended Program Guide for Abortion Services (Revised 1979), 70 Am. J. Pub. Health 652, 653 (1980) ("Education about abortion procedures and services should be the responsibility of all health agencies and professionals concerned with the care of women. . . . The medical professional has an obligation to establish referral relationships for the provision of abortion as with any other specialized medical services."); see also American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, Standards for Obstetric-Gynecologic Services (1985) ("In the event of an unwanted pregnancy, the physician should counsel the patient about her options of continuing the pregnancy to term and offering the infant for legal adoption, or aborting the pregnancy."); American Academy of Pediatrics, Pregnancy and Abortion Counseling, 63 Pediatrics 920, 921 (1979) (all options, including abortion, should be explored with pregnant teenagers); American Psychological Association, Ethical Principles of Psychologists, 36 Am. Psychologist 580, 633-38 (1981) (termination of pregnancy should be considered a civil right of the pregnant woman); American Medical Association, Current Opinions of the Council on Ethical and Judicial Affairs of the American Medical Association §§ 8.04, 8.07, 8.11 (1984); American Psychiatric Association, Principles of Medical Ethics with Annotations Especially Applicable to Psychiatry (1981).

---

should do, she must be able to trust her health care provider to give her the accurate, complete and unbiased information she needs to make decisions. But instead the state forces a physician to abandon his or her patient and places pregnant women in a worse position than if the state had played no role at all. If Missouri's ban on counseling is upheld, pregnant women will be dangerously misled by partial and biased information. By disrupting the physician-patient dialogue to further its non-medical agenda, Missouri has unconstitutionally legislated that women endure increased risks to their health.

2. The Ban on the Use of Public Facilities or Public Employees to Perform Abortions Harms the Health of Women.

The Missouri statute also prohibits the use of public facilities or public employees to perform or assist abortions even when the abortion is paid for by private funds. Mo. Rev. Stat. §§ 188.210 & 188.215 (1986). Missouri's ban on the involvement of public employees in the performance of abortions, qualified only by an unworkable exception for abortions necessary to save a woman's life, will deny legal abortions to women who need them. Significantly, the ban applies even to a woman with certain health conditions, such as heart disease or sickle-cell anemia, for whom death as a result of childbirth may not be imminent, but who faces morbidity and possibly even mortality unless she obtains an abortion. If that woman does not have access to a private physician or a private facility, she will be prevented from consulting with or obtaining an abortion from any-qualified practitioner even though an abortion is medically indicated. For such women, the harm Missouri imposes by this provision is readily apparent.

3. The Blanket Requirement that Physicians Make Findings of Gestational Age, Fetal Weight and Lung Maturity Harms the Health of Women.

In addition, Mo. Rev. Stat. § 188.029 (1986) forbids a physician from performing an abortion on a woman "he has reason to believe is carrying an unborn child of twenty or more weeks gestational age" without first fulfilling certain requirements. Specifically, the physician must determine if the "unborn child" is viable by performing tests to establish its gestational age, weight, and lung maturity, and must enter these findings and determination of viability in the medical record of the mother. There are no exceptions to these requirements.

Roe v. Wade and succeeding cases establish that if at any point either the life or the health of the pregnant woman is endangered, her right to terminate her pregnancy is protected. In such circumstances, fetal viability has no bearing on her constitutionally protected decision to choose an abortion. Requiring a determination of viability will impose health risks upon pregnant women. When a woman suffers from a condition that makes pregnancy dangerous and abortion is medically indicated, mandatory testing for viability will certainly cause her unnecessary anguish, which may deter her from obtaining the abortion that would protect her life or health.

Moreover, the performance of the required tests causes delay which increases risks to health. See supra at 23. And the tests themselves may prove harmful to pregnant women. Amniocentesis, for example, can cause bleeding as well as maternal cell contamination and infection. R. Blatt, Prenatal Testing 194 (1988). Amniocentesis also presents a small but significant risk of causing miscarriage. See Rhoads et al., The Safety and Efficacy of Chorionic Villus Sampling for Early Prenatal Diagnosis of Cytogenic Abnormalities, 320 New Eng. J. Med. 609 (1989).[13]

Furthermore, requiring that the tests be performed will burden the right to choose an abortion by greatly increasing the cost of the procedure. Amniocentesis, for example, the only test available to determine lung maturity, costs from $350 to $700. R. Blatt, Prenatal Testing 79 (1988). The increased costs for these medically unnecessary tests may delay a woman's ability to obtain an abortion, thereby adding risk to the procedure, or even prevent her from obtaining one altogether.

---

13 Amici respectfully refer the Court to the amicus curiae brief of the American Medical Association, which more fully discusses the dangerous and medically inappropriate nature of Missouri's testing requirements.

In sum, the Missouri statute is unconstitutional because it endangers the health of women. It tears asunder the physician-patient relationship, denies women autonomy in matters affecting their own health, deprives them of safe and appropriate medical advice and services, and subjects them to potentially dangerous medical procedures.

Conclusion

For the reasons stated above, amici urge this Court to affirm the court of appeals' declaration that the Missouri statute is unconstitutional. Amici also urge this Court, in order to protect the fundamental constitutional right to be free from government-mandated harm to health, to leave untouched the strict scrutiny standard for reviewing state regulation of abortion.

Dated: New York, New York
March 30, 1989

Respectfully submitted,

NADINE TAUB
Rutgers University
School of Law
15 Washington Street
Newark, New Jersey 07102
(201) 648-5637

JOHN H. HALL
Counsel of Record
WALTER J. WALSH
DONNA I. DENNIS
Debevoise & Plimpton
875 Third Avenue
New York, New York 10022
(212) 909-6000

Attorneys for Amici Curiae

APPENDIX A

Individual Descriptions of Amici Curiae

The American Public Health Association (APHA) is a national organization devoted to the promotion and protection of personal and environmental health and to disease prevention. Founded in 1872, APHA is now the largest public health organization in the world, with over 50,000 members, including 51 state and local affiliate organizations. The APHA represents all disciplines and specialties in public health, including both patients and health professionals such as physicians, nurses, health educators, and family planning specialists.

The Alan Guttmacher Institute (AGI) is an independent, nonprofit corporation for research, policy analysis and public education in the fields of reproductive health, population and broadly related areas of health and social policy. AGI's nonpartisan programs and activities are aimed at promoting public understanding, developing sound public policy and creating workable public and private sector programs that will enhance the ability of all women and men, in freedom and dignity, to exercise their rights and responsibilities with regard to reproduction and family formation.

The American College of Preventive Medicine (ACPM), established in 1954, is the professional organization of physician specialists who practice preventive medicine. ACPM provides leadership in research, professional education, development of public policy and enhancement of standards in that field. Its 2,000 members are involved in public health, aerospace medicine, occupational medicine and general preventive medicine activities. They work in many settings, including medical schools, schools of public health, industry, private and group practice, health departments, government and the armed forces.

California Physicians for Choice (CPC) is an organization of physicians which is dedicated to informing the public that abortion is an option that should not be abandoned and that outlawing or restricting access to abortion would seriously interfere with the rights and duties of physicians to provide patients with the best possible health care.

California Republicans for Choice (CRC) represents over 1,000 registered Republicans in California. CRC works to preserve the rights of individuals to conduct their own lives with a minimum of governmental interference and to ensure that all reproductive options—including contraception, sterilization, and abortion—are legal and available to all.

The City of New York is a municipality which has an interest in protecting the health and safety of all of its residents. In 1970, it was among the first cities to offer legal abortion services in its municipal health facilities. The City is dedicated to the continued provision of safe and legal abortion services as a necessary component in protecting the health of all women, especially poor women.

The Commonwealth of Massachusetts, Department of Public Health, founded one hundred and twenty years ago, is the oldest state department of health in the United States. The Department is mandated to "take cognizance of the interest of life, health, comfort and convenience among the citizens of the Commonwealth."

Joyce C. Lashof is Dean of the School of Public Health, University of California, Berkeley and a physician whose career has been devoted to public health and the delivery of medical care to underserved populations. She has directed a neighborhood health center in a poverty area of Chicago, served as Director of Public Health of the State of Illinois, and was also Deputy Assistant Secretary of Health for that state in 1977-78. In all of these positions she has been involved in policy issues of importance to women's health.

The National Abortion Federation is a professional membership organization of abortion providers representing 300 clinics, doctors' offices, and hospitals throughout the United States and Canada.

The New York State Republican Family Committee is an educational advocacy organization devoted to promoting policies that foster maximum individual liberty and freedom of choice, particularly in matters of health. Founded in 1984, the Committee has over 300 Republican party members with 99 percent residing in New York State. Its membership includes lawyers, health care professionals, business people, educators, philanthropists, and numerous civic and political leaders.

Gilbert S. Omenn is Dean, and Patricia Wahl Associate Dean, of the School of Public Health and Community Medicine at the University of Washington. The School of Public Health and Community Medicine trains over 450 graduate students in disciplines related to all aspects of public health. The school's research and training in public health primarily focuses on disadvantaged populations.

Professor Allan Rosenfield is Dean of the Columbia University School of Public Health where he is professor of obstetrics and gynecology. Dean Rosenfield has had a long-standing involvement in and commitment to women's health generally, and, more specifically, reproductive health, as well as women's individual rights on reproductive health issues. The school of which he is dean is devoted to disease prevention, health promotion and, more broadly, to the protection of the health of individuals and of populations.

Dr. Jan A. J. Stolwijk is Chairman of the Department of Epidemiology and Public Health at Yale University. The Department is a school of public health which trains individuals at the masters and doctoral levels in such areas as biostatistics, environmental health, epidemiology, health services administration, and social and behavioral science in public health.

APPENDIX B

Sources to Figures 1, 2 and 3

Deaths from illegal and legal abortions: 1965-1967, 2A National Center for Health Statistics, Vital Statistics of the United States, 1965 § 3 (fetal mortality) (1967), and equivalent volumes for 1966 and 1967. To distribute deaths categorized as "spontaneous or unspecified," it was assumed that the ratio of spontaneous abortion deaths to pregnancy and childbearing deaths (excluding abortion and ectopic pregnancy) was the same as during the years 1968-1972, and the remaining "unspecified" deaths were apportioned proportionately to illegal and legal abortion deaths. 1968-1971, Tietze, The Effect of Legalization of Abortion on Population Growth and Public Health, in C. Tietze, F. Jaffe, E. Weinstock & J. Dryfoss, Abortion 1974-1975; Need & Services in the United States, Each State & Metropolitan Area 110-113 (1976). 1972-1982, Ellerbrock, Atrash, Rhodenhiser, Hogue & Smith, Abortion Surveillance, 1982-1983, 36 Morbidity & Mortality Weekly Rep. 11SS-42SS (Feb. 1987). 1983-1985, Centers for Disease Control, unpublished information. Note: for 1972-1985, 10 deaths from abortion not classified as to legality were included with deaths from illegal abortion.

Deaths from pregnancy and childbearing, excluding deaths from abortion, miscarriage and ectopic pregnancy: National Center for Health Statistics, Vital Statistics of the United States, volumes for 1965-1985.

Number of legal abortions: Henshaw, Forrest & Van Vort, Abortion Services in the United States, 1984 and 1985, 19 Fam. Plan. Persp. 63-70 (1987). Figures for the years before 1973 are available from the Centers for Disease Control but were not used because they are incomplete.

Number of live births: National Center for Health Statistics, Advance Report of Final Natality Statistics, 1985, 36 Monthly Vital Statistics Rep. 13 (Supp. Jul. 17, 1987).

AMICUS CURIAE

BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
MAR 30 1989
JOSEPH F. SPANIOL, JR.
CLERK

No. 88-605

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM 1988

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

—v.—

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR A GROUP OF AMERICAN LAW PROFESSORS AS AMICUS CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLEES

FRANK I. MICHELMAN
1525 Massachusetts Avenue
Cambridge, Massachusetts 02138
(617) 495-4628

NORMAN REDLICH*
STEPHEN R. NEUWIRTH
Wachtell, Lipton, Rosen & Katz
299 Park Avenue
New York, New York 10171
(212) 371-9200

DENISE CARTY-BENNIA
400 Huntington Avenue
Boston, Massachusetts 02115
(617) 437-3301

Attorneys for A Group of American Law Professors as Amicus Curiae

Counsel of Record

March 30, 1989

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PAGE

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES iii

INTEREST OF AMICI 1

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT 2

ARGUMENT 5

I. A WOMAN'S RIGHT TO CHOOSE WHETHER TO TERMINATE A PREGNANCY IS A FUNDAMENTAL RIGHT FIRMLY ROOTED IN CONSTITUTIONAL PRINCIPLES OF LIBERTY, PRIVACY AND EQUALITY HISTORICALLY AFFIRMED BY THIS COURT 5

A. The Constitutional Right of Personal Privacy Protects Against State Domination Over Conscientious and Life-shaping Decisions, and Has at its Core Decisions About Child-bearing and Family Formation 5

B. Government Interference With the Abortion Decision Imposes on Women the Unique and Disparate Burden of Unwanted Pregnancy, Childbirth and Parenthood, Thereby Depriving Women of Their Personal Freedom and Opportunity for Full and Equal Participation in American Life 10

C. The Recognition of a Woman's Right to Terminate a Pregnancy is Consistent with This Court's Historic Role of Recognizing Unenumerated Rights Secured by the Constitution 13

PAGE

II. LAWS ABRIDGING THE FUNDAMENTAL RIGHT TO ABORTION ARE SUBJECT TO THE SAME RIGOROUS STANDARD OF CONSTITUTIONAL REVIEW AS IS APPLIED TO LAWS RESTRICTING ANY OTHER FUNDAMENTAL RIGHT 18

III. THIS COURT'S HOLDING IN ROE THAT STATES' INTERESTS IN FETAL LIFE CANNOT BE COMPELLING PRIOR TO VIABILITY, AND CANNOT THEREAFTER DEFEAT THE STATES' INTERESTS IN PROTECTING THE HEALTH OR LIFE OF THE PREGNANT WOMAN, MUST BE MAINTAINED 20

A. There Is An Immutable Threshold Prior To Which A Fetus Cannot Survive Apart From A Pregnant Woman And Thus Is Biologically Inseparable From That Woman 23

B. As Against A Woman's Constitutionally Protected Liberty To Terminate Her Pregnancy, A State May Not Constitutionally Assert That A Fetus Is From The Moment Of Conception A Person Having Legal Rights Competitive With Those Of The Woman Who Is Pregnant 26

C. Restricting A Woman's Right To Procreative Choice Is Not A Constitutionally Acceptable Means For Fostering A General Societal Regard For Human Life 28

CONCLUSION 30

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases: PAGE

Abele v. Markle, 351 F. Supp. 224 (D. Conn. 1972) ...27 & n

Afroyim v. Rusk, 387 U.S. 253 (1967) 14n

Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., 462 U.S. 416 (1983) .....20n, 25 & n

Bolling v. Sharpe, 347 U.S. 497 (1954) 14n, 16n

Carey v. Population Services International, 431 U.S. 678 (1977) 7, 13, 14n, 19n

Cleveland Bd. of Education v. La Fleur, 414 U.S. 632 (1974) 11

Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979) 21n

Crandall v. State of Nevada, 6 Wall (73 U.S.) 35 (1868) 14

Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S. 438 (1972) 13, 14n, 19n

Engel v. Vitale, 370 U.S. 421 (1962) 27n

Frontiero v. Richardson, 411 U.S. 677 (1973) 11

Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965).....passim

Harper v. Virginia Bd. of Elections, 383 U.S. 663 (1966) 14n

In re Winship, 397 U.S. 358 (1970) 14n

McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat: (17 U.S.) 316 (1819) 14

Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390 (1923)..... 5

Mississippi University for Women v. Hogan, 458 U.S. 718 (1982) 11

Moore v. East Cleveland, 431 U.S. 494 (1977)..... 5, 7, 8, 12, 18

PAGE

NAACP v. Alabama, 357 U.S. 449 (1958) 14n

NAACP v. Alabama, 377 U.S. 288 (1964) 16n

NAACP v. Button, 371 U.S. 415 (1963) 16n

Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510 (1925).....5, 8, 14n

Plyler v. Doe, 457 U.S. 202 (1982)..... 12

Reed v. Reed, 404 U.S. 71 (1971)..... 11

Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533 (1964) 14n

Richmond Newspapers, Inc. v. Virginia, 448 U.S. 555 (1980) 14n

Rochin v. California, 342 U.S. 165 (1952) 7

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973) .....passim

Runyon v. McCrary, 427 U.S. 160 (1976)..... 7

San Antonio Independent School Dist. v. Rodriguez, 411 U.S. 1 (1973)..... 12

Schmerber v. California, 384 U.S. 757 (1966) 6

Shapiro v. Thompson, 394 U.S. 618 (1969) 14n, 15n

Skinner v. Oklahoma, 316 U.S. 535 (1942).....11, 18

Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians & Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747 (1986) 11, 20

United States v. Guest, 383 U.S. 745 (1966)..... 15n

West Virginia Bd. of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624 (1943) 8, 27n

Winston v. Lee, 470 U.S. 753, 760 (1985)..... 6, 7

Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205 (1972) 8

Wooley v. Maynard, 430 U.S. 705 (1977)..... 8

Zablocki v. Redhail, 434 U.S. 374 (1978) 14n, 18

PAGE

OTHER AUTHORITIES:

A Children's Defense Budget FY 1989: An Analysis of Our Nation's Investment in Children (1988)..... 29n

ACLU, 30th Annual Report: Security and Freedom: the Great American Challenge (1951)..... 17n

ACLU, 34th Annual Report: America's Need: A New Birth of Freedom (1954)..... 17n

ACLU, How Americans Protest (1963)..... 17n

Allen, Talking Liberties: Privacy, Choice, and Social Contract Theory, 56 U. Cin. L. Rev. 461 (1987)..... 6

C.R. Austin and R.W. Short, Embryonic and Fetal Development (1972)..... 25n

Barker and Barker, Civil Liberties and the Constitution (4th ed. 1982) 16n

Barnett, Foreward—The Ninth Amendment and Constitutional Legitimacy, 64 Chi. — Kent L. Rev. 37 (1988) 14n

J.R. Bickenbach and K.A. Holbrook, Proliferation of Human Embryonic and Fetal Epidermal Cells in Organ Culture, 177 Am. J. Anat. 97 (1986)..... 24n

Comment, Private Attorneys-General: Group Action in the Fight for Civil Liberties, 58 Yale L.J 575 (1949) . 16n

Corwin, The "Higher Law" Background of American Constitutional Law, 42 Harv. L. Rev. 149 (1928-29) . 13

Coulthard, Maturation of glomerular filtration in preterm and mature babies, 11 Early Human Development (1985) 23n

Davis, Law, Science, and History: Reflections Upon In The Best Interests of the Child, 86 Mich. L. Rev. 1096 (1988) 8n

PAGE

W. Donohue, The Politics of the American Civil Liberties Union (1985) 17

Dudziak, Desegregation As a Cold War Imperative, 41 Stan. L. Rev. 68 (1988)..... 16n

ECLC, The Rape of the First Amendment (1963)..... 17n

S. Estrich, Real Rape (1987) 19n

Fetal Extrauterine Survivability, Report to the New York State Task Force on Life and Law (1988).....23 & n, 24n, 25

Fiss, The Supreme Court, 1978 Term—Foreword: The Forms of Justice, 93 Harv. L. Rev. 1 (1979) 13

C. Fried, Right and Wrong (1978) 6n

Gerety, Redefining Privacy, 12 Harv. Civ. Rts.—Civ. Lib. L. Rev. 233 (1977)..... 6, 18

R. Goldstein, Mother-Love and Abortion: A Legal Interpretation (1988) 9, 21n

Grey, Do We Have An Unwritten Constitution, 27 Stan. L. Rev. 703 (1975) 13n

Grimes, Second Trimester Abortions in the United States, 16 Family Planning Perspectives 260 (1984)... 21n

Hallman, et al., Exogenous human surfactant for treatment of severe respiratory distress syndrome: a randomized prospective clinical, 106 J. Pediatry 963 (1985) 23n

Henkin, Privacy and Autonomy, 74 Colum. L. Rev. 1410 (1974) 6, 13n

Henshaw, Binkin, Blaine and Smith, A Portrait of American Women Who Obtain Abortions, 17 Family Planning Perspectives 90 (1985) 21n

PAGE

Heymann & Barzelay, The Forest and the Trees: Roe v. Wade and its Critics, 53 B. U. L. Rev. 765 (1973) ... 8n

Hirshman, Bronte, Bloom, and Bork: An Essay on the Moral Education of Judges, 137 U. Pa. L. Rev. 177 (1988) 26n

Holmes, Morphological and physiological maturation of the brain in the neonate and young child, 3 J. Clin. Neurophysiology 207 (1986)..... 24n

H. Hoshi, M. Kan and W.L. McKeehan, Direct Analysis of Growth Factor Requirements for Isolated Human Fetal Hepatocytes, 23 In Vitro Cell Developmental Biology (1987)..... 24n

Hunter, "Time Limits on Abortion," Reproductive Laws for the 1990's: A Briefing Handbook (N. Taub and S. Cohen, eds. 1988) 22n

Jones, The Genesis and Present Status of Affirmative Action in Employment: Economic, Legal, and Political Realities, 70 Iowa L. Rev. 901 (1985) 16n

Karst, The Freedom of Intimate Association, 89 Yale L.J. 624 (1980) 7

Karst, The Supreme Court, 1976 Term—Foreward: Equal Citizenship Under The Fourteenth Amendment, 91 Harv. L. Rev. 1 (1977) 9n

R. Kluger, Simple Justice (1976)..... 15n

Kruman, Quotas for Blacks: The Public Works Administration and the Black Construction Worker, 16 Labor History 37 (1975) 15n

Law, Rethinking Sex and the Constitution, 132 U. Pa. L. Rev. 955 (1984).....10, 25n

L. Levy, Original Intent and the Framers' Constitution (1988) 13n

PAGE

C. Markmann, The Noblest Cry: A History of the American Civil Liberties Union (1965) 17n

E. McDonagh and E. Richards, Ethnic Relations in the United States (1953)..... 16n

Mills, Legacies of the Cold War in the Price of Liberty (A. Reitman ed. 1968)..... 17n

K. Moore, The Developing Human (1982) 23n

Moore and Walsh, Specific regulation of N-CAM/D2-CAM cell adhesion molecule during skeletal muscle development, 4 Embo. J. 623 (1980) 24n

W. Murphy, J. Fleming & W. Harris, American Constitutional Interpretation (1986)..... 14n

Nsiah-Jefferson, "Reproduction Laws, Women of Color and Low-Income Women," in Reproduction Laws for the 1990's: A Briefing Handbook (N. Taub and S. Cohen, eds., 1988).....22n, 29n

J.R. Pasqualini and F. Kincl, Hormones and the Fetus (1985) 24n

Pollak, Thomas I. Emerson, Lawyer and Scholar: Ipse Custodiet Custodes, 84 Yale L. J. 638 (1975)..... 8 & n

Regan, Rewriting Roe v. Wade, 77 Mich. L. Rev. 1569 (1979) .....7 & n, 10 & n, 21n, 26n

Rhoden, Trimesters and Technology: Revamping Roe v. Wade, 95 Yale L.J. 639 (1986) 21n

D. Richards, Toleration and the Constitution (1986) ... 9

Rubenfeld, The Right of Privacy, 102 Harv. L. Rev. 737 (1989) ..... 7 & n

L. Schorr, Within Our Reach: Breaking the Cycle of Disadvantage (1988) 28n, 29n

PAGE

Sherry, The Founders' Unwritten Constitution, 54 U. Chi. L. Rev. 1127 (1987) 13n

R. Sidel, Women and Children Last: The Plight of Poor Women in Affluent America (1986).....28n, 29n

Spitz, Lee, Grimes, Schoenbucher and Lavorie, Third Trimester Induced Abortion in Georgia, 1979 and 1980, 73 Am. Journal of Public Health 594 (May 1983) 21n

The Report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights, to Secure These Rights (1947) 16n

The Republic of Plato (F. Cornford tr. 1945) 5n

L. Tribe, American Constitutional Law (2 ed. 1988) ..6n, 13n

L. Tribe, Constitutional Choices (1985)..... 10n

Tribe, The Abortion Funding Conundrum: Inalienable Rights, Affirmative Duties, and the Dilemma of Dependence, 99 Harv. L. Rev. 330 (1985) 10n

Wilkinson & White, Constitutional Protection For Personal Lifestyles, 62 Cornell L. Rev. 563 (1977) 8, 9

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM 1988

No. 88-605

WILLIAM L. WEBSTER, et al.,
Appellants,

—v.—

REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES, et al.,
Appellees.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR A GROUP OF AMERICAN LAW PROFESSORS AS AMICUS CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLEES

Consent of Parties

Appellants and appellees have consented to the filing of this brief, and their letters of consent are being filed separately herewith.

Interest of Amici

This Brief is submitted on behalf of 885 American law professors (see Appendix) who believe that the right of a woman to choose whether or not to bear a child, as delineated by this Court in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), is an essential component of constitutional liberty and privacy commanding reaffirmation by this Court. To support our belief in the fundamental importance of the right of personal privacy within our constitutional system, and the centrality of reproductive freedom within that right, this Brief draws upon an extensive body of scholarship produced by numerous law professors—many of whom are among those represented by this Brief—who bring to the issues involved a rich diversity of perspectives.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The Issues We Address. Amici address only the question whether Roe's central holding should be overruled or significantly weakened. We do not address other questions presented by this case concerning the compatibility of various provisions of Missouri's abortion regulations with Roe's central holding as it stands.

Procreative Choice and the Right of Privacy. This Court has recognized the right of personal privacy as a dimension of constitutionally guaranteed liberty. The essence of that right is freedom from governmental control over the diverse choices by which people crucially define their values and shape their lives. Decisions about conceiving and bearing children, and assuming parental responsibilities, lie at the core of this Court's privacy doctrine that prevents the State from imposing fundamental values and patterns of life on its citizens.

Procreative Choice and Equal Citizenship for Women. Reinforcing the conclusion that procreative freedom is an essential element of the constitutional right of personal privacy are the considerations embodied in the concept of equal citizenship. Any curtailment of the rights recognized in Roe will have a disparate and devastating impact on women, drastically undermining the equality guaranteed to women by the decisions of this Court. These oppressive consequences will weigh most heavily on the relatively dispossessed and powerless, and disproportionately burden racial minority groups.

Procreative Choice and the Protection of Unenumerated Rights. Roe v. Wade continued this Court's historic role of enforcing fundamental rights not specifically enumerated in the Constitution. Among such unenumerated rights are the right to travel, freedom of association, the right to vote, the equal protection component of the Fifth Amendment, the right to marry, and the requirement that the State prove criminal guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. These norms achieved recognition as an outgrowth of profound political, economic, and social forces in our history, just as the recognition of rights of reproductive freedom reflects changing social attitudes toward the roles of men and women. For women to achieve the full promise of "equal protection", it is necessary for them to control the child-bearing decision. The rights recognized in Griswold v. Connecticut and Roe v. Wade are facets of the movement toward women's equality that have also found expression in the equal protection jurisprudence of this Court.

Laws Restricting Procreative Choice Are Subject to a Test of Strict Scrutiny. This Court has developed the concept of "strict scrutiny" in order to ensure that fundamental constitutional liberties will not be denied to any person by thoughtless or unjustified governmental restrictions. Accordingly, any law restricting the free exercise of the fundamental right recognized in Roe v. Wade must be justified by a compelling state interest. This requirement demands more than the imposition of one set of moral values respecting an issue marked by widespread differences of conviction. Moreover, in order fully to protect this right, the State must achieve its compelling interest by narrowly tailored means, and must select means that are the least restrictive of the protected right.

The State's objective, as well as its means, must be weighed against the effect on the constitutional right. Any asserted state interest in fetal life or maternal health must be carefully evaluated, not only to establish its substantiality but also to ensure that its furtherance does not effectively obliterate a woman's right to terminate her pregnancy.

No Compelling State Interest Justifies Abortion Restrictions in Early Stages of Pregnancy. This Court, in Roe v. Wade, recognized that, even at a later stage of pregnancy, any state interest in fetal life must yield to the interest of maternal life or health. In the earlier stages of pregnancy, before the point at which survival outside the woman becomes biologically possible, there is no state interest sufficiently compelling to force a woman to make her body an involuntary agent of the State.

The viability standard, identified in Roe as marking the point where the State's interests in fetal life may arguably justify restrictions on abortion (always subordinate to the pregnant woman's interest in life and health), is on no "collision course with itself." By recognizing the biological realities of the stages of pregnancy, Roe continues to provide a workable distinction between an earlier stage of pregnancy at which freedom from state dictation of procreational decisions must prevail without hindrance, and a later stage at which concerns for fetal survival are allowed some scope.

There is an unalterable "biological threshold" during pregnancy that marks the gestational stage at which fetal organ systems become sufficiently developed to allow possible survival after separation from the pregnant woman. Prior to that threshold (twenty-three to twenty-four weeks of pregnancy), vital organs are so immature that a woman must perform the functions these organs might themselves perform outside a womb after the biological threshold has been crossed.

Technological development has enhanced the chances for survival of a fetus after the biological threshold of organ development. But no technological development, either now or in the foreseeable future, can enable the fetus to survive separately from the woman prior to that point.

While some Amici believe that the state can never have a compelling interest in the fetus prior to birth, all Amici agree that prior to the biological threshold, the State cannot define a compelling interest in the fetus that is distinct from, and paramount to, the rights or interests of the pregnant woman herself. At least during that stage of pregnancy, to base restrictions on a woman's procreational rights upon a premise of fetal personhood unconstitutionally subordinates the fundamental liberties of pregnant women to the moral dictates of a majority, or powerful minority.

States can have valid interests in fostering a general regard for the value of human life. It is, however, evident that such interests cannot constitutionally justify coercive restrictions from the moment of conception on women's fundamental liberties of life-shaping choice, especially considering the under-utilized, non-coercive means available to states for pursuing this interest.

ARGUMENT

I. A WOMAN'S RIGHT TO CHOOSE WHETHER TO TERMINATE A PREGNANCY IS A FUNDAMENTAL RIGHT FIRMLY ROOTED IN CONSTITUTIONAL PRINCIPLES OF LIBERTY, PRIVACY AND EQUALITY HISTORICALLY AFFIRMED BY THIS COURT.

A. The Constitutional Right Of Personal Privacy Protects Against State Domination Over Conscientious And Life-Shaping Decisions, And Has At Its Core Decisions About Child-Bearing And Family Formation.

In Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 535 (1925), this Court affirmed that "[t]he fundamental theory of liberty upon which all governments in this Union repose excludes any general power of the State to standardize its children . . . ." The Court was certainly "[b]y the same token" setting constitutional liberty in opposition to state regimentation of adult citizens as well. Moore v. East Cleveland, 431 U.S. 494, 506 (1977) (plurality opinion of Powell, J.). It was simply recurring to the axiomatic constitutionalist presupposition that the people belong to themselves and not the State. As the Court had observed in Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390 (1923), upon which Pierce directly relied, see 262 U.S. at 402,

> [a]lthough such measures [of civic regimentation as those of Plato and Lycurgus] have been deliberately approved by men of great genius, their ideas touching the relation between individual and State were wholly different from those upon which our institutions rest; and it hardly will be affirmed that any legislature could impose such restrictions upon the people of a State without doing violence to both letter and spirit of the Constitution.[1]

---

1 262 U.S. at 402. Cf. The Republic of Plato v 461 at 161 (F. Cornford tr. 1945): "A woman should bear children for the commonwealth

As subsequently elucidated by the decisions of this Court over a span exceeding sixty years, the right of personal privacy has come to represent a certain aspect of constitutional liberty, "namely, the absence of governmental coercion respecting appropriately private affairs." Allen, Talking Liberties: Privacy, Choice, and Social Contract Theory, 56 U. Cin. L. Rev. 461, 467 (1987). See, Henkin, Privacy and Autonomy, 74 Colum. L. Rev. 1410, 1411, 1424-25 (1974). The right of personal privacy stands against state domination over matters crucial to self-possession: self-definition in matters of value and conscience, and self-determination regarding ways and walks of life. By its force, government's hand is stayed from the diverse choices by which persons define their values, form and maintain communities of belief and practice, and bring up children whose lives in turn will be their own and not the State's. Accordingly, the Court's privacy doctrine has placed decisions regarding procreation, parenthood, and family formation at the core of those from which a non-totalitarian government must ordinarily be excluded.

The right of personal privacy is the right of self-possession against the State, and the self begins with the body.[2] "[To say] that my body can be used is [to say] that I can be used. . . ." Moreover, "the sense of possession of oneself . . . extends to possession of one's function. And this extends quite naturally to reproduction." C. Fried, Right and Wrong 121 n.*, 154 (1978).

In Schmerber v. California, 384 U.S. 757, 772 (1966), while upholding "minor intrusions into an individual's body under stringently limited conditions," this Court stood ready to act against more substantial and less restricted intrusions because "[t]he integrity of an individual's person is a cherished value of our society". See e.g., Winston v. Lee, 470 U.S. 753, 760 from her twentieth to her fortieth year; a man should begin to beget them when he has passed 'the racer's prime in swiftness,' and continue till he is fifty-five."

2 See L. Tribe, American Constitutional Law 1329-30 (2d ed. 1988); Gerety, Redefining Privacy, 12 Harv. Civ. Rts.-Civ. Lib. L. Rev. 233, 265-66 & n.118-19, 269 (1977).

(1985); Rochin v. California, 342 U.S. 165 (1952). The intrusion upon a woman's body wrought by forcing her to carry a physiologically sustained and consuming pregnancy to term is destructive to self-possession. During pregnancy and childbirth, "[t]he woman's body will be subjected to a continuous regimen of diet, exercise, medical examination, and possibly surgical procedures. Her most elemental biological and psychological impulses will be enlisted . . . . In these ways, anti-abortion laws exert power productively over a woman's body and, through the uses to which her body is put, forcefully reshape and redirect her life."[3]

This Court has repeatedly recognized the practical priority and centrality of the child-bearing decision in an anti-authoritarian constitutional doctrine of personal privacy that also safeguards citizen control over child-rearing. Therein lies another obvious reason why "[t]he decision whether or not to beget or bear a child" belongs at "the very heart of this cluster of constitutionally protected choices," Carey v. Population Services International, 431 U.S. 678, 685 (1977); cf. Runyon v. McCrary, 427 U.S. 160, 178 (1976) (the "government is largely or even entirely precluded from regulating the child-bearing decision"). See also Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 485 (1965); Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 153 (1973); Karst, The Freedom of Intimate Association, 89 Yale L.J. 624, 640-41 (1980) ("Griswold and its successor decisions [protect] men and women—but particularly women—against . . . an unchosen commitment and a caring stained by reluctance, against a compelled identification with the social role of parent.").

Constitutional protection for the people's freedom to choose their own family formations is "deeply rooted" in this nation's "history and tradition." Moore v. East Cleveland, 431 U.S. 494, 503-5 (1977). That freedom commands respect as an obvious precondition for the ability of people to care for their children and bring them up in accordance with their own, diverse visions. See id. at 504-505.[4] The Moore plurality relied on Roe and Griswold as well as on Pierce, Meyer, and Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205 (1972), precisely because it would not "close [its] eyes" to the essential ties binding citizens' procreational freedoms, family-formation choices, and child-rearing responsibilities with the tradition of political liberty that informs our Constitution. Moore, 431 U.S. at 499-501.[5] That was why Justice Powell saw household formation as a matter which, like the procreational choice protected in Griswold and Roe, must in " 'a free society' " be left to the citizens themselves.[6] Rights of procreative choice, family formation and parental control of childbearing thus combine in a unified constitutional doctrine of protection for the moral and political agency of citizens against a potentially overbearing State.

3 Rubenfeld, The Right of Privacy, 102 Harv. L. Rev. 737, 790 (1989); see Regan, Rewriting Roe v. Wade, 77 Mich. L. Rev. 1569, 1579-83 (1979).

In thus protecting citizens against moral and political domination by the State, the right of personal privacy partakes of what many have considered the most fundamental constitutional freedoms of all: the freedoms of conscience and spirit. See West Virginia Bd. of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 636-37, 642 (1943); Wooley v. Maynard, 430 U.S. 705 (1977); Wilkinson & White, Constitutional Protection For Personal

4 See also Davis, Law, Science, and History: Reflections Upon In The Best Interests of the Child, 86 Mich. L. Rev. 1096, 1110-20 (1988). In reviewing the history of the adoption of the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Amendments, Professor Davis writes, "Appreciation of the need to protect rights of family is a legacy of the progression from a slaveholding nation to a nation in which citizenship is a human birthright." Id. at 1119.

5 See Heymann & Barzelay, The Forest and the Trees: Roe v. Wade and its Critics, 53 B.U. L. Rev. 765, 773 (1973): "[T]he long line of precedent in this area . . . is entirely principled. For the Court to have declined strict review of state legislation that limits the private right to choose . . . whether to raise a family . . . would have been to leave the most basic substructure of our society [under government control]."

6 Id. at 503 n.11 quoting from Professor (now Judge) Louis Pollak: "[I]n due course we will see Griswold as a reaffirmation of the Court's continuing obligation to test the justifications offered by the state for state-imposed constraints which significantly hamper those modes of individual fulfillment which are at the heart of a free society." Pollak, Thomas I. Emerson, Lawyer and Scholar: Ipse Custodiet Custodes, 84 Yale L. J. 638, 653 (1975).

Lifestyles, 62 Cornell L. Rev. 563, 612-13 (1977). Broad restrictions on abortion "fail [ ] . . . to take seriously the moral independence of women" in the exercise of responsible choice. D. Richards, Toleration and the Constitution 268 (1986).[7]

Studies of the process by which women decide whether to have abortions consistently show that most women's choices are deeply conscientious and concerned with relations and obligations to other people.[8] A pregnancy is often a problematic event fraught with dramatic impacts on many lives, actual and potential. These include not only the life of the woman who is pregnant, but the lives of others closely touched by hers: the children she already has or may have; her actual or eventual spouse or companion; others with whom she lives and works; the communities that cherish her productivity and citizenship. Different women, differently circumstanced, will ponder the alternatives in their own, diverse settings of advice, support, relationship, and community—including spouses, family and friends, cultural and religious groups, and medical and professional advisers.

Attempts by the State to standardize these primary human relationships and to usurp their places in the lives of the people are what the right of personal privacy countermands. It is irrational, and incompatible with a decent respect for a pregnant woman's fundamental right of conscientious choice, to suppose that a state legislature's broad prohibition on abortions at any stage of pregnancy can provide a better answer than a responsible and situated woman's own to the questions for multiple human lives, actual and potential, that many pregnancies present. See R. Goldstein, Mother-Love and Abortion: A Legal Interpretation 27, 88-89 (1988).

7 See Karst, The Supreme Court, 1976 Term—Foreword: Equal Citizenship Under The Fourteenth Amendment, 91 Harv. L. Rev. 1, 58 (1977): "[T]o be a person is to respect one's own ability to make responsible choices in controlling one's own destiny, to be an active participant in society rather than an object."

8 See Brief Amicus Curiae of the National Abortion Rights Action League in Support of Appellees.

B. Government Interference With The Abortion Decision Imposes On Women The Unique And Disparate Burden Of Unwanted Pregnancy, Childbirth And Parenthood, Thereby Depriving Women Of Their Personal Freedom And Opportunity For Full And Equal Participation In American Life.

Although the right of procreative choice is rooted in universal concepts of privacy and freedom, as an operative force in American society this right is most compellingly important to one segment of our population—women. If women are deprived of this right, their personal, economic, and political lives will be altered fundamentally. As Professor Sylvia Law has observed, "Nothing the Supreme Court has ever done has been more concretely important for women [than its decision in Roe v. Wade]. I would defend this statement by comparing other decisions that possibly come close to [Roe] in importance to women, but I cannot think of anything that is arguably a close second." Law, Rethinking Sex and the Constitution, 132 U. Pa. L. Rev. 955, 981 & n.96 (1984).

A law forcing a woman to carry an unwanted pregnancy to term effectively constricts the boundaries of personal freedom for women: It is women, not men, whose persons and lives are drastically recast by unwanted pregnancy, childbirth and parenthood. As long as State laws circumscribe a woman's right to decide whether to continue a pregnancy, her ability to participate fully and equally in American society will be subject to a physical condition that she can avoid only by refraining from sexual relations other than those that are intentionally procreative.[9] If it were possible to fashion a law imposing similar limitations on the ability of men to retain full possession of their lives, the denial of equal citizenship by laws banning abortion would be readily apparent.[10]

---

9 See Tribe, The Abortion Funding Conundrum: Inalienable Rights, Affirmative Duties, and the Dilemma of Dependence, 99 Harv. L. Rev. 330, 335-38 (1985); Regan, Rewriting Roe v. Wade, 77 Mich. L. Rev. 1569, 1593-95 (1979).

10 See L. Tribe, Constitutional Choices 243 (1985).

As this Court has recognized, our nation "has had a long and unfortunate history of sex discrimination." Frontiero v. Richardson, 411 U.S. 677, 684 (1973). The claim that "biology is destiny" has provided the central justification and vehicle for the historic subordination of women. Americans and this Court have come to see that it is not biology, but culture and law, that assign men and women to prescribed roles. When the State denies women access to abortion, it is the State, not biology, that drastically limits women's liberty and equality. Starting with Reed v. Reed, 404 U.S. 71 (1971), and continuing through Frontiero v. Richardson, 411 U.S. 677 (1973), to Mississippi University for Women v. Hogan, 458 U.S. 718 (1982), and beyond, this Court has recognized that gender classifications, though once subject only to a minimal standard of reasonableness, require a far higher degree of justification. It is no accident that these developments, clearly based on the concept of equality, occurred contemporaneously with a recognition of the right of procreative choice. It would be paradoxical for women to have an equal right to be administrators of estates (Reed, supra) and to receive equal remuneration for service in the armed forces (Frontiero, supra), and not be able to control the decision that most critically affects their abilities to participate in the activities and careers in which their equal treatment has been guaranteed by this Court. That result would fail to keep the promise of constitutional protection of life-shaping choice as fully for women as for men. See Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians & Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747, 772 (1986).

We deal here with laws restricting freedom granted special constitutional protection—specifically, freedoms of procreative choice and family formation. As this Court has repeatedly and consistently held, there is special occasion for unusual concern and heightened scrutiny when such laws selectively oppress groups already burdened by disfavored or insecure status in American life, "lest unwittingly, or otherwise, invidious discriminations are made against groups or types of individuals in violation of the constitutional guaranty" of equal protection of the laws. Skinner v. Oklahoma, 316 U.S. 535, 541 (1942); cf. Cleveland Bd. of Education v. La Fleur, 414 U.S. 632 (1974);

Moore v. East Cleveland, 431 U.S. 494, 506 (1977) (Brennan, J., concurring). Such heightened concern and scrutiny are required when laws restrict enjoyment of fundamental rights in ways that are specially onerous for those already burdened by disfavored or insecure social position. See Plyler v. Doe, 457 U.S. 202 (1982).

Abortion laws have rarely been openly defended as a means of enforcing a maternal destiny against the will of women. Both in the past and today, however, abortion has been most publicly controversial during periods when ideas about the proper roles of women in society are in flux or dispute.[11] The offense committed by abortion restrictions against the elementary principle of equality is greatly aggravated by the undeniable fact that it is women whose fundamental liberties such laws uniquely restrict.

Moreover, Amici cannot blind themselves as lawyers to what we know as women and men: that restrictions of access to abortion will descend with special harshness and inevitability on poor women—"those without . . . adequate resources" to avoid the restrictions (Griswold, supra, at 503 (White, J., concurring))—and that in our society it sadly remains the case that women of color are especially likely to be poor. Thus it is poor women and women of color whose lives will be most severely impacted—whose avenues of safe avoidance of unwanted and debilitating pregnancy and childbirth will be most constricted, and whose life choices will be most heartbreakingly curbed—by a return of regimes in which safe abortion services are, in practice, placed beyond reach of some but not all of our people.[12] While this Court has declined to extend to poor persons as a class the same level of protection as that accorded to classifications based on race and gender, see San Antonio Independent School Dist. v. Rodriguez, 411 U.S. 1 (1973), the fact that state control over the child-bearing decision will have a particularly onerous impact on poor women who are 11 See Brief Amicus Curiae of American Historians in Support of Appellees.

12 See Brief Amicus Curiae of Women of Color in Support of Appellees; Brief Amicus Curiae of The American Association of Reproductive Health Professionals in Support of Appellees.

members of historically disadvantaged racial groups gives the pregnancy decision an especially strong claim for constitutional protection under this Court's privacy jurisprudence.

C. The Recognition Of A Woman's Right To Terminate A Pregnancy Is Consistent With This Court's Historic Role Of Recognizing Unenumerated Rights Secured By The Constitution.

Opponents of Roe v. Wade are wont to criticize the Court's recognition of a right to terminate a pregnancy as a constitutional aberration to be compared only with the Court's protection of certain economic interests in the so-called Lochner era. Similar criticism greeted this Court's recognition of the rights of couples and individuals to acquire and use contraceptives (Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965); Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S. 438, 453 (1972); Carey v. Population Services International, 431 U.S. 678, 685-87 (1977)).

In fact, however, even the most cursory perusal of constitutional history indicates that protection of the child-bearing decision in Roe involved no departure from this Court's established role. Rather, it was one among many instances of the Court's recognizing constitutional rights that are not expressly named in the text of the Constitution, although they are suggested by our constitutional system as a whole.[13]

13 "In a constitutional system in which limitations on government, administered by the judiciary, are a crucial characteristic, it is surely desirable (and perhaps inevitable) that the limitations be reexamined and renovated in the light of changing philosophies of both public good and individual right. . . . We have come to accept . . . constitutional modernization by the judiciary." Henkin, Privacy and Autonomy, 74 Colum. L. Rev. 1410, 1427 (1974); see also Fiss, The Supreme Court, 1978 Term—Foreword: The Forms of Justice, 93 Harv. L. Rev. 1 (1979). For discussion of the judicial role of expounding unenumerated national ideals of individual liberty, see, e.g., Grey, Do We Have An Unwritten Constitution?, 27 Stan. L. Rev. 703, 706 (1975); L. Levy, Original Intent and the Framers' Constitution 267 (1988); L. Tribe, American Constitutional Law 1307-09 (2d ed. 1988); Corwin, The "Higher Law" Background of American Constitutional Law, 42 Harv. L. Rev. 149, 365 (1928-29); Sherry, The Founders' Unwritten Constitution, 54 U. Chi. L. Rev. 1127 (1987).

A non-exhaustive list of unenumerated rights would include: freedom of association;[14] the equal protection component of the Fifth Amendment's due process clause;[15] the right to travel between the states;[16] the right to vote;[17] the right to a presumption of innocence so that criminal convictions must be based on guilt beyond a reasonable doubt;[18] the right to marry;[19] the right to retain American citizenship until explicitly and voluntarily renouncing it;[20] the right to attend criminal trials;[21] the right to educate one's children in conformity with minimum state standards;[22] and the right to make one's own choice about having children.[23]

Moreover, while the protection of interstate business from burdensome state regulation is not generally considered an unenumerated right, there is no constitutional text, other than a non-exclusive grant of power to Congress, to support a right that has been profoundly important to business interests from the earliest days of the republic. Similarly, Chief Justice Marshall cited no constitutional text for his broad proposition in McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. (17 U.S.) 316 (1819), that States could not tax the instrumentalities of the federal government.

---

14 NAACP v. Alabama, 357 U.S. 449 (1958).

15 Bolling v. Sharpe, 347 U.S. 497 (1954).

16 Shapiro v. Thompson, 394 U.S. 618 (1969); Crandall v. State of Nevada, 6 Wall. (73 U.S.) 35 (1868).

17 Harper v. Virginia Bd. of Elections, 383 U.S. 663 (1966); Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533 (1964).

18 In re Winship, 397 U.S. 358 (1970).

19 Zablocki v. Redhail, 434 U.S. 374 (1978).

20 Afroyim v. Rusk, 387 U.S. 253 (1967).

21 Richmond Newspapers, Inc. v. Virginia, 448 U.S. 555 (1980).

22 Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510 (1925).

23 Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965); Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S. 438 (1972); Carey v. Population Services International, 431 U.S. 678 (1977). For sources of the foregoing list, see W. Murphy, J. Fleming & W. Harris, American Constitutional Interpretation 1083-84 (1986); Barnett, Foreword—The Ninth Amendment and Constitutional Legitimacy, 64 Chi.-Kent L. Rev. 37, 58 (1988).

Thus, the unenumerated rights that are derived from, or have been recognized in, other provisions of the Constitution reach far beyond the right of privacy or the right to terminate a pregnancy. Furthermore, while scholars may disagree over the precise source in constitutional text for many of these myriad unenumerated rights, few would argue that the decisions in which they were recognized, often controversial in their times, were mistaken or that they should be retracted.

The historic recognition of unenumerated rights is not a capricious process that is dependent only on the preferences and ideologies of individual judges at particular moments of our history. To the contrary, unenumerated rights traditionally have reflected powerful historical forces that inevitably influence constitutional interpretation. The right to travel, nowhere specified in the constitutional text,[24] becomes understandable when one considers the ambulatory nature of early American society, in which settled communities were rare, and immigration and the conquering of the frontier were urgent national concerns.

In more recent times the infusion of racial equality values into the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment grew out of changing American perceptions spurred by the experiences of the Great Depression,[25] World War II,[26] and America's role

---

24 See United States v. Guest, 383 U.S. 745, 758 (1966); Shapiro v. Thompson, 394 U.S. 618, 630 (1969).

25 The New Deal Programs of the Roosevelt Administration sought to alleviate the mass poverty and unemployment which inflicted the country during the Great Depression, and many of their administrators believed that programs should not be conducted in a racially discriminatory manner. It would be hypocritical for the programs to maintain previous racial distinctions and thus exclude the neediest group in America. For example, Harold Ickes, Head of the Public Works Administration, decided to eliminate racial classifications and segregation from P.W.A. projects. Kruman, Quotas for Blacks: The Public Works Administration and the Black Construction Worker, 16 Labor History 37, 40 (1975); see also R. Kluger, Simple Justice 159-60, 162, 217-19 (1976).

26 During W.W.II, the United States needed its Black citizens to work in the defense industries and to fight in the armed services. Angered by the

in the post-war world.[27] By 1954 it would have been unthinkable to have a different standard of racial equality for the federal government and the states.[28] Similarly, the articulation of a freedom of association was spurred by the importance of organizational activity in the pursuit of civil liberties and racial equality,[29] and by the reaction to the repressive tactics of the segregation which existed in those institutions, Black leaders such as A. Phillip Randolph threatened to call Black Americans to strike and to evade the draft if the conditions were not improved. President Roosevelt was forced to provide for such desegregation in order to expand the war effort and to avoid internal political struggles. Jones, The Genesis and Present Status of Affirmative Action in Employment: Economic, Legal, and Political Realities, 70 Iowa L. Rev. 901, 907 (1985); see generally E. McDonagh and E. Richards, Ethnic Relations in the United States, 39 (1953).

27 Although many war-era restrictions on racial discrimination by government contractors went the way of war-related contracts, To Secure These Rights, The Report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights 57 (1947), the fear of worldwide communism caused the federal government to reinstate many of its anti-discriminatory safeguards. Dudziak, Desegregation As a Cold War Imperative, 41 Stan. L. Rev. 68 (1988). The Truman Administration was under great international pressure from both its former allies and the United Nations to deal with the country's internal racial problems. Dudziak, supra at 64-66.

28 Bolling v. Sharpe, 347 U.S. 497 (1954) (invalidating racial segregation in public schools of the District of Columbia as violative of due process guaranteed by fifth amendment).

29 "The law of civil liberties . . . has been profoundly affected by the work of private groups organized either to protect the civil liberties of all or to advance the cause of particular minorities." Comment, Private Attorneys-General: Group Action in the Fight for Civil Liberties, 58 Yale L.J. 574 (1949), describing the activities of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU), and the American Jewish Congress. See NAACP v. Button, 371 U.S. 415 (1963). Similarly, the Court recognized that the First and Fourteenth Amendments protected freedom of association when it overturned Alabama's attempt to compel the NAACP to disclose its membership list. NAACP v. Alabama, 377 U.S. 288 (1964). The Court perceived that compelled disclosure would chill the petitioners' freedom of association. Barker and Barker, Civil Liberties and the Constitution 149 (4th ed. 1982).

McCarthy era.[30] The influence of the modern media and its technology have altered the constitutional standards of the law of defamation and have prompted media access to the processes of government, including trials, that was unheard of several years ago.

This court's decision in Griswold v. Connecticut is firmly grounded in the history of its period. In the years following World War II, Americans developed a growing awareness of the global dangers inherent in exponential population growth. Many people also began to place higher value on sexual intimacy within marriage. At the same time, medical science developed apparently safer and more effective means of contraception, which, to the extent that they required medical supervision, facilitated state capacity to control people's access to them. Despite factors pressing for free access to contraceptives, in some States an influential minority was able to deny people such access. In Griswold the Court, recognizing the constitutionally protected status of the marital relationship, acted to protect private rights to obtain contraceptives.

When the development of unenumerated rights by this Court is viewed in its proper historical perspective, the emergence in the 1960s and 1970s of reproductive freedom as a constitutionally protected right was a predictable outgrowth of a powerful social and intellectual movement that emerged during these years—the movement of women toward full citizenship and participation in all aspects of our society. Strong social and historical currents—the flow of women in massive numbers into the workplace, changes in laws governing family relationships, and the emergence of women as a political force—soon steered the constitutional doctrine of privacy towards lifting the traditional demand for a woman's singular dedication of her life to child-rearing and the home.

30 ACLU [American Civil Liberties Union], 30th Annual Report: Security and Freedom: The Great American Challenge 10-17 (1951); see also ACLU, 34th Annual Report: America's Need: A New Birth of Freedom 32-37 (1954); see generally Mills, Legacies of the Cold War in the Price of Liberty 60-62 (A. Reitman ed. 1968); ACLU, How Americans Protest 14 (1963); C. Markmann, The Noblest Cry: A History of the American Civil Liberties Union 121-131, 176-184, 429-431 (1965); W. Donohue, The Politics of the American Civil Liberties Union 162-191 (1985). The ECLC [Emergency Civil Liberties Committee, later changed to National Emergency Civil Liberties Committee], The Rape of the First Amendment 4-5 (1963).

Starting with Griswold in 1965, the recognition of unenumerated rights regarding the use of contraceptives, termination of pregnancy, and family formation overlapped with developments in equal protection doctrine in the 1970s, resulting in the rejection of gender-based classifications that would have been upheld a few years earlier. All of the closely-related constitutional developments reflected the same principle: that women were entitled to full and equal participation in American society. Such full and equal participation requires that women be able to decide for themselves whether and when to bear children. The recognition of this right in Roe, as an unenumerated right secured by the Constitution, was consistent with two hundred years of constitutional history.

II. LAWS ABRIDGING THE FUNDAMENTAL RIGHT TO ABORTION ARE SUBJECT TO THE SAME RIGOROUS STANDARD OF CONSTITUTIONAL REVIEW AS IS APPLIED TO LAWS RESTRICTING ANY OTHER FUNDAMENTAL RIGHT.

The affirmative considerations of constitutional value and principle underlying the right of personal privacy apply with the fullest possible force to a woman's control over her pregnancy.[31] State imposed restrictions that impact on the woman's abortion choice, or ability to exercise that choice, must be held to the same standards of convincing justification as are required for all abridgements of fundamental rights. See, e.g., Skinner, supra, at 541; Griswold, supra, at 485; id. at 497 (Goldberg, J., concurring); id. at 503-04 (White, J., concurring); Moore, supra, at 499 (plurality opinion of Powell, J.); Zablocki, supra, at 388. To deny this is to deny that pregnant women have the same prima facie constitutional rights as other Americans.

31 See Gerety, supra, at 274: "[T]he reasons for invoking privacy in defense of abortion are plain to see. A woman's decision to have or forego an abortion is perhaps more than any other she makes an intimate one, expressive of both her identity and her autonomy."

A pregnant woman's decision to abort a pregnancy is a "decision . . . not to bear a child." In that crucial respect, non-trivial restrictions on access to or provision of abortion services are identical with other forms of state interference with procreational choice, not "inherently different" from them. Such restrictions impress women into unwanted child-bearing more directly, and often more coercively, than do contraception restrictions.[32] Logic and principle rebel, therefore, against the suggestion that the accompanying fact of fetal destruction exempts abortion restrictions from intensified scrutiny.[33] That fact may or may not provide a State with a sufficiently weighty and convincing justification for invading the fundamental constitutional rights of pregnant women. But as long as this Court purports to affirm a principled doctrine of constitutionally fundamental liberties in which procreational choice occupies a central place, all laws materially restricting abortion must be subject to strict scrutiny.[34]

32 It is specious to suggest that abortion prohibitions do not seriously abridge rights of procreational choice as long as exceptions are allowed for pregnancies resulting from "coercion," because women always have the "options" of "abstinence and contraception." Brief for the United States at 22-23 n.16. First, that suggestion depends on the sex-discriminatory premise that abstention may fairly be exacted or expected of women, in particular, as the price of avoiding unwanted child-bearing, in defiance of this Court's repeated teaching that "pregnancy and the birth of an unwanted child" may not reasonably be "prescribed . . . as punishment" for non-procreational sex. Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S. 438, 448 (1972); Carey v. Population Services International, 431 U.S. 678, 695 (1977) (plurality opinion of Brennan, J.). Second, contraception—obviously—can fail. See Brief Amicus Curiae of the American Association of Reproductive Health Professionals in Support of Appellees. The United States, in its brief, ignores the discriminatory result of visiting upon women the punishment for such failure when men are at least equally responsible. Finally, State officials cannot possibly, without constitutionally intolerable intrusion into the intimacies of couples, ascertain whether pregnancy-producing sexual encounters (including any attendant laxity in contraceptive practice) are or are not "the result of coercion" vitiating the woman's fundamental right of procreational choice. See Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965); S. Estrich, Real Rape (1987).

33 E.g., Brief For the United States at 14.

34 State regulation that does have an impact on women's exercise of the right to choose an abortion must be closely tailored to the promotion of com-

III. THIS COURT'S HOLDING IN ROE THAT STATES' INTERESTS IN FETAL LIFE CANNOT BE COMPELLING PRIOR TO VIABILITY, AND CANNOT THEREAFTER DEFEAT THE STATES' INTERESTS IN PROTECTING THE HEALTH OR LIFE OF THE PREGNANT WOMAN, MUST BE MAINTAINED.

In Roe v. Wade, this Court concluded, after a due regard for all the constitutional values and interests at stake, that some distinction is required between an earlier stage of pregnancy when a woman's procreational decision must prevail without hindrance from state dictation, and a later stage when the State may act on its concerns for fetal survival, always subordinate to the life and health interests of the pregnant woman. Finding that a clear line had to be drawn somewhere between "the [lesser] state interest in protecting the freshly fertilized egg and the [greater] state interest in protecting the 9-month-gestated, fully sentient fetus on the eve of birth," Thornburgh, 476 U.S. at 779 (Stevens, J., concurring), the Court identified "viability" as the appropriate point at which to draw that line.

Amici are divided on the question whether, at any point prior to childbirth, it can ever be constitutionally legitimate to regulate on behalf of fetal interests in conflict with those of the pregnant woman. Amici do, however, agree that if some line is to be drawn marking a point where such regulation becomes arguably permissible, viability recommends itself straightforwardly as a matter of practical judgment and common sense. When fetuses are known to have developed to the point of pelling state interests. More concretely, for example, the Constitution prohibits state regulations demanding that second trimester abortions be performed in the hospital. Such rules "imposed a heavy and unnecessary burden on women's access to a relatively inexpensive, otherwise accessible, and safe abortion procedure . . . and therefore unreasonably infringes upon a woman's constitutional right to obtain an abortion." Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., 462 U.S. 416, 458 (1983).

---

capacity to survive outside the womb, there may be a reason for heightened state concern about their destruction when trying to foster a general social regard for human life.[35] On the other hand, the viability line affords ample time for most women to exercise a considered and informed procreational choice after learning of their pregnancies and relevant attendant conditions.[36] Since 1973, only an extremely small number of abortions have occurred during the third trimester. Indeed, less than 1% of all abortions occur after 21 weeks of pregnancy, and only .01 percent occur after 24 weeks, when the fetus could possibly be viable.[37] The primary reasons for such "late" abortions—the development of a life-threatening condition in the pregnant woman, the detection of a serious fetal deformity or anomaly and, especially with respect to younger women, limited access to pregnancy and abortion information or services

---

35 Cf. Rhoden, Trimesters and Technology: Revamping Roe v. Wade, 95 Yale L.J. 639, 668-70 (1986) ("[T]his dichotomy between late and early abortion . . . is perhaps the closest this society has come to a consensus about the morality of abortion.").

36 See R. Goldstein, Mother-Love and Abortion: A Legal Interpretation 59-62 (1988); Regan, Rewriting Roe v. Wade, 77 Mich. L. Rev. 1569, 1643 (1979). One advantage of the viability line, contributing to its workability, has been its flexibility. It leaves to each individual doctor, within the privacy of the doctor-patient relationship, the ability to make an individualized determination about when the fetus is viable, a determination that can only be properly made on a case by case basis. See Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979).

37 See Henshaw, Binkin, Blaine and Smith, A Portrait of American Women Who Obtain Abortions, 17 Family Planning Perspectives 90, 91 (1985); Spitz, Lee, Grimes, Schoenbucher and Lavorie, Third Trimester Induced Abortion in Georgia, 1979 and 1980, 73 Am. Journal of Public Health 594 (May 1983) (abortions after twenty-four weeks may have accounted for only 0.004% of all abortions in Georgia in 1979 and 1980). See also Grimes, Second Trimester Abortions in the United States, 16 Family Planning Perspectives 260 (1984) (while in 1973 only 63% of all abortions occurred within the first 10 weeks of pregnancy, today 88% of abortions occur in the first 10 weeks).

during the earlier stages of pregnancy—provide compelling justification for, and explain the timing of, the abortion decision.[38]

Moreover, the viability line reflects the biological realities of pregnancy, and thus provides a workable framework for determining when the State's interest in fetal protection is subordinated to pregnant women's constitutional liberties. Before viability, a fetus is biologically an inseparable part of a pregnant woman and cannot reasonably and objectively be regarded as a subject of rights or interests distinct from, or paramount to, hers.

It is not true, as critics of Roe have asserted,[39] that technological progress has rendered the viability line inherently unstable and untenable. Viability continues to provide a workable standard for the line-drawing that this Court found necessary, in the exercise of its constitutional responsibilities, to allow some scope to a state interest in fostering a regard for human life in general, while maintaining full protection for the fundamental liberties of pregnant women. Indeed, the viability standard reflects the biological reality that there exists a threshold during pregnancy prior to which a fetus cannot survive separate from a woman; no foreseeable technology could change this threshold, even though technological developments since 1973 have improved the chances of fetal survival outside the womb after the threshold has been crossed.

